DESCRIPTION

This 1.5 hour long durational performance was held at the Media Factory in Preston in an emptied black box theatre environment: no seats or curtains; a shared performing area inhabited by audience and performer. Before entering each audience member was invited to explore the space selecting their individual spatial point of view in relation to the work, no time limit for the engagement was specified.

The audio of David Foster Wallace's speech 'This is Water' was only available to those audience members using the headphones. Footage of the same material being performed live, previously captured from different angles and distances by video maker Matt Clarke, was projected on the walls in three different locations.
