Rev. E. N. KIRK said, that Frederick Douglas was a man into whose soul the iron had entered, and of course he felt keenly. But he had, no doubt, unintentionally, made a mis-statement. (Some confusion on the platform, and expressions of disapprobation in the audience, amidst which the chairman interfered to restore order.) Mr. Kirk said he was afraid that the observations of Mr. Douglas had left an impression on the minds of those present that the temperance advocates in America had sanctioned or supported slavery—(cries of "No, no"). Then if such were not the impression produced, he had nothing more to say—(Hear and cheers.)

J. S. BUCKINGHAM, Esq., thought that all that was necessary to make the present meeting effective, was to carry out what had been proposed. The evils of intemperance had been pointed out, and the remedy must now be applied. Great alarm had been excited by the report of the introduction of cholera into this country, and measures were promptly adopted to check its spread. A few hundreds died of cholera, and the greatest alarm prevailed; thousands died in consequence of their use of strong drink, and little was thought about it, and no man took any trouble to prevent it—(Hear). Let each begin the reformation in his own house. Let females take the pledge themselves, and unite with the Society. Let them refuse to take strong drink with their friends, and to provide it for them. They would lose nothing by such practice, but would be greatly benefited by it, and would furnish themselves with an instrumentality for usefulness, which could not be obtained from any other source—(Much cheering.)

The vast audience then dispersed, apparently much delighted with the addresses to which they had listened.

LIST OF SUBSCRIBERS FOR CONVENTION FUND.

	£	s.	d.		£	s.	d.
G. W. Alexander	50	0	0	T. P. Institution	2	2	0
Joseph Sturge	50	0	0	Colchester Soc.	2	6	0
J. J. Gurney	50	0	0	Mr. W. Howe	1	0	0
J. H. Cotterill	1	1	0	Sheffield Society	1	1	0
Rev. B. Harvey	1	1	0	Yeovil Society	1	1	0
Mr. Atkinson	0	5	0	Uxbridge Society	2	2	0
W. M. Christy	5	0	0	R. Barrett, Jun.	1	1	0
M. Munro	1	0	0	Jas. Haughton	2	0	0
Enfield Society	1	0	0	Kensington Soc.	0	10	0
John Edgar	1	1	0	Searj. Hatherley	0	2	6
Samuel Bult	1	1	0	Edmund Sturge	5	0	0
Mrs. Trevanion	10	0	0	Coalbrookdale Sub-
James Ellis	1	1	0	scriptions	40	0	0
J. Horsell	1	1	0	Inverness Society	1	0	0
I. O. R., London				Keighley Society	1	0	0
Unity	1	1	0	Boston Society	1	0	0
Fred. Schwann	3	0	0	Enon Chapel Con-
Rochdale Society	1	1	0	gregational Soc.	1	1	0
Wellingborough				R. Peek	5	0	0
Society	2	0	0	Edinburgh Society	3	3	0
T. Graham	2	10	0	Berkhamstead
Coalbrookdale Soc.	2	0	0	Society	1	1	0
Ann Rose	0	10	0	D. P. Smith	1	1	0
C. Gilpin	1	1	0	Calne Society	1	1	0
Hereford Society	1	1	0	Leamington Soc.	1	1	0
South Petherton do.	1	1	0	James King	1	0	0
Eliza Barclay	5	0	0	G. Ashworth	1	0	0
Milford Haven				John Petre	1	0	0
Society	1	1	0	R. Scholefield	0	10	0
Cambridge Soc.	1	1	0	Henry King	0	10	0
F. Frith	1	1	0	Thomas Booth	0	5	0
West Norfolk				E. Taylor	0	5	0
Union	1	1	0	P. M'Kenzie	0	5	0
Haverfordwest	1	1	0	James Petrie	0	5	0
A. B.	5	0	0	John Petrie	0	5	0
Lancaster Society	1	1	0	R. Whitworth	0	2	6
Morley Society	1	1	0	W. W. Whitley	0	5	0
Hull Christian				A. Stewart	0	5	0
Temp. Society	1	1	0	F. Petrie	0	5	0
Star of Temper-				S. Stott	0	5	0
ance Hall, St.				G. Adamson	0	5	0
Giles's	1	1	0	Dr. Grindrod	1	1	0
S. A. Jeffreys	5	0	0	Mr. Dexter, Cole
W. Wilson	1	0	0	Street	2	5	0
Watford Society	1	1	0	Dumfries	1	1	0
Bow and Brom-				G. Baker, Clare	2	0	0
ley Society	1	1	0	John Elworthy	0	5	0
Dr. Lee	1	0	0	Joseph Mead	0	10	0
Metropolitan Dra-				Lostwithiel	1	1	0
pper's T. A. S.	1	1	0	Chester	1	0	0
Gillingham Soc.	2	10	0	Plymouth	1	1	0
Wellingboro', per				Miss Oldham	2	0	0
Mr. Beal	1	0	0	Robert Monnell	1	1	0
T. Norton, Jun.	5	5	0	Worcester	1	1	0
East Surrey Asso.	2	2	0	W. Carter, Leam-
Rev. H. H. Hayes	10	0	0	ington	1	1	0
Aberdeen Society	1	1	0	Neeve Gillingham	1	1	0
Malmesbury Soc.	1	1	0	Jonas Priestman	2	2	0
Greenacre Mon.				Leeds, per J. Ho-
Soc., Oldham	1	1	0	tham	23	0	0
New Brunswick				Anon. per Mr.
Society	10	10	0	Kershaw	0	1	0

£	s.	d.	£	s.	d.
Joseph Williams	5	0	0	Pakenham	0	2	6
Forres Society	0	10	0	St. Vincent. Soc.,
Ashford Society	1	1	0	W. Indies	1	0	0
S. and H. Goad	2	0	0	Mr. Grant, Don.	1	0	0
R. T. Cadbury	5	0	0	Mrs. Grant, „	1	0	0
John Cadbury	5	0	0	Penzance Soc.	1	1	0
T. T. Soc. Cecil's				Marazion do.	1	1	0
coffee house	0	10	6	Hayle do.	1	1	0
W. Bolton	2	2	0	West Cornwall
Collegiate friend,				Union	1	1	0
Manningtree	1	0	0	P. Whitehead	1	0	0
Joseph Sabin	0	5	0	C. T. Dodd	1	1	0
G. W. Anstie	5	0	0	East Cornwall
Wigan Parent Soc.	1	1	0	Association	3	3	6
T. Wild, Sibston	1	0	0	Robert Hooper,
J. B. Pease	5	5	0	Delabale	0	2	6
G. B., Brigham	1	1	0	Rev. T. Pearce,
J. Inwards, Leigh-				Roche	0	5	0
ton Buzzard	1	1	0	Capt. F. Roling
J. Tyler, Reading	2	0	0	Roche	0	5	0
John Royle, Staley-				J. Roberts	0	2	6
bridge	1	1	0	W. A. Pownie,
J. Lee, Duckingfield	1	1	0	Pensfillick	0	10	0
Samuel Wheeler, Ro-				S. Reesdale, Lis-
chester	1	1	0	keard	1	0	0
Benjamin Wheeler,				E. A. Crouch	1	0	0
Minfield	1	1	0	Miss J. V. Elliott	1	0	0
C. Swindlehurst,				E. V. M. Elliott	1	0	0
Preston	1	1	0	J. Hankie, Roche	0	1	0
G. McEwen, Perth	1	1	0	W. Pearce, Esq.,
G. W. Digby, Mal-				Launceston	0	10	6
don	0	10	6	H. Mudge, Bodmin	1	0	0
W. Willis, Luton	1	1	0	W. Farrow, Wo-
Luton Society	1	1	0	burn	1	10	0
James Herbert,				W. F. Nicholson,
Braintree	1	1	0	Whitehaven	2	0	0
Rev. —, Martin,				James Potter,
Saffron Walden	1	1	0	Dunstable	1	1	0
W. Templeton, Scot.				J. Norton, Lincoln	2	0	0
T. League	1	1	0	„ donation	2	0	0
N. F. Cottrell, Lys-				Robert Philip,
combe & Wid-				Neath Soc.	1	1	0
combe	1	1	0	Rev. T. Hartley,
T. Cooper, Sunder-				Southampton	1	1	0
land	2	0	0	T. Reid, Glasgow
R. Pace, London	1	0	0	T. T. Soc.	1	1	0
Jas. Clark, Street	1	1	0	T. Beaumont, Brad-
John Mason, Shep-				ford	1	1	0
ton Mallet	1	1	0	W. White, Spalding	1	1	0
Henry Tuson, Il-				Rev. R. Tabraham	1	5	0
chester Society	1	1	0	J. H. Burton,
D. Johnston, Peck-				Winchester	1	1	0
ham	1	1	0	W. Donaton, St.
W. Melviu, Paisley	3	0	0	Ives	1	1	0
F. Beck, Hastings	1	1	0	Rev. J. Whitmore,
Birmingham	2	2	0	Rushden	1	1	0
J. Plato, Chesham	1	1	0	Peterboro' Soc.	0	5	0
J. Spragg, Ealing	1	1	0	Gravesend Soc.	1	1	0
Thomas Siley, North				Kirkaldy do.	1	1	0
Shields	1	1	0	Bridport do.	1	1	0
W. Johnston, Thame	1	1	0	Pwelheli do.	0	10	0
Lynn, West Norfolk	1	1	0	Dundee	1	1	0
Scottish Tempe-				J. Coombes, Bedford	1	1	0
rance League	10	0	0	Thomas Newman	2	0	0
R. Willett, Hud-				Benjamin Smith	1	1	0
dersfield	2	2	0	A Friend	0	10	0
J. Pearce, Tavistock	1	1	0	Wm. Sims, Esq.	1	0	0
Thorner Wakefield	1	1	0	Josiah Forster	1	0	0

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

We must beg the kind indulgence of several of our friends, who have furnished us with good and interesting articles. Until the matters of Convention are fairly before the public, we cannot possibly pay any attention to their favours. They shall have our best attention at the earliest period.

NOTICE.

We beg leave to call attention to a small tract advertised in our columns, by James Teare. Every friend of the temperance movement would do well to peruse it; he will certainly derive some information as to the origin of the Temperance Societies. We regard it as an essential element in every temperance library.

To the Editor of the "Chronicle and Recorder."

Mr. EDITOR,—I beg to acknowledge through your columns the following donations to the Teare Testimonial, in addition to those already advertised:—

£	s.	d.	£	s.	d.
John Meredith	0	10	0	Mrs. Landon	1	0	0
W. Carter, Leam-				Sarah Hoare	0	10	0
ington	0	10	0	Miss Wedgwood	5	0	0
J. Buckle, London	1	0	0	R. Charlton	5	0	0
G. W. Atwood	1	1	0	Tottenham Soc.	6	6	0
R. G. Mason	1	0	0	St. Alban's Christian
The Rev. H. H.				Temperance Soc.	1	11	0
Hayes, Bath	5	0	0

Your's sincerely,
W. JANSON, Jun.

Advertisements.

THE WATER CURE.

Mr. GIBBS, having recently returned from Gräfenberg, where he has passed two years and eight months in the study of the Water cure, and having obtained a certificate of competency from Priessnitz, can be consulted for a limited period on Mondays, Wednesdays, and Fridays, between the hours of 10 A.M. and 2 P.M., at 8, Mansion-house-place, Camberwell, or, when not occupied in consultation, he will attend patients at their dwellings. Captain Claridge, who, on his second visit to Gräfenberg, remained there during the last year of Mr. Gibbs' residence, also has borne testimony to Mr. Gibbs' acquirements in the Water cure. The efficacy of the Water cure in the treatment of chronic diseases is now too well known to require comment, but it is in acute disorders, such as fevers, small-pox, measles, scarletina, influenza, inflammatory and other diseases of the chest and air-passages, cholera, and various diseases incidental to females and children, that this mode of treatment is most surprising in its results, and in such cases it is followed by no long and painful convalescence. The water cure also claims to be less uncertain and less dangerous than any other mode of treatment, but, nevertheless, it should not be lightly undertaken by persons who have neither a scientific nor a practical knowledge of its different appliances, and their various effects on the system; for if its misapplications can in no case be attended with dangerous or fatal consequences, it would be unnecessary to devote so long a time to the study of it. In conclusion, Mr. Gibbs begs to say, that his certificate is not one of mere residence, and that it and one more were the only certificates of competency granted by Priessnitz up to the date of Mr. Gibbs' departure from Gräfenberg.

JUST PUBLISHED, PRICE 6d.

THE ORIGIN AND SUCCESS

OF THE ADVOCACY

OF THE PRINCIPLE OF TOTAL ABSTINENCE

FROM ALL INTOXICATING LIQUORS;

Including some account of the Progress of the Temperance reformation. By JAMES TEARE, one of the Originators of the Total Abstinence System.

London: C. GILPIN, 5, Bishopsgate Street Without.

TEMPERANCE PROVIDENT INSTITUTION,
39, MOORGATE STREET, LONDON.

ESTABLISHED 31, DECEMBER, 1840.

TRUSTEES.

WM. JANSON, JUN. Esq. | ROBT. WARNER, Esq. | DEW. WEBB, Esq.

SECRETARY.

THEODORE COMPTON.

A PAYMENT OF SIXPENCE PER WEEK, or eleven skillings and tenpence per Quarter, will secure £50 at a Member's death, or payable to himself, on his attaining the age of sixty-five years; provided he enters the Society at the age of twenty-five.

Members are admitted at all ages, and for any sum from £10 to £1,500, on equally easy terms.

ONLY TWO MEMBERS HAVE DIED SINCE JULY, 1845.

Teetotalers are strongly advised to join at once. The whole of the profits will be divided amongst the members, according to the date of the entrance.

Papers to fill up; Rules, and every information will be given, or sent gratis to all parts of the kingdom.

THE STATISTICAL DOCUMENT READ AT THE CONVENTION IS NOW PRINTED, AND MAY BE HAD GRATIS AT THE OFFICE.

Just Published, post 8co., Price Twopence,

HYDROPATHY;

A Testimony in Favour of Temperance and the Cold Water Cure, by J. GREAVES RADFORD, Sewell, near Leamington.

Wishing to caution young men against the habits of intemperance, and to afford consolation and encouragement to others who may suffer as I have done, from dyspepsia, disease of the heart, and dropsy, with their concomitants, prostration of bodily strength and mental disease, I publish the following narrative of my case.—J. G.

London, SIMPKIN, MARSHALL, & Co.; Ipswich, BURTON, and all Booksellers.

The Largest Newspaper in the Kingdom for One Penny.

On Wednesday, July 22nd, the CHRISTIAN PENNY RECORD was published in a double sheet, eight pages double crown quarto (just half the size of the Patriot and the Nonconformist), and contains a great variety of general intelligence, in addition to the interesting matter by which it has hitherto been distinguished.

The Christian Penny Record may be sent free of postage, and may also be re-posted to any part of the United Kingdom and the Colonies.

Subscribers may enclose 1s. and a stamp in a post-paid letter, addressed to the Editor of the Christian Penny Record, Jersey, and the paper will be regularly sent for thirteen weeks.

Postage stamps may be enclosed for single numbers.

The Christian Penny Record offers singular advantages to advertisers. It circulates in England, Scotland, Ireland, and Wales, and the continent and the colonies, and meets the eye of ministers and members of every denomination. The charge, prepaid, will be as follows:—Right lines and under, 3s.; 3d. for each additional line; and half-price for every subsequent insertion. No quack advertisements can be admitted.

Published by WILLIAM REDSTONE, Jersey; and by VICKERS, Holywell Street, Strand, London; by whom orders for the paper and advertisements will be received.

LANDLORDS' AND TENANTS' BUILDING AND INVESTMENT SOCIETY.

Established, August, 1846.

Pursuant to Act of Parliament, 6 & 7 Wm. 4th, c. 32. Shares, £120. Monthly Subscriptions, 10s. per Share, Entrance Fee, 2s. 6d. per Share.

NO REDEMPTION FEES.

TRUSTEES.

William Naylor Morrison, Esq., Streatham Hill.
John King, Esq., College Hill, City, and Muswell Hill, Middlesex.

CHAIRMAN—C. H. Lovell, Esq., M.D. 91, Blackfriars Road.

SOLICITOR—Hull Terrell, Esq. 30, Basinghall Street.

MANAGER—Mr. William Lawley, 6, Red Lion Street, Borough.

SECRETARY—Mr. James Sears, 17, Trafalgar Street, Walworth.

For a list of Directors, see prospectus, which may be obtained on application to the Manager or Secretary; or will be forwarded by post, on receipt of a postage stamp for reply.

The first monthly subscription will be payable at the Southwark Literary Institution, Borough Road; on Friday evening, October 2nd, and on Monday, October 5th, at the Marylebone Literary Institution, 17, Edward Street, Portman Square, from half-past six till half-past eight o'clock, each evening. The Manager or Secretary will be in attendance every Monday evening, in September, at the Marylebone Literary Institution, and every Friday evening, in September, at the Southwark Literary Institution, from six till nine, each evening, to enrol shareholders, and answer inquiries.

Persons desirous of obtaining shares at the present low entrance fee of 2s. 6d., should make immediate application to the Manager or Secretary, and remit, by post order or otherwise, the entrance fee of 2s. 6d., and 1d. monthly subscription for each share.

Agencies for the society will be established in various localities. Applications for appointments to be made forthwith, post paid, to the Chairman, Manager, or Secretary.

* * The NATIONAL TEMPERANCE CHRONICLE and TEMPERANCE RECORDER is published on the first day of each month, at HOULSTON & STONEMAN, the Depot of the National Temperance Society, 65, Paternoster-row, and will be sent post-free for one year on receipt of 2s. 6d. postage labels. Annual Subscriptions received at the Society's office, 11, Tokenhouse Yard, London, and subscriptions and donations for the general purposes of the Society, by the Treasurer, G. W. ALEXANDER, 40, Lombard Street; by any Member of the Committee; and at the office as above.

London: Printed by RICHARD BARRETT of 3, Regent-terrace City-road, in the Parish of St. Lukes, in the County of Middlesex, Printer; at his Printing Office, No. 13, Mark-lane, in the Parish of Alhallow's Staining, in the City of London; and published by JOHN STONEMAN, of 24, Brooksby Street, in the Parish of Islington, in the County of Middlesex, at HOULSTON and STONEMAN'S, No. 65, Paternoster-row, in the Parish of St. Michael-le-Querne, in the City of London, Publishers.—Tuesday, September 1st, 1846.

THE
NATIONAL TEMPERANCE CHRONICLE
 AND
TEMPERANCE RECORDER.

It is good neither to eat flesh, nor to drink wine, nor anything whereby thy brother stumbleth, or is offended, or is made weak.—ROM. XIV. 21

No. 10, JOINT SERIES.]

OCTOBER, 1846.

[PRICE 1½d., STAMPED 2½d.]

CONTENTS.

	PAGE		PAGE
CHRONICLE AND RECORDER—Legislation and Temperance	217	FOREIGN INTELLIGENCE—
Increase of Crime and Depravity	219	Northern Europe—Jamaica—Lucerne—New Brunswick
Great Meeting at Exeter Hall	220	—Canada—Intemperance in Switzerland	232, 233
Sabbath Schools	224	HOME INTELLIGENCE—
Feeding Infants	227	Bridgewater—Leeds—Huddersfield—Cornwall—Ireland, Donnybrook Fair—Newmarket, Flint—North Wall—Edinburgh	233-235
EDITORIAL REMARKS—		Railway Labourers—Education of Princes—Annual Licensing Day at Bolton—Review—Advertisements	235-240
National Temperance Society—World's Temperance Convention—James Teare's Testimonial—World's Temperance Convention Fund—Subscriptions	228, 229
THE MISSION	230

Chronicle and Recorder.

OCTOBER 1ST, 1846.

LEGISLATION AND TEMPERANCE.

In looking over the report of the World's Convention, there are many suggestions of a valuable kind,—pointing to efforts which it is desirable to put in speedy operation. Amongst them, are some recommendations with regard to the young; and it is satisfactory to find that one of the first-fruits of the Convention will be, in all probability, an active movement on the part of the National Temperance Society on behalf of the rising generation. To our minds, no labour of greater importance invites the temperance reformer. On this unanimity could be ensured, whilst many others could only be prosecuted with divided energies.

Many of our friends, stimulated by the glowing pictures of success painted so brilliantly by our American brethren, are desirous of emulating their example, and attacking the traffic. The late "no license" movement, in the United States, seems to point at once to a great triumph, and it is asked, "Why not do the same thing?" We, however, doubt whether the Americans owe much of their success to this agitation against the traffic; and rather think the secret of their success will be found in the fact stated by Dr. Beecher at Exeter Hall, a report of which is contained in this number, "We began at the top—you began at the bottom." Though it may seem paradoxical to say that this was the right end, yet when we reflect that the few have the power of influencing the many in a thousand ways,—that they give the tone to fashion, habit, opinion, and conventional morality, it will appear plain that, in obtaining the aid of the class from which magistrates, employers, and legislators are taken, they began at the right end, and adopted the most successful means of revolutionizing the habits of the people. They owe much, too, to many other causes. The genius of the people is different,—they used almost entirely spirituous liquors,—their drinking system was not founded upon so many usages, growing up with their growth and interwoven with their habits,—they commenced the warfare earlier, and they begin to reap the fruits of the long, arduous, and continuous education of the population, before our seed-time is over. It does not follow, however, that the same agencies which have been successful with them, would have the same measure of success in this empire. There is an infinity of little differences in national character and manners to be taken in account; and, perhaps, no reasoning is more likely to be erroneous than that which, founded upon the observances, state of intelligence, and general condition of one country, is made to apply to the circumstances of another. It is true, we have the same primitive instincts, but they are biassed by innumerable local influences; and it is doubtful how far this nation could imitate America, in this particular, with any chance of success. We have never yet been satisfied with the arguments in favour of legislative interference. Our business is with the people. All government is founded upon opinion. We have to educate that opinion before we can make it bear upon the legislature; and we admit our apprehension, that an effort in such a direction, with divided sentiments and efforts, would waste the means and labour, which would more appropriately be devoted to the cultivation of a public opinion in favour of temperance principles. When we reflect, that we differ in this matter with many of the most active and zealous advocates of our cause,—this is stated with diffidence, and subject to future judgment, on a more careful revision.

The people of this country have erred in no one point more than this. They are always blaming government for the evils which press upon them, and looking to legislation rather than themselves for help. It is little after all that legislation can do for them, unless they are intelligent and courageous enough to help themselves. There is an undoubted evil in encouraging this feeling amongst the people, as they sit down and waste their industry and means, waiting for some law to better their condition. One day, they ask for a law to regulate wages; another, they clamour for restriction of hours of labour by special enactment. It is easy to see that all this is in their own power. By increasing the demand for labour; and the sum of money spent in drink, if employed in encouraging the useful arts, would create a demand, that would raise wages; and by making the labourer sober, they would raise him to independence. Besides, in this matter, are we not in danger of recognising a bad principle and dangerous precedent. We must not forget that there are other great questions, besides ours, engaging the attention of moral reformers, and that we are sometimes apt to overlook the claims of others in our own. The improvement of man,—making him an intelligent, thinking, educated being, ought to be our aim. Total abstinence, after all, is only the absence of an evil—only a negative good; and we ought to be particularly careful not to involve ourselves in a recognition of any principle, however convenient or desirable its present results would appear to be, that would place us in a false position. We must not forget the future in the present. The temperance movement has powerful claims upon us, every day's observation and reflection adds weight to those claims; but they are subordinate to, and, in fact, the temperance cause is only a element in the great moral movement at present going on, by which mankind is to be advanced in knowledge, goodness and happiness.

We know that many excellent men differ on this point. They place within the province of legislation questions which we would entrust to the progressive intelligence of the community. The danger seems to us, in admitting a power, that if carried out to its full and legitimate extent, would interfere with all action and all opinion. The history of political institutions is full of instructive lessons on this very head; and, probably, the world has suffered as much from mistaken but conscientious error, as it has from cupidity and ambition. The right of private judgment and individual action have been trampled upon. Look at the conclaves and councils which have met. They have decided upon what they believed to be right; and, borrowing the power of the secular arm, have coerced where homage was not a willing service. Christianity has been thus protected by law, and has been made an engine of oppression, and a weapon in the hands of power. Commerce, science, education, have all been subjects of legislation; and instead, of growing healthily, exposed to rain, blast and sunshine, have sickened and dwindled down. Moral truth needs no such protection. We want to raise up a race of hardy intelligent men, daring to act and think for themselves. But they must be moral agents—they must be free. If you could withdraw from them every temptation to evil—you make them machines—they become, not actively good, but passive instruments. Man's responsibility depends upon his perfect free-agency; and, therefore, if we possessed the power to prevent the making or use of intoxicating drink, how far should we be justified in using the power? This question becomes a grave one, and causes some perplexity in our minds. Our only motive, in thus mooting it, is to create an inquiry amongst temperance reformers, as to what extent we can appeal to the legislature—as unanimity is desirable in all our movements. Whatever may be done, we hope it will enlist the sympathies of all.

The government might turn round upon us and say that we were the minority—that their power emanated in the will of the majority—and that, unless, we could admit so dangerous a principle as that the minority ought to rule, we could not ask for legislative enactments to coerce men into that line of conduct we believe to be right. The ground is not very materially altered suppose we were the majority. Every day we have to smart under some injustice perpetrated by legislation, supported by the will of the majority. And we are, therefore, keenly susceptible of allowing the right of government to interfere with our individual rights, actions and opinions. As God's creatures we have rights above all law; and the popular notions with regard to the sphere of legislation continues many an anomaly and oppression, at variance with the divine commands. It arises from the common fallacy alluded to. Men depend upon law. There is something flattering to human nature in being allowed to play the despot: and this has been the curse of every age. We want faith in the power of good—faith in the promises of God—faith in humanity—faith in the ultimate triumph of that which is true, and to supply the place of that faith, we seek by coercive means to attain our reforms. Is there not in it the lurking spirit of persecution?

We, moreover, believe that the evil is one which, were it right, legislation cannot cure.

We have paid some attention to the subject, and are led by facts to the conviction, that all efforts to enforce morality by either sumptuary laws or penal statutes, have signally failed. But to this subject we shall turn our attention in another article.

We shall be glad to place the views of others before our readers. We have now three parties:—Those who think that it is expedient to appeal to the legislature to close public-houses on the Sabbath-day; adopting this as a step towards a more complete measure. Another class believe that this is an insufficient measure, and that our petition should be to close them altogether; whilst another party, probably the weakest in numerical strength, but the strongest in influence, are opposed to all legislative interference. We have attempted to express our doubts, and shall be glad to open our pages to others, who represent opposite opinions. The only condition we impose is, that the writers shall confine themselves to an investigation of the subject, without reference to the individuals who may advocate one view or the other. Our motive will be obvious. We wish the question to be discussed on its own merits.

INCREASE OF CRIME AND DEPRAVITY.

MR. TREMENEHERE'S REPORT.

(From the Morning Chronicle.)

Rather more than a quarter of a century ago, a member of the philanthropical family of the Gurneys, on his return from Scotland, which he had visited in order to examine its prisons, published a small volume of notes made in the course of the journey. It was stated by him that the gaol of Dundee, which served not merely for that town but for a considerable tract of surrounding country, did not contain a single prisoner at the time of his visit, and had not contained any for the four preceding months. Since the period of that tour, Dundee has certainly made considerable progress in wealth and industry, but its progress in crime and depravity has been still more remarkable. It appears, from a report of the proceedings at a public meeting, for the establishment of juvenile schools of industry, copied into the Chronicle of Wednesday last, that the commitments to the gaol of Dundee, from July, 1845, to July, 1846, amounted to no fewer than 1408, and that of this number 653 were females, and 202 of both sexes under the age of seventeen. This is progressing with a vengeance! But though the increase of crime in Dundee is no doubt startling, yet Scotland, in general, which, till within the last thirty years, was remarkably free from crime, has now, it would seem, attained a bad eminence in that respect. In the year ending June, 1845, there were no fewer than 18,000 prisoners in that part of the island.

One of the speakers at the meeting, Mr. Sheriff Henderson, stated, that in nineteen cases out of twenty, crime sprang from one cause—excessive indulgence in spirituous liquors, the drunkenness of the parents leading to the crimes of the children. The inspector of prisons in Scotland, states that prisoners are stunted both in body and mind, as might be expected from the life they have led from their childhood; for it would appear, that in that christian country, the vices of the parents are truly visited on the children, as there is no adequate provision for the destitute.

Is it the universal concomitant of prosperous industry, that the labouring population should be depraved, and their offspring criminals? Must men who are in the receipt of high wages, when congregated in masses, uniformly exhibit the revolting spectacle of beastly intemperance, ending in premature death and abandonment of offspring? In Glasgow, a fearfully depraved place, the rate of mortality in the course of twenty years, more than doubled itself. But the offspring of the victims of intemperance remain a pest to society. The Dean of Guild stated, at the Dundee meeting, that the last time he had sat in the police-court, there was brought before him a boy, charged with the crime of housebreaking, and the child was so small that he had to be raised upon the seat that he might be seen. This young offender was only a few months more than six years of age, and it was not his first offence.

Though Scotland certainly has a bad eminence in drunkenness and crime, we are sorry to say that high wages produce elsewhere kindred results, whenever men are congregated in large masses. In Mr. Tremenehere's Report on the operation of Lord Ashley's Act, a fearful picture is given of the intemperance of the miners in Monmouthshire and Brecon.

"It is desirable," he says, "to direct especial attention to the fact of the great and general increase of intemperance since the return of high wages and prosperity, in the autumn of 1844. The fact is notorious throughout the entire district, comprising a population of at least 140,000 souls. At all the works, it was stated to me, that although the wages of colliers now ranged from £1. 1s. to £1. 5s. per week, and the earnings of the men employed about the furnaces and rolling mills from £2. to £4. per week, with a corresponding high rate in every other species of employment, the great majority of the work-people, men, women, and boys, spent the whole of their earnings within the week, principally in eating, and were often in debt besides. On Sunday nights, as at other convenient times, the public-houses are generally full. Among the statements made to me on this subject, were the following:—The Rev. T. Davies, incumbent of Pontypool, informed me, that he estimated that on Sunday evenings there were now from 1200 to 1500 people in the public-houses and beer-shops of his parish, containing a population of 7000. As beer-houses, &c., abound among all the adjoining masses of population, it would appear that not far short of the entire adult working population frequent those places on Sunday evenings. A highly-respectable dissenting minister, in another part of the district, thus expressed himself to me on this subject:—'The people began to drink away all their earnings as soon as the good times returned. I have laboured among them many years, and I am sorry to say I see no improvement in their habits in this respect, and but little, if any, in their general morals. Teetotalism has declined; for every twenty whom I induced to join it a few years ago, I have not now five who have remained. My chapel is attended by at least 400 people every Sunday evening, and it is shocking to think, after so many years of my ministry, that immediately after the service is over they all flock to the beer-shops and public-houses.' The general state of things seems to be summed up in the expression frequently used in answer to my inquiries on this point, 'the more wages they get, the more they spend in drink;' and, unhappily it is also added, 'the less they spend in the education of their children;' for, notwithstanding their own ample earnings, the moment there is the least demand for their children's labour, they take them from school at the earliest age at which they can earn anything, whereas, when employment is slack, they are content that they should be left at school, provided it cost them little. Females, in many cases, frequent the public-houses and beer-shops with the men; or, if they remain at home, they often send their daughters for spirits. With the participart of the female part of the population in these demoralising habits, the prospect of amendment in this particular seems remote."

A curious circumstance is stated by Mr. Tremenhoe, respecting the agricultural labourers of Pembrokeshire, that though their wages are very low, from six shillings to eight shillings per week, and there is a great demand for labourers in the iron districts of South Wales, they cannot be induced to take advantage of this demand.

"One considerable employer," he says, "informed me that he had recently commissioned a person, well known in Pembrokeshire, to go there for the purpose of hiring colliers and labourers at high wages, undertaking to give him £5 for every fifty he might secure. Several other employers in Glamorganshire stated to me that they were each in want of 200 and 300 labourers and colliers. In the first case, about fifty were induced to come; but many of them very soon returned to their own country. In Pembrokeshire I inquired the reasons for this apparent reluctance to improve their condition by taking advantage of the higher rate of wages in the iron districts. The answers of many men, whose sons or brothers had gone there, were creditable to them:—'It is almost certain ruin to a young man to go there,' (i. e. to Merthyr and the neighbouring valleys.) 'Two of my sons went, and one has turned out bad already.' 'Some go, and they come back all the worse for it.' While, in the iron districts, on the other hand, I inquired what were the habits of the men from Pembrokeshire. The substance of the answers I received from managers and agents of works was, that at the first they were correct and good; that many saved money and sent it home to their poorer relatives; but that very many others soon fell into the manners that prevailed around them, and became drunken and demoralized."

With this and similar evidence before us, it is impossible to deny that, under existing social arrangements, the prosperity of the middle and upper classes is, to a great extent, purchased at the expense of the vice and crimes of the lower, and that intemperance, with all its fearful consequences, is found in most places to increase in the ratio of their advance in industry. Within two or three years, the iron trade in the west of Scotland has risen from comparative insignificance to an almost incredible magnitude; but depravity and crime more than keep pace with its progress.

High wages are only to be obtained by severe labour, and the man who labours hard throughout the whole day is almost inevitably driven to spend part of his earnings in stimulants. Some persons have supposed that the disposition to inebriation is peculiar to this country; but if there is more inebriation here than elsewhere, it should be remembered that there is likewise more severe labour. Wherever in other countries the circumstances are similar, the same results take place. It was remarked by Mr. Edgeworth, more than sixty years ago, that the men employed about rafts on the Rhone, at Lyons, who earned about five shillings a day by severe labour, almost all drank brandy to excess, and became, in a few years, the victims of intemperance. The attempts which hitherto have been made, to find a succedaneum for intemperance, in the case of men exhausted by toil, have had comparatively little success. But enough has been accomplished to give ground for sanguine hope of what may be effected whenever the enlightened mind of society is really roused to a sense of what the time requires, and impelled to work skilfully and steadily for its attainment. Lord Ellesmere's experiment, to which we recently alluded, is not the only one which proves that a taste for music may be communicated to a hard-working population; and the elevating power of a complete and vigorous educational system is a thing of which we can scarcely form a conception from our present feeble and paralytic organisation for instructing the poor. It is clear, that only through moral and intellectual appliances can a substitute be found for physical stimuli: but we are only beginning to understand the extent and variety of the resources for social improvement which we have in our possession.

GREAT MEETING AT EXETER HALL.

ON MONDAY EVENING, August 24th, a meeting was held in the Great Hall. The Rev. Dr. Lyman Beecher, presided. He said that when he wrote his six Sermons on Intemperance, he little thought that his book would be read all over the world. He wrote it in the hope of saving two dear friends from an early grave in consequence of intemperance. But it had pleased God to throw it on the wings of the wind, and now he could scarce go any where but persons shook hands with him, and thanked him for the publication. He little thought, at one time, that he should stand in the midst of a large assembly of the friends of temperance in the metropolis of England, and that he should be called upon to preside at such a meeting. But he rejoiced that it was so, and he regarded it as an encouragement to renewed exertion.

Mr. PARKER of Southwark, testified to the excellence of the principle of teetotalism, in connexion with the due performance of arduous labour. He adverted to the opposition which the earlier advocates of the principle had to encounter, and on the gradual and rapid increase of living witnesses to its efficacy, including many physiologists, chemists, and political economists.

Mr. H. CLAPP, jun., U.S., said that the evils of intemperance were so rife in London, and the mischief done by it so evidently involved the best interests of the souls as well as the bodies of men, that it had excited his astonishment that so many thousands could witness such evils, and yet not only not assist to apply the remedy, but even oppose its application.—(Hear.) Men congregated in thousands for the purpose of putting down what they conceived to be great evils, and yet against the greatest evil of all—intemperance, but few voices were lifted up. If a dwelling were destroyed by fire, or an individual was destroyed by the hand of the murderer, the whole kingdom was agitated, and the columns of the Times and other papers contained long articles on the event. How was it that public sympathy was not roused and the public prints engaged, in reference to the wholesale murder of bodies and souls, and the destruction of the most valuable property in the world, by the use of fiery liquid poisons?—(Hear, hear.) For it was by no means the worst part of intemperance that it took the brightness from the eye, and the colour from the cheek; that it palsied the muscles and crippled the limbs of the body: it also took the brightness from the mind, the strength from the soul, and weakened, and crippled, and destroyed body and soul together.—(Hear, hear.) The temperance advocate, who was fully alive to such facts, might well be pardoned, if he used somewhat strong language in urging all around him to leave no means untried by which they might put down so fearful an evil.—(Cheers.) He was convinced that till the political and religious community were roused to some course of action worthy the great cause—till the highest authorities both in the church and in the state took the lead in the temperance movement, they would greatly fail of discharging their duty. Let them but act promptly and vigorously in this matter, and they would reflect honour on their own characters, at the same time that they would greatly benefit the community.—(Cheering.)

Rev. EMERSON ANDREWS, Philadelphia, said that it was evident that man was formed to be happy, to enjoy nature and his fellow-creatures, and God, and to rise higher and higher in the scale of moral excellence. Yet many were unhappy, sunk in poverty, want, and misery. Some fell destroyer must have passed over the globe; some gloomy sirocco must have poisoned the earth.—Intemperance was that destroyer; it slew its thousands and tens of thousands, and was daily pushing men and women to the verge of eternity. What was to be done to arrest his progress—to roll back the tide—to stop the raging of the flame? Men were either principals or abettors in this matter; and those who did not exert themselves to the utmost to save the perishing would incur a fearful responsibility.—(Hear.) In looking on the great moral acclama, the inquiry was suggested, "Can these dry bones live? Can creatures so wretched be raised up?" In America they had long thought it impossible, but God had raised up men to care for them. Beecher had stood forth, at first single-handed, but many noble souls joined him, and the result had been most glorious.—(Cheers.) But the work should by no means be confined to ministers of religion; all should engage, young and old, males and females. Let all take up the work, till strong drink was banished from the parlour, the dining-room, the wedding-table, and every other place into which it was now introduced.—(Cheers.) He advised the wives present who had intemperate husbands to send them over to America; they would lose nothing by parting with them for a season, and if they returned converted into sober men, as no doubt they would, it would be a blessed change.—(Laughter and cheers.)

Rev. T. BRAINERD, Philadelphia, said that he and the chairman and his other friends, had not come over to England because there was no work for them to do in America. Thirty thousand in America suffered and died in the course of one year, in consequence of their use of strong drinks. He was told that about 60,000 died annually in England from the same cause. It was reported that 12,000 British troops fell in the Battle of Waterloo, and a writer had said that "the corn grew richer and waved more gracefully, because the roots were watered with human blood." But five times 12,000 died every year in consequence of intemperance.—(Hear, hear.) "Let my relations," said the rev. speaker, "die honourably at the end of a useful life, with Calvary full in their view; but O! let not my father, let not my beloved brethren who sat with me at the same table, become men whom I must blush to meet in the streets!"—(Cheers.) Ah, it was the intellect that died—the conscience that died; the body of the inebriate lived, but the man was dead to heaven's high purposes, stalking along as a corpse among the living.—(Hear.) And if he knew that 60,000 such were perishing annually, was he to be branded as an enthusiast; to be accused of being "righteous over much," because he endeavoured to induce some to dash from their lips the enticing bowl?—(Cheers.) He looked with pleasure on children becoming teetotalers; old men and drunkards were dying off, but the children were coming forward, and temperance would thus be established. The Methodists of America were, he said, the most useful and indefatigable ministers among them, and they had greatly helped the cause of temperance.—(Hear.) He asked, who were the persons most likely to oppose the temperance cause? Those who profited by the evil. He would state a metaphysical proposition, which, however, was sufficiently plain to be perfectly intelligible. No man was ever satisfied to have his moral conduct far below his moral judgment. Of course, he must either bring up his conduct to his judgment, or he must bring down his judgment to his conduct. So long as a man chose to drink himself, or to give drink to others, he would try to bring his judgment down to his practice, and would aim to justify his practice in every possible way.—(Hear.) He wished to speak with respect as to those who, like himself, were engaged in the ministry; but he must say, that in England he had scarcely gone to the house of one minister upon whose table he had not found the intoxicating cup.—(Hear, hear.) In America, in the course of the last fifteen years, he had scarcely seen a drop of intoxicating drink on any table. When attention was first called to the subject in that country, the pulpit was roused, and success ensued. Till the clergy could be brought to abstain from strong drink themselves, they would defend the system of drinking.—(Hear.) They must bring themselves up to the practice of abstinence, or they would aim to show that the practice was absurd and fanatical.—(Hear.) "If any man will do his will, he shall know of the doctrine whether it be of God;" and a similar remark might be applied to total abstiners; if any man would abstain, he would soon receive light on the subject of intemperance. Those who were engaged in the traffic would oppose the principle of temperance. He was told that there were about 5000 houses in the metropolis devoted to the sale of strong drink; allowing £200 per annum for each house, there was a million sterling; or if £400, two millions sterling. Such men would, of course, support their system with all the zeal which interest could suggest.—(Hear.) He would not say that they intended to injure those who bought of them, but that they did injure, who could deny? And when God should make inquisition for blood, at whose hands would he require the blood of the lost? The real motive was gain. When Judas said, "What will you give me and I will betray Him into your hands?" he had no malice against his master; all he wanted was the thirty pieces of silver; so those men did not sell to ruin men, or their wives or children, they sold the liquor for the pieces of silver.—(Cheers.) The former days of such ignorance God winked at. Thousands who sold strong drink had never read a temperance paper or heard a temperance lecture. But it was their bounden duty to inquire, and not to proceed recklessly without making due inquiry as to consequences.—(Hear.) It seemed to be a fact that there were in London five or six thousand men who were constantly receiving from their customers, and giving little or nothing back as to building, feeding, clothing, or otherwise benefiting the public.—(Hear.) All that they gave was a liquor that induced disease, that brought on poverty, and that hurried down to a premature grave. Those who received from the public should give back proportionally; but if all the gin and brandy and other drinks were brought out upon some common and burned, just as much good would be done to London as was done by its being poured down the throats of human beings.—(Hear.) Mr. Brainerd concluded a very eloquent address by calling upon the females present to come to the rescue of the great city, London.

Rev. H. OSBORN, Rhode Island, referred to a visit he had recently paid to Father Mathew, by whom he was assured that the cause was progressing, he having administered the pledge to about 4000 at Limerick the day preceding. It is evident that in England the cause had not made such progress as in America, but it was also evident that in England there were great difficulties to encounter. Enough, however, had been done to warrant the hope of success.

Mr. T. A. SMITH, who was much cheered, referred to the custom of drinking the health of great Generals. He considered the chairman as one of the greatest Generals he had ever seen; for his victories, though numerous, left no widow's tears, no orphan's cries, no groans of sorrow or of pain as the results.—(Cheers.) He confessed that he was more anxious to visit the Convention for the sake of seeing Dr. Beecher, than for the sake of the Convention itself. He had, many years ago, read his six sermons with pleasure, and rejoiced to know that they had circulated most extensively.

The CHAIRMAN expressed his wish to say two or three things to that large assembly before retiring from it. He would first say, Be of good courage. It was good for a man to hope and patiently wait. He had been sanguine from the first as to the issue of that cause, and he was kept sanguine.—(Cheers.) He had always expected that the cause would go on—it had gone on—and it would go on.—(Cheers.) The cause was in the ascendant.—(Cheers repeated.) There were some discouragements in England, which there were not in America. In America, they had with them some of the first men in Church and State, so that they went on with great vigour. They began in high places; the ship was launched in style, and went forth through the waters like an arrow.—(Cheers.) But let not the friends in England suppose, that because they began at the lowest end, and had to lift upwards, that therefore they had no advantages. There were many ways of beginning. In England they began at the bottom; but the bottom was the largest portion, and if they succeeded in moving that, the whole must move. The English had begun to get the victory where the Americans began to get the defeat. When men worked on the top of a rock they succeeded to move but a portion; but if they worked at the bottom, and moved that, the whole mass was sure to move.—(Hear.) In America, the beginning was more hopeful for laziness—in England, it was more hopeful for working men; and the cause would assuredly go on till peace prevailed—till misery was swept away—and till righteousness prevailed over the whole earth.—(Cheers.) He and his brethren would return to America cheered. They might be a little a-head of England as it respected republican liberty; but there might be too much of that as well as too little. In America, they had got to take care of universal suffrage; in England they had to try to get a little more. Let them take courage: they would assuredly succeed in all that was good.—(Much cheering.)

Rev. J. ADAMS, President of the Methodist Episcopal Church, Massachusetts, said, that though he had not delivered many speeches, he had endeavoured by precept, by example, and by prayer to God, to back up the advocates of that cause.—(Cheers.) Two things he had been desirous of for some years—the one was to see Father Beecher; the other, to visit England. He had been permitted to do both, and was greatly rejoiced to see so many friends. Some persons thought that the teetotalers were going too far; that they were bordering on fanaticism; but the tree was known by its fruits. The fruits of the tree of intemperance were decidedly bad; therefore it was felt desirable to cut it down. Some would lop off the outer branches, that society laid its axe at the very root. His axe might not have so keen an edge as some; but he would endeavour to lay on a little more strength.—(Cheers.) He urged all present to pray for the success of the cause, and to let their lives be a comment on the excellence of their principles.—(Cheers.)

Rev. J. MARSH of New York, had been admiring some of the noble statues which adorned the metropolis; but there was a class of men who claimed to be great benefactors to the public, for whom, as yet, no monument had been prepared or devised. It appeared from a paper, which he held in his hand, that the licensed victuallers of London had been misrepresented, and that they had just cause for complaint, not on their own account merely, but on account of the public; and they pleaded that, for the sake of the people, they ought to be allowed to sell during the whole of the Sunday. It was stated that they paid government eleven millions annually—a sum which was some hundreds more than was paid for the whole expenses of the army, the navy, and the metropolitan and rural police. Now he (Mr. Marsh), ventured to say that such great benefactors to the public ought to have a statue erected to them in Hyde-park, such a statue as the world had never before seen. He would have on one side, carved by the most eminent sculptors, groups of miserable drunkards, raving in delirium tremens—tearing the hair of their wives—beating their children, &c. &c. On another side, he would have placed paupers, lunatics and criminals, made so by strong drink. On the other sides, various other wretched victims of strong drink, all carved in marble, for posterity to look at, and to judge how far the licensed victuallers of the present age were the benefactors of their race.—(Hear.) Benefactors of their race!—why what were they doing? What benefits had they conferred upon the community? Till the traffic in strong drink was held up to just indignation, the work of the temperance men would not be done. It had been said that if all men were made teetotalers the traffic would cease; but it was not so. The traffic presented temptations continually, even to teetotalers, and the result would be that they would some of them go back to drunkenness, while a new generation was continually coming on to the stage to be enticed and ruined by it.—(Hear, hear.) A fearful instance of relapse was here related. Mr. Marsh then briefly stated what had been done in America in reference to the licensing system. He also expressed the pleasure he had felt in a visit to Father Mathew; he greatly respected that man of God, and hoped he would be long spared, and furnished with means to go on with his great work.—(Cheers.) As he (Mr. Marsh) passed through London, he greatly admired the police. It was a beautiful system; but let the temperance reform proceed, let the gin-shops and beer-shops be closed, and the police would no longer be needed, prisons would be to let, and great prosperity would result to the community.—(Cheers.) Why, then, should not the ministers of State be with them?—(Hear.) And why should not the ministers of Christ be with them?—(Hear, hear.) Religion should go first in all such movements; and it was a burning shame that the two most religious nations of the earth should be the most drunken.

—(Hear.) The great Dragon had poured upon the woman a flood of intoxicating drinks, and she had drunk of his cup, and wiped her mouth and said, "I have done no harm;" but the earth had helped the woman; temperance had risen, and had seized the Dragon and had wounded him to his hurt. He (Mr. Marsh) regretted that the wine cup had been seen in the meetings of the "Evangelical Alliance." It had been seen there, and he could conceive that Satan smiled at the sight, and said, "Form your Alliances as you will, and still hold the wine-cup, and I will hold the world for ever."—(Hear and cheering.) He knew that many of those ministers who were now seeking alliance with the American churches would not be able to gain admission into many of those churches, unless they renounced their drinking-customs.—(Hear, hear.) In America, the question was fairly put before members were admitted into communion; and if a hesitating answer was given, it was said, "You had better, then, think a little longer on this matter; for, till you are willing to 'pluck out the right eye or cut off the right hand,' you are not ready to unite with a Christian Church."—(Hear.) Till a great change had taken place in that respect, no very rapid progress would be made. While the church upheld intemperance there could be no millenium. Notwithstanding all these things there was great encouragement to go on. Great things are doing in England. When he and Dr. Beecher returned to America, they would collect large audiences in every town, and would encourage their brethren by telling them what they had seen and heard in England.—(Cheers.)

Rev. W. PATTERSON of Manchester, thought that, though the wine bottle was seen in christian gatherings, yet a great change for the better had taken place. He could name churches in England, too, in which the same rule was observed in reference to the admission of members, as in America. He did not think it the best plan to speak evil of those who were engaged in the traffic; they ought not to be too hard upon such men; get the people to abstain, and the traffic would go down of itself.—(Expressions of dissent.) He concluded by an examination of the flimsy excuses usually made for the use of strong drinks, and an earnest exhortation to consistency and perseverance.

Mr. JOSHUA HIMES, from Boston, U. S., said that though he had seen many grog-shops in America, he had never seen places fitted up as in London, so calculated to allure and destroy mankind. He did not wish "to be hard" upon those concerned in the traffic, but he would venture to ask a few questions. 1. Did people really think that 5000 gin-shops and liquor-shops were needed in London?—(Loud cries of "No, no.") They needed markets for meat—bakers—tailors—carpenters—builders; institutions for the blind, the dumb, the sick, and so on; but they did not need gin and beer-shops. And if they did not need them, why have them?—(Cheers.) Why give gentlemen so much trouble to keep them open; why keep them from church; why put them to such heavy expenses? Where was the wisdom or economy of sustaining 5000 shops at an expense of two millions per annum, which, by the way, was not paid by them but by the poor drunkard, or by those who drank.—(Hear.) Persons in London seemed to be asleep on this matter. They supported these men, and every year or two some of them were retiring on the handsome fortunes they had gained from the public. Then he would ask, what would the people lose if all those shops were removed? Who would suffer if they were all closed? Would the rich suffer? Would the poor? He thought not.—(Cheers.) Would it be a calamity to the metropolis if they were all shut up from that very night? Would it be felt as a great fire would, or an earthquake?—(Cries of "No, no.") It would be no calamity, except for a season, to the 5000 men who were supported by those houses. But while those men considered it a calamity to have their shops closed, let them look on the thousands upon whom they brought calamities every day. On which side was humanity, common sense, justice?—(Hear.) He admitted that they ought not to "be hard" upon such gentlemen; but he had a proposition to make. If those gentlemen must be supported, let them be supported, and supported in comfort, but on condition that they kept their shops closed, so far as the sale of strong drinks was concerned.—(Cheers.) While they continued open, they were like so many mortars throwing missiles in every direction, and producing misery, death and desolation. A man was hardly safe in passing them. Let the men be supported, then, in the way he had proposed; or if they were not satisfied with that, let them seek a more honest calling.—(Hear and cheers.) People were very sensitive when their interests were touched. He was of opinion that no man who had common sense had any right to sell alcoholic drinks; if a man had not sense to see that, he was not accountable to either God or man; but if he claimed common sense and respectability and yet sold them, he was under a gross delusion; and he who could find an excuse for such a man, either paid him a very poor compliment, or assisted to cover up a great villany.—(Hear.) He who could see 5000 liquor-shops open, with the heart of a man, to say nothing of a Christian—and yet find an excuse for them, was one whose head and whose heart he (Mr. Himes) did not envy.—(Hear.) Well then; would they assist to shut those houses up? If they were asked in any way to sustain them, let them at once declare themselves teetotallers, and refuse to have anything to do with them. Gin-shops were beautiful places, most elegantly fitted up, with their bars, and "bottle departments," and so on, but they ought to have honest inscriptions placed over their articles,—“murders for sale,” “adulteries for sale,” “poverty, broken hearts, rags, misery, for sale;” and so they should go on to the end of the chapter; for those were, in fact, the very articles that were sold there; and every man who sold them knew that such were the results.—(Hear.) Those places were so many hells belching forth flame and smoke and ruin, like so many volcanoes. Would the present audience assist to shut them up? Who would that evening take the pledge—put on the badge—go forth and begin the battle?—(Cheers.) Every man, woman, and child might assist. But it must be done promptly. Men and women and children were suffering severely; and if those present had the hearts of human beings, they would pity them. Well, then, let them prove their pity by assisting to shut up those places of infamy and ruin.—(Cheers.) Let every teetotaler talk about those places. Let them converse about them at the corners of the streets. Let them be asking continually what good gin or beer did anybody. Let them even provoke discussions in the beer-shops. Hitherto they had gone on too smoothly. They would never do much till they roused themselves. They wanted an earthquake, as far as that subject was concerned. As to stir and agitation, why every reform would occasion that. Let the people arise and shut up the 5000 liquor-shops of the metropolis, and great and glorious would be the results.—(Much cheering.)

Dr. LOVELL stated that the object of the meeting was to give a finish to the proceedings of the World's Temperance Convention. He said that it was the intention of the committee, as soon as the various papers, &c., could be arranged, to publish a report of the whole proceedings, together with other interesting documents, the publication of which he had no doubt would effect much good.

Mr. J. CASSELL thought it would be a great dereliction of duty, if that audience omitted to return thanks to their American brethren, for the promptitude with which they had responded to the invitation to attend the Convention, as also for the animating and instructive addresses which they had delivered. Also, for the examples they had set in the meetings of the Evangelical Alliance, in opposition to the drinking-customs which had there, he was sorry to say, been introduced. He felt assured that the friends in England were truly grateful to their American brethren, and that they should long remember them with pleasure and esteem.—(Cheers.)

Mr. SCOTT seconded the resolution, which was carried by the whole audience standing, and repeatedly cheering.

Rev. J. MARSH said, that he and his brethren would carry home with them the best feelings of respect and gratitude towards their brethren in England. They would continue to pray to God that the principle of peace might be preserved between the two nations, and that they might combine their energies in delivering the world from intemperance, from slavery, and from war, for ever.

SABBATH SCHOOLS.

The last of the great meetings held in the metropolis in connexion with the World's Temperance Convention, took place on the 1st ult., in the Rev. H. Townley's Chapel, Bishopsgate Street. The chapel was crowded by a most respectable audience, including leading members of several congregations, and superintendents and teachers of many Sabbath Schools. The deepest attention was paid to the several speakers, and a number of important signatures to the temperance pledge were obtained at the close.

G. W. Atwood, Esq., was voted to the chair.

The CHAIRMAN stated that the object of the meeting was to present a most important cause before a most important portion of the community, namely, those who were employed in training up young minds in the way to heaven. The friends of that cause were well aware that no class of persons had so much influence to exert, either for good or for evil; they believed it to be for good, and they wished them to add to the other good principles which they inculcated that of perfect sobriety.—(Hear.) In the country from which he came (America) scarcely such a thing was to be found as a Sunday-school teacher who was not a teetotaler.—(Cheers.) He knew thousands, but he did not know one who was not a member of a Total Abstinence Society, and who did not take a deep interest in promoting its principles.—(Cheers.)

Mr. J. W. GREEN remarked on the general importance of the question. He called attention to the vast amount of labour and of capital expended in Sabbath schools. It had been stated by the Rev. Dr. Campbell, that about 200,000 young people of both sexes, the flower of British Society, were engaged in teaching about two millions of scholars; and that as these were at an early day to become not only heads of families, but many of them christian pastors, officers of churches, and missionaries to foreign climes, it would at once appear that no degree of care and labour could be deemed too high a price at which to purchase such a result, as to induce them to incorporate the temperance principle with their religious instruction.—(Hear.) It appeared from the minutes of the Wesleyan Conference, just concluded, that in that religious denomination alone, there were 4,106 Sunday-schools, containing 436,299 scholars, under the care of 80,998 teachers, and maintained at an annual cost of upwards of £25,000; to say nothing of infant and week-day schools, in which moral and religious instruction was communicated to children. The friends of total abstinence principles were anxious that their principles should be inculcated on the minds of so vast a body of children of both sexes, and hence they could not but desire to enlist the instructors of these children in their service.—(Hear.) They were daily furnished with proofs that even the moral and religious instruction bestowed upon the children in Sunday-schools was comparatively useless, because of the strong temptations every where presented to the use of intoxicating drinks, and because of the insidious influence of those drinks to corrupt and lead astray. The children were not only not instructed in the importance of strict sobriety, but on many occasions they were brought into contact with strong drinks, and with the established drinking usages of the community, and the results, in a sad proportion of cases, proved most fatal to their character and to their true prosperity. As an illustration of this part of the subject, Mr. Green read an extract from the Christian Witness for the present month, in which was an account of a series of "amusements" got up by the Rector and Churchwardens of a certain parish in Bedfordshire, on the 5th of June, 1846.—"3. Climbing a greased pole, for young men from fifteen to twenty, who either are or have been in the Piddington Sunday-school—Prize, a leg of mutton."—"4. A race for women above twenty years of age, who have been in the Piddington Sunday-school—1st prize, a gown; 2nd, a parcel of tea; 3rd, a handkerchief."—"5. A race for girls between fifteen and twenty, who are now or have been in the Piddington Sunday-school. 1st prize, a bonnet; 2nd, a pair of stockings; 3rd, a handkerchief."—"6. Bobbing for an orange in a tub of water, for girls under ten, who are in Piddington Sunday-school. Prize, a collar."—"8. Jumping in sacks, for men between twenty and thirty, who have been in Piddington Sunday-school. 1st prize, a spade; 2nd, a neckerchief; 3rd, a pocket handkerchief."—"The 9th, 10th, 11th, and 12th "amusements" consisting of hurdle races, &c., between boys and girls, were only to be engaged in by those who had been or still were in the Piddington Sunday-school. The list was concluded with the following.—"N.B.—The Minister and Churchwardens being desirous on this occasion of promoting harmless festivity and real enjoyment, and aware that some strangers may be present, rely on their own parishioners to check any disorder which may arise from excess of drink or other ill conduct in such strangers."—(Hear, hear.) It was pretty evident, Mr. Green observed, that the instruction imparted in the Piddington Sunday-schools did not include teetotalism.—(Hear.) And there was every reason to believe, in fact it was but too palpable a truth, that of the thousands trained up in Sunday-schools a large proportion went astray, in consequence of the importance of strict sobriety not having been impressed upon them by their teachers. Where a contrary course was adopted, the most delightful results followed, as the American ministers would be able to testify.—(Cheers.)

DR. BEECHER said, that those men were real benefactors to their country who improved the breeds of horses and of cattle—who made valuable discoveries in arts—who abridged human labour—or who, by means of steam or machinery, enabled one man to do the work of a hundred. So it was in reference to those who engaged in anything by which a large proportion of the population were benefited. But the Sunday-school teacher was engaged in a work which put all other improvements out of sight.—(Hear.) Suppose a man stood at the head of a large river, (and the largest rivers often took their rise from small and narrow streams,) holding in his hand two phials; the contents of one, if imparted to the stream, would cause it to roll along, the instrument of disease and death. The man that uncorked that phial—that put in that deadly liquor—that thus impregnated the waters at their head with disease, and death, and destruction—would be justly execrated during the whole course of his life, and would sink down into hell under the weight of the maledictions of thousands. But suppose he uncorked the other phial, filled with life, with vigour, with fruitfulness, with beauty. What happiness would he not be the means of communicating, and with what gratitude and delight would not thousands bless his memory! Now the Sunday-school teacher stood at the head of such a river—a river small in its beginning, but which increased in breadth, in depth, and in rapidity as it rolled along. It would roll along with disease and death in its course, if the teacher poured in the death-water; but life and health, if he poured in the life-giving liquid.—(Hear.) Teachers had the two phials, and every day from one or the other they were pouring into the minds of the children that which would prove to them either life or death.—(Hear.) Every thing, under God, depended upon them, and according as they acted, would their pupils engage in everlasting wailings or in endless praises. What a responsibility! Look to heaven: a spirit was conveyed thither by a convoy of angels, and there was joy in heaven. See the glistening eye! mark the joy unspeakable which pervades the heavenly throng as they cast their crowns before the throne! listen to the songs which burst from innumerable hosts, loud as the sound of many waters! And ask the redeemed spirits how they came thither! It would be found that a large proportion were young persons, conducted thither by the instrumentality of religious teachers. Many would exclaim, "O, it was the Sunday-school teacher, blessed man! who guided my feet into the way of peace, and whose instructions led me to the enjoyment of this bliss." Go to the bottomless abyss! Ask the wretched inhabitants how they came thither! There, also would be found many who had gone to Sunday-schools, and who had been told of Christ and the way of salvation; but other important truths, bearing upon conduct, and connected with growth and maturity in religion, were neglected. Pleasure and enjoyment were sought; the things that perished in the using were preferred; and ruin, everlasting ruin, was the result. He put it to the consciences of all present who had to do with the instruction of youth, which of the phials were they holding—with which did they propose to impregnate the stream?—(Hear, hear.) What was the work of Sunday-school teachers? They were instrumental in planting trees of righteousness; in supplying immortal souls with the fruits of the tree of life which grow by the sides of the river of life; eternal fruits which money could not purchase, and which greatly surpassed the sweetest and the richest of all earthly enjoyments.—(Cheers.) Dr.

Beecher then adverted to the use of intoxicating drinks as the great foe of physical and spiritual existence and enjoyment. It was, he said, a mournful fact that beautiful and delightful as was the youthful human countenance, there was a most fearful and deadly conspiracy against children. In modern times, thousands had found out the advantages of cold water, plentifully applied outside and inside. Miracles were wrought by such means, and thousands, apparently on the verge of dissolution, were restored to vigour and true enjoyment. But what if they applied sulphur, or any other combustible inside and out, instead of water?—(Hear.) And he could tell them of persons so imbued with alcohol in every part, that they had actually taken fire, and had burned with a flame which water could not extinguish! Now the alcoholic practice was just the antipodes to the water practice.—(Hear.) If when that audience went into the street they should see a long train of waggons, labelled, "Consumption sold here—Dropsy sold here—Gout—Rheumatism—Cancers—all sort of diseases sold here, wholesale and retail"—would they not follow such a train with a long and a loud curse? But the liquor-merchant could open a house for the sale of all those plagues!—(Hear, hear.) It was true that he did not call them by those names; he did not so label them; no, because if he did, men, women, and children would keep aloof from him. But he enticed the young, and even children, to partake of his stores. "Come hither, young fellow; come here, my little man; taste of this liquor; it will make a man of you, and you'll never be a man if you don't use it." And then the youth or the child thinks "Why what a good fellow!" and he goes in and partakes, and he gets the appetite, and goes on till he is ruined!—(Cheering.) "But, children," said Dr. Beecher, "you will not drink of his poisons, if you mind what I say. Such a man is a devil! he tries to make money out of the bodies and souls of men, careless what becomes of you, whether you go to hell or to heaven. Such men ought to have coffins and shrouds—death-heads and cross-bones—for their signs.—(Hear.) O! if the blood and bones injured by strong drink could be brought together, what an immense pile would it form! Take care, children; when you are enticed to take strong drinks, remember what the bible says about the end. At the beginning it is sweet, pleasant, enticing, awakens no fear of consequences, excites pleasurable feelings, makes you feel big, leads you to imagine that all around are friends, causes you to swell and swagger as if you were really men; the reason is, that strong drink is poison, it has mounted up to your brain; and if you were to die in that state and to be analyzed, it could be taken out of your brain. But think, I say of the end, 'at the last, it biteth like a serpent, and stingeth like an adder.' Remember this, children, and I am sure you will not drink strong drinks; you will make up your minds never to taste that by the use of which you may become drunkards. And I never knew a man who did not drink that became a drunkard." Dr. Beecher was much cheered on resuming his seat.

Rev. T. BRAINERD, Philadelphia, U. S., said, that in the United States, there was a splendid edifice, called Girard's Hall. This Girard was a man who had accumulated about seven millions of dollars, and when he could enjoy it no longer by reason of death, he devised the edifice in question. About £300,000 had been expended upon it. It was composed of marble, and had around it, thirty-four Corinthian columns of great beauty, each being about six feet in diameter, and sixty feet high. He once took a friend to see that edifice: he was struck with its surpassing beauty, but he thought, What a life-time has been put into it! Girard put his life into marble—I mean to put mine into the intellects and hearts of men! That was a fine sentiment, well becoming a man who was about to devote his life to the work of a missionary. What men gave to the world, died with the world; many had toiled for immortality, and had sought to have their exploits engraved on marble; but they had died, and their fame had died with them. But there was an immortality that was worth seeking? and they were likely to obtain it who sought to implant virtuous principles in the minds of youth.—(Hear.) Dr. Payson had supposed a precious diamond to be given to an individual, that he might write upon it whatever he pleased; but on condition, that what he wrote was never to be obliterated. The teachers of youth were to inscribe sentiments on the human mind which were to be held up in every place to view, and exposed even to the eye of the great God. How careful then ought they to be as to what they should write! But the Sunday-school teacher did that every Sabbath.—(Hear.) He inscribed upon the mind of every child that which no vicissitudes, no changes of circumstance could reverse. High and dignified, therefore, was their work; they might be heralded by no trumpet, and aided by no human power; but they were doing work which would endure for ever. He found that on occasions, such as the present, ministers from America were put forward to urge the claims of temperance; and he and his brethren were the more willing to do this, because they found the Christian ministers of this country were backward in that duty.—(Hear, hear.) Mr. Brainerd then furnished a very pleasing account of the Sunday-schools connected with the congregation of which he was pastor, stating that his elders and deacons were teachers, as well as total abstainers, and that as to the children, he could hardly charge one of them with any thing more likely to make him blush, than to accuse him of going into a grog-shop, or of taking a drop of strong drink. Mr. Brainerd said, that he and his brethren did not come forward in this country to dictate, but only to tell their brethren in England, what they had done, to encourage them to exertion.—(Hear.) It had been no sacrifice to him to push aside the can or the cup which contained strong drink; but he had the pleasure of knowing that his example might influence those who had not the judgment or the moral courage to resist as he had done.—(Hear.) He concluded by cautioning all present against negligence in the use of those means, by which they might benefit those around them, assuring such that they would be held responsible for the mischief which ensued as the result of their negligence.

Dr. PATTON referred to the list of sports which Mr. Green had quoted, and appealed to the audience if any number of teetotalers could possibly have devised any thing half so monstrous or absurd. As to total abstinence, he could only say, that it was a very good thing; and he said so after having tried it for a number of years, in heat and in cold, in summer and in winter, in fatigue and rest, and under a great variety of circumstances. Other persons, not teetotalers, had been placed in the very same circumstances, and with all the aid of all the liquor they could get, were by no means so comfortable as he was. As to Sunday-schools, he had about 1000 children and teachers in connexion with his church, and every one of them was a teetotaler.—(Cheers.) He had also about 100 members in his church, and they also were teetotalers.—(Cheers repeated.) They had found no difficulty in getting the children to understand, and to practice teetotalism; nor would the teachers of this country have any difficulty in the matter, provided they were teetotalers themselves.—(Hear, hear.) Let them try to indoctrinate the children in total abstinence, and in the simplicity of their hearts, they would turn round and ask, "Are you teetotalers? and if they were obliged to hesitate, and to reply, "Why—no—not—exactly—just yet," they would find it very difficult to get them to understand that what was not good for grown people, was so very good for children.—(Cheers.) So it was with parents. The child saw its parents drinking, and said, "May I have a drop?" "Oh, no; it is not good for little children; why of course the child would suspect and doubt. But if when the child asked for such drink, the parent could say, "Oh no, child, I never use any," the result would be that the child would cease to desire it. Every child regarded his father as the highest authority in the world; and the next in authority, was the teacher; and his influence was great. Some persons seemed alarmed at the idea of presenting the pledge to children, but in every case in which he had known the experiment tried, he had found that they fully understood that to be a teetotaler was "to refuse any thing that would make drunk come."—(Hear.) When trained from the first on the cold water plan, they would not easily yield to the temptations by which they were surrounded. Children might be so indoctrinated in the principle as to become successful advocates among those much older than themselves. Let every Sunday-school teacher do his duty, carefully improving the advantages God had given him, and he might be the means of introducing happiness into thousands of families.—(Hear.) He regarded the present as one of the most important of all the meetings which had recently taken place; and he hoped that such meetings would be repeated, till cold water rightly used would be as abundant as it was in the garden of Eden, where there was a river having four streams, but not one drop of alcohol.—(Cheers.)

Mr. T. WHITAKER stated, that he had been educated in a Sunday-school, but he was not taught abstinence from strong drinks. His teachers were useful and good men, but they were moderate drinkers. He learned to drink, and by taking a little he was induced to take more, and, ultimately, to drink to excess. He was at length arrested by the temperance society, and he was indebted to their instrumentality for health, peace, comfort, and much spiritual good. For ten years past he had recommended the system to all to whom he had access.—(Cheers.) He had visited Clitheroe, (the place where he went to the Sunday-school,) to advocate teetotalism. One of the superintendents of that school was his chief opponent; two of the teachers had become drunkards; and one of them filled a drunkard's grave. But teetotalism had been introduced into Clitheroe with much success, and now 70 out of 90 of the teachers had taken the teetotal pledge, and a great number of the children had become teetotalers.—(Cheering.) Now he supposed all present hated intemperance; they wished to have it removed, and thought that the sooner it was removed the better. Well, for that purpose he recommended teetotalism.—(Hear.) They should not rest satisfied with being sober themselves—they should do all they could to make others sober also. It would be highly wicked to say, "if the drunkard will ruin himself, body and soul, it is no business of mine." What said an apostle? "No man liveth unto himself." We were not to suffer sin upon our neighbours, if we had the means of preventing it. A heavy responsibility rested upon all, and especially upon parents, and those to whom was entrusted the instruction of youth.—(Cheers.)

Rev. A. T. HOPKINS, from Buffalo, U. S., stated that in connexion with his church there were three schools. He could not speak positively as to them all, but in the central school he believed that every teacher was a teetotaler, and that there were few of the children who were not enrolled in teetotal societies.—(Cheers.) Their method was to push the question in every Sunday-school, and he had frequently travelled for the purpose of explaining and enforcing the subject. The children were pledged in the full understanding of the subject, and of the practice which it involved. In the Presbytery session it had been proposed that those who were engaged in the traffic were not eligible for membership; and all the candidates were questioned in reference to strong drinks. The high ground of exclusion was not, indeed, in all cases adopted, but the candidates were questioned very closely as to their views and feelings on the matter.—(Hear.) The teachers were often placed in circumstances of difficulty. It was objected by some that it was altogether unnecessary to pledge themselves to sobriety by a distinct form, an obligation to sobriety being included in their very profession of christianity. In reply to this, he thought the case of Nehemiah fully in point. As the descendants of Abraham, and as God's covenant people, the Jews were under an obligation to set their faces against idolatry in every possible form, or pledge, and yet at a period of great apostasy and temptation, Nehemiah drew up a solemn form or pledge, to abjure all connexion with idolaters, and had it signed by the princes, and levites, and priests, and all the people entered into an oath and bound themselves by a curse to observe it.—(Hear.) Others objected that they could be temperate without a pledge. But the fact was, that the "temperance" of such objectors was a very shifting and uncertain principle, exposing them to temptation and to danger continually. The man who took but a very little and he who was raging in delirium tremens, each imagined himself a moderate drinker. They all proceeded on an assumption that was false, namely, that intoxicating beverages were needful and useful to persons in health.—(Hear.) The doctrine of temperance must be clearly defined, and powerfully enforced by suitable arguments, and by a consistent example. Female teachers ought, especially, to exert their peculiar influence. In America the ladies were foremost in the work; the ladies of ministers, governors, aldermen, and others, had exerted themselves nobly in reference to the license question.—(Cheers.) He trusted that all present would give their minds, their hearts, their hands, to the great and good cause, their time, their prayers, and their best exertions. Then they might confidently expect the Divine blessing.—(Cheers.)

Mr. MEREDITH moved a resolution of thanks to the Rev. H. Townley, and to the Deacons, for their kindness in allowing the use of that place of worship, and also to the chairman for his kindness in presiding.

Mr. J. CASSELL trusted that the result of the present meeting would be the speedy formation of a Sunday-school teachers' total abstinence society for the metropolis.—(Hear and cheers.) A beginning had been made in the provinces, and surely London would not be behind.—(Hear.) It was a solemn fact that after the children had got free from the inspection and superintendence of the teachers, they were exposed to the greatest temptations, in consequence of the drinking usages of the community, and that there was reason to fear they fell a prey to intemperance because they had not been duly forewarned by their teachers.—(Hear.) He read an extract from the Teetotal Times for September, in which the writer said,—“I have lately examined the roll-book of a Sunday-school, and the register of a church, both accurately kept during a period of twenty years; the number of children admitted to the school during this period has been two thousand one hundred and sixty-four; the new members of the church have been one hundred and fifty. Half of these came from the Sabbath-school; but during that period twice as many have been ruined by strong drink as have joined the church: thus the acquisitions of the Prince of Darkness have more than doubled those of the Prince of Life. A pious teacher, not long since, showed me the names of about sixty scholars, who had been under his care in a Sabbath-school; he had traced the course of them all, and found that one-half had been ruined by drinking?” He could state that in Manchester there were large rooms connected with public-houses, in which Sunday-school teachers and other professors of religion met on Sunday night, with organs and pianos, drinking various kinds of intoxicating drinks, and singing.

“Praise God from whom all blessings flow.”

(Hear, hear.) That was not Christianity but insanity. They took the poisonous drinks at such meetings on the evening of the Sabbath, and then they were allured to those houses on other days, and many sunk into a drunkard's grave.

Several signatures to the pledge were obtained.

The Rev. J. STEVENSON of the Borough Road, had promised to be present, but was unexpectedly called into the country.

Another meeting in pursuance of this most important object will shortly be announced.

FEEDING INFANTS.—The late development of the teeth is a sufficient indication that solid food is not designed for infancy; as their gradual but general removal, points out what kind is best adapted for advanced life. For the sustenance of the first seven or eight months, we all know that an aliment is elaborated, which, for nutritive quality and adaptation to the necessities of the case, is placed at an immeasurable distance from the utmost attainments of art. In cases where it is inexpedient or impossible to carry out this beautiful arrangement, for gratifying at once the sympathies of the mother and the instincts of the infant, the absurdity of loading the young stomach with an aliment not analogous, one would imagine is self-evident and obvious. But custom, prejudice, and ignorance, are too fully operative of mischief, and hundreds fall victims of error or caprice, who might, by common sense,—how very uncommon it is in fact!—have grown up the delight of their parents, and the happy possessors of a healthy and vigorous constitution. The olla podrida of a modern nursery too often consists of mixtures and nostrums, which lull to a treacherous quiet the complainings, but do not alleviate the disorders of their unfortunate inmates. They even tend to increase the evils which improper diet has produced, and one derangement of the system after another is excited and kept up by the unlightened fondness, and undirected or misdirected assiduity of affection itself. The digestive apparatus of infants and young children is evidently adapted throughout for the simplest kind of food only; while jellies, cakes, biscuits, and sweatmeats, in endless farrago, take the place of the diet which Nature by analogy would indicate.

National Temperance Society.

OFFICE 11, TOKENHOUSE YARD.

VICE-PRESIDENTS.

The EARL of ARUNDEL and SURREY, M.P.
Sir Wilfrid Lawson, Bart.

- | | |
|------------------------------|---------------------------|
| R. D. Alexander, Esq. | G. S. Kenrick, Esq. |
| Thomas Beaumont, Esq. | Rev. Theobald Mathew. |
| Samuel Bowly, Esq. | W. J. Morgan, A.M., M.D. |
| Rev. J. Brewster, D.D. | Richard Peek, Esq. |
| J. S. Buckingham, Esq. | Rev. P. Penson, M.A. |
| Robert Charleton, Esq. | Rev. W. W. Robinson, M.A. |
| Rev. T. Clowes, M.A. | Rev. J. Sherman. |
| Isaac Collins, Esq. | Rev. C. Stovel. |
| Joseph Eaton, Esq. | Rev. T. Spencer, A. M. |
| Joseph J. Gurney, Esq. | Rev. W. H. Turner, M.A. |
| S. C. Hall, Esq., B.L.F.S.A. | Edward Thomas, Esq. |
| Lawrence Heyworth, Esq. | Robert Warner, Esq. |
| William Janson, Jun., Esq. | Edward Webb, Esq. |
| Ven. Archdeacon Jeffreys. | Rev. J. Wilson. |

TREASURER.

G. W. Alexander, Esq., 40, Lombard Street.

EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE.

- | | |
|-------------------|--------------------|
| George W. Atwood. | Charles Gilpin. |
| Richard Barrett. | Richard Hicks. |
| Jabez Burns. | C. H. Lovell, M.D. |
| William Cabell. | John Meredith. |
| William Cash. | Richard Potter. |
| John Cassell. | T. B. Scutt. |

SUPERINTENDENT OF MISSION.

John Meredith.

SECRETARY.

Thomas Beggs.

CASH AGENT.

Mark Moore.

COLLECTOR.

David Doeg.

AGENT.

William Gawthorp.

NATIONAL TEMPERANCE SOCIETY.

The Committee are now engaged in considering a plan of operations for the ensuing winter. The present state of public opinion, the favourable disposition of the press, and the willingness of all classes to consider the temperance movement as desirable and necessary, encourage them to hope that a series of well-directed and energetic efforts will do much to dissipate the unwholesome lethargy that has absorbed the moral sense of our people on this great subject. Several points seem to them of great importance just now; and in our next number we doubt not we shall be able, not only to announce a plan of operations, but give intelligence that they have already commenced.

The Committee have given close attention to the labours of Mr. J. R. Wilson, and regret that upon taking a view of the subject in all its bearings, they have not felt justified in continuing his services; at the same time they recommend to the attention of societies the plan of organisation of which he was the exponent. They part with their old servant with feelings of respect, and hope he will long continue to be useful to the temperance cause.

The subject of the Mission is also engaging anxious attention, of which it is impossible to say more at present.

WORLD'S TEMPERANCE CONVENTION.

We are requested to correct some errors in the names and appointments of the delegates. The following have been inaccurately given:—

- | | |
|--------------------------|---|
| Atwood, Geo. Washington, | National Temperance Society. |
| Brumby, John, | Bath Juvenile Temp. Society. |
| Cotterell, H. F., | Syncombe and Wydcombe Temperance Society. |
| Crowe, William, | Gateshead Temperance Soc. |
| Christie, Mr., | Walworth and Camberwell Temperance Society. |
| Collings, William, | Ditto ditto |
| Jones, Evan, | Monmouth and Glamorgan Temperance Association. |
| Logan, William, | Field House, Messrs. Bright's Works, Rochdale. |
| M'Ewan, George, | Perth Temperance Society. |
| Priestman, J., | Newcastle-upon-Tyne. |
| Ridley, John, | Hexham Temperance Society. |
| Teare, | Bath, Bradford Long Pledge and Penzance Society. |
| Whitley, Thomas, | Brighouse, near Halifax. |
| Whitley, William Spink | Ditto ditto |

The following omissions occurred:—

- | | |
|------------------------|-----------------------------|
| Elliott, Edward, | Earsdon. |
| Miatt, Joseph William, | South Shields. |
| Spencer, Thomas, | Hinton Charterhouse. |
| Skee, T., | South Shields. |

Some inquiries have been sent as to supposed omissions of subscriptions in the Chronicle. The September No. only contained those not previously acknowledged. One omission was made,

F. J. Thompson, Bridgewater . . . £1 1 0

The sum entered to Samuel Wheeler, Rochester, ought to have been Rochester Society; and that entered Merthyr Tydfil, should have been the Monmouth and Glamorgan Temperance Union. A corrected list will be published with the Report.

The name of Wm. Gawthorp was accidentally omitted from the list of officers in last Chronicle.

We are requested to supply a corrected copy of the Resolution moved by Mr. Haughton in the last sitting of the Convention.

“Resolved, That in view of all the information given to this Convention, our conviction of the immorality of the manufacture, sale, and use of intoxicating drinks as a common beverage is deepened and strengthened; and we desire loudly to enunciate to the world this strong conviction. Whether men may or may not be prepared to receive this great truth, this Convention is not able to determine, neither are they anxious on this point. They desire faithfully to do their duty, and to impress upon the consciences of all men who are engaged in the demoralizing practices referred to, that it is their bounden duty to renounce them at once and for ever.”

JAMES TEARE'S TESTIMONIAL.

Tottenham Green, 22nd September, 1846.

MR. EDITOR,—I have only this month to acknowledge the receipt of an additional 10s. to the Teare Testimonial, from Dr. Campbell. I have received a letter from Mr. Kelly of the Isle of Man, kindly promising £5. and expressing the hope of his being able to do something more in the matter; and I have reason to expect something from Cornwall, and the towns of Reading and Rotherham. I am sorry to say, however, that the societies do not come forward as I think they should do in this case, considering Mr. Teare's increasing labours in all directions amongst them.

Yours truly,

W. JANSON, JUN.

Dr.

WORLD'S TEMPERANCE CONVENTION FUND.

Cr.

	£	s.	d.
Subscriptions received	744	17	3
Receipts Covent Garden :—
Tickets Sold	£75	14	9
Money taken at Doors	31	17	3
Collection	5	7	3
Private Boxes	8	15	6
	121	14	9
Receipts at Soirée	23	6	0
Collections at several Meetings :—
Sion Chapel	£2	12	8½
Finsbury ditto	3	15	9
Cowper Street	0	11	8
Exeter Hall	12	8	0½
	19	8	1½
	£909	6	1½
Subscriptions promised, not yet received	£287	10	6

	£	s.	d.
Advertisements	47	8	4
Newspapers	133	17	0
Breakfast at Guildhall Coffee House	25	0	0
Rent Covent Garden Theatre	50	0	0
Erecting Platform, Door-keepers, and other expenses connected therewith	21	1	0
Rent of Exeter Hall	24	0	0
Incidental expenses of ditto	4	8	0
Rent of Theatre of Literary Institution and incidental expenses	13	17	6
Expenses of Soirée	43	18	0
Printing	94	3	0
Paid for making preparations and attendance during the Sittings of the Convention and at the Meetings, &c.	32	10	0
Bills Posting, Porters, &c.	6	11	0
Clerks assisting the Secretary for four weeks	15	9	8
Reporter, for taking verbatim Report	10	10	0
Stationery	4	8	9
Expenses at Chapels for evening and sundry services	7	14	8
Sundries	6	0	11
Balance in hands of Treasurer	368	8	3½
	£909	6	1½
Liabilities estimated at	£47	0	0

We present, above, the Financial Report, by which it will be seen, that taking into account the sums yet to be received and the liabilities, there is a surplus of above £600 yet remaining to carry out the objects of the Convention. Though every attention has been paid to economy by the Finance Committee, everything was managed on a scale of respectable liberality.

The Convention's sittings, and the whole of the public meetings and religious services, were well advertised; and to spread a knowledge of what was doing, 500 copies of every paper which contained a report of the Convention, were taken and sent through the country; this forms one large item in the expenditure. By this means a publicity was given to its proceedings, unrivalled in any temperance movement in this country.

The Convention Committee, feeling that the persons met together on this occasion might never meet again, thought it desirable that they should have one meeting after the manner most approved by English hospitality; and invited the assembled delegates to take breakfast together; nearly 200 sat down to breakfast. After the good cheer, an opportunity was afforded for those expressions of good-will and kindly feeling which had long been cherished at a distance by many then present, and the memory of that morning will be a pleasant recollection among the events of that Convention. Considering the great number of meetings and religious services held, a comparatively small sum has sufficed to meet the expenses.*

The Committee are now diligently preparing the Report of the proceedings, and they propose to spend the surplus-fund, according to the instructions of the Convention, in giving an extensive circulation to the report; and also to the documents adopted, as well as those of merit which were not read for want of time, and which have not been published in other forms.

* One remark we will make in connexion with the Covent Garden Meeting. The receipts will show that the attendance must have been immense, and with this fact too, that the delegates and specially invited visitors were admitted to the stage free. This does not look like failure.

Arrangements are now completed with the printers. The committee are anxious to publish it in a neat 8vo. size, at 1s. 6d., if possible, and well got up.

SUBSCRIPTIONS.

	£	s.	d.		£	s.	d.
Mrs. Welch	a	0	5	0	John Harris, Esq., Calne	a	1	0	0
T. Catchpool, Esq., Jun.	a	1	1	0	Mr. Joseph Neatly, Kennington	a	1	1	0
Elizabeth Jermyna	1	1	0	0	Mr. Arthrop	0	5	0
Mr. B. Higgins	d	0	10	0	Thos. Hall, Esq.	a	1	1	0
R. Sherhouse	a	2	2	0	Mr. G. Harris	a	0	10	6
R. W. Gibbons, Esq., Calne	a	1	0	0	Mr. J. H. Harris	a	0	10	6

MISSION.

[per Mr. Gamble]—	£	s.	d.		£	s.	d.
A. Leathen	0	10	0	Mrs. Dennison	1	0	0
Mr. Squire	0	10	0	Dr. Hustable	0	2	6
Watford Society	0	10	0	Mr. H. Kay	0	5	0
Dunstable do.	0	10	0	Anon.	0	1	0
Peterborough do.	0	10	0	Mr. West	0	11	6
Sundries	1	2	0	Mrs. Stock	1	0	0
Per Mr. Heritage	0	10	0	Miss Aldam, Doncaster	2	0	0
Mr. Meredith	0	10	0

CONVENTION FUND.

	£	s.	d.		£	s.	d.
Carlisle Society	1	0	0	George Pulling	1	1	0
Thomas Compton	1	1	0	P. Whitehead	1	0	0

MR. CHADWICK states in his evidence before the Parliamentary Committee to inquire into the condition of the Railway Labourers, that "full £26,000,000 per annum are spent in gin and British spirits on which duty is paid; that is to say, four or five times the annual poors' rate, or nearly as much in one year, and on one pernicious article of indulgence, as the accumulated savings in the whole of the savings banks, during more than eighteen years that they have been in operation."

THE MISSION.

Our last two numbers have contained no report of our missionary labours. They have still been going on and doing good. We began to fear that a monthly report of labour, necessarily so monotonous, had come upon our readers so frequently as to lessen the effect of its details. Familiarity with suffering seems to deaden our sympathies; and often our close neighbourhood to misery and distress, is the only reason why it is thought so little of, whilst some similar wretchedness afar off arouses every feeling at once. We take a deep interest in missionary labour, and think it one strong mark of the sound practical sense of the members of the Convention, that they passed a resolution recommending domiciliary visitation amongst the poor and lowly of the land. If those who look coldly on, could see, as we have seen, only in part, the guilt and woe that every nook of our neglected bye-lanes and streets hides from public view, could they see the disease, the filth and drunkenness, rioting in every hovel, and feel that these people never heard a voice of warning, of invitation or comfort, except from the lips of a Home Missionary, and that thousands do not even have that small privilege; that thousands have no bible, or if they had could not read it, and are languishing in sensuality and sin, without any thought but the delusive luxury of the next dram; and that from these benighted neighbourhoods, young children are rising up; immortal beings, but habituated to vice, and without knowledge of their moral, or social, or religious duties or obligation, vast numbers of them even ignorant of the Saviour's name. If those who look coldly on the poor humble missionary, as he moves from door to door on his merciful and kind errand, could see what he has to encounter every hour, they would no longer stand aloof, and let the opportunity pass of helping this important agency. A lady called upon us the other day to apply for a missionary, she had been a visitor of a neighbourhood in Putney for years; so abandoned to drink were the inhabitants of her district, that she had lost all hope of reaching them; she stated that one row of eighteen cottages, densely populated, did not contain one single sober person above the age of eighteen; and she had become so impressed with the conviction that it was useless to offer them spiritual counsel or advice, while their habits remained what they were, that she had come to solicit the aid of a temperance missionary to commence a work amongst them. She was ready to sign the pledge, and do all she could to advance the cause. This testimony might be given from every dark corner of the metropolis; a thousand missionaries in London would be very far short of affording assistance in cases like these. We employ but nine, and these have been supported from a few individuals not connected with the metropolis. In this great, wealthy and wicked city, with so much need of every agency that can help to raise fallen humanity, there have not as yet been found persons to offer the necessary funds, to support the humble force of nine men, for so important a purpose. The dark picture of our large city, it is impossible to describe. But the following extract from the Report of one of the agents of the Edinburgh City Mission, will give a faint idea of what is lurking beneath the gilded surface of our civilization in all our large towns:—

"Thousands," says one of these agents, "are perishing for lack of knowledge within a quarter of a mile from our dwellings, living in all the gloom and misery of heathenism, no man caring for their souls. No observing man can pass through the more densely populated parts of this city, without being struck with the fact, that drunkenness, wretchedness, and crime, are abounding to a fearful extent, entailing upon their unhappy votaries the depths of misery and woe in this world, and all the righteous retributions of the world to come. But let him enter their wretched and filthy dwellings, and mingle and converse with their degraded inmates, and if he has a philanthropic or Christian heart, it must bleed at the scenes of darkest heathenism which will be called up before his view. Infidelity of the most gross and debasing character will everywhere be found, associated with the grossest ignorance of religion. Crimes of the most daring nature are everywhere perpetrated, attended with the most squalid wretchedness,—the sure concomitant of vice and drunkenness, which abound on every hand. We are not overstraining the picture. The houses of these wretched creatures, as the agents of this Society but too well know, become LIVING HELLS in the world, where unchained and furious passions, stimulated by intoxicating liquor, break away from their confinement, and rage with unabated fury for hours together,—converting not only the family circle, but whole neighbourhoods, into a pandemonium. Every article of furniture or dress is parted with to procure the liquid fiery poison; and the miserable creatures may be seen wallowing insensible under its influence; thus rushing from one degree of misery and vice to another,—they reach the lowest verge of human depravity, when death sweeps along the course, and their foul and fallen spirits, hurried away in an instant, are plunged into a boundless, unknown, unprepared-for eternity. The children grow up but too faithfully to copy the habits of their parents, and at an early age, either swell the throng of the abandoned, or occupy the cells of our prisons;—and after adding their share to abounding iniquity, they perish, and are thrown into the grave,—a disgrace to the nature and dignity of man.

"Let any one, unacquainted with the interior of the localities here described, enter them, and satisfy himself of the facts;—and the oath, and the curse, and the fight, breaking upon his ear, from within the wall, or wooden partition, will almost make him imagine he has been suddenly surrounded by the blasphemies of hell. But let him proceed, if his courage will allow him, and gain admittance into some of their habitations, and he will find in some such place as his coal-cellar, perhaps twelve or fourteen individuals of both sexes congregated together, either cowering around the sinking embers of a fire, the only light in the room, or huddled together on a heap of musty straw,—the only furniture in the miserable apartment, with the exception of two or three stones, and a broken chair or two. In one corner may sometimes be found, covered with polluted rags, (alas! that truth should demand the disclosure,) the former member of a learned, a liberal, or even a sacred profession, degraded to that fearful condition through the sin of intemperance, with a body enfeebled and approaching the last stage of mortal existence, and a mind scarcely able to connect two ideas together;—and in another corner may be seen the once flourishing and busy merchant, conducted thither through the same avenue. The remainder of the group is perhaps composed of abandoned females, once gay, giddy, and blooming, seduced for their beauty, and now rapidly sinking to such corruption as the grave alone should know. Let him seat himself beside them,—yes, beside even such specimens of fallen humanity,—and tell them of the LOVE OF THE SAVIOUR, and he will be surprised and delighted to find that they treat him with kindness, and listen with deep attention. But such is the fact; the missionary of the cross is almost always kindly received and looked up to as their best friend. So wondrously adapted to its end is the scheme devised by the God of love for reaching the hearts of the most sinful and wretched of the human family."

This is taken from the Seventh Biennial Report of the Edinburgh City Mission. They remark upon the above:—

“In order to meet the evils we have here but faintly delineated, many benevolent schemes have been devised and carried into execution. Temperance societies have everywhere been formed, but have hardly scared the profligate from his path, or thinned the ranks of the drunken. It is chiefly among the middling and upper classes that the blessings of the temperance reformation have been diffused. These blessings have not yet reached the sediments of society,—though most of all needing them,—probably for want of agents to visit from house to house as city missionaries do. Education has been tried with some success, but as yet has scarcely checked the on-rolling tide of iniquity. Sabbath schools have done much in cutting off the tributary streams. Churches and chapels have been erected, within those walls are sounding Sabbath after Sabbath the glad tidings of salvation. But still the bed of the river remains almost untouched, rolling its polluted waves onward to eternal death. What, then, is to be done? Are we to leave these fellow-sinners and fellow-citizens to perish in their sins? God forbid! We have neglected them too long already, and have incurred a fearful amount of responsibility at the hands of our long-suffering Judge.”

Alas! so injured are they to their wretched lot, so disciplined in vice, that reform is but a slow process under the most advantageous circumstances; but every one rescued is worth all the labour expended. It is difficult to make a selection from the reports of the three last months' labours of our Missionaries—every incident is of the deepest interest—but we take a few of them to add force to what is stated above; here is one case.

MISSIONARY No. 10.

DISTRICT XXXVIII.—“The law for closing the gin-shops on Sunday morning has been the means of preventing much intemperance,” said the police-serjeant at P. station; “but your principles have reclaimed many who were very troublesome to us; there is one man in particular, who has been frequently in our custody for drunken and disorderly conduct, at last he turned thief and was convicted; I believe it was owing to his intemperance that he became dishonest, in order to satisfy his appetite for drink. He has now been a member of the temperance society for years, and during the whole of the time, since he abandoned drink, he has kept from the police station, and I believe he now obtains an honest livelihood.”

If all the cases like this could be seen, it would shew what great work was daily and hourly achieving by the temperance movement. Here is a case of reverse of circumstances brought on by drink.

NO. 8. MISSIONARY.

The husband of Mrs. L. had some years since a lucrative situation under Government—being often at Court, and on intimate terms with a noble lord—kept his carriage and several servants, but disgraced himself again and again by drink, till at length, the appointment was taken from him; and he is now living as a servant with the same nobleman who was heretofore on terms of intimacy with him, and even courted his company, whilst his wife and daughter have to use their needle to procure the comforts of life.

The objection sometimes raised against missionary labour is, that whilst we are reclaiming solitary individuals, we are neglecting the sources by which drunkards are made—this would have some force, if we only attempted to deal with drunkards, but we are labouring against the system as well. Such accounts as the following interest us especially, because to catch the young is to lay the seeds that may hereafter grow up and bring forth fruit.

NO. 5. MISSIONARY.

A visit to Palace Yard Infant School.

In visiting the above and addressing the children present upon the blessings of sobriety, and reminding them of a visit held some little time back, when the superintendent of the mission presided, and it was intimated to the children to obtain the consent of their parents, prior to their signing the pledge; when they were reminded of that proposition, twenty-three came forward, and having said they had so done, signed their names to the pledge. One little girl went home, and running back again almost out of breath for fear the missionary should be gone, said, her mother was very willing she should sign, as she had a sister older than herself who had signed and kept firm to it now for some length of time.

We feel assured that our well-to-do population have no adequate conception of the misery and destitution of our town population. Our missionaries describe the most heart-rending and revolting scenes—only some of which we can notice.

NO. 2. MISSIONARY.

On visiting in Well Street, saw a young woman, aged seventeen, in a state of severe suffering, in consequence of being drunk the over-night; another young woman in the same room had a bruised eye; two men who were present were exhorted to abandon the use of intoxicating liquors, but all of them deferred the matter until a “convenient season.”

Most of the habitations of the working classes are furnished with but little furniture, and what there is in general, are but bits of articles, and fit only for fuel, and all the parties that occupy these rooms are fond of strong drinks, and it is a rare thing, indeed, to see no pewter pots about the room; from visiting some of the above, this day, obtained three pledges.

Found a whole family who signed with the missionary a year and a half ago, rejoicing that they had done so; previously, the woman who was the greatest drunkard, used to turn out and propose fighting with any one that she might meet. Both the woman and her husband are zealous teetotalers, and regularly attend a place of worship.

We had several other cases marked for extract, but our space prevents the possibility of giving them this month, and we find it quite unnecessary to add any comment upon the necessity of labourers in a field abounding with so much vice and drunkenness as the streets of the metropolis. A missionary might be usefully employed in every court in the town. And what is to prevent it? The want of means in a country teeming with wealth—money is wanting—and who will place a few hundreds of sordid wealth against the present and eternal hopes of perishing thousands. There are thousands of men in this city who fare sumptuously and sleep well, who could each support a missionary, without depriving themselves of a single enjoyment; and by that means, at once enable us to employ some hundreds, instead of our small force. Christians awake! God has made you trustees, and look at the fate of the unjust Steward. In proportion as you have received will it be expected of you. We hope our appeal this month will be generally answered. Let no man hold back, because he cannot give a large sum. The husbandman does not depend upon the deluge of the thunder-storm, but on the gentle showers to fertilize his soil, falling in small and innumerable drops. Active measures will soon be taken. Let all who sympathize with our effort at once forward their contributions.

Foreign Intelligence.

NORTHERN EUROPE.

The temperance cause is making rapid progress in the northern kingdoms of Europe, where it was greatly needed. There are now in Sweden 323 societies, placed under a central direction, composed of the Count de Hartmausdorf, the Baron de Bezelius, and Professor Retizous. The members are 88,687 in number, being a twenty-eighth of the whole population. Of the Stockholm Society, the King and the Prince Royal are members, and it has obtained the King's authority to convoke, in the capital, for the 15th of June next, a congress of all the temperance associations throughout Sweden, to which those of foreign countries are to be invited to send deputations. It is stated that upwards of 500 distilleries have been shut up in Sweden in the course of the last two years. In Norway, the first society of the kind was established so lately as the end of 1844, and there already 92, counting 11,000 members.—Athenaeum.

JAMAICA.

The eleventh anniversary of the Hampden Temperance Society was held in the church, which was respectably filled, both in the lower area of the building and in the galleries.

The report stated that the number of pledged total abstinents now amounts to 774, including an association of youths, from the age of 7 to 12 or 14 years, which numbers 224, making an increase during the last twelve months of 84. These are all connected with the Hampden congregation, except one, who is a member of a neighbouring Baptist Church. All the office-bearers of Hampden Church are now total abstinents, with one exception, but only half of the congregation are yet pledged to total abstinence. Many who never have used intoxicating drinks, nor intend to do so, are however acting upon the principle, although they have not yet signed the pledge. Some of them it is believed, supposing erroneously, that having been always total abstinents, they are not called upon to take any part in the present temperance movement. The congregation is using its influence to keep grog shops at a distance, and hopes to succeed in suppressing one or two which have been opened in the outskirts.

The report dwelt principally on the duty of ministers and other office-bearers of the Christian church, practising and promoting abstinence, as a cause closely connected with religion, and calculated to remove many of the obstacles which obstruct their labours. It also attributed much of the success which had attended the society, to the influence which the office-bearers of the church had exerted in its favour.

LUCERNE.

The presbytery of Lucerne, Pennsylvania lately adopted the following preamble and resolutions:—“Whereas any unnecessary business that introduces crime, suffering disease, and death, such as cannot exist without the business, is plainly at variance with the spirit of the gospel: and whereas the sin of drunkenness is in itself of the most heinous nature, and did not exist until there were makers, sellers, and drinkers of intoxicating liquors, and is most prevalent where there are most liquor sellers, and cannot cease to exist when there are makers, sellers, venders, and users of liquors:—Therefore resolved, that the making, vending, and using intoxicating liquors as a beverage in health, is glaringly incompatible with the best interests of man, for time and for eternity, and ought to be regarded as totally inconsistent with the Christian character.”

NEW BRUNSWICK.

Extract of a letter from Mr. Brutis.

I may be permitted to say, that we have accomplished almost as much as our own unassisted labours have been calculated to perform. We have effectually, I think, awakened what are termed the industrial classes to a sense of the great importance and expediency of our principles; and although we have not succeeded in obtaining the signatures of all, or of even the major portion of them to the pledge, yet there can be little doubt that these principles are well known, and generally properly appreciated by them all—at least in the city of St. Johns. But there are, nevertheless, thousands whose attention it is more difficult to arrest. These are to be found among the upper classes. They, generally speaking, will not condescend to attend our meetings, and they almost invariably refuse to take our Journal. Even among the clergy there are some to be found—some who rejected it when sent to them gratis, during the interval of a few months in the years 1844-5. It would be a great object to gain the eye and the ear of such as these. They necessarily exert a great deal of influence upon society, and could they be induced to concur in the great scheme of abstinence, the rout of the enemy would be next to complete.

CANADA.

FOX POINT, CLARENCE.—I had been invited to attend a temperance festival here on the 2nd July, for which the necessary arrangements had been made. The day was fine and clear, and a fresh breeze from the river made it pleasantly cool. The place chosen I found to be very suitable—a level spot on the beach of the Ottawa, covered with a carpet of grass, and shaded by a few venerable trees, with a rocky precipice mantled in evergreens but a few yards in the rear, presented a scene of picturesque beauty interesting to all, but peculiarly interesting to some, as being associated with hallowed recollections of assemblings for the public worship of God on the grassy lawn, and under the shade of the same trees. The display of happy faces presented by the assembly, when compared with the awful scenes of wretchedness so often produced by the use of intoxicating drinks, was sufficient to furnish a visible argument in favour of total abstinence, which it is impossible to embody in words. After a considerable time had been spent in hearing addresses, the pledge book was laid open on the table, and about twenty names were enrolled, whilst the company spent the time until tea was ready, in conversation, singing, walking, &c. After tea, I addressed the company on the history of our principles, and they were then dismissed with praise and prayer, by the Rev. Mr. Tuke of Lochabar, who was present, but as he was suffering from a cold, declined making an address. The proceedings were mingled with singing, which was well conducted, partly by Mr. Shirreff, a good singer and friend of our cause, and a company of volunteers collected by him, and partly by a juvenile band, trained by the teacher of a school in Lochabar, and brought over by their teacher on this occasion, each bearing a small white banner, some of these having appropriate inscriptions. When delighted with their singing, the thought forcibly struck me, what an advantage it would be if the teaching of singing were made a part of common school instruction, as it should certainly be! The committee of the Clarence Society, by their arrangements, and the ladies who assisted them, sustained fully the reputation which they had on former occasions acquired; and the company left the ground gratified that they had spent a few hours in a very pleasant and profitable manner, and confirmed in the truths which total abstinence societies are formed to sustain and exemplify.

GEORGE BELL.

INTEMPERANCE IN SWITZERLAND.—A recent number of the Boston Atlas contains the following account of the prevalence of intemperance in Switzerland:—

By a recent estimate it is shown that the consumption of wine in the single canton of Berne, with a population of only 410,000 actually amounts, in a single year, to 12,065,000 litres (a litre is about a fourth of a gallon), and 1,640,000 litres of brandy. No estimate has been made of the consumption of beer, cider, and other spirituous drinks manufactured in private for domestic use. In 1811, the consumption of wine was only 5,600,000 litres, and 63,500 of brandy. It is true, the Canton of Berne only contained 200,000 inhabitants before it was united with Bale; but it will be seen this consumption has increased incomparably more than that of the inhabitants, and is increasing equally with pauperism and all the social evils that are the sure concomitants of intemperance. Similar estimates of other cantons of Switzerland have presented results nearly equally deplorable. The dreadful thirst for drink has already extended even to the youth of both sexes. The Catholic cantons are those which appear to be the most exempt from the evil.

Home Intelligence.

BRIDGEWATER.

The tenth anniversary of this society was held at the Public Rooms on Monday evening, September 7th. About one hundred members sat down to tea. The tea and cake were excellent, and the attendance all that could be desired. The Rev. A. Oram, Independent minister of Obery, took the chair, and the room was entirely filled by a very attentive and orderly auditory.

The chairman said he took the motto on the card—"Be not weary in well doing." He was engaged in home missionary operations, and recounted the scenes of intemperance and sin he witnessed during his visitations, and the numerous interruptions he had suffered from drunkenness during divine worship on Sundays. The chairman called on Mr. F. Thompson to read the report.

We take the following extract:—

"Your committee join in the general apprehension, excited by the failure of the potato crop, and fear that the price of provisions during the ensuing winter will be found to be a great source of distress to the working classes. Under these circumstances, they refer you to the calculations they made last year, from which it appears probable that about £25,863. 4s. is annually spent in intoxicating drinks in this town, a sum that would purchase 954,948 lbs. of meat, or quartern loaves, at 6½d.; or would give a 2 lb. loaf, and half a pound of meat, to 2,616 persons every day in the year. It is obvious that if so much of the produce of the soil is diverted from its legitimate use, food must be comparatively scarce, and therefore dear. The evil of such a state of things few will palliate. During the coming winter many will die from slow starvation, many more will outrun their means, and be immersed in difficulties, from which they may never extricate themselves. Those of the working classes who can supply their tables, will have little left for the purchase of manufactured articles; trade will suffer, and the effect of this will be felt in the agricultural districts.

Mr. Bath, the Rev. W. H. Turner, vicar of Banwell, Mr. Hutchins, Mr. Williams, Mr. Thomas Perry, and the Rev. R. L. Carpenter addressed the meeting at length.

LEEDS.

Last evening a special meeting of the Leeds Temperance Society was held in Queen Street Chapel, the Mayor (J. D. Luccock, Esq.) in the chair, and which was attended by the Rev. Mr. Pearce of Montreal, America; the Rev. Dr. Patton of New York; the Rev. T. Brainerd of Philadelphia, delegates from the United States to the World's Temperance Convention lately held in the metropolis; Mr. Cassell, proprietor of the Teetotal Times, published in London; and other popular temperance advocates. The Mayor, in opening the proceedings, stated that although he was not a member of any temperance society, still he had long been a voluntary abstainer; and at the conclusion of his remarks introduced Mr. Pearce, who entered at length into the question of total abstinence. He was followed by Mr. Cassell, who pointed out the inutility of the old temperance society, which pledged its members only to abstain from spirituous liquors. The old temperance society, or moderators, he argued, had thrown out a rope to the sinking drunkard, but their rope had fallen short of its aim, and the unhappy drunkard remained struggling in the slough of drunkenness. Teetotalism, on the contrary, was provided with a long and strong cord, furnished with three knots (nots)—"touch not, taste not, handle not," and this rope, when once fairly grasped by the drowning drunkard, would surely rescue him from his perilous position, and make him a happy and prosperous man. Dr. Patton, of New York, followed, in a popular descriptive account of the progress of teetotalism in the United States—the fatherland of teetotalism. This principle was first advocated in 1804, by Dr. Roche of Philadelphia, who published a small pamphlet, "on the effects of the use of ardent spirits on the human frame." The subject was taken up by the more respectable portion of the community, including the clergy and medical profession, and the progress of teetotalism had been most rapid and satisfactory,—so much so that he looked forward to the day when total abstinence would be universal on the continent of America. And he exhorted his hearers, and the people of England generally, to unite heart and hand with their brethren of America in a determination to exterminate the sin of drunkenness from the face of the globe—praying that whenever the national airs of "God save the Queen," and "Yankee Doodle" were heard, there would the Briton and American be found joined in a crusade against the debasing influence of intemperance. Upon the subsiding of the applause which greeted the peroration of the rev. doctor, Mr. Brainerd addressed the meeting. His remarks embraced the general question of teetotalism, and the duty of all well-wishers of the lower classes in particular, to stop the progress of intemperance. He laid it down as the plain and bounden duty of the clergy of every denomination to come to the rescue, upon the plain principle of the law, that "What we do not prevent that we have the power to prevent, we in fact ordain." At the conclusion of this gentleman's address, a vote of thanks was passed by acclamation to the American deputation; similar compliments were paid to the Rev. T. Scales, and the trustees of the Queen Street Chapel, and to the Mayor for his conduct in the chair; and thereafter the meeting separated.

HUDDERSFIELD.

An account has reached us of the Thirteenth Anniversary of the Huddersfield Temperance Society. The proceedings seem to have been of unusual interest, and amongst many distinguished visitors assisting at the various public meetings, there were several of our American friends who had attended the World's Temperance Convention.

The anniversary commenced on Sunday evening, the 6th September, with a public prayer meeting in the Philosophical-hall, the saloon of which was filled with christians of various denominations, who cordially united in imploring the divine blessing on the proceedings of the society.

On Monday evening, a public meeting was held in the same place, Mr. Enoch Mellor, M.A., of the Independent College, Manchester, in the chair. This meeting was addressed by the Rev. George Heape of Huddersfield, Mr. James Millington of Halifax, Dr. Beecher, and the Rev. Mr. Greener, of Huddersfield.

A meeting was held on Tuesday, the Rev. Newman Hall, B.A., of Hull, occupied the Chair. The meeting was also addressed by Dr. Beecher and Dr. Patton.

On Wednesday, Lawrence Heyworth, Esq. occupied the chair. The meeting was addressed by Rev. T. Brainerd of Philadelphia, John Cassell, Esq., of London, and the Rev. Newman Hall.

On Thursday the anniversary meeting was held. The chair was ably filled by T. Beaumont, Esq., of Bradford. We regret that our space prevents the possibility of giving even an outline of the valuable addresses given at these various meetings, which in the report was a valuable document.

CORNWALL.

Extract from W. Gawthrop's Journal.

Mr. James Teare and myself are hard at work in promoting the great cause of temperance in the west of Cornwall, and we hope in a few weeks to have the additional services of Mr. Thomas Hudson, who is now in the north of England. I am glad to report that a new association has been formed in the middle of this county. There are now three organized associations in Cornwall. We propose to render all the assistance in our power to those unions; for we believe, "that we must not hope to do great things by large organizations, but must trust to individual effort." The plan adopted in the west of Cornwall is, individual memberships, in preference to a union of societies; and every member is responsible, either as the representative of a society, or in his own right, to subscribe not less than one pound per annum towards the funds. The recent agitation of our cause in this district has created quite a revival. We hope to make an attack this winter, of such a character, on the dreadful and destructive drinking system that it will totter to its fall; already our operations are marked with glorious success, many of the meetings have been of the most exciting description; at Penzance about 200 persons have joined our society. We have been holding three or four meetings consecutively, in several of the larger places, with the best results. We are thankful, but not satisfied, and shall not be, till we have driven the enemy from his last lurking-place.

IRELAND, DONNYBROOK FAIR.

August 24, the Rev. Dr. Spratt held his usual annual temperance meeting near the Fair Green, Donnybrook. Thousands attended, and the reverend gentleman had the great satisfaction of administering the total abstinence pledge to some hundreds. The fair went off merrily, and with good order to its close. No heads were broken. One method to secure this orderly conduct was adopted, equally ludicrous and prudential. A huge police van went round from time to time, "weeding" the fair of the drunken people who were unable to take care of themselves and likely to do anybody else a mischief. By these means the first elements of disorder were abstracted, and the famous fights of olden times prevented by their nipping the shillelahs in the bud.—Daily News.

NEWMARKET, FLINTS.

September 14th, 1846.

DEAR SIR,—Having laboured very hard during the summer months, by lecturing in the open air, and the last week I delivered lectures at Rhyl, a new flourishing town by the sea shore, near St. Asaph, much admired and frequented by strangers, as a watering-place. At Denbigh, Ruddlan, and Newmarket also, to good congregations, and some were added.

Lectures on the Physiology of the Human Body, with the use of plates, draw great attention, especially of the young people; and indeed it is our chief aim to entice the affection of the rising generation, and have their tender minds turned from the intoxicating cup; but as for those who are slaves to drink, they will neither read, listen, nor look at the drawings, as they heartily hate any light on the subject.

Several children and young boys signed the pledge about twelve years ago, who are now grown up, we are most happy to find many of them quite firm and faithful as members, determining never to drink intoxicating liquid as a common beverage. Should we succeed with the young, what a healthy, sober and noble generation would be the next! But now we have great reason to humble ourselves before God; great many of our countrymen are very bad, and the interest of our common Saviour very low and flat in general.

Still it is very evident that strangers who work on the Chester and Holyhead Railway are much worse even than the Welch people.

I have lately printed 3000 of Welch tracts at Dolgelly, which are sold to temperance societies for 2s. per hundred; great many are given away gratis. The drift of my tract, is, to prove the unlawfulness of our using intoxicating drinks in general, shewing that they are quite unsuitable as a common beverage for a man in health, the injurious effects of the present drinking-system on all societies, but more especially as it raises a barrier between man and his Saviour.

EVAN DAVIES.

NORTH WALL.

(To the Editor of The National Temperance Chronicle and Recorder.)

35, Eccles Street, Dublin, 1st August, 1846.

DEAR SIR,—The press being the great agent for diffusing throughout the world a knowledge of the important events which are constantly occurring among men, and ruling their destiny, whether for weal or for woe. It is natural that those who take any prominent part in the promotion of objects which they deem of importance to the well-being of the human family, should seek, through that mighty medium of inter-communication, to influence public opinion on behalf of the measures they advocate. Hence the frequency of my communications with it on the subject of teetotalism. This great movement may, without hyperbole, be denominated a World's movement. It assembled recently in London, a Convention composed of about 350 individuals, from America, from the West Indies, from France, from England, from Scotland, and from our own Green Isle—all earnest zealous men, bent on the promotion of the great object that brought them together, and determined to use all lawful and christian means for the conversion of the world to their principles; which, when adopted, are as certain to promote human happiness, as it is certain that to-morrow's sun will rise. The Convention sat six days, the members giving and receiving information to and from one another, and stimulating each other to fresh zeal in labouring for the overthrow of those drinking-customs that are the bane of man's happiness, and which must, so long as we permit them to enslave us, prostrate all our energies, and diffuse abroad over this fair earth, misery and woe, and desolation, and effectually prevent the advancement of our race in the paths of virtue and happiness.

A cause which had the power to bring together, from various and distant places on the earth, and at great expense of time and money, a large number of individuals, who had no pecuniary object in view, but whose sole aim was to promote the best interests of the human race, is not a cause which wise men will cast aside as unworthy their serious attention. A cause in which millions take a deep interest, is not one which wise legislators will neglect or be unmindful of, particularly when social order as well as domestic happiness depend on its advancement. A cause of such deep interest to humanity, and in the progress of which, good and intelligent men everywhere take an abiding interest, is one upon which the press cannot be silent—the press, which is the bulwark of freedom, and the nurse of virtue and religion, will not fail to lay before the world the progress of the greatest reformation of modern times, whose advocates found a ready help in this country from the press, in their days of trial and of difficulty, and who now, in the zenith of their hopes, look with confidence to the same power to aid them until the completion of their mighty work—a work which is sanctified by the peacefulness of its operations, by the harmony of its agencies, which combine men of all sects and parties for the promotion of a common good, and the mighty magnitude of the end it aims at, which is nothing less than the regeneration of the human race from the vilest habit which has ever warred with the dignity and nobility of man's high and immortal destinies. Good men applaud our efforts, and the approving smile of Heaven lightens our labours, and assures us of ultimate victory and lasting triumph. When I sat down to write, my purpose was, to give your readers some account of a delightful open-air meeting, which took place yesterday, at the North Wall; but the recollection of my recent visit to London, and reflections on the probable results of the Convention there, carried me away into other subjects.

On my return home, I found my estimable friend, Father Spratt actively engaged, as usual, in the promotion of happiness. The meeting which assembled at his call yesterday, was equal in interest to any one he ever held before. The gathering was immense, many thousands were there, and as fine a feeling as ever I witnessed on any similar occasion pervaded the crowd, and sparkled in the countenances of all present. I wished that those who doubt the determination of the PEOPLE to persevere in the work of self-improvement, had been there. They would have received a lesson that might have been useful to them all their lives.

The meeting was addressed by Father Spratt, the city-marshal, Mr. Brennan, Mr. Battersby, Mr. Barry, and myself. Several hundred persons took the pledge. It was the subject of remark, that an appearance of comfort and respectability among the assembled people, was evident, which spoke more loudly in favour of teetotalism than any words which could be uttered.

This letter has already extended to a greater length than I intended, I shall therefore hastily conclude by an earnest appeal to the working-men of all classes, to be faithful to the noble cause in which they are embarked; be faithful to it, because it will promote your own happiness and the best interests of your families; be faithful to it, because it will promote the honour and glory of your country; be faithful to it, because it is the cause of morality and religion; be faithful to it, because it will raise humanity out of the dust, and make man mindful of his high dignity and immortal nature; be faithful to it, because every effort to do good is pleasing to Almighty God, and will bring down his blessing on our heads.

Faithfully yours,
JAMES HAUGHTON.

EDINBURGH.

On Tuesday, August 18, the usual weekly meeting of the Edinburgh Total Abstinence Society, was held in Adam Square Hall. Mr. G. Johnston, president, who had just returned from London, occupied the whole of the evening by a narrative of the proceedings of the World's Temperance Convention, to which he had been appointed a delegate. After referring to the constitution of the assembly, the business that had been done, and the practical suggestions brought before it, he concluded his address by stating, as his own impression, that the convocation of so many enlightened, pious, earnest, and experienced advocates of the cause, would not be otherwise than highly beneficial. The principles enunciated, supported by facts and argumentation, and the vast amount of statistical knowledge, collected from all parts of the world, and which would be available through the delegates to so many societies, must, beyond all question, cause the principles of total abstinence, with all its concomitant blessings, to spread through many lands. When Mr. Johnston had concluded, Mr. Gregory rose, and proposed a vote of thanks for the great attention he had given to his duties as a delegate, which was warmly responded to, 122 joined the society.

RAILWAY LABOURERS.

It will be seen by an extract from the Parliamentary debates, given in our last June Number, that on a motion of the Hon. E. P. Bouverie, a committee was appointed to inquire into the condition of the Railway Labourers. The evidence given before that committee is of a very valuable character, and has just been published. It adds another most important document, to the many recently issued from the press, exposing our social defects, and exhibiting to view the effect of evil habits, upon the health, happiness, and morality of the population. The Railway Labourers have been a much neglected class, and as they will, before long, amount probably to not less than 200,000 of the effective labouring population of the country, their condition is one of great interest. The means of employing so great a number, and relieving our large towns of what is usually called its surplus population, ought to be a subject of congratulation; but when we see that high wages are the means of increasing the debaucheries of these poor and uneducated men, instead of enabling them to purchase the comforts of existence, it only adds additional weight to the arguments used against the drinking-system, which continues its oppression over every part of the community. This report is full of much instruction. It will shew the dreadful state, spiritually and intellectually, into which our humbler classes are sunk. We have only room in the present number for a few extracts from the evidence.

Mr. R. Rawlinson says, "As a matter of course I took care not to go amongst them if there was drunkenness or rioting, or if they were in crowds; it would not have been safe or judicious to do so. Upon the work, I had no reason to complain, and no man resisted my authority."

So that they were only dangerous when their passions were excited by drink. Look at the following answers given by Mr. Robinson:—"Did they lose any time after pay-day?" "Very frequently; in Northamptonshire, after Midsummer, there is a custom there, all the villages have annual feasts, and these were a source of great annoyance, first in one, and then in another, and so it would go on for three months, and nothing would keep these men from the feasts, and joining in the revelry and drunkenness, as long as they had a farthing to spare."

"Were they often in a state of drunkenness and dissipation?" "The men generally after the pay night; I am not speaking of my own exclusively, for there were from 1000 to 3000 men employed within the five miles, and I have seen great drunkenness and dissipation after the pay night; fifty and sixty men fighting all at the same time."

"What state were the men in on the Sundays?" "Very few of them attended any place of worship, there was no place; they generally used to get into the fields and under hedges, and get beer and quarrel among themselves."

Mr. Thomas Beggs, who during his mission in Scotland in connexion with the Scottish Temperance League, had taken great interest in the circumstances of these men, and made many inquiries respecting them, was examined; he says, "They are generally men who have been in the habit of receiving very precarious employment, and very low wages in towns, and they are drawn suddenly into an employment which is lucrative to them, and brings them a considerable sum; but it is all spent in dissipation. They are in a state of continued poverty, and always in debt. There is a general complaint of their want of honesty. The facility of getting employment induces them, on the slightest pretext, to leave their present and get other employment, and leave their lodgings unpaid; they get their little bundle out, and leave the place in debt."

To another query, "There is an immense deal of whiskey-drinking (this refers to the Caledonian line); some attempts have been made to put this down; the men principally drink upon the Sabbath, and the houses for the sale of whiskey were closed for that day; but the policeman informed me, he could see little or no diminution of the drinking; and it appears that the people who lodge the men, procure the whiskey from some place or other—the policeman suspects, but has no proof. They procure it and sell it to the men; and on Sunday, they spend the day in whiskey-drinking and card-playing, and then turn out at night to have a fight," "they have had to increase the police force from three to fifteen or sixteen," that is in Lockerby—"The system of monthly drinking is always the worst, but every Sabbath is more or less disfigured with these scenes."

"Do you speak of the Irish labourers, or of the labourers generally?" I am speaking of the Irish labourers here, more particularly in connexion with Lockerby, because the Irish labourers are all there; but I did not find much difference in the habits of the Scotch labourers upon those lines. They have not been so long at that employment, but they are gradually approximating to the same kind of thing: men's habits soon assimilate to the habits of those by whom they are surrounded.

There is, however, this difference at present, or when I was there a few weeks ago, that the Scotch, in cases of bad weather, would go out fishing, or other pursuits of that kind, while the English and Irish labourers, who are mostly persons who have been employed in similar work in England, go to a public house, if they can possibly procure the means to do so. There is a greater abstemiousness generally in the Scotch character, and a greater respect for the Sabbath. The Scotch are very remarkable for their great veneration for the Sabbath, even those who do not recognise anything else scarcely belonging to religion."

One thing is apparent through the whole of this report—that the men have been crowded together, without any preparation, or consideration of their comfort, or convenience—in the language of Mr. Beggs, "they have been crowded one upon another, the decencies of life have been broken down, and if the decencies are not preserved, it is impossible to preserve the moralities." They have, moreover, been made a prey of by mercenary men, who offered them drink and make it almost compulsory upon them to take it; and this has produced in them, as amongst the population of our manufacturing towns, the greatest vices, and the most serious calamities. We hope that some legislative enactment will follow this report, to correct the evils of which it complains.

We shall return to this subject again. We give however, an extract from a letter received from one of our Correspondents.

Berkhamstead.

DEAR SIR,—Perhaps it may be acceptable, if I state some of the facts relative to railway-making which has come under my own observation. When the London and Birmingham Railway commenced, there came an engineer into this town who had authority over all inspectors, overlookers, &c.; he brought with him a poor relative, who opened a general shop for the sale of meat, groceries, clothing, bread, &c. The men were told to deal with him; his goods of every description was 25 and sometimes 30 per cent. dearer than other shops in the town; the intemperate characters, strangers as well as townsmen, who spent their money in drink, would go to the inspector for a shilling or half-a-crown ticket to get food. These tickets were cashed on pay-days, and this poor relation realised several hundred pounds during the making of the railway. The more sober part of the men, who had a desire to lay out their hard earnings to the best advantage, were told that unless they bought at this shop it was likely they would lose their work. Timekeepers bribed by drink have put down men as making full time when much time has been lost over drinking. The Aylesbury Branch line was under Mr. Dawson, a teetotaler, whose men were principally teetotalers, no drink was allowed to be brought on the work, some of the men are in good circumstances in various parts of the country. There is no doubt, but, had the men been sober characters on the London and Birmingham Railway, they might have successfully resisted these railway food shops, by appealing to the contractors against such a system. I personally know of but two men working on the London and Birmingham Railway who saved any money, and my knowledge extends to several hundreds. In my humble opinion no legislative enactment will do away with such a system as long as men are intemperate, for there will always be found a combination among officials on railways to tempt them to drink, and then plunder them.

ROBERT GAMBLE.

EDUCATION OF PRINCES.

The Prince of Wales begins to figure in the newspapers. For a child between four and five years of old, he is not "as little Prince as may be," but as great and renowned as may be. When the royal yacht was off Guernsey, his Royal Highness caught an eel, himself holding the rod and line; and when off Jersey, his Royal Highness suddenly appeared on deck, amid the cheering crew, clad in check shirt, blue jacket and trousers, glazed hat, and neckerchief twisted in that knowing knot which is amongst the mysteries of seamanship. His Royal Highness repaid the acclamations of the sailors by ordering them a glass of grog all round. His Royal Highness does not, therefore, patronise the temperance societies. Now, there is no harm, that we know of, in a child's catching eels instead of fittlebats; nor in wearing a blue jacket and playing sailor. The bustle which the sailors were allowed or directed to make about it, is rather questionable; and the ordering of extra grog more questionable still. For children under five years of age it is not generally reckoned wholesome training to encourage them to treat their friends with rum and water. But Princes, and above all Princes of Wales, are not subject to ordinary rules.—Daily News.

ANNUAL LICENSING DAY AT BOLTON.

THE annual meeting for the purpose of renewing and granting licenses for victualling houses, was held at the Court-room, Bowkers-row, on Thursday.

Mr. TAYLOR, solicitor, had a petition to present. It contained only two counts, the first of which was—"That there is no necessity for an increase of such places of resort within this borough," and the second was—"That the drinking of intoxicating liquors is injurious to the health and morals of the population, and has a tendency to increase crime and the local taxes of the borough." He was wishful to confine himself strictly to the subject. In the first place, he would tell them how many licensed ale-houses there were at present in the borough. The number of public houses was 117, there were also 191 beer-houses; making a total of 308. Now the number of occupied houses was 7,793; that number divided by 308, would give 25; the number of houses to one ale-house. Was that enough? The common average of persons residing in one house was five, but three of the five might be said to be children, and when that deduction was made, it would be seen that the number to support one ale-house would be very few, even assuming all the adult occupiers of houses to be drinkers. It might be said, that some who did not live in the town came into it; but he conceived those who resided in the town and were not drinkers would be a balance against them. Now he should say that the accommodation he had alluded to was enough. He should wish to draw their attention to the effects which these ale-houses had upon the population. Without regard to the mischief which was caused in the shape of domestic misery, and the propagation of vice and immorality, he should refer to the evidence of Mr. Harris, the superintendent of police, to a great number of persons who were then in that room, who had sat upon juries at inquests; to the judge who had recently sat at the Liverpool assizes, and the grand jury who were also there in attendance; indeed he would refer to the magistrates themselves for evidence of the effects of drinking. He would take the statement of Mr. Harris, from whose account it appeared that up to November, 1845, the number of licensed ale-houses in which thieves and prostitutes resorted was 25. That number was of the 117 he had alluded to, with licenses to sell ardent spirits. In 29 out of the 117, gambling was permitted. Therefore, under any circumstances, before ten new licenses were granted, at least 50 of the present licenses ought to be taken away. At all events there would be no necessity for new ones till such as he had spoken of were removed. There were in the town, known to the police, 112 females, who were common prostitutes. He would ask the court whether the system of prostitution was not encouraged by ale-houses? Did not the individuals alluded to, when brought into the dock for various offences, regularly say, "If I had never been drunk I should never have done it," which, though not an answer to the crime, was often an excuse. Then, he would go at once to the number actually apprehended in a state of drunkenness. From the 30th July 1845 to the 30th July 1846, 754 persons were apprehended by the police in a state of intoxication. It might be said that such persons might have got their drink from other places than ale-houses; but such places were open, and the inference was plain. Many of the parties were often found reeling in a state of disorder and were brought to the lock-ups for protection. Now what had the police to do with reference to one drunken man? There had to be four distinct entries in the police books; first, the charge to be taken, next, the entry on the charge sheet, and afterwards in the general book, and in the book of statistics. Out of the 754 who had been apprehended, there were numerous instances, where two policemen had been required, or two and a stretcher. Now, if there were no other circumstances, the fact of the additional labour caused in that respect, would be a sufficient reason why the magistrates should pause, before they increased the number of ale-houses. The return was up to July, and it might be said that an improvement was possible to have since taken place. But was it so? He believed Mr. Harris would tell them such proceedings were on the increase, and he never yet knew that the way to suppress drunkenness was to increase the means of getting drink. Last month, the number of persons apprehended by the borough police was 260; out of that number, 136, or more than one-half, were cases of drunkenness only. There were 15 police in the borough, and more than four-fifths of their time appeared to be occupied in bringing up drunken persons, and persons implicated in robberies or other offences into which they had been led by drunkenness. Now, if such appeared to be the case, that thieves had been led to commit theft through drunkenness, he thought they would see the necessity of considering before they increased the means and opportunities of obtaining drink. Though the justices were met to hear applications for licenses, they had a right to use their discretion, and if they thought proper, to refuse to grant them; and as conservators of the peace and protectors of the welfare of the borough, he hoped they would see it necessary to decline granting any additional licenses. He would now come to another class of cases, which were connected with drunkenness. He did not wish to give the names of parties concerned. They were cases of death, traced directly to drinking, and the parties had all in some manner been in connexion with a licensed ale-house or beer-house. At present he would take seven of the most striking cases; cases which had been openly investigated, and statements respecting each had been given on oath, as papers in his possession as Coroner would show. In case No. 7, a man fell down stairs in a licensed inn, and breaking his neck or fracturing his skull in the fall, he died in consequence. No. 10, was a case in which a man got drunk at a beer-house, near the Farmer's Arms, and on coming home by the canal bank, was met by a man, who, seeing him in a drunken state, would have assisted him, but the assistance was declined, and it turned out that he had within a short distance of the place where he met the man, walked into the canal, where he was afterwards found drowned! Nos. 22, 24, 36, and 39, were each cases in which the deceased persons had hung themselves through excessive drinking. In one instance, a licensed innkeeper was the person who last saw the deceased alive, and took him part of his way home from the public-house. Those were all cases which had occurred within the last five or six months. Four suicides from excessive drinking!—Such were the decisions of the juries, and they could come to no other conclusion, for there was no insanity, except what was brought about by drinking. No. 48, was a case on which a man on a Sabbath morning was in a beer-house, with two or three others, and having become intoxicated went with the men with whom he was in company, to shew them some machinery in Mr. Haigh's mill, where he was employed as engine-ter, though he had no business in the mill at the time, and there fell from a plank (which the jury afterwards walked over steadily) and received injuries which in a very short time brought about his death; and he left 7 or 9 children unprovided for. Drink was decidedly the first cause of his death. With instances of that nature, he would ask the bench to refrain from granting any additional licenses? He believed there were gentlemen present who sold spirits who believed there were already a sufficient number of licensed houses. There were no doubt at that moment 20 licensed victuallers who would be glad to give up the houses they occupied, could they get parties to take the fixtures, &c. The trade was, in fact, overstocked. He would refer them to an example set by the judge at the assizes. He read that portion of Mr. Justice Wightman's charge to the grand jury, with reference to the vast amount of crime caused in this and the adjoining county by drunkenness, from which it appeared that four-fifths of the crime committed was connected with drinking; and to show them that the grand jury were satisfied of the correctness of the judge's statement, he would refer to the presentment of the said jury respecting the same. He then read a portion of the presentment in question. Such examples were not now solitary; for they were being set by some of our bishops, many of the aristocracy, and others high in authority. It had been said that respectable persons had signed memorials for more. Was not the probability that they signed the documents in question in order to get rid of the importunities of the parties? He, himself, had been asked, as Coroner for the borough, to put his name to such documents. He had complied, but he would say, he was sorry for what he had done, and would never do it again. He did not think any such confession on his part was wrong, for he apprehended when a man found himself in a wrong course, he ought to turn to the right one. In rejecting the applications made, the magistrates would have with them all the members of the temperance society, every father, every mother, every religious man, all moderate drinkers. He further deprecated the vice of intemperance, and having presented the petition, sat down.

Mr. DARBISHIRE observed, that on the bench it had been universally remarked there would not be one-tenth of the crime brought before the magistrates, were it not for drunkenness. With respect to temperance societies, he might say, they had long laboured apparently unnoticed, but their efforts were most praiseworthy, and were deserving the notice of the public.

The magistrates retired to consider the applications for new licenses, and after an absence of about twenty minutes, Mr. Darbshire, returned into court, and stated that the magistrates had unanimously decided to grant no more.

By the official returns of the census of New York, it appears that the whole number of inns and taverns it contains, is 1388; the whole number of groceries, 1964; total, 3352. At a very liberal estimate we may suppose that out of the groceries there may be 52 in which no liquor is sold; which leaves three thousand three hundred as the number of stores in which 'liquid damnation' is retailed. Can any one wonder then at the amount of poverty, misery, and crime, that pervades the city.

DRUNKENNESS IN CONGRESS.—The increase of drunkenness in Congress, during the present session, has become awful in the extreme. Probably, never since foundation of the Government, has it been so open and unrebuked. Important business is delayed because the chairman of some committee is drunk from day to day, and cannot attend. Members even appear drunk upon the floor, and use the most profane language. This is from unquestioned testimony, and is for a lamentation.—St. John's N. B. paper.

INDIGNANT, VERY.—Mr. Bell, member of Congress, from Tennessee, thus indignantly repels a very grave charge against him:—"It was false that he had anything to do with temperance meetings, or gave any support to them. He was not a temperance candidate for Congress, did not belong to any temperance society, but was the retained lawyer of one of the tavern-keepers." What a state of public sentiment is indicated by such electioneering.

Review.

The Juvenile Temperance Messenger and Monthly Instructor. September, 1846. By JAMES BALLANTINE; THORNTON & COLLIE, 19, St. David Street, Edinburgh.

This little work for children has just reached us, with a Child's Temperance Catechism, and a number of little tracts. We honour James Ballantine for zeal in the cause of the young; and beg to express our unqualified admiration of the manner in which he has executed his task. We know of no way in which he could have done greater service to the cause of religion and humanity, than by devoting his labour and influence to enlist the attention of our juvenile population to the cause of temperance. These publications are chastely and sweetly written; and we would that every parent and teacher would place them in the hands of youth; and to their esteemed author, were encouragement of ours needed to stimulate him on in his labour of love we should give it. We, however, cannot withhold our meed of praise. These little publications will do an incalculable amount of good, and the seeds thus sown, will, one day bless future generations.

IPSWICH TEMPERANCE TRACTS.

Of these Tracts have been sent from the Depository, Seven Millions of pages of which Three Millions and a-half, have been issued within the last twelvemonths.

1. The Doctor Scrutinized, or for what purpose do Physicians prescribe Alcoholic Beverages, by R. D. Alexander, F.L.S., 122 thousand	8
2. Striking Facts, 79 thousand	2
3. Maker and Vender, 44 thousand	2
4. Our Creed, 47 thousand	2
5. Adulterated Beer, 34 thousand	4
6. Adulterated Wine, 40 thousand	4
7. The Maltster, 37 thousand	4
8. Go Feel what I have felt, 53 thousand	2
9. Facts are Stubborn Things, 48 thousand	2
10. The Spirit Dealer, 35 thousand	2
11. Christian Teetotalism, 70 thousand	2
12. The Trade, 33 thousand	4
13. Alcohol, 33 thousand	4
14. The Town of Ipswich, 33 thousand	4
15. Song of the Water Drinker, 37 thousand	2
16. Stimulation not Strength, 30 thousand	8
17. Farmer Woodman's Speech, 41 thousand	4
18. The Beer Barrel Examined, 23 thousand	8
19. Teetotal Recipes, 38 thousand	4
20. Speech of J. J. Gurney, 30 thousand	4
21. Pity the Poor Drunkard, 49 thousand	2
22. The Fool's Pence, 25 thousand	8
23. Why am I a Teetotaler? and the Inch Auger, 26 thousand	2
24. Dost thou smoke, Bill? 34 thousand	4
25. William the Laudanum Drinker and John the Tradesman, 30 thousand	4
26. The Ox Discourse	4
27. Letter to the Clergy, by a Brother Clergyman, 21 thousand	20
28. Common Sense for those who do not think by proxy, by a member of the University of Cambridge—20 thousand	20
29. Ralph the Soldier	4
30. Testimony of Eminent Physicians, 30 thousand	4
31. The Working Man, 25 thousand	20
32. Is I not happy? by Hugh Stowell, 30 thousand	4
33. David the Shoemaker, and Who is my Brother?—49 thousand	4
34. The Drunken Couple, 38 thousand	2
35. Confessions of a drunkard, 29 thousand	2
36. Master Tailor, 20 thousand	4
37. The Fatal Gift, 36 thousand	2
38. Poor Sandy	4
39. Use and abuse, by Archdeacon Jeffreys, 34 thousand	2
40. The Schoolmaster	4
41. Water is Best, by J. J. Gurney, 37 thousand	8
42. Cobbett's Advice	4
43. Take a Public House	4
44. A Sailor's Yarn	4
45. Moderate Drinking Calmly Considered	16
46. The Pledge	4
47. John Jarvis, or the Pledge Signed	12
48. The Fifteen Friends	2
49. Sunday School Teachers, 22 thousand	12
50. Sunday School Children, 40 thousand	12
51. Money better than Beer, 37 thousand	4
52. Little Mary; or a Daughter's Love	8
53. Philosophy of the Temperance Movement, by R. T. Trall, M.D.	20
54. Love to Man, or an Appeal to the Pious in Favour of Total Abstinence	20
55. The Young Woman's Tract	12

56. The Young Man's Tract	16
57. Dr. Campbell's Testimony to the Temperance Reformation: its Importance; and the Duty of Christians in regard to it, 18 thousand	8
58. Why Sign the Pledge? 40 thousand	2
59. The Poor Man's House Repaired	4
60. The Mother's Tract	8
61. The High Price of Food	4
62. Ladies' Tract Societies	8
63. The Praise of Water; Extract of a Lecture by the Rev. T. Spencer, 25 thousand	2
64. Important Calculation, on the back of which is a LIST OF ALL THE IPSWICH TRACTS, 30 thousand	2
65. The Farm Servant, 25 thousand	4
66. Teetotalism Declining; with an Address to the Directors of Railways, 15 thousand	8
67. The Reformed Drunkard, and the best means of Reforming the Drunkard, 20 thousand	8
68. The Recruit of the British Legion	8
69. No. 1 of Temperance Anecdotes and Teetotal Varieties	12
70. No. 2 ditto	12
71. No. 3 ditto	12
72. No. 4 ditto	12
73. Luke Hasler, or "I did not like to say No."	8
74. The Drunkard's Wife	8
75. The Unexplored Island	4
76. Ancient Wines	8
77. Influence of Example—and Address to Christians	2

ASSORTED PACKETS.

- No. 1, containing Tracts No. 1 to 35 inclusive.
 - " 2, " " " 36 to 57
 - " 3, " " " 58 and upwards.
- Each Sixpence.*

All the Tracts as far as No. 66 inclusive, may be had in one volume, of 408 pages, cloth bound, price Two Shillings.

168 pages of ANY ONE may be had in Sixpenny Packets. Also, Packets ASSORTED. Twenty-four Sixpenny Packets will be delivered in London for Half-a-guinea, or 50 Packets for a Guinea, being sent by a Post-office Order to the Editor of the "Temperance Tracts," Ipswich.

HAND BILLS

(for announcing Public Meetings), 50 for 6d. may be had with a Tract at the back, as under.

TEMPERANCE SOCIETY.

A

PUBLIC MEETING

WILL BE HELD

On the of 184

The Chair to be taken at o'Clock.

[No. 2.] Please to examine the back of this Hand-bill.

NOTICE PAPERS,

4½ inches by 3 inches, With the same words as the Hand-bills, and Facts on the back, in Sixpenny Packets of 200 each.

SAMPLES OF THE WHOLE WILL BE FORWARDED POSTAGE PAID, in return FOR 40 PENNY STAMPS, SENT TO THE EDITOR OF THE TEMPERANCE TRACTS, IPSWICH.

London, Simpkin and Marshall; Ipswich, Burton; Leeds, Kershaw; Norwich, Jarrold and Sons; Manchester, Holker; and of all Booksellers.

TEMPERANCE PROVIDENT INSTITUTION,

39, MOORGATE STREET, LONDON.

ESTABLISHED 31 DECEMBER, 1840.

TRUSTEES.

WM. JANSON, JUN. Esq. | ROBT. WARNER, Esq. | EDW. WEBB, Esq.

SECRETARY.

THEODORE COMPTON.

THE STATISTICAL DOCUMENT READ AT THE CONVENTION IS NOW PRINTED, AND MAY BE HAD GRATIS AT THE OFFICE.

ONLY TWO MEMBERS HAVE DIED SINCE JULY, 1845, AND NONE SINCE LAST MARCH!

A PAYMENT OF SIXPENCE PER WEEK, or eleven shillings and tenpence per Quarter, will secure £50 at a Member's death, or payable to himself, on his attaining the age of sixty-five years; provided he enters the Society at the age of twenty-five.

Members are admitted at all ages, and of both sexes, for any sum from £10 to £2000, on equally easy terms.

Teetotalers are strongly advised to join at once. The whole of the profits will be divided amongst the members, according to the date of the entrance.

Papers to fill up; Rules, and every information will be given, or sent gratis to all parts of the kingdom.

THE LATE CASE OF POISONING

BY DEADLY NIGHTSHADE BERRIES.

(The Belladonna of the Doctors.)

People of England! The only difference between the man who sold the berries and those dishonest doctors who administer rank poison "medicinally" is this—that the former has killed two persons outright, whereas the doctors above named, poison slowly thousands with belladonna and other rank poisons, only it is done by slow degrees, and under the name of science! Out upon the idea that poisons can or ought to be used "medicinally." Twenty or more of the first doctors of London, whose names appear in the London Teetotaler, of August 1st, have just declared that spirituous liquors should not be used "medicinally." It is only a year ago that Hygeists were laughed at for even mentioning such a thing, yet it has come to pass! If, therefore, spirituous liquors should not be given medicinally," with how much more reason should rank poisons such as belladonna, arsenic, prussic acid, &c., be prohibited! The British College of Health call upon those eminent medical men (who do not make a trade of their profession) to come forward and declare the truth. How the public can allow themselves to be imposed upon in a question so palpable, is most extraordinary. Nothing but the blindest confidence can account for it; well may doctors administer their poisons in small doses? Let there be a disinterested inquiry, and it will soon appear that those rank poisons have been introduced into medicine, for the purpose of creating mystery, confusion, and monopoly. Read the sixty-second number of the Hygeist, price 1d., or 2d. by post, to be had at the office, 368, Strand, London.—British College of Health, New Road, London, September, 1846.

REDUCTION IN PRICE!!

ARTIFICIAL MEMORY.

MANUAL OF PHRENOTYPICS.

Third edition, illustrated with Diagrams, price 2s.

By T. F. LAWS,

Which will be found more intelligible, cheaper, and to contain more applications of the art than any other work upon the subject. Also, Phrenotypic Chronology, reduced from 2s. to 1s. 3d. the two parts, being 1900. Historical Facts, &c., with the dates prepared for committing to memory. Phrenotypic Census, reduced from 1s. to 6d., being the population of 960 places throughout the world phrenotyped; and Phrenotypic Machinery, (a few copies remain) 2s. 6d.

Extract.—"I beg to add my conviction of the great practical importance of the system, and of the perfect feasibility of making it available for the acquisition of every kind of useful knowledge."

REV. WILLIAM LONG.

Published by BRITAIN, 11, Paternoster Row, London, and sold by all Booksellers.

ON THE LOVE OF CHILDREN.

A neat two paged Tract adapted for general circulation, and suitable for extensive distribution among the poor Price 1s. 6d. per hundred. Sold by E. D. Hayward, 19, New Broad Street, London. (Tenth thousand.)

* * * The NATIONAL TEMPERANCE CHRONICLE and TEMPERANCE RECORDER is published on the first day of each month, at HOULSTON & STONEMAN, the Depôt of the National Temperance Society, 65, Paternoster-row, and will be sent post-free for one year on receipt of 2s. 6d. postage labels. Annual Subscriptions received at the Society's office, 11, Tokenhouse Yard, London, and subscriptions and donations for the general purposes of the Society, by the Treasurer, G. W. ALEXANDER, 40, Lombard Street; by any Member of the Committee; and at the office as above.

London: Printed by RICHARD BARRETT of 3, Regent-terrace City-road, in the Parish of St. Luke, in the County of Middlesex, Printer; at his Printing Office, No. 13, Mark-lane, in the Parish of Allhallows Staining, in the City of London; and published by JOHN STONEMAN, of 24, Brooksby Street, in the Parish of Islington, in the County of Middlesex, at HOULSTON & STONEMAN'S, No. 65, Paternoster-row, in the Parish of St. Michael-le-Querne, in the City of London, Publishers.—Thursday, October 1st, 1846.

THE
NATIONAL TEMPERANCE CHRONICLE
 AND
TEMPERANCE RECORDER.

It is good neither to eat flesh, nor to drink wine, nor anything whereby thy brother stumbleth, or is offended, or is made weak.—ROM. XIV. 21

No. 11, JOINT SERIES.]

NOVEMBER, 1846.

[PRICE 1½d., STAMPED 2½d.]

CONTENTS.

	PAGE		PAGE
CHRONICLE AND RECORDER—Legislation	241	HOME INTELLIGENCE—
The Hindoo Sacred Books on the Use of Liquors	242	Finsbury—Chatham—Romsey, Hampshire—Ryde, Isle of Wight—Ventnor, Isle of Wight—Hastings—Newmarket, Flints—Rotherham—Messrs. Teare and Gawthorpe in Cornwall—From Mr. Gamble's Journal—Madeley—Extract from the last Census of Great Britain—Morals of Edinburgh—Alcoholic Fluids Disorganise the Stomach—Important Minute Worthy of Imitation—The Cause in Devonshire 255-257
Intoxicating Liquors as Medicine	243	FOREIGN INTELLIGENCE—
Railway Labourers	244	New York County Convention	258
Cold Water and Hot Alcohol	245	Barley versus Malt—Moral Discipline—Notices—Poetry—The Human Body—Funeral Clubs at Public-houses—Ancient and Modern Wine Drinking—Wine Casks—Teare Testimonial—G. W. Biscombe—Correspondents—Prize Essays—Advertisements.....	258-264
United States.....	247
British Association	248
The Experience and Advice of a Teetotaler.....	249
The Revenue—Licensed Victuallers	249
Waste of Food, and Famine.....	250
Sabbath Drinking in Paisley—Smokers Beware	251
EDITORIAL REMARKS—
National Temperance Society	252
THE MISSION.....	254

Chronicle and Recorder.

NOVEMBER 1ST, 1846.

LEGISLATION.

The considerations suggested in the last article seem to us conclusive that a positive interference with the manufacture, or sale of intoxicating drinks, is beyond the pale of legislation. At present, good men regard it as a fair trade, and sanction its continuance; and say they, government has nothing to do with trade, but protect every man in the discharge of his employment. We assent to the proposition, and are willing for the time being, to extend it to all the recognised trades of the country. Those who contend for putting down the traffic assent to this too; but draw a distinction between articles of legitimate and illegitimate commerce. But who is to define what comes under the former or latter category. It would be too dangerous a power to place in the hands of any rulers. That must be determined by the moral sense of the community; and we shall find it reflected back in the acts of the legislature; but it is no part of their business to solve moral questions. Lawmakers have to do with results, and legislate as the will of the community decides. But without entering into abstract questions of law or government; the civil magistrate has a power, with the consent of the public voice, to impose restrictions or limitations, on the exercise of trades or employments, where they may interfere with the rights or conveniences of others; and where they cannot positively interdict, they can control or limit.

Political society owes protection to all its members. A great mass of the people are creatures of mere passion, sacrificing the hopes of the future in the gratification of the present. Then, again, a great number are young, inexperienced, and untaught. To these a measure of protection is due. The moral feeling of the people sanctions the use of legal means to restrain the vicious or the selfish who would throw temptations in their way. Many of these expedients already in existence, may be ill-judged or inoperative; but still the right to bring in the arm of civil power, is all but universally acknowledged. We will try to cite an analogous case.

Great interest is now felt in sanitary measures. It is known that fever, and epidemic diseases, scourge the crowded neighbourhoods of our large towns, as the consequence of foul air, deposits of filth, &c., and the poorer classes have little or no choice in their dwellings. This is a question for legislation, and every intelligent mind approves of it. The poor man who cannot protect himself, is entitled to protection. Now suppose that in a salubrious neighbourhood, some man grossly ignorant of the laws of health, or so recklessly bent upon the pursuit of gain, as to be indifferent to them, opens a depot for old bones, rags, &c. And to his other abominations adds a dung-heap; this generates miasmata, spreads sickness abroad, and as a natural consequence, burdens are added to the poor-rates and other public expenses. If he is a selfish or ignorant man, it is useless appealing to him; all he can see is, his own interest, and he does not care what inconvenience others suffer. Now it is admitted, that here the civil power should be called in. In the very last session of parliament an act was passed, one clause of which gives to the magistrates a power to order the removal of any nuisance injurious to the public health, on receiving a complaint, backed by a certificate from two medical men. This may appear harsh in some instances, but will be assented to as a just measure of protection by all who have examined the subject. There are similar cases, but our limits will not admit of more than simply referring to the regulations respecting gambling-houses, and those affecting dangerous employments. On the same ground we have a right to ask for stringent measures to regulate a traffic in strong drink, which is doing so much mischief. Interference, in the sense of interdiction, we repudiate as neither sound in principle, nor expedient. But regulations to lessen or abate the evil are called for; and the only difficulty we feel is, as to the extent to which that limitation should go. Now, in neither case is the government expected to enter into the morale of the question. In carrying out sanitary measures, they are not required to discuss the qualities of air, &c., but to be satisfied with the result, which shows clearly and invariably that mortality is greater under one condition than another. We therefore do not think it necessary that legislators should decide upon the nature or properties of strong drink. They have to do with the results. Its use leads to crime, vice, and poverty; and therefore it is their duty to lessen the facilities for drinking, more particularly as the poorer classes of our countrymen are its principal victims. They interfere with the truck system, and ought to do so with the payment of wages at the public-house, which is akin to it; and to prohibit the amusements of taverns, dangerous under all circumstances, but particularly so when connected with drink.

We have introduced this subject, as we declared, with a view to excite inquiry. We have another object—to inquire what is the best means of approaching the legislature? Most assuredly they have never had the subject fairly before them; and legislators, like other people, require teaching. They, of all others, have their time most occupied with party questions. It is twelve years since the Parliamentary Inquiry; and this was conducted when total abstinence principles were imperfectly understood. Since then we have been accumulating facts and acquiring knowledge, and it is desirable that the result of our experience should be presented to the ruling powers. We urge, then, that decidedly the best plan of effecting so desirable an end, would be to procure a government commission, to inquire into the effects of the License Laws upon the public health and morality. To the various commissions for inquiring into the health of towns, we are indebted for many sanitary regulations already obtained and in prospect; and for much valuable evidence as to the effects of intemperance. Our question is at all events equal in importance, and the temperance body possess an influence powerful enough to procure such a commission, and to work it efficiently. We believe that such an inquiry would open up an amount of startling facts—for which teetotalers are scarcely prepared—and that it would certainly result in some measure wisely laid to counteract the numerous temptations to evil which prevail, as connected with intoxicating drinks. It would do much to correct our statistics; and would bring before both branches of the legislature our great question in such a way as no other means could effect. We throw out this as a hint, and think that this would unite the three classes of opinions to which we referred in our last; and produce what is desirable in all questions connected with our movement—harmony of effort.

Some other matters we have still to consider, but must wait another opportunity.

THE HINDOO SACRED BOOKS ON THE USE OF LIQUORS.

The following extracts from the Hindoo Shastras were selected and translated from Sanskrit into Mahratia by a learned Pundit. There can be no doubt that the use of intoxicating drinks has proved a fruitful source of poverty, wretchedness and crime. But we express no opinion as to the suitability of the penances here prescribed. There is reason to fear that many of the higher castes, and not a few of the Brahmins even, not having the fear of these penances before their eyes, have fallen into the habit of using these drinks. This is much to be regretted, as this habit can add neither to their happiness nor respectability. It will promote neither health of body, nor strength of mind, nor strength of moral principle. On the contrary, those addicted to intoxicating drinks, will, in consequence, have less self-respect and are likely to become far more degraded, degraded and wretched than they would otherwise be. If therefore they have no regard for their shastras, let them at least have a regard for their own welfare, and wholly abstain from that, which, while it can do them no good whatever, will in many cases at least, sink them to the very dregs of society and involve them in infamy and shame.

Prayuschitendooshekhur, a work on Hindoo law, contains the following on the subject of spirituous liquors:—

A strong liquor is obtained from grain which produces intoxication. If a Brahmin, impelled by desire drinks, even once, such an intoxicating liquor he shall perform the death penance, i.e. he shall boil either spirituous liquor, water, cow's urine, cow's milk, or clarified butter made of cow's milk, and when it becomes hot like fire, he, having wrapped himself in a wet cloth, shall drink it out of a copper or iron vessel; and if he die from the effect he shall be considered purified. But should he not die, he shall not eat any more food until the day of his death.

If on a single occasion, he shall drink spirituous liquor, not in consequence of a desire for it, but mistaking it for water, then he shall clothe himself in a coarse woollen garment, and leaving his hair to become long and matted, shall for twelve years remain unclean, and practice all the austerities prescribed in the case of him who has taken the life of a Brahmin. If he drink it daily, though not impelled by appetite, then the death-penance must be performed.

If any one shall drink spirituous liquor by mistake, supposing it to be water and then vomit it up, he shall eat no food for three years, except one meal daily, to be taken in the night, which is to consist of the refuse of the teel seed of which the oil has been extracted, or a little rice water. In addition, he must daily drink the punchagurya, a purifying mixture composed of the five products of the cow. Or, as a substitute for the above penance, he may give a piece of land to a Brahmin in charity, and again perform all the rites which are prescribed for Brahmins from their birth onwards; after which he may be re-admitted into caste.

If, through mistake, a person allows the intoxicating liquor merely to reach the palate, he must perform the above penance for one year; but if knowingly, then for twice that period. If he eat food in which there is intoxicating liquor, though without a desire for such liquor, then he shall perform all the rites which are prescribed for Brahmins from their birth. If a Brahmin smells a spirituous liquor, he must perform the santupun penance. All persons are liable to the death-penance, who knowingly and voluntarily drink the liquor called Pyshtee. This is obtained from a certain kind of flour, and is of a far worse nature than Gowdee and Madhee, which are obtained from molasses, honey, &c. The above mentioned penance is therefore prescribed for such as may have used the Pyshtee liquor.

According to the work of Madhwa, any Brahmin who, whether intentionally or unintentionally, drink either the Gowdee or Madhvee liquor, must boil either spirituous liquor, water, clarified butter, or cow's urine till it attains the heat of fire and kill himself by drinking it: he will then be purified from the sin.

Next comes the penance for using intoxicating liquors produced from the jack-fruit, &c. Of these liquors there are eleven kinds which are made from, 1st, jack-fruit; 2nd, grapes; 3rd, the flowers of the moha tree; 4th, dates; 5th, palm tree; 6th, sugarcane; 7th, honey; 8th, syre; 9th, marisht; 10th, miray; 11th, cocoa-nut. If a Brahmin even unintentionally tastes any of these liquors, he must suffer the fiery penance. He must also perform all the rites pertaining to Brahmins from his birth, after which he may be restored to caste.

The Mitakshura, a work on Hindoo Law, much used in the courts of this country, prescribes the following in the third chapter, which treats of penances.

If any one drinks spirituous liquor, let either spirits, water, clarified butter, cow's milk, or cow's urine heated boiling hot, be administered to him; and if he die by this means he is purified from the sin.

Prucheta says that a person who has drunk spirits but a single time, must wrap himself in a wet cloth, and drink spirits heated boiling hot in an iron or copper vessel.

Ungera says, in like manner, that he who has drunk ardent spirits, though but once, must atone for his sin by drinking it hot like fire.

It is the opinion of Wasisht that not only those who for once take strong drink, as pyshtee, madhvee, and gowdee, must perform the above mentioned penance; but those also who repeatedly and deliberately drink toddy and such like liquors which are but slightly intoxicating.

If any one drink spirituous liquor, let spirits be heated as hot as possible and poured into his mouth until he die. Thus he will be purified. And what can be said more? except it be that the very vessel which has contained intoxicating liquor is to be rejected as unclean. On this subject, Bruhusputte says, If any one has drunk water from a vessel which has contained intoxicating liquor, he must take milk which has not been heated, clarified butter and the juice of the roots of the shaunkupoosee tree, and having mingled them together, must continue to drink the mixture for five nights, by which means he will be purified.

A female of any caste whatever, who shall drink intoxicating liquor, be she ever so holy and chaste, shall never enter that heaven in which wives enjoy happiness with their husbands. On the contrary, she shall again inhabit this earth, appearing successively in the form of a bitch, a vulture and a sow.

It is said by Menoo that if the wife of any person shall drink spirituous liquor, one-half of his body shall waste away by degrees, and for this waste portion there can be no expiation. The Gurood Pooraa also in the chapter which treats of the departure and state of those who die, enjoins that no one should drink intoxicating liquor.

In the 4th chapter of the puccuman division of the Rig Veda, the person who drinks spirituous liquor is ranked with those who are guilty of infanticide, parricide, matricide, the stealing of gold, fornication with females without regard to caste, incest with one's own mother, &c.

The 28th stanza of the 26th chapter of the 5th division of the Bhaguwut says, that he, who, whether Brahmin, Kshutriyu, or Wishyu, drinks intoxicating liquor, or who when engaged in the performance of religious rites causes his wife to drink it with him, is an offender; and that those, who notwithstanding the fear of hell do such forbidden things, shall after death be seized by the messengers of Yum, the king of the infernal regions, who placing their feet upon the breasts of these wicked persons shall pour melted iron down their throats and cause them to suffer great torments.—Dny-anodaya, June 15.

INTOXICATING LIQUORS AS MEDICINE.

In the Provincial Medical and Surgical Journal of September 9th, 1846, is a paper headed, "On Dilatation of the Heart, consequent on Teetotalism," by Richard Chambers, M.D., Physician to the Essex and Colchester Hospital. Est natura hominum nocitatis avida; and so I was anxious to read on, for certainly this was something new. That abstinence from intoxicating drinks is said to be a cause of dilatation of the heart, will alarm many a timid mind, for who has not a dread of heart-disease? But Teetotalers need not alarm themselves, as the following remarks will, I think, convince them:—

The two cases related by Dr. Chambers are of such a commonplace character, that it seems necessary to search for some extraordinary circumstances to serve as an apology for bringing them gravely before the anniversary meeting of a learned society; and the subjects of the disease having been Teetotalers, was the fortunate adjunct. I congratulate myself that Teetotalism has forced its way so far as to be noticed at all by learned doctors of medicine; and now let us see Dr. Chambers's cases, and his treatment of them.

Case 1, a free liver, became a teetotaler, and "for the space of six months subsequently, there was no perceptible alteration in his state of health:" from which I should infer that his new habits did not disagree with him. Afterwards he became ill, of what Dr. Chambers regarded as dilatation of the heart, the muscular structure of the heart having yielded in consequence of the less stimulating character of the blood. Such is Dr. Chambers's theory of both this case and also of No. 2. Now put this into plain words, and what does it amount to? That blood in its natural state is not a sufficient stimulus to the heart; and that good blood, out of which good muscle has to be made and to be maintained, is not so suitable for that end as bad blood, or in other words, blood adulterated with alcohol!

But we have other authorities besides the author of this paper. Dr. Hope (the highest one perhaps) says, "when dilatation has advanced so far as to occasion morbid dyspnoea, [difficult breathing] it has a constant tendency to increase, unless the circulation be kept tranquil by a very quiet life, and by judicious medical treatment when necessary." Again, "If the cause be too violent exercises or passions, inebriety, [INEBRIETY!] occupations which, by placing the patient in a constrained posture, prevent the free circulation of the blood, the pernicious exercises, habits, or occupations, must be abandoned, and the passions calmed." Here we see the drinking of alcohol, and not the abstinence from it, set down as a cause of dilatation. Again, "The circulation should be kept as tranquil as possible, by a quiet life, and a moderate unstimulating diet. The food, however, should be rather nutritious, comprising a little animal food or soup twice a-day, in order to keep the muscular system in general, and that of the heart in particular, in good tone." Directly in the teeth of this, Dr. Chambers recommends wine and gin, which stimulate the circulation, and debilitate the muscles.

It may seem unprofessional for me to say that I believe the cases to be not cases of organic disease of the heart at all: but seriously such is my opinion. The doctor gives the result of a stethoscopic examination in both cases, but only notes two signs of dilated heart,—1st, clearness of sound; and 2nd, want of impulse. Now, in such cases as these, there must have been several more physical signs, if they had been genuine cases of dilatation with attenuation: while, presuming them to have been cases of sympathy between the heart and the stomach, there is not half the difficulty in explaining them.

But now, granting them to have been all they are said to have been; I ask, would it not have been worth while to try what the other medicines would have done without the wine? Why in such desperate haste to have a fling at teetotalism? Surely drunkenness is a horrid disease, and if we can help to get rid of it, we are bound to lend our aid as conservators of the public health: and can Dr. Chambers be so far behind the light of the day, as not to know that he has put his patients on the high road to a premature decay, and death? I think the ammonia, the quinine, and the other medicines prescribed, wrought the relief in spite of the wine and the gin; and that from these last the patients had a lucky escape, instead of their aiding in a scientific cure! In fact, medicine can be only said to cure, when it has so far restored the patient that he will remain well without it; so, if these parties with dilated hearts are still using alcoholic drinks, they are not cured, and the very means which are boasted of as having cured them, will inevitably, if persisted in, shorten their days!

How unnecessary to give alcohol a good name as a drink, by prescribing it in the form of good old port, and of gin-and-water! Why not the physician write a prescription for the necessary (!) quantity of spirits of wine, to be procured as other medicines at the druggist's? How much more precise this would be than the old port and gin-and-water plan, where the quantity of the active medicinal ingredient is not known, or only guessed at, or left to the patient's own discretion!

O yes; it would better accord with precision, and with science, and with philanthropy, and with health too, but, alas, not with fashion! I trust the Teetotalers of Essex will have an eye to poor "Henry Taylor, the working gardener," and report to us progress concerning him. There are some remarks in a Norwich Newspaper, by way of a discussion between Drs. Hastings, Crosse, and Chambers, on the cases I have been referring to; the play upon words, and the bringing up old and exploded fallacies about Temperance, is utterly unworthy of these respectable gentlemen, and I trust some future day to expose their unfairness, if no one else will undertake it.

H. MUDGE, Surgeon.

P.S.—There is disease of the heart very prevalent in Cornwall consequent on drinking alcohol, I may call it Sarification. The heart is turned into stone; it is more common, more distressing, and more fatal than "Dilatation," a good deal! Do these learned M. D.'s recommend abstinence from its cause? I do; and have wrought many wonderful and thorough cures. Next month you shall hear again.

RAILWAY LABOURERS.

Extracts from Minutes of Evidence taken before the Select Committee of the House of Commons on Railway Labourers.

Evidence of GRAHAM SPEIRS, Esq., Sheriff of the county of Edinburgh, in connexion with the Granton, North British, Hawick Branch of ditto, and the Caledonian Railways. The magistrates have refused to grant licenses to stores (opened for the accommodation of the labourers,) for the sale of intoxicating liquors. Strongly urged upon the contractors weekly payments, and under no circumstances in public-houses; some have discontinued the practice, and have witnessed the good effects, resulting therefrom.

Evidence of Rev. J. R. THOMPSON, of Totness, Devonshire, in connexion with the South Devon Railway. Accidents.—I think there have been as many accidents from intemperance, as from the nature of the work. On a Sunday, a boy was killed on the spot from a drunken fight; in the same week, two men had their legs broken, and one his ribs broken, arising from intemperance, drunkenness and fighting. Loss of time.—The dissolute stand in the way of the well-disposed, for if there is a gang of men of fourteen or fifteen, if four or five get drinking on Monday, and the rest come to work, they cannot proceed with the work, so that the whole gang is stopped by the four or five drinking-men.

Evidence of W. REED, Esq., one of the directors of the Rouen and Paris Railway. Respectability of the French labourer compared with the English, on account of the intemperance of the latter. The French labourer desires to be paid only once a month, the English navy desires to be paid on Saturday night, and by the following Wednesday, wants something on account of the next fortnight's work.

Evidence of Mr. J. A. J. LIST, Superintendent of the Edinburgh County Police, and Justice of peace fiscal, in connexion with the North British, Edinburgh, Leith and Granton Railways. Evils connected with paying on Saturday night, and at public-houses.—Part of the men were paid at public-houses on that line, and there were continued scenes of quarrelling and fighting, on Sunday and Monday, very seldom resuming work till Tuesday; but we deprived the man of his license, and since then they have been paid at the office, and on a Friday: since which we have not had a drunken quarrel nor riot in the neighbourhood. Tyranny of the traffic.—There is another thing deducted from their wages, which is beer; whether they like it or not; by the rules on certain parts of the railroad, the labourers are compelled to take a certain quantity of beer. These rules are made by the gauger, and encouraged by the contractor.

Evidence of Mr. ROBERT RAWLINSON, of Manchester, engineer, engaged in connexion with the London and Birmingham Railway. Desecration of the Sabbath through drink.—Very few indeed of the men attended any place of worship, though there were from 1000 to 3000 employed within five miles; they generally got into the fields, and under the hedges, drinking beer through the day, which invariably led to quarrelling and fighting. I have seen between fifty and sixty men fighting all at the same time; and the Monday was generally spent in the same way.

Evidence of Mr. A. RAMSAY, manager of the Edinburgh Water Works, in connexion with the North British Railway. I have seen crowds of people bringing ale and whiskey along the rail on a pay-night; the consequence has been, the whole country around has been a scene of riot and disorder.

Evidence of Mr. HENRY LACY POMFRET, Surgeon of Hallingworth, Surgeon to the Sheffield and Manchester Railway. A detail of accidents during six years.—Twenty-three cases of compound fractures, including two of fractured skull, seventy-four simple fractures, 140 severe cases, including burns from blasts, severe contusions, lacerations, dislocations, and one man lost both his eyes, and one-half his foot; also 450 cases of minor accidents, including trapped and broken fingers, injuries to the feet and toes, lacerations of the scalp, bruises, broken shins, &c.; five of these cases the fingers required amputation; many of these accidents were occasioned by drinking and fighting. Loss of limbs from blasting.—I have frequently found that the men had been to the beer-house before going to this particular portion of the work, and that in a great many cases led to want of caution, and foolhardiness, which caused the loss of limbs, and oftentimes of life; many having been killed on the spot. Loss of time.—Many, as long as they could get beer by any means, would not go to work; these likewise prevented the sober and more respectable who would have gone to work; the majority being drinking, the others could not go on. I have known them, after the pay-day, spend the Monday, Tuesday, Wednesday, and sometimes Thursday in drinking; and keep the more respectable from work also.

Evidence of S. M. PETO, Esq., contractor for the lines from Ely to Peterborough from Wymondham to Durham, and from Reatham to Lowestoft; the construction of Lowestoft harbour, and sixty-one miles from Southampton to Dorchester, employing 9000 men. I always make it a matter of stipulation that the men shall be paid no later than five o'clock on Saturday afternoons, in the current coin of the realm; and if in any instance tickets are issued, or payment made in any other than the current coin, they immediately forfeit their contract, and the deposit in my hands; and if the payment should be delayed after five o'clock, under any pretence whatever, it would be brought under my notice, and the parties would be instantly dismissed; and I never permit any beer to be brought on the works by any publican. Question by Lord C. Hamilton.—You do not find that on Sunday the men are so often in a state of dissipation and intoxication. I cannot say but they are so sometimes, but it is quite the exception. I allow no Tommy-shops or places for the sale of intoxicating drinks in connexion with the works, though I have works now in the Fens, the plan I adopt is, I give my agent instructions to go to the nearest market-towns, (on being about to commence operations) and say, at such a place I shall be paying away £500. or £600. sterling to the men weekly, and it will be your (the tradesmen's) interest to see the men are well supplied: he would go for instance, to Ely, Peterborough, Whittlesea, &c., and on Saturday afternoons, the butchers and bakers, and others would be there. I have seen between thirty and forty bakers' carts piled up with bread, besides butchers' and others. The other day, I was conversing with Dr. Peacock, the Dean of Ely, we had been at work in his district for two years, with about 3700 men; and in Ely alone, I had 700 men lodging: the Dean told me, since they had begun the work, he had had less magisterial business than for any two years since he had been at Ely: and he said, that my men were an example to the district, and prevented excesses instead of being the occasion of them. Answer to question.—I have not found that the prohibition of beer has produced any bad consequences; perhaps an old tramp would come, and not liking this regulation, would go again; but the consequence of the publican coming I found was this; a lot of men are hot at work, they would say, let us have a round; then they would have another, and so on; and I have found from experience, that the parent of nearly all accidents is drunkenness. I have known scarcely any accidents arising, excepting from the men being intoxicated at the time.

Evidence of Mr. JOHN BAIRD, clerk of the peace for Dumfriesshire, in connexion with the Caledonian Railroad. Payments monthly, truck-system, and spirit and beer-stores allowed on the works.—The men are paid on Saturday; then the rioting and drunkenness continue for four and often five days, with the great mass of the men, accompanied with fights and assaults, and often serious injuries to themselves and others. A woman, a barmaid in one of the public-houses, on refusing a man who had been drinking, any more beer, as he had spent all his money, he attacked her, and the consequence was her leg was broken. But the magistrates are endeavouring to put down these houses altogether, by keeping a sharp look out on those who receive the men on Sundays; and when the time for licensing comes, they will lose them. Bad effect upon children.—There are a great number of young boys employed upon the work, carrying picks between the blacksmith's shop and the railway, and these are getting completely into the bad habits of the men, drinking, swearing, fighting, and smoking tobacco, boys of twelve and fourteen years of age.

Evidence of Mr. J. TAYLOR, engineer, in connexion with mines; by our rules, a man for getting drunk would be dismissed. I have found very considerable improvements, in reference to the evils of intoxication, in the fifty years that I have known the mine; whether it is owing to the temperance societies or not, I will not say, but there is less drinking, I am convinced.

Evidence of Mr. T. JACKSON, builder and contractor, Pimlico, in connexion with the Chester and Holyhead, the Bedford and Bletchley, and Leighton and Dunstable Railways. Obstruction of work and loss of time by drinking.—If we have a gang of men, say 100, in one cutting, we have three sets of waggons going; if it comes on wet, after ten o'clock, the men knock off, and if there is a beer-shop in the neighbourhood kept by a gauger, and if they have not money, they know that they have a claim upon him for the work done; and if but four or five persist in continuing to drink, as the waggons are sent out in sets, so many to each, the conduct of the five or six who stick to the beer, prevents the whole gang, of 100, going on with their work. I have known brewers come to the gaugers, and say, I will allow you five shillings a barrel for every one you sell; they then pay a man for going up and down the works to the detriment of the work, forcing the men to take beer.

Evidence of E. CHADWICK, Esq., in reference to the directors of the Liverpool and Bury Railway. The contractors and foremen are strictly ordered, if they find any man come on the works in a state of intoxication, or apparently under the influence of liquor, to lead him off the works and discharge him.

Evidence of Mr. THOMAS JENOUR of Cheam, Surrey, in connexion with the Croydon and Epsom Railway. Beer is allowed to be brought upon the works, and sold to the men; the consequence is, there is every sort of abomination and lewdness, and bad women, all getting drunk together.

*Evidence of the Rev. W. H. GEORGE SARGEANT, Chaplain to the Lancaster and Carlisle Railway:—*We cannot give spiritual instruction to the men who are positively taught, by the contractors, to despise the Sabbath, the pay-day being Saturday, in order that one of their drunken days may be Sunday. I expostulated with the contractors, and they told me, in so many words, it was their design that Sunday should be one of their drink days, that they might not lose time. I suggested paying them on Monday, when, it is highly probable, most of them would go regularly to work on the Tuesday morning; but Sunday being an idle day, when they have their pockets full of money, the number of publicans desirous of receiving their money, lay all kinds of snares for them, and they fall victims to their unhappy position.

Evidence of Mr. JOHN SHARP, Contractor on the South Devon line. Do you allow an ale-housekeeper, or a tom-and-jerry keeper to set up a shop on the line? We never do. Why? Because I have seen the great evil of it on other works, creating drunkenness and fighting. Wherever a beer-house is allowed on a work, it is the cause of great disorder; and we have found the benefit of this prohibition, in the sobriety and respectability of the men. There is one suggestion I would make—I think government would do much good, and would greatly benefit the labourers on railways, by preventing people having so many beer-houses in the districts where they are going.

COLD WATER AND HOT ALCOHOL.

(From the New York Organ.)

We have reason to expect much more hot weather this season, and many more sudden deaths which will be imputed to "apoplexy," "congestion of the brain," "drinking cold water," &c. The following extract from "A Brief Essay on the Medical Use of Ardent Spirits, being an attempt to show that Alcohol is as Unnecessary and Mischievous in Sickness as in Health," by Dr. D. M. Reese, of this city, published in 1833, will be read with interest and advantage:—

"A case frequently named, as illustrating the value of spirituous liquors, is that which is founded on the sudden deaths which are reported every summer as occurring from drinking cold water; and it is urged that a little brandy taken with the water would prevent these casualties; and still further, it has been found, that persons have been recovered from the alarming dangers produced by drinking cold water when heated, by quickly swallowing a draught of raw brandy. And hence it is argued, that in hot weather ardent spirits in the water drunk is useful, and for the effects of drinking water alone ardent spirits are indispensable.

"The argument, however, is unsound, and the illustration an unhappy one, if it be recollected that the instances of sudden death from drinking cold water, almost universally occur among intemperate foreigners, or others who habitually indulge in the use of spirituous liquors. And after drinking as usual until a thirst is thus created, which rum will not gratify, they go to a pump or spring of water, and drink to allay this thirst, which is more from their intemperance than from labour and heat united. Such are most generally the facts in the instances referred to, as is well understood by those who have attended to the subject.

"The effect of the cold thus suddenly applied to the stomach, is supposed to be a paralysis extending from that organ to the heart, and hence a powerful stimulus, promptly administered, is the usual remedy. For this purpose, opium, capsicum, camphor, ammonia, and the like, have all been successfully employed, and either are preferable to alcohol for this purpose, especially when the patient often has half a pint of rum in his stomach at the time of the accident, as I have known to be the case more than once; and in such cases, it is somewhat unaccountable how the mixture of rum and water, before drinking it, is to prevent the accident, and mixing it in the stomach is to cure it; but this may be regarded as another specimen of rum logic and alcoholic philosophy.

"The truth is, that water, however cold, drunk by an individual however much heated, never did produce this paralysis and death, except when the stomach had previously been impaired by intemperance or otherwise, and hence these accidents proverbially occur among drunkards. And it is equally true, that in these, when the effect of drinking cold water can be relieved, there are other remedies more immediate and effectual than alcohol, so that it is by no means indispensable even under such circumstances. Among the hundreds of thousands who practice total abstinence from all intoxicating drinks, there cannot be an instance produced of death from drinking cold water, although they usually drink it more frequently and more liberally, when heated, than do the intemperate. They are, perhaps, for the most part more discreet than to use anything to excess, and if they should even trespass in this respect, with cold water, the only evil effects that would follow, are a temporary disturbance of the system, neither dangerous nor fatal. The stomach unimpaired by artificial stimulation, has ordinarily vigour enough to reject the water or overcome the effects of its temperature.

"The pretext for mixing alcohol with water, because of its bad quality, as is proverbial in New York,* is alike unfounded, for there is no quality so bad in the water as this imparts to it; and certainly none to which this is an antidote. And yet in this city there are many barrels of ardent spirits in its varied forms, which are medically used on this pretext, and then forsooth all the mischiefs of the rum are set down to our 'villanous pump water.' The bar-keepers of our hotels, taverns, and other grog-shops, find it their interest to cry down the water, and pronounce panegyrics on the virtues of mixing it, especially for strangers, who are earnestly cautioned against using pump water, without its being first made into punch, sling, or bitters. It is on this account that a single visit to our city has been so often the ostensible cause of manufacturing drunkards, for persons have here learned to drink rum as a remedy for bad water so well, that on their return home, they could not unlearn it, and have never found any water since good enough to dispense with the addition, which they found so exhilarating and medicinal. I have often been amused at the willingness manifested to take this medicine, even by those who abhor physic in all its forms, and however sensitive or delicate the stomach in refusing castor oil and jalap, this kind of medicine seldom excites any nausea or disgust, and hence it is given to cover the taste of other drugs, until it has become an almost universal panacea."

* At that time we had not the Croton.

UNITED STATES.

Report of the Executive Committee of the American Temperance Union. 1845.

We have received the above report. It is a very interesting document. Many of its facts and statistics have already appeared in the pages of our Chronicle. They are all confirmatory of the great fact, that intemperance is the cause of poverty and crime. We are slowly accumulating evidence on this head. And it may be instructive to show our popular declaimers, who, on all occasions, are ready to allege poverty as the cause of crime; that in a country, where, as they say, food is plentiful and labour abundant, pauperism and crime are found to a great extent; and are attendants upon intemperance. We believe that the deeper we go in our investigations, the more we shall be convinced that there is, after all, in this country as well as in the United States, very little real poverty (to use the term in the sense of destitution) but what is self-induced. We make the following extracts from the document, corroborating most strongly many of the statements made at the World's Temperance Convention, and which will appear in the report now published.

"By examinations, it has been found that one in thirty of our best population, were converted into common drunkards; that the farming districts have lost, in deaths by intemperance, about 30 per cent, among the male adults; the village about fifty; that three-fourths of the pauper, and more than half the criminal tax, of the state, has been caused by rum; that of 880 maniacs in various asylums, 400 owed their loss of reason to intoxicating liquors; and that 400 of 600 juvenile delinquents, either drank themselves, or were the children of drinking parents.

"A report laid before the legislature of New York from the superintendents of the poor, from all but three counties of the state, returned 26,114 paupers, of whom 6185 were directly from intemperance; 1083 idleness and debauchery; 118 vagrancy; 60 females abandoned by husbands; 3088 cause not given; all of which, 11,531, may be well classed with the intemperate—the remainder are placed under the ordinary and natural causes of poverty. The pauper tax of the state of New York is 600,000 dollars. One quarter of this, or 150,000 dollars, is proved to be the direct intemperance tax.

"In 1844, the Board of Supervisors of Orange county, charged the county the following sums:—

	dollars.	cents.
" Amount raised for general fund	8047	65
" To pay judges and jurors	2000	00
" Poor fund	12,000	00

"Whole number admitted to Goshen and Newburgh jails, was 173. Of these, there were temperate, 17; doubtful, 7; intemperate, 143; children of intemperate parents, 7.

"On the 1st of December, 1844, there were in the Goshen poor-house, 183; not reduced by intemperance, 88; intemperate, 77; doubtful, 18.

"Some years ago a drunken father in this county, placed his little daughter upon an ox sled, and rudely whipping his cattle, they rushed to the road-side, threw off the child, and made her a cripple, and she has been supported in the poor-house more than twenty years; and the town probably received five dollars for the license for selling the rum. A direct yearly tax of more than fourteen thousand dollars, more than three-fifths of the usual county-tax, is levied upon the inhabitants of Orange county, to give the privilege for the license to sell.

"In Ulster county, the pauper and criminal taxes, which would not have been levied without the sale of intoxicating drinks, in 1845, was 15,000 dollars. Of the poor in the county poor-house, 236 came to poverty, directly or indirectly, through intemperance; 63 from other causes.

"The jailor for Suffolk county has reported that among the prisoners in jail, in 1845, 10 were temperate, 6 doubtful, and 15 intemperate; and that the expense for half the criminals was caused by intemperance.

"The amount of taxes per annum, in the county of Tioga, has averaged for the last six years, about 14,000 dollars.

	Dollars.
" Expenses of the poor per annum	5000
" Interest of the poor-house establishment	350
" Expenses of county court	1750
" Constables' fees in criminal cases	1150
" Justices' fees in criminal cases	450
" Sheriff's fees for board, &c.	500
	Dollars 9200
" Three-fourths of this amount has been attributed, by calculation, to intemperance	6900
" Witnesses' fees in criminal cases	400
" Add proportionate expenses to supervisors for auditing the above accounts, say	100
	Dollars 7600
" Deduct amount received into the treasury for granting licenses	300
	Dollars 7300

"Making 7300 dollars which intemperance costs the county of Tioga.

"There were in the county of Tioga, in the year 1840, 20,527 inhabitants, which would make a fraction less than three dollars of the intemperate tax to be paid by each inhabitant of the county. Deduct from the whole number of inhabitants in the county, in 1840, the women, children, and all who are not subject to taxation, and the average amount which each tax-payer would be obliged to pay in consequence of the licensing of a few to sell this poison alcohol, would be enormous.

"In Livingston county, the amount of money collected from the county, from November 14, 1844, to November 14, 1845, was 26,067 dollars 43 cents. Of this, was expended for the support of the poor, 3129 dollars 62 cents; criminal justice, 6680 dollars 40 cents; in six years amounting to 58,85 dollars 12 cents; of this 44,140 dollars 60 cents, is justly chargeable to intemperance.

"In Chautauque county, the expenses for the poor for 1845, were 3105 dollars 17 cents. Proportion chargeable to intemperance, 1761 dollars 17 cents; criminal expenses, 5728 dollars 96 cents; chargeable to intemperance, 3319 dollars 81 cents. Making the rum tax of the county, 37 per cent. of its pauper and criminal expenses.

"In Greene county, the taxes in 1844, had reached the sum of 20,418 dollars 19 cents, being an increase on those of 1833, of 7258 dollars 92 cents; an annual average of increase of 604 dollars 91 cents. And these taxes are mainly owing to intemperance.

In Niagara county, the sale and use of intoxicating liquors cost the county, in 1845, by pauperism, crime, and death, the sum of 7413 dollars 93 cents. Without intemperance, the whole tax, instead of 13,455 dollars, would have been only 6042 dollars 7 cents.

"The most horrid deeds have been the result of the licensed sale and use of intoxicating drinks. Domestic murders have been perpetrated. Husbands, under the influence of rum, have butchered their wives. Men, once useful and reputable, have been roasted in the fire. Two men at Rondout, in a state of intoxication, were burned up in the cabins of their own boat. Casualties of the most distressing character have occurred:—A coach with a lady, in the city of Albany, brought by an intoxicated driver in contact with a train of cars, the lady thrown out and mangled to pieces in presence of her husband!—

A steam-boat, with an hundred passengers, under suspicious circumstances, thrown upon a rock, to the loss of many lives! In 1845, the coroner of the city of New York, held inquests on the bodies of 634 persons. Of these full three-fifths died of intemperance.

"If each drunkard consumes ten cents worth of liquor a day, his liquor alone costs him 36 dollars a-year, besides the loss of time, health, vigour, business, and gain. Benjamin F. Butler, Esq., late Attorney-general of the United States, has computed that the loss to the United States, from the use of intoxicating drinks, is 150 millions dollars annually; portion of the state of New York, eighteen millions. The Hon. Mr. Everett, late minister to Great Britain, and now President of Harvard College, computes that the use of alcoholic beverages has cost the United States, directly, in ten years, 1,200,000,000 dollars; has burned, or otherwise destroyed, 5,000,000 more of property; has destroyed 300,000 lives; sent 150,000 persons to our prisons, and 100,000 children to the poor-house; has made 1000 widows; has caused 1500 murders, and 2000 suicides; and has bequeathed to the country, 1,000,000 of orphan children."

Extracts from the Finance Accounts of the United Kingdom, for the year 1845, ending 5th January, 1846.

Net produce of the Revenue of Customs from intoxicating liquors during the above period in England, rum, 1,125,691l. 3s. 7d.; Scotland, 20,208l. 0s. 4d.; Ireland, 6410l. 8s. 7d.; net revenue on rum for the United Kingdom, 1,152,309l. 12s. 6d. England, brandy, 1,145,979l. 0s. 5d.; Scotland, 41,782l. 2s. 0d.; Ireland, 20,399l. 16s. 9d.; net revenue on brandy for the United Kingdom, 1,208,160l. 19s. 2d. Geneva and other sorts, England, 18,174l. 0s. 10d.; Scotland, 5,153l. 17s. 10d.; Ireland, 2,551l. 0s. 2d.; net revenue on Geneva and other sorts for the United Kingdom, 25,878l. 18s. 10d. Spirits manufactured in Guernsey and Jersey, England, 12,948l. 1s. 0d.; Scotland, 166l. 16s. 8d.; Ireland, 0l. 7s. 0d.; net revenue on spirits manufactured in Guernsey and Jersey for the United Kingdom, 13,115l. 4s. 8d. England, wine, foreign, 1,579,371l. 15s. 5d.; Scotland, 132,346l. 7s. 5d.; Ireland, 179,519l. 12s. 10d.; net revenue on foreign wine for the United Kingdom, 1,891,237l. 15s. 8d. Wines manufactured in Guernsey and Jersey, England, 130l. 4s. 1d.; Scotland, none; Ireland, 27l. 4s. 3d.; net revenue on wines of the manufacture of Guernsey and Jersey for the United Kingdom, 157l. 8s. 4d. England, revenue of excise on hops, 257,447l. 3s. 0½d.; Scotland, none; Ireland, none. England, licenses, 856,187l. 11s. 3¾d.; Scotland, 109,203l. 6s. 4½d.; Ireland, 103,947l. 5s. 8¾d.; net revenue from licenses for the United Kingdom, 1,069,338l. 3s. 5d. England on malt, 4,271,508l. 11s. 0½d.; Scotland, 409,562l. 7s. 5¾d.; Ireland, 233,933l. 3s. 1¼d.; net revenue from malt for the United Kingdom, 4,915,004l. 1s. 7½d. England, spirits, 2,859,046l. 8s. 7½d.; Scotland, 1,703,348l. 14s. 9½d.; Ireland, 1,196,647l. 10s. 2¼d.; net revenue from spirits, for the United Kingdom, 5,759,042l. 13s. 7½d.; total net amount of the revenue of customs from intoxicating liquors, in the United Kingdom, for the year 1845, ending 5th January, 1846, 4,290,859l. 19s. 2d. Total net amount of revenue of excise, in connection with intoxicating liquors, in the United Kingdom, 12,000,862l. 1s. 8¼d. Total net amount of revenue from the customs and excise department, for the United Kingdom, for the year 1845, 16,291,722l. 0s. 10¼d. Amount of duty paid on spirits during the same period for home consumption in the United Kingdom, 5,749,794l. 0s. 10d.—(See Parliamentary Spirit Return, No. 73 Report.)

BRITISH ASSOCIATION.

Extract from a circular published by the BRITISH ASSOCIATION.

GENTLEMEN,—The Executive Committee of this Association, begs to direct your most careful attention to the following resolution, passed at the last conference, viz:—

"That this conference would direct the attention of all its auxiliaries, and of temperance societies in general to the vast importance of forming a Statistical Committee, whose object shall be to collect facts favourable or opposed to, and directly or indirectly connected with, the Temperance Reformation in their respective towns or districts, such as—

"1. The number of inns, dram-shops and public-houses; of flour-dealers, grocers, and bakers in each street. 2. The number of maltsters, brewers, wine and spirit merchants. 3. Concerning the drinking usages in workshops, factories, &c. 4. The number of drunkards in the town, or in such streets or districts as can be investigated. 5. The number of persons, male and female, young and old, who enter within a given time the principal dram shops. 6. The quantity of intoxicating liquors consumed in public institutions, such as poor-houses, penitentiaries, infirmaries, and dispensaries. 7. The number of members of christian churches who have backslidden through the effects of strong drink. 8. The number of teetotal ministers, deacons, local preachers, class leaders, Sunday-school teachers and scholars, and medical men. 9. The number of places of worship in which the Lord's supper is celebrated in unfermented wine, and of vestries from which intoxicating wine has been banished. 10. The number of teetotalers and reformed characters, and instances of remarkable reformation."

The British Association has repeatedly and earnestly pressed this question upon the attention of the delegates who have warmly, at the time, recognised the very great and most essential use of a complete table of statistics. The subject seems, however, to have been passed over, and many causes have been assigned, but none of these, when carefully examined, have been by the executive deemed justifiable. The absence of exertion in that line of direction which leads to the procuring of statistics, is admitted to have been the principal cause; and, hence the committee most earnestly invites the co-operation of every one of its branches, and societies in general, to the accomplishment of an object so paramount to the success of the temperance reformation. It has been already admitted, that every teetotaler is furnished with abundant cases of reformation, to confirm all his arguments in favour of the temperance principles. Having these cases at command, and the knowledge of others obtained from advocates and periodicals, he fancies he is fully armed for the campaign against strong drink; hence his mind is quite prepared to admit the truth of statements, such as the following:— "There are in Great Britain and Ireland six hundred thousand drunkards, and sixty thousand of these die annually;"—that "there are sixty thousand backsliders from the church of Christ every year through the effects of strong drink." The probability is, that the number of drunkards is much greater; but, were an advocate publicly making these assertions, called upon for proof, upon what statistical data would he proceed? And, if closely cross-examined, with what credit would he demonstrate the truth of his assertion? Is there a single advocate in England, Scotland, or Ireland, thus prepared with proof? Arguments in reference to Britain on this point are not, and ought not to be founded upon data drawn from America. The Committee of the British Association is constrained to believe, that there is not a writer or an advocate in Great Britain who is supplied with statistical evidence to carry him through such an ordeal. Let every committee, then, pause for a moment, to consult how he would feel if deprived of such facts. The case is thus strongly put to arrest the attention, and attract the deliberation of committees generally to this most essential—this invaluable sphere of labour!

The following practical suggestions are made in order to facilitate the collecting of these statistics.

The Executive begs most respectfully to suggest the immediate formation of a Statistical Committee in connexion with each society—to consist of the local committee, and as many of the zealous members as possible. The committee thus formed should then be divided into sections, each section to have one specific department mentioned in the resolution to attend to. The committee should meet at least once in every month, or oftener if necessary, when the statistics should be delivered in, to be entered into a book under their respective classes or heads. A condensed quarterly account should be forwarded to the Committee of the British Association, who would send them forth to the world in such form as might be calculated to arouse public attention to the wide-spread ravages of Intemperance.

THE EXPERIENCE AND ADVICE OF A TEETOTALER.

(From the Christian Witness.)

“There are many teetotalers who think that they must have, besides good water, some substitute for spirituous liquors; I mean, that they must drink tea, or coffee, or lemonade, &c., at the periods when they were in the habit of taking ale, or beer, or wine, &c. For instance, after dinner, when others take their glass of wine, they must have their cup of coffee; or, when they are engaged in labour, at the hours when they formerly took their beer, they must now have their tea, or their ginger-beer, or their milk, &c. And there are cases in which they give so much trouble in this way, that their employers, though favourable to the cause of temperance, say they would rather give them beer, as usual, and be done with them. Now these persons throw a reflection on teetotalism. They sanction the idea that water is not sufficient for a beverage, that something else is necessary besides it and wholesome food to support the human frame. Now, I am no enemy to tea and coffee; I enjoy them as much as any man, and take them every day, morning and afternoon. But I have found by experience, and I have been a teetotaler for ten years, that good water is the best beverage, and that, as a substitute for fermented drinks in all their variety, there needs no other. I have tried the plan of taking coffee, &c., after dinner, and at other times between meals, and I invariably found that they made me dull and heavy, and impeded digestion, unfitted for action, or that they caused an unnatural and unhealthy excitement; in short, that pure water is far preferable to them. Now, all I wish is, that every one would fairly try for himself, whether or not this is the case. I say fairly try. Let him not mistake the operation of habit, and the longings of appetite for its accustomed gratification, for the real demands of nature. Let him make the trial, determinately and for a sufficient time, and I am very much mistaken, if experience does not confirm what I have now advanced. I have often lamented to see that many temperance men, as they call themselves, are not temperate, but that they merely exchange one form of unnecessary and even pernicious sensual indulgence for another. I am in the habit of early rising, and of working two hours before breakfast, and I find that nothing fits me so effectually for my labour as two or three glasses of cold water next (to use a common expression) my stomach.

“Permit me also to say, that I deeply lament to see so many teetotalers slaves to the mean, dirty, and pernicious habit of smoking. I wish, Mr. Editor, you could induce them to take this habit into serious and impartial consideration. I am sure this would be enough to induce them to abandon it. They may rest assured that it operates, in many cases at least, very injuriously as it regards the success of their efforts on behalf of temperance.”

We beseech our friends calmly and seriously to ponder this communication of one who is both a faithful and a powerful friend. We very much wish the writer's modesty would have allowed the appendage of his name, which is that of one of the most able, useful, and influential ministers of the Independent body. It is exceedingly to be desired that men whose years, talents, character, and position, lend force to their example, could muster courage to identify themselves publicly with this great movement.

THE REVENUE.

Facts are obstinate things, and I wish to present a few, to prove that it absolutely requires at least six times the amount of the revenue derived from the sale of licenses, to support the pauperism, and punish and suppress the crime which follows in the gory wake of the license system. The following is a summary of the number of criminals and paupers sent to the various jails and poor-houses in one year, in the State of New York:—

Whole number of criminals committed	5532
Temperate	641
Doubtful	1003
Intemperate	3888
Whole number of poor	8434
Not from intemperance	1158
Doubtful	1402
Intemperate	5874

The whole amount of tax levied in the several counties of the State, as exhibited in Chipman's invaluable report, was	dollars. 495,436,50
The expense of pauperism and crime	363,386,70

Balance 131,049,80
—New York Paper.

LICENSED VICTUALLERS.

This body pays to Government yearly for their licenses, their taxes, and the duties on spirits sold by them, the immense sum of £11,000,000. The cost of the British army yearly, is £3,500,000; that of the navy, £5,000,000; the cost of the metropolitan police force, £500,000; and that of the rural police throughout the kingdom, £750,000; making a total of £10,750,000. Thus, then, it appears that the publicans of London pay to government more than it costs to support the army, navy, and the whole of the police force established throughout the kingdom—Douglas Jerrold's Weekly Newspaper.

WASTE OF FOOD, AND FAMINE.

It admits of no doubt, that there is an alarming scarcity of grain, and that the present winter threatens the horrors of starvation to a large mass of the population, in addition to the other distresses and privations to which the poorer classes are subject at this season. It is said, on good authority, that there is a deficiency of the corn crop to the extent of 1,500,000 to 2,000,000 quarters. And the accounts of the extensive failure of the potatoe crop are still more startling. The condition of thousands of our countrymen, who, at the best of times, are but scantily supplied with the meanest kind of food, becomes a painful and heart rending consideration. Look, for instance, at the sister kingdom, with her millions, whose subsistence depends upon the potatoe. When we reflect upon the terrible calamity hanging over that unfortunate people, we cannot acquit ourselves of a solemn responsibility, without calling the attention of our readers to the annual waste going on in the manufacture of intoxicating drink, converting the food of the people into poison, taking the fruit which God in his beneficence has given in the richest abundance, for the sustenance of his creatures, and transforming it into an agent more destructive to human happiness, and more desolating in its effects, than the united evils of war, pestilence, and famine. We look to Ireland with great anxiety. The Duke of Wellington stated, in 1839, that he did not recollect a single year, since his first taking office, in 1806, that the subsistence of the Irish people had not caused the government uneasiness. This was saying in effect, that Ireland was always verging upon famine, and justifies the strong expression of one writer upon the condition of that country, that a destroying angel who should, in a single night, destroy 50,000 of her population, would inflict less injury than the failure of her potatoe crop. To the disgrace of England, the state of that country has been imperfectly understood in this. The report of the Commission of Inquiry into the condition of the poorer classes in Ireland, published in 1835, gives a detail of sufferings, common to that people, without a parallel in any country. Many of these have undergone modifications and improvements since the temperance reformation commenced; but still there is enough of misery to rouse the most sluggish into effort; for accounts have reached us quite as harrowing as any to be found in the reports of 1835. At that time, thousands were driven to subsist upon garbage, boiled nettles, and even sea-weed; and now we see absolute destitution driving the poor into madness, and more troops demanded for Ireland. That country is deeply interesting to us, from the high capabilities of her children. Look at the humble disciples of Father Mathew. The history of the world does not present a prouder example of self-denial than that which has been manifested by the poor, half-starved, uneducated peasantry of Ireland. In this country, those who adopted the temperance principle, found other comforts to supply the place of the illusory one given up—the Irishman had none. He sat down to his miserable potatoe and water; and, in his triumph over appetite, in the surrender of an indulgence which occasionally made him forget his poverty, he achieved a conquest unprecedented in the history of any people with which we are acquainted. There are other points of interest about Ireland. If ever the will of God was manifest in his works, it is to be found in that country. He has blessed it with beauty and fertility. It is filled with plenteousness that the people might eat and enjoy. We cannot but believe, that, in his inscrutable providence, He designs to overrule this present threatening aspect of things to some great purpose, and bring good out of evil. It is not our intention to enter into speculations like these; we rather desire to shew, that where the divine being has intended good, man has wrought evil, and that his benevolent designs have been frustrated by the folly and wickedness of the creatures he has made. It is a proper time to awaken attention to the sinful destruction of grain, which would gladden the hearts of famishing millions.

It was once said, in the House of Commons, in connection with the horrible crime of incendiarism, that the man who, by destroying a portion of the people's food, increased the price of the remainder, was guilty of a monstrous crime against God and man. If this be true of a poor wretch, who, in a fit of drunkenness or frenzy, fires his neighbour's stack, will it not apply to a community who sanctions a destruction of food, equal to the produce of one million and a half of acres of land. The destruction of food, under any circumstances, is a sin against the righteous government of God, and if the wretched incendiary is guilty, so are we. Now, what is the fact? In the year ending October, 1845, there were 4,687,487 quarters of barley paid the malt duty, that being an excess of 70,240 quarters above the previous year. The destruction of this grain by fire or flood, when ripe for the sickle, would be considered a dire calamity. But we gather it, the husbandman rejoices, and sings his harvest home; and then we send a portion of it to the still and the vat. And this is not an unimportant portion, for the quantity made into ale and porter would furnish two pounds of bread per day to two millions of people for a whole year. A quantity of grain, equal to more than the produce of one-fourth of the cultivated land of Scotland, supposing it all to be capable of growing corn, is thus destroyed in making strong drink. This may be passed over with indifference in ordinary times, and then only by the unreflecting; but now, when scarcity is loudly talked about, causing the Government perplexity, and creating wide-spread alarm amongst the people, surely it is an absolute duty to inquire whether the article produced by its destruction is at all useful or necessary. We have only put down the quantity of grain used for malting, and said nothing about the quantity of unmalted grain used for distillation, besides the quantities of grapes, apples, and other good and nutritious fruits made into various forms of intoxicating poisons. The four-and-a-half millions is quite enough for our present purpose. Here is a means placed at our disposal, at once of alleviating the distress of the poor, and substituting for their scanty and wretched food, a wholesome, grateful, and nutritious grain. With such means at our disposal, how stands the account betwixt us and our duty? If it can be proved that these drinks, made from the destruction of food, are at all useful or necessary, then we abandon our ground, although still there would be a strong argument left—that if not indispensable, it was unwise to convert the produce of our harvests into strong liquors when that produce is scarce.

But who is there to assert that these liquors are useful or necessary. Experience, science, reason, testify against such a fallacy; and no one appears to express a single reasonable doubt upon the broad statement made on our platforms, and through the press, that alcoholic liquors are decidedly injurious to men in health. This narrows the field of debate. If this be so, then are we verily guilty in taking the fruits of the earth, and making them into a drink, neither useful, necessary, nor harmless. If, while our fellows want food, we waste that food, we are betraying our trust; and though the laws of our country may not visit us with the punishment of the midnight incendiary, we shall do well to ask ourselves what the law of God will say on this criminal misappropriation of his bounties.

Now this question has been taken up by another class of persons in much the same way. Last year a learned professor, who had been trying a series of experiments to ascertain the nature of the potatoe-disease; by submitting them to fermentation, obtained a considerable amount of alcohol, and suggested that such being the case, the necessary amount of spirit should be thus procured; and the grain usually employed for such a purpose should be given to the poor as food. This year several writers have suggested the propriety of using molasses to make ale and beer, and thus save the grain and use it for food; and one, a brewer, argues that fine and good ale, quite equal in quality to that produced by the usual process, can be thus made. We thank them for this concession, as it goes farther than they imagine. It admits the important proposition, that the people's food should not be used for the manufacture of intoxicating drinks in this emergency. We go further, and ask, why make the drink at all? It is not necessary for health, for comfort or enjoyment. It debilitates the body, enfeebles the mind, debases the morals, and ruins the soul. It destroys domestic peace, is a social disturber, and a national curse. It produces pauperism, crime, disease, and premature death. Deserted widows and destitute orphans appeal against it. Its character is written in every family, every church every neighbourhood,—and in addition to all these, and unnumbered other mischiefs, it is destroying four millions and a half quarters of grain, while the people are perishing. The famishing poor of Ireland, a country near and dear to us; and the poor of Scotland are appealing against this abuse. Want, and its ghastly and hideous attendants, are at the heels of a starving and desperate population. Every consideration of humanity, prudence and religion call upon us for effort. We must rouse the legislature to the importance of the subject;—rouse the people who buy and drink, and the christian world,—who slumber while this evil is rampant, and destroying the goodliest of God's heritage. The friends of temperance must be united, and firm, and decided. This is the time for action; and as the cause is that of God, our prayers and our exertions will not be in vain, if begun with a single eye to his glory and the happiness of our fellow-men.

SABBATH DRINKING IN PAISLEY.

(From the Renfrewshire Advertiser of September 19.)

On Wednesday last, fourteen spirit-dealers were summoned to the police-court, charged with keeping open houses, and selling spirits, porter, and ales, at unreasonable hours on the preceding Sunday morning. Mr. Anderton, the Procurator Fiscal, said, that sometime ago his attention was directed to vast numbers of intoxicated people on the streets on Sabbath mornings. He rose early on several Sunday mornings, and found in certain localities, the streets covered with people, who appeared not to have been in bed, and who went about smoking and swearing till after 6 o'clock, when they got into public-houses. He found numbers of publicans whose houses and shops were as thronged as on a Saint James'-Day fair. He was informed, that 74 individuals went last Sunday morning in one hour, into the public-house of a person present. He knew a house into which 16 young men entered last Sunday morning at 8 o'clock, threw up the windows of the room fronting the street, and sat and smoked and drank, and laughed and joked, and cursed and swore, in defiance of all decency. He had received information regarding a house in which card-playing for gills was practised on Sabbath mornings, with the knowledge of the publican; and he was sorry to say, that he knew spirit-dealers who stood at the back of their counters, and sold whiskey to poor shivering drunkards, between 6 and 10 o'clock on Sabbath mornings, then shut up, and go to church at the ringing of the bells, to worship God in a christian congregation. The consequences of that Sunday morning traffic were ruinous; scores of people got either drunk or half-drunk, and spent in whiskey the money which ought to have procured a breakfast for their wives and children; families, as well as individuals, were going to ruin; never a week passed over his head but some poor woman was at him asking advice about a drunken husband, and giving the most heart-rending details of domestic misery. But the evil did not rest with families, it was affecting the community to a serious extent, and the Sabbath-day drunkards were causing such an increase of pauperism as to be positively alarming. Day after day drunkards' families were applying for relief from the poor's funds, and as they could not be allowed to starve, the assessments would soon be greatly augmented. Unless something decisive be done, Paisley would become a town of paupers, and every respectable person would leave it rather than pay such heavy assessments to support drunkards and their families. The Fiscal went on to speak on the powers of the magistracy, and showed that if the publicans persisted in desecrating the Sabbath morning, by carrying on their business, and entailing on the community the evils alluded to, the magistrates could, and he believed would, refuse to renew their licenses in May. As for himself, he was now aware that the evil complained of was much greater than he had anticipated, and he would not hold his situation as Fiscal without lifting up his voice against it. He would cause the houses of spirit-dealers to be observed, and report to the magistrates those who carried on business on Sabbath morning, and would oppose a renewal of their licenses, lest he should be act and part chargeable with the enormous sin of which they were guilty, by tacitly permitting them to go on. He said, he had no wish to see the parties present punished, and if they would promise to keep their houses and shops shut on Sunday mornings, he would say nothing more about it.

Baillie Barr concurred in nearly all the Fiscal's remarks, and recommended him to report to the Justice of Peace Fiscal, the houses which were disorderly, and to report to the magistrates the names of the spirit-dealers who persisted in carrying on business on the Sunday mornings, in order that they might be considered at the time for renewing the licenses.

SMOKERS BEWARE.

German physiologists affirm, that of twenty deaths of men between eighteen and twenty-five, ten, originate in the waste of the constitution by smoking.

National Temperance Society.

OFFICE 11, TOKENHOUSE YARD.

VICE-PRESIDENTS.

The EARL of ARUNDEL and SURREY, M.P.

Sir Wilfrid Lawson, Bart.

R. D. Alexander, Esq.	G. S. Kenrick, Esq.
Thomas Beaumont, Esq.	Rev. Theobald Mathew.
Samuel Bowly, Esq.	W. J. Morgan, A.M., M.D.
Rev. J. Brewster, D.D.	Richard Peek, Esq.
J. S. Buckingham, Esq.	Rev. P. Penson, M.A.
Robert Charleton, Esq.	Rev. W. W. Robinson, M.A.
Rev. T. Clowes, M.A.	Rev. J. Sherman.
Isaac Collins, Esq.	Rev. C. Stovel.
Joseph Eaton, Esq.	Rev. T. Spencer, A. M.
Joseph J. Gurney, Esq.	Rev. W. H. Turner, M.A.
S. C. Hall, Esq., B.L.F.S.A.	Edward Thomas, Esq.
Lawrence Heyworth, Esq.	Robert Warner, Esq.
William Janson, Jun., Esq.	Edward Webb, Esq.
Ven. Archdeacon Jeffreys.	Rev. J. Wilson.

TREASURER.

G. W. Alexander, Esq., 40, Lombard Street.

EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE.

George W. Atwood.	Charles Gilpin.
Richard Barrett.	Richard Hicks.
Jabez Burns.	C. H. Lovell, M.D.
William Cabell.	John Meredith.
William Cash.	Richard Potter.
John Cassell.	T. B. Scutt.

SUPERINTENDENT OF MISSION.

John Meredith.

AGENT.

William Gawthorp.

SECRETARY.

Thomas Beggis.

NATIONAL TEMPERANCE SOCIETY.

We are rejoiced to find, everywhere, signs of activity in connexion with the temperance cause. The British Association for the Promotion of Temperance has just issued a circular, an extract of which will be found in another part of this number, enjoining upon their different auxiliaries the importance of forming statistical committees. We doubt not their recommendation will be attended to. The Scottish Temperance League, occupying as a sphere of labour the whole of Scotland, are strengthening themselves for renewed efforts, and are preparing a crusade against the drinking usages.

The Committee of the National Temperance Society, have been anxiously engaged in considering the many valuable suggestions presented to the World's Temperance Convention. It would be a matter of serious regret, if the advantages resulting from that truly important meeting were to die with the occasion itself. If sustained, as they hope to be, by the Christian and philanthropic public, they intend not only to continue their labours, but to extend and enlarge the sphere of their operations, in the great cause of temperance. The Committee regard the present time as peculiarly favourable for special effort, as the proceedings of the Convention have created a spirit of inquiry among all classes. They are anxious to impress upon public attention the intimate connexion betwixt intemperance, and the ignorance, depravity and vice, existing to so fearful an extent in our beloved country. They have prepared the following plan of operations. Its several points form constituent parts of a machinery, which they trust, under the Divine blessing, will advance the temperance cause, and the best interests of the community.

At the Convention, it was lamented that statistics of the temperance cause were so imperfect. In order to remedy this defect, it is proposed to appoint a Literary and Statistical Committee, in connexion with the National Temperance Society, to consist of the following gentlemen, viz. :—Rev. J. Burns, D.D.; Rev. John Campbell, D.D.; John Dunlop, Esq.; J. S. Buckingham, Esq.; Rev. W. R. Baker; and Messrs. Charles Gilpin, and Thomas Beggis; other gentlemen are named, but as their consent has not been obtained, we cannot publish them.

It will be the business of this Committee to appoint correspondents in various parts of the country, invite communications from official and other persons, inspect all public documents, watch the proceedings in parliament, examine the Reports of Police Courts, Prisons, Hospitals, Union Houses, &c., &c., and collect general information from all available sources, bearing on the great question of temperance. This information will be carefully collated, and articles prepared for the Newspapers and Periodical Press, and also embodied in addresses to magistrates, employers, members of the government, &c. It is very desirable that such Committee should have a permanent existence, to collect facts and statistics, which would, if opportunity offered, stand the test of parliamentary investigation.

Public meetings, properly convened and supported, are an acknowledged means of good—diffusing information, and exciting public sympathy and attention. A committee has been appointed for this purpose, which will be engaged in getting up a series of effective meetings, not depending upon their multiplicity, but their efficiency, embracing every subject of present interest. It is intended to hold the first series of meetings in connexion with the rising generation, as this interesting part of the community is engaging deep and earnest attention at the present period. As many large places, in various parts of the metropolis, will be obtained as possible; distinguished individuals will be procured to preside, and men of talent and information will be engaged to address the meetings. Addresses will be adopted at these meetings, to Parents, Teachers, Ministers of the Gospel, and Children. An effort will be made to induce as many ministers as possible to preach sermons on the subject to their respective congregations. Schools will be visited, addresses delivered to the young, and the attendance of parents invited. Attention will be directed to the Public Press, and Editors requested to give notices and reports.

It is proposed, when these plans have been fairly begun in London, to extend them to the country, and by correspondence and sending deputations down to the large provincial towns, endeavour to arouse them to similar efforts. They also propose to select other subjects, giving preference to those for which the press and the public mind are most prepared.

The Committee feel that very little has yet been done to introduce the principles of their Society fairly amongst the most influential and intelligent classes. They will endeavour to induce professional men, and others, to give lectures on the physiology and chemistry of temperance, in their various neighbourhoods, and take advantage of the interest felt in sanitary improvement and education, to show the bearing of our question upon those important subjects; and by the employment of lecturers of superior attainments and character, to introduce the principle among all classes, and into districts where it is only partially known.

Missionary labours are highly appreciated by the National Temperance Society. In proportion to the means placed at their disposal, this labour of love will be prosecuted. They earnestly desire to remove what they deem the greatest barrier that ever existed to the extension of the Redeemer's kingdom, and to the dawn of that day when "the kingdoms of this world shall become the kingdoms of our Lord, and of his Christ," and when "the earth shall be full of the knowledge of the Lord as the waters cover the sea."

The Committee regard this agency as an indispensable part of the machinery they desire to put in motion. They aspire to make their proceedings in this respect a model for the country at large, and they are now engaged in preliminary measures towards establishing it on a firm and permanent basis, and to collect funds for its support.

The Committee have referred to the employment of the public press; but, in addition to this, they deem it of essential importance to have an organ of their own, which shall faithfully record the movements of the society and the progress of the cause, and which can be procured by all classes, and obtain a truly national circulation; such they will endeavour to make the National Temperance Chronicle. The labours of the Statistical Committee, their correspondence with all parts of the world, as well as reports of the interesting movements which the Committee are about to originate, including Missionary efforts, will give an interest and value that ought to secure an immense circulation.

Having gone over the principal points, the Committee desire to work out the plan proposed. Having given it their earnest and serious attention, they now offer it to their friends. They are sanguine in their belief that a vigorous effort; an intelligent, calm, and dignified movement, will enlist the assistance of many who, although not members of any total abstinence society, will generously assist in carrying out measures so well calculated to benefit mankind.

This plan of operations is not designed,—nor will it necessarily interfere with those of local societies in town or country, many of whom are working with great zeal and industry; at the same time it will admit of their cordial co-operation, and there can be no doubt their own efforts will be assisted thereby.

The Committee respectfully offer their own time and labour to carry out the plans proposed, and to raise among themselves such contributions as they feel justified in presenting to the Society; but it is to the public more at large they must appeal for that pecuniary support, without which their efforts will be paralyzed. They think that a sum of £5,000, payable by annual instalments, should be subscribed, for the operations of the years, 1847, 1848, and 1849; and they submit the following scheme, as well calculated to afford the required encouragement and assistance, without pressing heavily upon their friends by a large payment in any one sum, unless they prefer giving the whole amount at once.

20 subscribers, of £100 each, to be paid in annual instalments
20	"	50 £2000
40	"	25 1000
50	"	10 500
100	"	5 500

Subscriptions are respectfully requested to be addressed to the Treasurer, G. W. ALEXANDER, 40, Lombard-street; the Secretary, at the Society's office, 11, Tokenhouse-yard; or the members of the Committee.

P.S. The receipts by instalments will, of course, only extend to sums above £10.; and it is concluded not to collect the donations until £1500 is subscribed.

SUBSCRIPTIONS.

£ s. d.		£ s. d.
Small sums, per J.		High Wycombe
Heritage	0 6 8	Society per
A. W. Heritage a 0 5 0		R. Gamble	d 0 10 0
Mrs. Heritage . a 0 5 0		Miss C. Seayers,
R. Varley (Leeds) a 1 1 0		per ditto	a 0 5 0
C. T. M. B.	d 0 10 0	C. D. Griffiths, per
St. Albans Society,		A. W. Heritage a 1 1 0 per R. Gamble a 1 0 0
			£ s. d.
		R. Varley, Leeds (Convention fund)	1 1 0
		Mr. Henry Gaze	a 0 10 0
		Mr. Stafford Allen	a 1 1 0
		Mr. Joseph Brown	a 0 10 6
		Joseph Sterry, Esq., Sen., Hertford	a 1 1 0
		Mr. Joseph Sterry, Borough, Jun.	a 1 1 0
		Mr. Henry Sterry	a 1 1 0
		Mr. John Hare	a 0 10 6
		Mr. Job Heath, Sen., (Chronicle) Bridge,
		House Place	0 2 6
		Messrs. Fennings	1 1 0
		Messrs. Merry and Nutter	1 1 0

MISSIONARIES REPORTS.

MISSIONARY No. 3.

DISTRICT IX.—A drunkard coming out of a gin-shop in Whitechapel was spoken to. In reply, he said, it is the drink which has been my ruin. It has caused me to lie, curse, swear, and commit every vice. It is only three days since I wrote to my father, who is a merchant, residing in Glasgow, an execrable lie, telling him I was in an hospital, and in great distress, when he sent me a post-office order, for £4. A small portion of the money thus obtained, he added, he had laid out as follows:—for trousers, one shilling and sixpence, waistcoat, five-pence, shoes, four shillings. The whole of the rest he had spent in drink. The coat he had that morning pawned for more drink, and he had just come out, intending to sell or pawn his shoes. He had not purchased one morsel of food with any part of the £4. His father, he continued, had set him up in business twice, and there was no one who could have done better than he, had it not been for his intemperance. The tears immediately ran down his cheeks, and he said, Oh! I could tell you such a tale, but I dare not. He was exhorted to beg the assistance of God, to enable him to take a different course, and sign the pledge. He then with much difficulty, from the shaking of his hand, signed.

MISSIONARY No. 4.

A reclaimed drunkard, who signed the pledge four years ago, invited the missionary to come into his room and see what he had gained by teetotalism. There said he, pointing to his wife, is the woman who used to help me to get drunk, and then quarrel and fight with me afterwards. Now we are happy together. He shewed the missionary his books which he had purchased since his reformation, and informed him that he had bought a new cart and donkey with his teetotal money. His wife confirmed his statements, and declared her determination to keep the pledge.

MISSIONARY No. 5.

DISTRICT XIX.—A RE-SIGNATURE.—Your missionary on meeting a young man, who, with his wife, signed the pledge; when on inquiring after his wife, he said, Oh! sir, how I do wish she had taken your advice, and kept the pledge, you may remember when she signed it; she then said she would keep it for three months, which she did faithful and true up to the very day, and during that time my house was like a HEAVEN ON EARTH; everything went on so comfortable, my place was always clean and ready for me; and where I worked, my master raised my wages six shillings per week, in consequence of my sobriety; but sir, the very morning the three months were up, she woke me about four o'clock, saying, her time was up; and when I came home at night she was the worse for drink, and so she continued for some time, till she again signed, and kept it for a little time; and during the three months, we had saved in a box I made, about forty-five shillings; but in a very few days after she broke her pledge, I could only find one shilling and sixpence in it, and now she has been upon her drinking games for upwards of a fortnight, and I have not seen her at all since Tuesday evening, (this was on Thursday) and I am fearful she has thrown herself into the river, for she was once taken from thence, and rescued by a sailor; I wish you would make some inquiries for me. The missionary went to several police-stations; but on the Friday evening he discovered her in the Borough, and got her home, when the missionary called, and after some serious admonition and conversation, she again signed the pledge, and that for life, by Divine assistance; and subsequent visits have not only found her firm, but her husband says, he has no doubt now but it is her intention to keep to it.

MISSIONARY No. 6.

C —, occupying a lodging-house, was, on the missionary's last visit, almost persuaded to be a teetotaler; he declined signing, promising to give the subject a careful consideration, and would go to the meetings. He has attended the meetings, signed the pledge, and been followed by twelve others, who have all signed; all the adults at present in the house being teetotalers.

To six persons who were seated around the room in another lodging-house, the missionary gave tracts, and addressed them on temperance, advising them to sign the pledge. A female who said she had been a teetotaler for two years, till marrying, she was induced to break the pledge, was now quite willing to re-sign. She signed, and was followed by the other five, who also signed.

MISSIONARY No. 8.

W. C. had been a member of a Baptist church, but fell through tampering with the intoxicating cup; the missionary has visited him again and again, prevailed upon him some months since, to abstain; he again became respectable, attended to his business, his wife and family were comfortable. The missionary spent a pleasing season with the family about two months since in their own house around the family altar, elated with hope, that ere long he would be reunited with the church, but was truly grieved to hear, a few days since, he had again fallen even lower than before, went to see him, and never can the missionary forget the awful scene presented, it was most appalling; on asking for him at the house, was told he was in an out-house. The missionary was directed to the place, there he sat with his head buried in his hands, his elbows resting on his knees, the missionary called him by name, he started up, took his hat off his head, dashed it to the ground in a state of fury, and never can the missionary forget the fiendish look he gave whilst belching out the most awful oaths, he demanded what the missionary wanted with him; I know, he said with emphasis, you came and knelt and engaged in prayer for me and my family; but I have not bent my knee to God since that time, I have not once asked his blessing; and raising his voice, and fixing his eyes with a most appalling glare upon the missionary, he exclaimed, but I have asked him to damn my soul and send me to hell; for I had rather be in hell than be here. He then burst out into the most fearful language, the missionary [was obliged to leave, being unable to endure the scene any longer.

MISSIONARY No. 10.

DISTRICT XXXVII.—J. and S. D. signed, they had at one time been teetotalers for five years, but the husband was taken ill twelve months since, and a medical man prescribed that he should take strong drink as a medicine; from that time to the present he had continued to drink, even after he was cured of the malady, till at length he fell into his old practice, and at the time he was visited, he and his wife were both drunk; they were spoken to, and some tracts were left, and the next time they were waited on, they said they were willing to sign the pledge, they did so, and remain firm.

“Anti-Tobacco” is informed, that he is not the only person, at the late Convention, who was annoyed “beyond measure,” with the fetid breath of two or three smoking delegates. We wish such friends of the “long-pledge” would extend it to the pipe.” The above remark is taken from the Bristol Herald, and is justly called for. We have always been loth to agitate the tobacco question, though never able to see the precise consistency of a man who is the slave of a pipe, condemning the practice of those who take a small portion of drink; but the nuisance of smoking has become so great, that we deem it an act of justice to protest against the continuance of this habit by our temperance advocates.

Home Entelligence.

FINSBURY.

A meeting of the children attending Cowper-street school, was held on the 20th of October. There was a large attendance of the elder boys and girls, and some of their parents. Several of the patronesses of the school were present, and seemed much delighted with the animating sight before them;—several hundred boys and girls who were entering upon the dangerous path of life, and open to its temptations. Dr. Campbell took the chair, and after a few excellent remarks, Mr. Beggs and Mr. Gilpin gave short addresses on the evils of drinking intoxicating drinks; and the importance of their becoming convinced of the propriety of abstaining. It was announced to them, that other meetings would be held, and tracts given them. The occasion was interesting and most important; and the females present were exhorted to take up the question, as temperance was a woman's question.

CHATHAM.

Tuesday, October 6th. The first anniversary of the Chatham, Brompton, Rochester, and Strood United Total Abstinence Society was held in the commodious school-room, belonging to Mr. W. Higgins, coal-merchant, to whose kindness the temperance cause in these towns is greatly indebted. At half-past five o'clock near 200 sat down to tea. A public meeting was afterwards held, when between 300 and 400 persons were present; the chair was taken at seven o'clock by our respected friend, Robert Drake, Secretary to the Chatham and Brompton Temperance Society. The meeting was addressed by that friend of humanity, Henry Clapp, jun., of Massachusetts, U. S., and by Thomas Beggs, Secretary of the National Temperance Society. Seventeen signatures to the pledge were taken.

SAMUEL COTTINGHAM, Assistant Secretary.

ROMSEY, HAMPSHIRE.

The town of Romsey has this week been favoured by a visit from Dr. Grindrod. On Tuesday and Wednesday evenings, he delivered two lectures at the Town-hall, which, by the kindness of the Mayor, was granted for the purpose. We have seldom witnessed here, on any occasion a more numerous or respectable audience, many of whom expressed themselves alike surprised and delighted with the Doctor's clear, simple, and impressive mode of imparting information. At the close of the second lecture, F. Buckell, Esq., a surgeon of the town, spontaneously rose to bear testimony to the accuracy, clearness, and talent displayed in these lectures, more particularly in the Doctor's explanation of the process of digestion, which he declared he had never heard surpassed—a testimony which was confirmed by the chairman, J. R. Beddome, Esq., M.D.

RYDE, ISLE OF WIGHT.

The lectures of Dr. Grindrod, in this town, have produced an unprecedented impression. The Town-hall on each evening was crowded to overflowing. We have never witnessed on any occasion such a crowded and respectable audience.

VENTNOR, ISLE OF WIGHT.

Dr. Grindrod has just concluded a visit to this delightful and fashionable resort. These lectures were quite as successful as those elsewhere. The excitement was so great that the hall was crowded to excess, very many being obliged to stand during the whole time. At the conclusion of this course, Dr. Grindrod announced his cessation from lecturing for a limited period. Dr. Grindrod is now endeavouring to recruit his health and strength for another campaign.

HASTINGS.

A tea-party, in connexion with our society, was held on Wednesday, 7th October, at which, a goodly number of friends attended, and partook of "the cup which cheers but not inebriates." The meeting was addressed by Rev. J. T. Wilmore, (Chairman on the occasion,) Messrs. W. Davey of Lewes, J. Lott, (Treasurer,) W. Driver, F. Streeter, and F. Beck (Secretary) of Hastings, and lastly, by Mr. J. Stonehouse of Maidstone. The meeting throughout was of an agreeable character, and at the close, three persons signed the pledge.

NEWMARKET, FLINTS.

October 13th, 1846.

DEAR SIR.—On the 16th of September, I delivered a lecture at Tarn, in the Independent Chapel; and another at Bagillt, on the 3rd of October, in the Calvinistic Methodists' Chapel; and on Sunday October 4th, between the hours of divine service in the different chapels, I spoke at some length; so I had to discourse on temperance, preaching three times, and administering the Lord's Supper the same Sabbath. A plan which I found necessary during the summer months; but now I can command good congregations on week-evenings, as the days are short.

I am truly sorry to say, that many ministers, although total abstiners themselves, seem to be afraid of speaking out against the habit of drinking, hesitating the propriety and the expediency of disturbing their congregations in their old customs. So after all our former boast in Wales, we have but very few indeed of bold, prudent, and faithful advocates! Still much good is done by the press; the English press is stimulating the Welch press, so we take courage and trust in the Lord.

EVAN DAVIES.

ROTHERHAM.

A social tea meeting was held, on Monday, September 28th, in the Court-House, Rotherham, principally supplied by trays, given by the leading members of the temperance society, in aid of the testimonial to James Teare. Between 200 and 300 sat down to a plentiful repast, and complete satisfaction seemed to be the pervading feeling of the assembly. After tea, a public meeting was held, presided over by Mr. Guest, which was addressed by Mr. Edward Chrimes, Mr. Jarvis Crake of Leeds, and others. In the intervals of the addresses, Mr. Sewell, the organist of the parish church, and his brother, performed several solos and duets on the piano-forte and violin, which were warmly applauded, particularly a violin solo by Mayseden, which was brilliantly executed; several temperance songs and glees, by Messrs. Taylor, Myers, and Newsum, were also beautifully sung. Though the large and lofty room was most inconveniently heated, from its overcrowded state, yet the meeting was held up with great spirit, and also great profit, until between eleven and twelve o'clock. Five pounds have been sent to William Janson, Esq., as the contribution of the meeting, in aid of the effort so properly made, but so inadequately supported, on behalf of a man whose unimpeachable character and indefatigable labours have been sufficient to earn the universal acclaim and approval of the temperance body throughout the kingdom. We trust, all lovers of true temperance will exert themselves in aid of one of the oldest, truest, and ablest pioneers and preachers of untrucking truth. Dr. Campbell says, "by the success of this appeal we shall test the sense, the spirit, the generosity, the justice of the teetotal community." Let the test prove a triumphant one, otherwise the disgrace will be with teetotalism, and the triumph with its traducers.

MESSRS. TEARE AND GAWTHORPE IN CORNWALL.

The special and immediate energies of every teetotaler in the West Cornwall Union, is loudly called for, by the present state of our glorious cause. The recent efficient and prompt measures of the executive, have already produced a hopeful revival of the good work. The leading men in this union, are truly renewing their ardour, and girding themselves afresh for the conflict. The powerful advocacy of Messrs. Teare and Gawthorpe has altogether changed the state of our affairs. Many who were unworthily slumbering at their post, whilst the foe was advancing, are aroused from their stupor, and will again be "up and at them," and no quarter. We do trust, that every friend of the cause will feel the deep necessity of immediate effort—the "signs of the times" are important and encouraging, but they are monitory too. Now then, let "one and all" stir themselves and do their duty, and great will be our victory; but, remember, there must be fearless determination and untiring warfare, and the field will be ours; and forget not, if the present hopeful time be not improved, our glory will depart—apathy will again defeat all good, and the curse of our land will blight and destroy. Then, up again, and at it, "ONE AND ALL."—Cornwall Temperance Journal.

FROM MR. GAMBLE'S JOURNAL.

Berkhamstead, October 3rd, 1846.

My open air meetings during the summer have been well attended, and what is a sign of improvement, not an opposing voice has been heard at any of them. In the towns of Watford, Chesham, and Aylesbury, I have delivered several addresses, to deeply attentive audiences. The large festivals at Wyeombe Park, Moor Park, and Hartwell Grounds, I have also taken part in, and which have been seasons of joy to the temperance societies, and numerously attended by persons of all ranks in society, that is, by magistrates, ministers, farmers, respectable tradesmen, and others. In my district, during the hay and corn harvest, many pleasing instances of the disuse of intoxicating drinks have appeared,—masters giving their men money, or suitable refreshments, instead of beer. One little circumstance I must not omit, that of a reclaimed drunkard working in the hay-field with several drinkers for a week; they each received two pints of home-brewed ale a-day; the teetotaler came in for a large share of ridicule, each stoutly declaring that such men spoil good masters. When pay-night came, each man received his money, and in the presence of the whole company, the master gave the teetotaler two shillings, saying at the same time, "I admire your conduct, your forbearance under insults during the week, and the way in which your work has been performed;" then turning to the men, he said, "this man is a pattern for you, he takes care of his earnings, and his family and home are just what I should like to see every poor man's in the town, and they might be but for drink." This is a brief but important teetotaler lecture by a moderate drinker. A farmer in this town, at the commencement of harvest, offered any teetotaler £2. per week to work with his men for a month, which was double wages: upon hearing of this, I soon found him plenty ready to do it; finding which, he declined. I know men who have gone through nine summers on temperance principles, others eight, seven, &c., therefore, evidence sufficient exists of the possibility of work being done in the field. Another pleasing change I have to record is, in three cases where farmers have given their men meat, flour, fruit, &c., to take to their own homes instead of making what is termed a "harvest home" at their own houses. In some instances, where the custom is still kept up, only a certain portion of drink was allowed to each man, and all sent home at 10 o'clock: this is a sign of improvement—many have remarked, that they never saw so little drunkenness as during the past summer. Among the Sabbath-school teachers, our cause makes some progress, inasmuch as I have obtained leave to address the children of several schools on temperance and peace. Two ministers in this locality are abstaining, and have promised their co-operation in the work. Most of the villages in my district are now supplied with tracts, some on the loan system; and my visits kindly received. There is one thing I feel it a duty to name, as a discouragement to my labours, that is, the recklessness of some societies in financial matters. Hiring bands of music, and incurring other expenses which they have no means of discharging, runs them in debt, and the subscribers become dissatisfied, and cease to give.

MADELEY.

On Monday, the 12th instant, Mr. Passmore Edwards lectured here to a large audience on the temperance reformation. The same gentleman, during the preceding week, delivered lectures in Wolverhampton, Broseley and Jackfield.

W. WALL, Secretary.

EXTRACT FROM THE LAST CENSUS OF GREAT BRITAIN,

Shewing the preponderance of places and persons in connexion with the traffic in intoxicating drinks, the curse of society, over and above those in connexion with the bread-trade, the staff of life, without which we could not subsist:—

Beer-shops, England, 5587; Wales, 42; Scotland, 13; total in Great Britain, 5642. Hotels, England, 14,393; Wales, 906; Scotland, 1612; total Great Britain, 16,911. Public victuallers, England, 35,161; Wales, 2420; Scotland, 2556; total Great Britain, 40,137. Spirit-merchants, England, 868; Wales, 32; Scotland, 4365; total, Great Britain, 5265. Distillers, England, 307; Wales, none; Scotland 400; total, Great Britain, 707. Brewers, England, 9148; Wales, 136; Scotland, 1085; total, Great Britain, 10,369. Maltsters, England, 7516; Wales, 438; Scotland, 498; total, Great Britain, 8452. Wine-merchants, England, 2514; Wales, 54; Scotland, 244; total, Great Britain, 2812. Wine-coopers, England 572; Wales, none, Scotland, 3; total, Great Britain, 575, making the total amount of beer-shops, hotels, public victuallers, spirit-merchants, distillers, brewers, maltsters, wine-merchants and wine-coopers, in England, 76,066; in Wales, 4028; and in Scotland, 10,776; total in Great Britain, 90,870. Bakers, England, 36,022; Wales, 746; Scotland, 7334; corn-agents, England, 49; Wales, none; Scotland, 11; corn-merchants, England, 3088; Wales, 51; Scotland, 472. Millers, England, 20,970; Wales, 1425; Scotland, 343. Total number of bakers, corn-agents, corn-merchants and millers, in England, 60,129, or 15,937 less than those in connexion with the traffic in intoxicating drinks. Total number of bakers, corn-agents, corn-merchants and millers in Wales, 2222, or 1806 less than in the traffic of intoxicating drinks. Total number of bakers, corn-agents, corn-merchants and millers in Scotland, 8160, or 2616 less than in the traffic in intoxicating drinks. Total number of bakers, corn-agents, corn-merchants and millers in Great Britain, 71,100, or 20,248, less than in the traffic of intoxicating drinks.

MORALS OF EDINBURGH.

A correspondent of the Wesleyan, of October 14th, says,—“As I spent most of my time in Edinburgh, I regret to bear witness to the unblushing profligacy which is exhibited in the best streets of that interesting city. After nine o'clock at night, I was amazed to meet so many reeling drunkards, and to see the public and respectable thoroughfares crowded with unhappy women, the most degraded and filthy I ever beheld; whiskey is the fell blight, the withering curse of Edinburgh. It is high time that the ministers of all denominations were convinced of it, and threw the weight of their influence into the scale of entire abstinence from every intoxicating fluid.

ALCOHOLIC FLUIDS DISORGANISE THE STOMACH.

When medicines act upon the matters of which the body is composed, and interfere with their natural functions, they become dangerous if their administration be persisted in; this is the case with lead and arsenic, which decompose the internal surface of the stomach, when they are used above a certain length of time. Alcohol likewise, by its stimulant property, and by its chemical action in withdrawing water from the animal matter, has a tendency to produce diseases of the stomach, such as inflammation, schirrus, or cancer. It has been affirmed, and the statement has obtained some degree of notoriety, that alcoholic fluids, when taken in moderation, cannot do harm; now, it may with equal certainty be affirmed, that there are no data extant from which we can adduce any such conclusion; but on the contrary, by reasoning from analogy the very opposite inference should be adopted. Would any one, whose opinion is of value on such a question, admit that any other equally powerful medicinae may be taken daily during life with impunity? Would any medical man insure the health of a fellow-creature, were he to take a little arsenic every day, for thirty or forty years; or would he consider the life of such an individual equally valuable with that of one who abstained from such articles? —Engineers' Magazine.

IMPORTANT MINUTE.

The following resolution was passed at the recent Yearly Meeting of the Primitive Methodist Itinerant Preachers' Friendly Society; and issued by the Yearly Meeting held at Manchester:—

“Every candidate for admission on trial into this society, shall state in his application, whether or not he be a drinker of intoxicating drinks, such as ale, porter, wines, and spirituous liquors; and every candidate for full membership who shall be a drinker of such beverages shall furnish to his district assembly the reason why he drinks them, preparatory to his admission as a full member; and those full members of the Society who drink these drinks, are affectionately desired to abstain therefrom, as we are convinced of the necessity and advantages of total abstinence.”

Forwarded by JOHN PHILLIPS, Primitive Methodist Minister, Upwell Circuit.

WORTHY OF IMITATION.

“As a significant sign of the times,” says the Temperance Gazette, “and a proof that the value of our services is beginning to be appreciated, we have pleasure in stating that the directors of the Grand Junction Railway have decided, that lecturers coming to Crewe (Cheshire) to lecture on temperance, shall be conveyed to and from Crewe without any charge. This enlightened policy is honourable to them, and reflects credit on the character and conduct of our agents.”

[We rejoice at the above instance of liberality, the first of the kind in this country, but should still more rejoice to hear that this railway company had resolved, on engaging those whom they employ, to give the preference to teetotalers.]

THE CAUSE IN DEVONSHIRE.

A LETTER TO THE SECRETARY OF THE TEMPERANCE PROVIDENT INSTITUTION.

Southmolton, October 6th, 1846.

SIR,—It gives me much pleasure to read such cheering accounts of your institution. I am sorry that it is out of my power to write any good respecting this place, which I account for in two ways. The first, is through the ignorance and prejudice which pervade all classes of society in this neighbourhood. Even the ministers of religion are afraid to declare all the counsels of God, lest they should offend their congregations. Although, it is by no means unfrequent, to hear of men in the prime of life (as far as years is to be calculated) filling the drunkard's grave; nor is it unfrequent to hear the ministers and professors of religion saying, “Poor fellow, he lived a miserable drunken life, and died an awful death; and there is so and so going on just like him.” Some time since, I was present where a minister uttered some pathetic expressions similar to the above; I mildly put this question—What are you doing to prevent this misery you so deeply deplore? His answer was, he does not belong to my congregation. Whose congregation does he belong to? I never heard that he attended any place of worship. Then, sir, if he will not visit you, it is your place to visit him. But, as soon as he leaves his employment, he is at the public-house, or some such place. Then, is it not our duty to teach him to shun such places, by showing him the advantages of temperance, and the blessings resulting from it, both in this life and that which is to come? Such men as these, are just fit to become members of your society; and, indeed, it is their duty to be total abstiners. Why do you not do all in your power to teach them their duty? I am no teetotaler myself. Why not? I think I shall very soon send to desire you to bring your pledge-book with you, to take the names of two or three families, as Mr. T— and myself have promised to sign the pledge, provided we can get Mr. D— to do so. Now, sir, I said, Mr. D— is known to be a free-drinker, although not what is commonly termed a drunkard; not only so, but he is a maltster, and would it not be more suiting for you to say, come and follow me, as every good shepherd ought to say to the flock under his care; besides, it is easier to lead than it is to drive. The next excuse was, that he should offend many by so doing, as the publicans and maltsters would say, I will not go to hear that man, for he is a teetotaler. And several other such excuses, the whole of which, I soon convinced him, were worse than useless; therefore, when everything else failed, my reverend friend was a Timothy, he took a little for his stomach's sake, he was recommended to take a little wine, by a teetotal doctor. If the shepherd goes astray, well may his flock. I could inform you of many more instances; more inconsistent with the character of the professors of christianity, but this is deviating from what I intended. But I will proceed to state the reasons why the cause of temperance does not prosper here. This being an agricultural district, four-fifths of the population are interested in the drinking customs of the people, either directly or indirectly. I have known farmers and publicans form a combination, and use all the influence that it was possible for them to enlist in their favour, for the purpose of crushing a poor tradesman, and for no other reason than his being a teetotaler; and have succeeded so far as to ruin his trade. Such is the opposition that teetotalism meets with in this place. And the other reason is, those who would help us cannot, as they have not the means, owing to their limited earnings. Mechanics' wages vary from nine to twelve shillings per week, and labourers' from six to eight shillings per week.

The only ray of hope I see left, is Earl Fortescue, who resides about three miles from this place. He is favourable to our cause; so much so, as to put down all public-houses in the parish where he resides, but takes no active part in any way else.

BATH JUVENILE TEMPERANCE SOCIETY.—The Annual Meeting of this Society was held on Monday evening, September 28th. Mr. Samuel Saunders was unanimously called upon to preside. Mr. J. Russom of Bristol addressed the meeting. He rejoiced at having the opportunity of again meeting his friends, whom he had so often addressed in that room. It gave him great pleasure to behold the faithfulness with which so many youths of the city of Bath adhered to the temperance cause, and whatever men might say or think to the contrary, the Juvenile Society deserved well at the hands of the inhabitants for the services it had rendered the city. Mr. R. entered into statistical details to prove the awful extent of intemperance, which showed the absolute necessity of carrying on the great work of teetotalism. If it were possible, he said, to blot out drunkenness from England, as effectually as Poland had been effaced from the map of Europe as a state, it would give cause for the celebration of a grand jubilee throughout the land. He concluded with some interesting anecdotes, encouraging the members to perseverance in their undertaking. Mr. Williams of Preston, the county agent, said he had been fifteen years a teetotaler, and was one of the first who signed the pledge in Preston. The meeting was enlivened during the evening by the singing of several appropriate pieces by several of the juvenile members, accompanied by a pianoforte, at which Mr. J. T. Biss (treasurer of the Society) ably presided.

Foreign Intelligence.

NEW YORK COUNTY CONVENTION.

This Convention seems to have been of unusual interest. A very long report of it is contained in the last New York organ. We have only room for the most important resolutions.

"That the fundamental principles of every human government are the same as of the divine. That each should consult the good of all, and all the good of each; that the greatest good should be first secured, and the greatest evil first guarded against; and that human laws can give no rights—their whole power being exhausted in protecting the rights which are the gift of a Higher Power, and in securing to every individual the full enjoyment of them.

"That no government can give, and that no man can have, a right to do a wrong.

"That the offering, by one man to another, of meat and drink that he knows to be noxious,—whether gratuitously, as an act of hospitality or custom, or for a consideration, in the way of business—is a wrong.

"That in the words of a distinguished moral philosopher, 'it is impossible that an act which is hostile to the general good should ever lose its essential element of immorality,' and if the amount of evil that is known to result from an act is the measure of its immorality, it follows that the traffic in intoxicating drinks is one of the grossest, if not the grossest, of all the immoralities known in this sinful and suffering world.

"That if it be true, that 'he who steals my purse steals trash,' in comparison with 'him who filches from me my good name,' it follows, that he who by offering me inducements, and furnishing me with facilities, leads me into temptation to sin, and then robs me of my virtue—a greater good than even a 'good name'—does me a greater wrong than either the slanderer or the pickpocket.

"That if the master-piece of God's workmanship be a greater good in His sight than the master-piece of man's, it follows that the voluntary destruction of the former is a greater evil than the voluntary destruction of the latter; which is saying that the destruction of a man is a greater sin than the destruction of the finest specimen of architecture—which, again, is saying, that he who by applying a dram, burns down a man, is more of an evil-doer than he who, by applying a match, burns down a house—the dealer in intoxicating drinks is a greater malefactor than the incendiary: the dealing a greater vice than arson.

"That if the Old Serpent, the first tempter, was a greater sinner than the first mother of our race; if ever since her day, whenever the judgment of God has been made known to man, the tempter, compared with the tempted, has always been held the more guilty party; if he who provides to another's lust is, by common consent, baser than he who gratifies his own; if the keeper of a house of prostitution, is more thoroughly steeped in vice than the inmates of that house, whether customers or victims, it follows, by the iron necessities of logic, that, in the light of God's word and judgments, the panderer to drinkers is a greater violator of His laws than the drunkard himself—the keeper of a house for the sale of intoxicating drinks, more deeply sunk in sin than even his miserable victims.

"That from all the foregoing it follows, that the state has the same right, and is under the same inevitable obligation, to use its power for the suppression of the traffic in intoxicating drinks, by penal laws of the most stringent character, as for the suppression of theft, highway robbery, arson, or any, even the grossest forms of licentiousness.

"That the whole system of licensing the traffic in intoxicating drinks is radically and incurably vicious; an outrage alike upon the laws of God and the rights of man; and ought, therefore, to be at once expunged from the legislation of the state of New York.

To the Editor of the National Temperance Chronicle.

New Cross, October 8th, 1846.

DEAR SIR,—The attention of philanthropists has of late, through the press, been directed to the dreadful state of Ireland, owing to a destructive disease which has appeared amongst the potatoes. What may be considered almost the staple article of food in that country, has been cut off from the mouths of its inhabitants; and they are left almost destitute, on the verge of famine, with the cold of winter approaching, and no prospect of relief at hand. It has been suggested, that if each teetotaler would subscribe one penny-a-week, during the winter, much might be done in this way for the relief of our suffering brethren. The subscriptions might be received by the secretaries of the various societies, and forwarded to some responsible party, or parties in London, and from them sent to Ireland to be distributed among the necessitous. If £1000. could in this manner be raised in England, weekly, it would afford relief to 4000 or 5000 starving families. There are but few teetotalers, who are not benefited to the extent of one shilling a-week, by the adoption of total abstinence principles; surely, then, it is not asking too much of them to devote one-twelfth of this to so benevolent and Christ-like a purpose. Such an action as this would prove that selfishness was no essential part of the teetotaler's character. It would tend to unite us with our brethren, the Irish, by a bond of love and brotherhood. Above all, it would be well-pleasing to God our Father; we are commanded "To do good and to communicate (share our blessings with our brethren) forget not, for with such sacrifice God is well pleased." I have made these few remarks, hoping that you will use your influence in the cause of God and humanity, by noticing the subject in your temperance periodical, and thus bringing it before the minds of our teetotal friends, who will, I trust, take this matter up, and do what they can for starving Ireland.

Yours respectfully,
WILLIAM DENTON.

BARLEY VERSUS MALT.

In a late number of the Gazette, we pointed out the folly of certain noblemen and other landed proprietors, who applied to the Premier to allow them to use malt for feeding cattle, without paying duty. We ventured to tell them, that what they sought as a boon, would be a positive injury to them—that the barley contained more nourishment than malt, as certainly as malt contained more nourishment than ale.

The Parliamentary papers lately published, bear us out in our conclusion. A series of experiments were made by Drs. Thomas and R. D. Thompson, of the University of Glasgow. The first set of experiments was made to see what effect feeding with barley and malt would have on the milk and butter yielded by cows, and in the language of the report—

"These experiments leave no doubt that barley is more nourishing than malt; at least as far as the production of milk and butter is concerned. Barley, when malted, loses almost one-fifth of its weight. The proportion of azote (which is necessary for the support of the animal and for the production of milk) is considerably less in malt than in barley.

"In conclusion, it is observed, that the experiments and analyses made, render it obvious that malt is a much more expensive substance, irrespective of duty, than barley for feeding, inasmuch as it is, in reality, barley deprived of a certain portion of its nutritive matter and salt. The only advantage which it seems to hold out in cattle-feeding, is the relish which it gives to a mash; but as this depends entirely upon the sugar which it contains, and which has been produced from the starch of the barley, it is obvious, that the same flavour may be imparted by the addition of an equivalent amount of molasses or sugar, should it be considered expedient. But we have always found steeped barley to be highly relished by cattle. Malt, however, from the diastase it contains, has the power of speedily converting the starch of barley into sugar; a handful of malt would be sufficient to saccharise several pounds of barley in the steep. The quantity required in this case would be so small as to obviate any necessity for change in the duty."

So much for milk and butter; but another important question remains as to the respective value of these articles for fattening cattle.

"The experiments were tried on two lean bullocks, pretty similar in their constitution; each was about three years of age; and they were the progeny of the same sire, though by different mothers. These experiments had a result similar to those above stated; and leave no doubt, that barley is superior to malt in the fattening of cattle."

Thus one step is gained; we have parliamentary authority supporting Livesey's temperance lecture on the "Great Delusion," with regard to malt, and the beverages produced from it.

The chemical science and experiments of such eminent men as Liebig, the Thompsons and Playfairs, are strengthening and fortifying the foundations of our noble structure, teetotalism. Believing our fortress to be already impregnable, its acknowledged strength will ere long save it even from assault, and the votaries of Bacchus will be constrained to acknowledge that they make use of intoxicating drinks merely for sensual gratification, and not for the benefit of their health.

One important lesson will be drawn by ladies from these experiments,—that in no case is malt necessary for them, and that in certain cases wherein "brown stout" has been prodigally and injuriously prescribed, they will find barley pudding a much safer and more advantageous way of using the grain, if they desire to use it at all.—The Temperance Gazette.

MORAL DISCIPLINE.

The law of habit, when enlisted on the side of righteousness, not only strengthens and makes sure our resistance to vice, but facilitates the most arduous performances of virtue. The man whose thoughts with the purposes and designs to which they lead, are at the bidding of conscience, will, by frequent repetition, at length describe the same track almost spontaneously,—even as in physical education, things laboriously learned at the first, come to be done at last without the feeling of an effort. And so, in moral education, every new achievement of principle smooths the way to future achievements of the same kind; and the precious fruit or purchase of each moral virtue is to set us on higher and firmer vantage-ground for the conquests of principle in all time coming. He who resolutely bids away the suggestions of avarice, when they come into conflict with the incumbent generosity; or the suggestions of voluptuousness, when they come into conflict with the incumbent self-denial; or the suggestions of anger, when they come into conflict with the incumbent act of magnanimity and forbearance—will at length obtain, not a respite only, but a final deliverance from their intrusion.

Conscience, the longer it has made way over the obstacles of selfishness and passion, the less will it give way to these adverse forces, themselves weakened by the repeated defeats which they have sustained in the warfare of moral discipline: or, in other words, the offender that conscience makes good the supremacy which she claims, the greater would be the work of violence, and less the strength for its accomplishment, to cast her down from the station of practical guidance and command, which of right belongs to her. It is just, because, in virtue of the law of suggestion, those trains of thought and feeling which connect her first biddings with their final execution, are the less exposed at every new instance to be disturbed, and the more likely to be repeated over again, that every good principle is more strengthened by its indulgence than before. The acts of virtue ripen into habits; and the goodly and permanent result is, the formation or establishment of a virtuous character.—Chalmers.

Notices.

The Origin and Success of the Advocacy of the Principle of Total Abstinence from all Intoxicating Liquors.—By JAMES TEARE. Charles Gilpin, London, pp. 31.

In the last number of the Christian Witness, there is an article on Mr. James Teare, which does Dr. Campbell great credit. It is a tribute of respect to the zeal and honest and disinterested labours of a man with whom the doctor has differed, and continues to differ, in opinion. We are rejoiced at this generous feeling; and as we love James Teare for many high moral qualities, we are glad to see that his worth is appreciated by those who object to his grounds of advocacy. We recommend every abstainer to procure this book; it supplies a number of valuable facts, relative to the early history of the temperance movement. We thank the author most heartily for this valuable contribution to our temperance literature. We give the following extract from Dr. Campbell's remarks,—after his quoting a passage, by which it appears that Mr. Teare has attended 4000 meetings, and travelled 100,000 miles:—

"And all for what? Love to Christ and to mankind! Up to this hour, he has no one year received from the public more than two-thirds the wages of a first-class mechanic. He has devoted the toils of fourteen years to the cause, ten of which he has been constantly travelling. James Teare stands foremost and alone amongst temperance advocates,—a most deserving body of men, who are the hardest worked, and the most ill requited portion of the whole body of philanthropists. Before he commenced his career, he saved a little by his business; and not only did he give it up, but went forth so far upon his own charges, as never to make collections, nor to ask for anything towards his expenses: if freely offered, he did not refuse to accept it, but, to a very great extent, he not only had to labour without reward, but with the sacrifice of his own earnings."

This is known to be true, and we hope that the substantial gratitude of those who owe much to his labours, will enable him to continue them, and smooth his path of duty and usefulness.

The Teetotalers' Companion, or his silent Plea for Temperance Reform.—By PETER BURNE.

The three first numbers of this work (dedicated to Father Mathew) are before us. The author commences with very humble pretensions, for in his preface he says, "These pages will be found to consist, in a great measure, of cuttings from the passing facts of the last two, three, or four years that have been recorded by the chroniclers and journalists of the temperance movement." Such a compilation was wanted. The present work although not all we could wish, is creditable to the industry and skill of the author. The work is beautifully got up, typographically, and is very cheap; and to those who want a handsome compendium of facts in a neat volume, it will be welcome.

The Pastor's Farewell: an Address, delivered in the parish church of Yeovil.—By the Rev. W. W. ROBINSON, M.A., 12mo. London: Hatchard, pp. 48.

This address breathes the amiable and benevolent spirit of its excellent author. We have been much pleased with its perusal; and can deeply sympathize with a people who have to listen to the farewell address of one so useful and so beloved.

DR. LEES' TEMPERANCE TRACTS, No. 3. The Barley, Malt, and Beer question; or Experiments on Food. 16mo. p. 14.

Dr. Lees has here presented us with a very excellent tract on a most important subject. It is clearly and forcibly written, and admirably adapted for the class for whom it is intended. Now, that the question of food has become of pressing interest, it will be useful. We regret we cannot give some portions of it this month, but will return to it again. We urge our temperance friends to use every exertion to circulate it.

Common Sense; a Word to those who do not think by Proxy. By Rev. W. WIGHT, B.A.

This excellent tract has reached its thirtieth thousand. It is highly deserving of this public approbation.

Poetry.

THE DRUNKARD'S GRAVE.

Who has filled the Drunkard's Grave?

Not alone the vile and base,
But the noble, wise and brave
Crowd that gloomy dwelling place.

He, who in the Senate hall,
Held a people in his thrall:
Fascinating old and young
By the music of his tongue;—
Gone! for ever gone his might!

Power unrivalled could not save:
Eloquence! how has thy light
Set within the Drunkard's Grave!

Who has filled the drunkard's Grave?

He, the gifted child of song,—
He whose spirit's music gave
To the hush'd, enraptured throng,
Feelings that no other art
E'er can waken in the heart:

Throwing rich and glowing dyes
O'er life's dark realities—
He, the lov'd, the worshipp'd one,
Died, the fell destroyer's slave—

He, a nation's honour'd son,
Sleeps within the Drunkard's Grave.

Who have filled the Drunkard's Grave?

Heroes of a hundred fights,—
Monarchs of the land and wave,
Mitred priests and belted knights;

Men of high and lowly lot,
From the palace and the cot—
Scholars, wandering from their books;
Parents turning from the brooks
To the fountains of the still,

In their flowing fire to lave,—
All have madly rush'd to fill
The lost and fallen DRUNKARD'S GRAVE.

GAMBLING.—Fifty years ago, drunkenness was no disgrace, and ten years ago, gaming was simulated and tolerated as a fashionable vice. But of late, excitement, which is indispensable to mankind in every grade, is sought in more worthy and intellectual objects, and men who are by habit and repute gamblers, find it as difficult to keep a good position in society as if they annoyed it by drunken vagaries. In fact, gaming has ceased to be the fashion; the "best people" do not do it, and of course their imitators won't.—Daily News.

THE HUMAN BODY.

The architect will, upon examination, find that his splendid arches, his strongly built pillars, are but copies, and rude ones, too, of certain parts in our osseous system. The musician has only to study the arrangement of the human apparatus of voice, and he cannot fail to perceive an original model of every wind or stringed instrument with which he is acquainted.—The mariner may proudly regard his last invented pulleys, his most improved rigging tackle; but what are these but imitations of the tendons of the human body? The optician may invent his instruments ever so scientifically, and grind his lenses ever so nicely, but he will fail in attaining the same perfection, either in neatness or transparency, as is presented by the parts which enter into the composition of the eye. Lastly, the mechanic owes his knowledge of valves and pumps, to the contrivances contained in our circulation; and the watch-maker constructs his barrel-chain, having for his model the backbone of a serpent. I trust to have the pleasure of demonstrating these truths to you, and of convincing you that many of the so called original designs of man, are but barbarous copies of designs which emanate from the master hand of the Almighty.—Dr. Ashenhein.

FUNERAL CLUBS AT PUBLIC-HOUSES.

"It is difficult," says E. Chadwick, Esq., B. L., "to ascertain the amount spent in drink by members of these societies, but it appears from the amount cited, of the expenditure in the ninety societies at Walsall, that the required allowance was 2d. per month, in others 3d., and the aggregate sum spent in those clubs per member (if it were only limited to the rule), must have amounted to £981. 13s. 4d. But besides these prescribed portions of drink, there are prescribed annual feasts, at from 2s. 3d. to 3s. 6d. per member, amounting to an annual sum of £257. 10s., making a total of £1,239. 3s. 4d. per annum, expended in such expenses."

ANCIENT AND MODERN WINE DRINKING.

To drink wine unmixed with water, was reckoned disreputable by the ancients. The mixture was, generally, one-half wine, and one-half water, but sometimes two-thirds water, and one-third wine. This was done when the wine was simply fermented, and possessed comparatively little alcoholic power. The moderns increase the strength of their wines, by mixing large quantities of brandy.

Who are the wise men and disciples of moral philosophy?

WINE CASKS.

Germany can boast of constructing four of the largest wine casks ever made. The Tubingen cask was 24 feet in length, and 16 in depth; that of Heidelberg, 31 feet in length, and 21 in depth; that of Gruningen, 30 feet long, and 18 deep; and, says a German writer, "to complete the disgrace of Germany, in the year 1725, a fourth was made at Konigstein, larger than any of the former."

WHISKEY FOR THE ARMY.—The government has advertised for sixty-five thousand gallons of whiskey, for the use of the army that is going to invade Mexico.—American Journal.

SIGN OF A TAVERN.—A little boy, seeing a drunken man prostrate before the door of a groggery, opened the door, and putting in his head, said to the proprietor, "See here, master, your sign has fallen down."

FRIENDLY BENEFIT SOCIETIES.—We extract the following from a speech delivered by the Rev. R. L. Carpenter, at the Annual Meeting and Tea-Party of the Bridgewater Friendly Society, held at the public rooms, June 1st:—"A grievous evil attending most clubs was, that they were held at public houses. He found that it was usual for three-pence out of every monthly payment of one shilling and three-pence to be paid for drink. Then there was the annual dinner, which, drink included, seldom cost less than three shillings: so that six shillings out of every eighteen which the members paid annually, was wasted in that which did not add to the funds of the society. There was another consideration: he did not pretend that all persons who drink were sickly, or that all who abstained were healthy; but he had the authority of eminent medical men for saying that even moderate drinking was injurious to persons in health, and that the use of intoxicating drink was the cause of many diseases, and aggravated most others. Did it not, then, seem strange, that clubs to relieve the sick, and whose interest it was to keep their members as well as possible, should pay just half as much—six shillings—in that which had a tendency to make the healthy ill, as they paid to support those who were ill; and it were a well known fact, that innkeepers were anxious to establish clubs, to meet at their houses, for the custom they brought them."

BRANDY AS A CURE FOR SPASMS.—Dr. Grindrod, in a lecture lately delivered to females, warned his hearers in the strongest terms against the use of brandy in attacks of spasms. At the best, brandy was a mere palliative. The relief which it afforded was only temporary, and often extremely deceptive. In addition to this, the administration of brandy left a subsequent state of distressing debility as well as a greater tendency to renewed attacks. Where some remedy was actually needed, Dr. Grindrod recommended the following medicine as a more efficient substitute:—Aromatic Spirits of Ammonia and Sulphuric Æther, of each half a fluid ounce, Acetate of Morphia, half a grain, Camphor Mixture, a sufficient quantity to fill a three ounce bottle. Of this mixture, take one or two teaspoonsful in water, from time to time, until the symptoms be relieved. Dr. Grindrod urged ladies subject to spasms, first of all to ascertain the cause. "Remove the cause and the effect will cease." Want of pure air and regular exercise, and, above all, the use of indigestible articles of food—these were the most prolific sources of spasmodic affections. The use of brandy in spasms had made many drunkards, in proof of which, Dr. G. related some startling facts. Let ladies beware, therefore, of so deceptive and insidious a remedy.—Christian Penny Record.

BEER FOR THE POOR.—In the Report of the Marylebone Workhouse, recently published, it is stated that the cost of table-beer alone for the last six months, was £367 8s., or £1. 2s. per puncheon, making a weekly consumption of about 900 gallons. For porter, during the same period, £146. 8s. was expended; and for ale £41: making a total expenditure of £554. 14s. for intoxicating liquors, paid for, of course, by the tax-payers of Marylebone. As there are in that parish a large number of teetotalers, the above furnishes an illustration of the manner in which the sober portion of the population are taxed, to support the drinking-propensities of the other. The time has come when teetotalers should address the heads of houses upon this important point.

The following striking Advertisement appeared in the BRIDGEWATER TIMES of Thursday last.

"A HOUSE BETTER THAN BEER"—Any person who is spending 4½d. a day in beer, spirits, &c., may own, and have immediate possession of a house, value £60, if he would join a Building Society, and pay into its funds the same amount (4½d. a day) which he now spends at a public-house; or if, instead of having a house, the money is allowed to accumulate, it will amount to, and he will receive, in 13 or 14 years, £120!!!

For information, and to corroborate this statement, apply to the Secretaries of the Building Societies in Bridgewater.

The same paper also contained the important certificate, lately published, and signed by many of the great teachers of medical science, to show that a sound body did not depend on the use of intoxicating liquors, but that health was promoted by abstinence from such beverages.

We beg to acknowledge the receipt of £18., being subscriptions to the Teare Testimonial, from the following parties, per Samuel Elliott, Esq., Liskeard:—T. and S. Elliott, £5.; M. E. and M. Elliott, £5.; John Wadge, £2.; E. and A. Crouch, £1. 10s.; L. Lyne, £1.; Elizabeth Lyne, £1.; H. Isaac, £1.; A friend, £1.; R. Hingston, 10s.; and also £1. from Thomas Beilby, Birmingham, per Dr. Campbell.

We have forwarded the amount to the treasurer, William Janson, Esq.

MR. WILLIAM BISCOMBE.

It is our melancholy duty to record the death of this zealous advocate of the temperance cause. He was attacked with paralysis about the time of the Convention; and after repeated attacks, expired on Sunday morning, October 11th. He was interred on Friday the 16th, followed by a number of teetotalers who knew and respected the man. The Rev. W. R. Baker performed the usual religious services.

We believe that he has left a widow, and in her behalf we beg to ask the assistance of our kind friends. A subscription has already been entered into, and we shall be happy to forward to the proper quarter any sum that may be entrusted to our care.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

T. C. Isaac, Liskeard.—His interesting intelligence too late.

S. P., Brighton.—We deplore with him the expressions referred to; but as we did not give them currency in our pages, we cannot be required to appeal against them. No doubt the complaint, if inserted, would lead to a reply from other quarters; and we should not feel justified in provoking mere personal discussions. Much allowance must be made for speakers in the warmth of debate.

James Haughton, Dublin.—Too late.

Several communications are on hand, which will meet with attention next month.

PRIZE ESSAYS.

The spirited proprietor of the Teetotal Times has announced his intention of circulating the Prize Essays in such a manner as to secure an immense circulation. The effort making, dictated by a spirit of zeal and enterprise, deserves, and we doubt not will receive encouragement. It is a means of raising the standard of our literature which has our entire approval.

Advertisements.

MISSIONARY LABOURS.

Several efficient Temperance Missionaries are anxious to hear of a sphere of usefulness in town or in the country. Further particulars may be obtained on application to

THOMAS BEGGS,
Secretary National Temperance Society,
11, Tokenhouse Yard.

Just Published, a cheap Edition for Scotland.

GREAT REDUCTION IN PRICE, FROM
2s. 6d. to 3d.

* * 17,000 Copies were sold in the United States in about Twelve Months.

THE HAND OF PROVIDENCE EXEMPLIFIED IN THE HISTORY OF J. B. COUGH;

Being the Autobiography of a most successful Champion of the Temperance Reformation in the United States, who has been designated the FATHER MATHEW OF AMERICA. With an Introduction, written for this Edition.

This interesting work may be read with profit and warning, especially by the Artizans of this country. Every Abstinence should purchase it.

Glasgow:—Published at the Scottish Temperance Journal Office, 42, Argyll Street; and sold by G. GALLIE, 99, Buchanan Street; C. ZEIGLER, Edinburgh; G. MAITLAND, Aberdeen; and all Booksellers.

Orders should specify the "Glasgow Cheap Edition."

TO TEMPERANCE AND TOTAL ABSTINENCE SOCIETIES.

Houlston & Stoneman beg to announce for sale:

1. THE SERIES OF TRACTS PUBLISHED WITH THE SANCTION OF THE NATIONAL TEMPERANCE SOCIETY, upwards of 150 sorts. 2 pages, at 8d. per 100; 4 pages, at 1s. 4d. per 100; 8 pages, at 2s. 8d. per 100.

2. The above Tracts, done up in packets, Nos. 1 to 4, at 6d. each.

3. THE LOAN TRACTS, to form a series of sixty numbers, done up in covers for Loan Circulation. Nos. 1 to 30 are now ready, containing sixteen pages each, at 8s. per 100.

4. A NEW TEMPERANCE MANUAL, containing Rules and Suggestions for the formation of Auxiliary and Branch Associations. Price 3d.

5. THE COLLECTING, PLEDGE & MINUTE BOOK; for the use of Branch Temperance Societies. Price 3d.

6. A new 4 page Tract, entitled "Scarcity," at 1s. 4d. per 100.

7. THE NATIONAL TEMPERANCE SOCIETY'S PLEDGE TICKETS, price 3d. per sheet; each Sheet contains 32 Tickets.

8. THE NATIONAL TEMPERANCE SOCIETY'S RULES for BRANCH SOCIETIES, 4 pp. 8vo, price 1d.

The above publications are offered to Associations with the sanction of the National Temperance Society. Parties who order quantities of either of them will receive the full trade allowance from the Publishers.

65, Paternoster Row, London.

IPSWICH TEMPERANCE TRACTS.

Of these Tracts have been sent from the Depository, Seven Millions of pages of which Three Millions and a-half, have been issued within the last twelvemonths.

1. The Doctor Scrutinized, or for what purpose do Physicians prescribe Alcoholic Beverages, by R. D. Alexander, F.L.S., 122 thousand...	8
2. Striking Facts, 79 thousand.....	2
3. Maker and Vender, 44 thousand.....	2
4. Our Creed, 47 thousand.....	2
5. Adulterated Beer, 34 thousand.....	4
6. Adulterated Wine, 40 thousand.....	4
7. The Maltster, 37 thousand.....	4
8. Go Feel what I have felt, 53 thousand.....	2
9. Facts are Stubborn Things, 48 thousand.....	2
10. The Spirit Dealer, 35 thousand.....	2
11. Christian Teetotalism, 70 thousand.....	2
12. The Trade, 33 thousand.....	4
13. Alcohol, 33 thousand.....	4
14. The Town of Ipswich, 33 thousand.....	4
15. Song of the Water Drinker, 37 thousand.....	2
16. Stimulation not Strength, 30 thousand.....	8
17. Farmer Woodman's Speech, 41 thousand.....	4
18. The Beer Barrel Examined, 23 thousand.....	8
19. Teetotal Recipes, 38 thousand.....	4
20. Speech of J. J. Gurney, 30 thousand.....	4
21. Pity the Poor Drunkard, 49 thousand.....	2
22. The Fool's Pence, 25 thousand.....	8
23. Why am I a Teetotaler? and the Inch Auger, 26 thousand.....	2
24. Dost thou smoke, Bill? 34 thousand.....	4
25. William the Laudanum Drinker and John the Tradesman, 30 thousand.....	4
26. The Ox Discourse.....	4
27. Letter to the Clergy, by a Brother Clergyman, 21 thousand.....	20
28. Common Sense for those who do not think by proxy, by a member of the University of Cambridge—20 thousand.....	20
29. Ralph the Soldier.....	4
30. Testimony of Eminent Physicians, 30 thousand.....	4
31. The Working Man, 25 thousand.....	20
32. Is I not happy? by Hugh Stowell, 30 thousand.....	4
33. David the Shoemaker, and Who is my Brother?—49 thousand.....	4
34. The Drunken Couple, 38 thousand.....	2
35. Confessions of a drunkard, 29 thousand.....	2
36. Master Tailor, 20 thousand.....	4
37. The Fatal Gift, 36 thousand.....	2
38. Poor Sandy.....	4
39. Use and abuse, by Archdeacon Jeffreys, 34 thousand.....	2
40. The Schoolmaster.....	4
41. Water is Best, by J. J. Gurney, 37 thousand.....	8
42. Cobbett's Advice.....	4
43. Take a Public House.....	4
44. A Sailor's Yarn.....	4
45. Moderate Drinking Calmly Considered.....	16
46. The Pledge.....	4
47. John Jarvis, or the Pledge Signed.....	12
48. The Fifteen Friends.....	2
49. Sunday School Teachers, 22 thousand.....	12
50. Sunday School Children, 40 thousand.....	12
51. Money better than Beer, 37 thousand.....	4
52. Little Mary; or a Daughter's Love.....	8
53. Philosophy of the Temperance Movement, by R. T. Trall, M.D.....	20
54. Love to Man, or an Appeal to the Pious in Favour of Total Abstinence.....	20
55. The Young Woman's Tract.....	12

56. The Young Man's Tract.....	PAGES 16
57. Dr. Campbell's Testimony to the Temperance Reformation: its Importance; and the Duty of Christians in regard to it, 18 thousand.....	8
58. Why Sign the Pledge? 40 thousand.....	2
59. The Poor Man's House Repaired.....	4
60. The Mother's Tract.....	8
61. The High Price of Food.....	4
62. Ladies' Tract Societies.....	8
63. The Praise of Water; Extract of a Lecture by the Rev. T. Spencer, 25 thousand.....	2
64. Important Calculation, on the back of which is a LIST OF ALL THE IPSWICH TRACTS, 30 thousand.....	2
65. The Farm Servant, 25 thousand.....	4
66. Teetotalism Declining; with an Address to the Directors of Railways, 15 thousand.....	8
67. The Reformed Drunkard, and the best means of Reforming the Drunkard, 20 thousand.....	8
68. The Recruit of the British Legion.....	8
69. No. 1 of Temperance Anecdotes and Teetotal Varieties.....	12
70. No. 2 ditto.....	12
71. No. 3 ditto.....	12
72. No. 4 ditto.....	12
73. Luke Husler, or "I did not like to say No.".....	8
74. The Drunkard's Wife.....	8
75. The Unexplored Island.....	4
76. Ancient Wines.....	8
77. Influence of Example—and Address to Christians.....	2

ASSORTED PACKETS.

No. 1, containing Tracts No. 1 to 35 inclusive.
 " 2, " " " 36 to 57 "
 " 3, " " " 58 and upwards.
Each Sixpence.

All the Tracts as far as No. 66 inclusive, may be had in one volume, of 408 pages, cloth bound, price Two Shillings.

168 pages of ANY ONE may be had in Sixpenny Packets. Also, Packets ASSORTED. Twenty-four Sixpenny Packets will be delivered in London for Half-a-guinea, or 50 Packets for a Guinea, being sent by a Post-office Order to the Editor of the "Temperance Tracts," Ipswich.

HAND BILLS

(for announcing Public Meetings), 50 for 6d. may be had with a Tract at the back, as under.

TEMPERANCE SOCIETY.

A

PUBLIC MEETING

WILL BE HELD

On the of 184

The Chair to be taken at o'Clock.

[No. 2.] Please to examine the back of this Hand-bill.

NOTICE PAPERS,

4 1/2 inches by 3 inches, With the same words as the Hand-bills, and Facts on the back, in Sixpenny Packets of 200 each.

SAMPLES OF THE WHOLE WILL BE FORWARDED POSTAGE PAID, in return FOR 40 PENNY STAMPS, SENT TO THE EDITOR OF THE TEMPERANCE TRACTS, IPSWICH.

London, Simpkin and Marshall; Ipswich, Burton; Leeds, Kershaw; Norwich, Jarrold and Sons; Manchester, Holker; and of all Booksellers.

TEMPERANCE PROVIDENT INSTITUTION,
39, MOORGATE STREET, LONDON:

ESTABLISHED 31 DECEMBER, 1840.

TRUSTEES.

WM. JANSON, JUN. Esq. | ROBT. WARNER, Esq. | EDW. WEBB, Esq.

SECRETARY.

THEODORE COMPTON.

ONLY TWO MEMBERS DIED IN THE HALF-YEAR ENDING AT MICHAELMAS.

A PAYMENT OF SIXPENCE PER WEEK, or eleven shillings and tenpence per Quarter, will secure £50 at a Member's death, or payable to himself, on his attaining the age of sixty-five years; provided he enters the Society at the age of twenty-five.

Members are admitted at all ages, and of both sexes, for any sum from £10 to £2000, on equally easy terms.

Teetotalers are strongly advised to join at once. The whole of the profits will be divided amongst the members, according to the date of the entrance.

THE STATISTICAL DOCUMENT READ AT THE CONVENTION IS NOW PRINTED, AND MAY BE HAD GRATIS AT THE OFFICE.

Papers to fill up; Rules, and every information will be given, or sent gratis to all parts of the kingdom.

THE WORLD'S
TEMPERANCE CONVENTION.

THE REPORT OF THE
PROCEEDINGS OF THE CONVENTION,
WITH AN INTRODUCTION,
By ELIHU BURRITT.

And a selection of the most valuable papers sent into the Business Committee, will be ready about the middle of November.

The Committee, in order to invite a large sale, have decided upon publishing the volume at cost price.

Sewed in wrapper, 1s. Bound in cloth, 1s. 6d.

C. GILPIN, Bishopsgate Street Without; HOULSTON AND STONEMAN, Paternoster Row.

CURIOS.

MEANS WITHOUT MONEY, AND A PRIZE WITHOUT PRICE.

The supplement to the Truth-seeker Magazine for November, will contain a plan whereby (without risk, lot, or failure) Reehabite Tents, Temperance Committees, Secretaries, Lecturers, or other parties, may procure all the following publications, viz:—

- (1.) The Standard Temperance Library;
- (2.) Dr. Lees' Pictorial History of Alcohol; and
- (3.) Professor Sewall's and Dr. Hope's Eight Colossal Plates of the Stomach and Liver (value together £2), WITHOUT MONEY OR PRICE.

This extra No. of the Truth-Seeker (though 8d. to the booksellers) will be sent to any address on forwarding to Dr. Lees, Leeds, before the 10th, a 4d.-piece, or four stamps only!

FELLENBERG HOUSE.

MRS. HENRY VINCENT begs to call the attention of parents, and the friends of enlightened education, to her Establishment for Young Ladies. Mrs. H. V. respectfully assures those parents who may honour her with the care of their children, that she has spared neither pains or expense to render her establishment worthy of their confidence; and that it will ever be with her an object of anxious solicitude, to realize for her pupils all the comforts of a well-regulated home, under the conviction that kind and judiciously indulgent treatment, is not only the surest but the most correct medium for the inculcation of moral and religious principles. Fellenberg House is delightfully situated within four miles of the metropolis, in a locality justly celebrated for its salubrity.

Prospectuses of terms, with every other particular, may be had by return of post, on application to Mrs Henry Vincent, Fellenberg House, Stoke Newington, Middlesex.

HYDROPATHIC ESTABLISHMENT, GRAFENBERG HOUSE, TUNBRIDGE WELLS, KENT.

BY DR. FELDMANN,

Formerly Physician at the Court of Vienna. Author of "Theory and Practice of Hydropathy" and many other Works, in Latin, German, French, and English.

This Establishment, which is fitted up with every comfort, is now in full operation.

Prospectuses may be had at the Establishment; of Messrs. Madden and Malcolm, 8, Leadenhall Street; and at Mr. D. Natts, 158, Fleet Street, London.

Dr. FELDMANN may be consulted every Tuesday, at 6, Queen Street, Golden Square, London, from half-past 1 to 3 o'clock.

* * * The NATIONAL TEMPERANCE CHRONICLE and TEMPERANCE RECORDER is published on the first day of each month, at HOULSTON & STONEMAN, the Depot of the National Temperance Society, 65, Paternoster-row, and will be sent post-free for one year on receipt of 2s. 6d. postage labels. Annual Subscriptions received at the Society's office, 11, Tokenhouse Yard, London, and subscriptions and donations for the general purposes of the Society, by the Treasurer, G. W. ALEXANDER, 40, Lombard Street; by any Member of the Committee; and at the office as above.

London: Printed by RICHARD BARRETT of 3, Regent-terrace City-road, in the Parish of St. Luke's, in the County of Middlesex, Printer; at his Printing Office, No. 13, Mark-lane, in the Parish of Allhallows Staining, in the City of London; and published by JOHN STONEMAN, of 24, Brooksby Street, in the Parish of Islington, in the County of Middlesex, at HOULSTON and STONEMAN'S, No. 65, Paternoster-row, in the Parish of St. Michael-le-Querne, in the City of London, Publishers.—Sunday, November 1st, 1846.

THE NATIONAL TEMPERANCE CHRONICLE AND TEMPERANCE RECORDER.

It is good neither to eat flesh, nor to drink wine, nor anything whereby thy brother stumbleth, or is offended, or is made weak.—ROM. XIV. 21

No. 12, JOINT SERIES.]

DECEMBER, 1846.

[PRICE 1½d., STAMPED 2½d.]

CONTENTS.

	PAGE		PAGE
CHRONICLE AND RECORDER—What Legislation?	265	Lectures—Tracts for the Young—Testotal Times'	276, 277
Intoxicating Liquors as Medicines	266	Prize Essays	276, 277
Poisons	267	FOREIGN INTELLIGENCE—
The true position of Christian expediency, as a rule of duty	268	Canada—Temperance in Honolulu, Sandwich Isles—
Working Men's Demonstration in Exeter Hall	269	The Cause in Van Diemen's Land, Hobart Town—
Extract from the Report of the Select Committee of the House of Commons on Shipwrecks—A Bible Testotal Anecdote—Extract of a Letter from Canada—Soldiers and Temperance—Temperance Societies—Public Poisoners	273-275	New Zealand	278
EDITORIAL REMARKS—		HOME INTELLIGENCE—
National Temperance Society—The Mission—Working Men's Demonstration, Exeter Hall—Mr. Inwards		Waste of Food, Mr. Inwards' Lectures—Hampshire—Leeds' Temperance Society—Greenwich—Sheerness—Deptford—Down, Farnborough, Kent—Bristol—Cheddar, Somerset—Opening the Ports—Cornwall—The Effects of Alcohol on the Animal Frame—Infant Mortality—Distilleries stopped in Ireland—Brewers, Distillers, &c., Inimical to Society ..	279-283
		Miscellaneous—Notices—Advertisements	283-288

Chronicle and Recorder.

DECEMBER 1ST, 1846.

WHAT LEGISLATION!

If it be admitted, that a control or limitation of occupations, which are injurious to the public welfare, is within the province of legislation; and the reasons given in our last article, seem to us conclusive on that head, then will it follow that the sale of an article, proved to be mischievous by such indubitable testimony, should be surrounded by every practicable limitation. The principle has been admitted by government, in its license laws, and excise duties, but these regulations adopted in an age, when the belief in the excellence of intoxicating drinks was all but universal, but which they still felt it necessary to restrict, seem strange anomalies, when viewed in the light of our present knowledge and experience. The public interests demand a revision of these laws. The difficulty, and we are not insensible to its magnitude, is to shape a measure, that without attempting too much, and thus defeat the object, would serve as a guide to the legislature, secure the co-operation of the people, and make the first step towards a comprehensive enactment. The difficulty is not lessened by appealing to the right or wrong of the case. We believe the drinking system to be essentially evil, and utterly indefensible. But it does not therefore follow, that an attempt to uproot it by law would be expedient, when that system is sanctioned by the public opinion of the country. We know that the bare mention of expediency will subject us in certain quarters to animadversion; and it will be said if the thing is wrong, why not try at once to put it down, and that any measure short of that, is substituting expediency for principle. There is in these declarations, a strange confusion of language and meaning, and it would be well for those who use them to be strict in their definitions. They repudiate expediency. What are human governments but expedients? The measure for closing public-houses on the Sabbath may be called an expedient, so would be a measure to close them altogether. The temperance pledge is an expedient, temperance societies themselves are mere expedients; and, therefore, we hold that it may be expedient to narrow the extent of a measure, if that it is impossible to subdue; and we may lessen by a just and wise legislation, the evil of a traffic which under present circumstances we cannot put down, and which can only eventually be removed by a much higher power than legislation, the enlightened christian principle of the people.

The question then to which we come is this,—what measure of law is it expedient to put in operation,—what will the government be willing to concede, or the people to support? We are not vain enough to suppose we can offer any recommendation worth acceptance, where men of vast experience and much thought have confessed themselves baffled. We, however, believe that the measure most likely to meet all difficulties, would be that of placing the vender of intoxicating drinks in precisely the same position as other tradesmen. The absurdity, as well as injustice, of licensing a man to sell a deleterious drink, and granting him privileges, which are denied to the man who sells beef or cheese, is so glaring a violation of popular notions of right and wrong, that it would, if agitated, find numbers of opponents among those who love the drink. The meretricious attractions attached to public-houses would excite, if exposed, loathing and horror amongst the intelligent. We are not convinced that any step beyond this would be politic or practicable at present, but we should be glad to receive this, or labour in getting even an approximation to it. On that principle we support a measure to close public-houses on one day of the week; but certainly do not see that whilst labouring to obtain that, we should not be endeavouring to prepare the public mind for something more. It is for that purpose we have written these hasty articles, in order to point to some general plan which would lessen the temptations which lure the artizan from his home, and the youth from his study, by the fascinations of music and song, preparing the way for a life of debauchery and an early grave. Our meed of exertion is pledged to assist every effort made; but we are not pledged, nor will we confine ourselves to them, if we see in the distance a prospect of something more enlarged, which a little labour may attain.

Having said thus much, we might rest satisfied, knowing that in several quarters, our remarks, humble as they are, have created thought and inquiry; but we wish to direct attention to measures which might greatly help the temperance cause. The government, though not strictly legislating for morals, can do much indirectly to promote them. And even on the question of temperance, it can do more by such means than by direct legislation. Increasing the comforts of life among the poorer classes—lessening the taxes upon necessaries—improving the homes—encouraging education—opening parks and public grounds, museums and picture-galleries—increasing the facilities for innocent and healthful amusements—cheapening the means of acquiring knowledge. These would be all means to a desired and glorious end. And when aided by a direct law to put down the attractions of the gin-shop and the tavern, and this again assisted by the promulgation of temperance principles would raise the moral tone of our populace—dispose their minds for the reception of christian truth and the pursuits of science, and gradually remove the social deformities which exist.

It is by these indirect means that we look for the greatest good; and have already acknowledged our fears that too much reliance might be placed on legislation. We regard it as a secondary means, and only as such. No law could have done for Ireland what Father Mathew has been enabled to perform; and the most able statesman could not have done for this country what temperance societies have effected. Our great reliance after all must be on our own exertions on the spread of knowledge, not forgetting that which might be handed down as an axiom to all times—that a government is the creature, in fact, the mere reflection of the moral feeling of the community; and, therefore, to influence the government, we must influence the people. The example of the members of the government, in an adoption of the principle, would be of equal value to even positive legislation. These remarks we make to encourage exertion; for, if a bill was brought in to-morrow to accomplish all to which we have pointed, there is still in the drinking-usages, in the prejudices and deep-seated appetites of the population, a host of difficulties in the way of our conquest over the drinking-system. There will still be a wide field and a necessity for labour on the part of temperance reformers.

INTOXICATING LIQUORS AS MEDICINE.

LETTER II.

Having reviewed Dr. Chambers's paper on "Dilatation of the Heart, consequent on Teetotalism," last month; and having shown, I flatter myself,

1. That it was not proved, by his description of the cases, that they were those of dilatation of the heart at all;

2. That his theory and practice were in direct opposition to the views promulgated by Dr. Hope, who is considered to be the first authority on the subject;

3. That if the patients were labouring under the disease affirmed, yet they might have been relieved (cured?) without alcoholic stimulants; and

4. That if that kind of stimulant was necessary, it was prescribed by Dr. Chambers after a most unscientific, and dangerous fashion.

I proceed now to notice a report of the proceedings, which appeared in a Norwich paper; where Dr. Chambers is reported to have said, "He wished more particularly to point out the great danger incurred by those who suddenly altered from habits of free living to the extreme of teetotalism." I deny that there is any danger at all; I have seen the alteration in scores, and I have known of it in hundreds of cases, and I never knew mischief to ensue; and unless Dr. Chambers can bring better proof than that supplied by his paper at Norwich, I beg leave to set down his assertion as not proven, and my word and experience are (short of proofs) as good as his. Teetotalism is part of the proper and scientific method of cure for the ills of "free living;" and let the annals of our goals, to which thousands of drunken men and women are committed annually, and so brought under sudden and compulsory abstinence, (from which annals, no record of danger can be brought) be the umpire to decide between us.

The newspaper report goes on,—“But while circumstances, or rather cases, forced themselves upon him, demanding a condemnation of teetotalism, he was quite willing to acknowledge the very great benefits conferred by the more moderate movement of temperance.” Here is as pretty a piece of self-deception by a play on words as was ever promulgated! Dr. Chambers is ignorant of his mother tongue! He sets down temperance as less stringent than teetotalism, and uses the term "moderate" as synonymous with drinking small quantities of intoxicating liquors! which is a popular fallacy, and an instance of confusion worse confounded.

Let us try to unravel the difficulty by calling things by their right names. Temperance is set down by St. Paul as one of the fruits of the Spirit; and this is to give it the highest possible character; and in this high character is certainly included abstinence from noxious drinks, (though it extends far indeed beyond this; even to all the appetites of the body;) and that man only is temperate who has his body in subjection to his mind; which thousands of teetotalers, (for example, sluggards, snuff-takers, and tobacco smokers,) have not: but in regard to drink, what is the rule of temperance, this,—whatever you drink, let it be for the glory of God,—and this is “moderation” too, for moderation means regulation, restraint; so, in the command, “let your moderation be known unto all men,” we have advice which may be thus paraphrased, “so regulate and restrain your appetite for drink, (as well as your desire for other things,) that you may take no kind but what is innocent, and no quantity but such as nature requires.” And was this done by the learned doctors at Norwich when they had their grand dinner, when they continued hours over their cups of brandied wine, when they had a specially appointed toast-master, described in their own Journal as a disciple of the celebrated Mr. Toole, and when toasts enough were proposed to make any unseasoned man drunk; if he drank to them all, as is commonly done? Are these gourmands and wine-bibbers the proper parties to take the chair of temperance, to assume dictatorial airs, and to spout over their cups sentiments in favour of moderation? We deny their claim to such a situation; and pronounce them to have been, at Norwich, mere fashionable usurpers, anxious (apparently) to cloak their own shame. But Dr. Chambers had a supporter in the chairman, J. G. Crosse, Esq., who is reported to have said, “As faithful observers of facts, they must honestly state truth before the public. He had known cases of persons who had been judiciously temperate, [then they were teetotalers,] and who having become teetotalers, had been affected with a debility of the system. [In such cases why not have prescribed a tonic, as iron, rather than a stimulant, as alcohol, which is not a tonic?] In such cases he had felt it his duty to advise the parties to revert to a proper course of temperate habits.” [Which course ever includes, and is never perfect without, total abstinence from alcoholic drinks!] “Dr. Hastings,” we are told, “confirmed these views from experience in his neighbourhood.” And now what does all this mean? A justification of behaviour which corresponds with rules laid down in a ritual of Bacchus, by laying hold, through certain popular fallacies on words and expressions found and commended in the sacred Scriptures, and by this process deceiving and being deceived! Talk of being faithful observers of facts, and honestly stating truth! Why, seeing man is the subject of the experiment, let the truth be told; and let it be known, that by drinking alcohol, millions of years of human probation are cut short every twelvemonth in Great Britain! Let this be known, that ordinary life assurance offices have had a mortality, during the first five years of their existence, varying from 15 to 26 for every 1000 members; while the Teetotal Office, (or the Temperance Provident Institution, 39, Moorgate Street, London,) has had only an average mortality, during a similar length of time, of $7\frac{1}{2}$ per 1000, and so few have the deaths been, that now (6th August, 1846,) the amount is reduced to $3\frac{1}{2}$ per 1000! Now, out of eighteen hundred Life Policies, where are the deaths from diseased heart? And echo answers “Where?” To convince the reader that Dr. Chambers is utterly unworthy of credit, there remains to be noticed a small bit more of his trashy theorising against teetotalism; he says: “another element may also be in operation, I mean an actual increase in the quantity of blood to be circulated, as I have invariably found that a great increase of appetite accompanies teetotalism, [hear this ye ladies and others, who take a glass of sherry in the forenoon to get an appetite for dinner,] not a healthy appetite, but a morbid craving for food, and to oppose which opium is frequently resorted to.” [Yes, under the direction of ignorant doctors who know not how to cure it, and so prescribe opium as a palliative.] This is really too bad, and it will be seen through in a moment, when the reader is informed that this craving for food results from a spasmodic state of the stomach, the spasm, being occasioned (generally) by an inflammation in the lining membrane of that organ, and that inflammation being (generally) the effect of high living, particularly taking alcoholic drinks, and of irritating drugs, prescribed to carry off bile, or for some other fanciful reason!

The symptom of increased appetite referred to, is one of the symptoms of nervous indigestion, and if the sufferer be urged to add alcohol to his solid food, instead of being directed to diminish his solid food and to drink cold water, woe, sooner or later, will betide the unhappy sufferer! Thousands in this way are hurried into apoplexy, or into insanity, or some such incurable disease, and it is really enough to make one's flesh creep, to hear a physician in any way or measure sanctioning the use of strong drink in these common, and distressing, and fearful cases.

We have heard of the resistance offered by the medical profession to Harvey's grand discovery, the circulation of the blood; and to Jenner's immortal palliative, the vaccine virus; but really the ignorant persecutors of the bygone day bid fair to be eclipsed by the anti-teetotal vagaries of Messrs. Chambers, Hastings, and Crosse! 'Tis a mercy that ipso dixit goes for little now-a-days; and so we have taken the liberty to dissect and expose the errors of the Triumviri Norwicensis.

Yours,

H. MUDGE.

[The Editor of the Lanct, in the number for November 7th, after quoting the cases given by Dr. Chambers, says—

“It is difficult to conceive on what principle this organic change in the structure of the heart could take place.” And, again, “It is first of all necessary to prove that the heart does become dilated, of which there is no evidence in the present cases, nor, indeed, of anything besides nervous debility. Intemperance, and the other extreme, have since enough of their own to answer for, without allowing them an influence which they do not possess.”

Here is the opinion of a party who cannot be accused of any friendly feelings towards teetotalism “the other extreme,”—that Dr. Chambers is mistaken in the very nature of the disease. Thus supporting the view of our correspondent Mr. Mudge.—ED. N.T.C.]

POISONS.

Alcohol was by no means the least dangerous in the class of poisons, and the probability was, that alcoholic drinks destroyed persons more rapidly than opium. He believed that if alcoholic drinks could be banished from the community, that apoplexy, sudden death, and insanity would be almost unknown: it was a fact that those diseases were rarely known in countries where alcoholic drinks were not used. A healthy condition of the brain was essential to clearness and vigour of thought; and where the brain was affected by alcoholic drinks to any extent, idiocy or insanity was very likely to ensue. No person could enjoy perfect good health who took any portion of alcoholic drinks. Dr. Latham had declared that there were great numbers of persons in London who were never sober from one year's end to the other. As to drunkards they so confounded their sensation by the constant use of strong drinks, that they could not say whether they were well or not: they were labouring under diseased action for months and years.—Mr. Hicks, Surgeon.

THE TRUE POSITION OF CHRISTIAN EXPEDIENCY, AS A RULE OF DUTY.

(From the Bombay Temperance Advocate.)

In several numbers of the Christian Witness, and the Teetotal Times, which we have received by the last mails from England, it appears that a warm controversy has arisen among the friends of teetotalism on the subject of "Christian Expediency." One party has warmly maintained, that expediency is the only unquestionable ground, the only ground that cannot be disputed, and, therefore, the only useful practical ground on which teetotalism can be best advocated. The other party has as warmly maintained, that "Expediency" is too low a motive, and that sacred claims of duty and moral obligation are the motives to be urged, if we wish to produce any powerful or permanent effect.

Now it appears that both parties in this dispute have stumbled upon the fallacy of "distinctio sine differentia," (a distinction without a difference,) for the whole controversy takes for granted that there is an essential difference between the obligation of "Christian Expediency," and that obligation of "moral right and wrong," which we term duty, and that the former is, in its own nature, a lower obligation, and a far inferior motive to the latter. Now this is a grievous fallacy, and an entire misunderstanding of the nature of Christian Expediency, and of the true position of the question.

The only difference between Christian Expediency and moral right and wrong, is that Expediency is an "accident" depending upon time, place, and circumstances, so that what is expedient in one age of the world, may be inexpedient in another; whereas moral right and wrong, being an "essential" and an inseparable quality, is immutably and eternally the same. But here all distinction ends as a practical rule of duty at once and for ever. For when once the question of "Expediency" is settled in any given case, settled in sincerity, (not what the world calls sincerity, but in real Christian sincerity), with the "single heart" and the "single eye," then it becomes a rule of duty, as deep, solemn, sacred, and binding, as any rule of duty between man and God. For what is it which renders a thing, or a course of action, inexpedient? Plainly the evil, moral and physical, which it is bringing upon mankind, and its consequent inconsistency with the glory of God. Now it is quite conceivable that a thing may be so murderously inexpedient, on account of the slaughter of human life, the wreck of human happiness, and the ruin of human souls that it occasions, that the use of it in defiance of such inexpediency as this, may be selfish, barbarous, and cruel, utterly contrary to the glory of God, and inconsistent with the command, Thou shalt love thy neighbour as thyself, and, therefore, wicked, extremely wicked.

But here we wish it to be distinctly understood "that we are only contending for the principle in the abstract, without applying to any particular case, whether the evils resulting from the use of intoxicating drinks in the present day, whether the deluge of human tears, the mass of human misery and crime, the ruin of millions, both for time and for eternity, resulting from the moderate and immoderate use of intoxicating drinks, constitute an amount sufficiently great to bring it under this category, is a question for the conscience of each individual to decide. We decline giving any opinion here on this particular question, because it will needlessly encumber the present argument that we should, as we are only contending for the "abstract principle," that the question of expediency may rise so high, on account of the fearful consequences that it involves, that the violation of that expediency may be in the very last degree cruel and wicked. If the utter ruin of a million of souls, for time and for eternity, be not a sufficient amount of evil to render it so, then suppose it to ruin ten millions of souls; and if ten millions of ruined souls be not mischief enough to bring it under this condemnation, suppose it to ruin one hundred millions. There surely is a supposable amount of misery and mischief, at which expediency, as a moral rule of duty, may involve such awful consequences, that the violation of it shall be extremely wicked; and thus the obligation of Expediency, and the obligation of moral duty become the same, the motives of conduct in both cases the same, the awful sanction of God the same, and the fanciful distinction between them becomes "a distinction without a difference."

We have here supposed an extreme amount of crime and misery, to show the utter fallacy of this distinction, and to prove that the principle on which it is found is essentially false. For the truth or falsehood of any principle can only be detected by going the whole length of the principle, and following it out to its ultimate consequences. But the real Christian does not demand that the question of Expediency on any given case of conscience, shall rise to such a frightful magnitude as here supposed, in order that he may feel it to be a deep and solemn moral obligation, and his bounded rule of duty. For Christian Expediency is a high and holy standard, and in weighing the question of duty in any proposed case, a tender conscience holds the scales, that conscience which above all things God loves; while love, charity, and mercy argue the case, and heaven-born, self-denial for another's good, after the pattern of Christ, makes duty easy, and esteems all motives of personal ease or indulgence as lighter than the dust of the balance. Thus the holy, self-denying Paul, did not require the carnage of a world, or even the tenth thousandth part of the misery and crime, in the present day, resulting from intoxicating drinks, to constitute the question, one of bounden duty, and deep moral obligation. For he accounted a single soul so precious, that he declared that he would eat no meat while the world endured, and that it was good not to touch wine, provided by such means a single brother stumbled or was offended or was made weak.

Is it not evident, that in the bosom of the Apostle Paul, (and in every bosom filled by the constraining love of Christ,) Christian Expediency and moral duty, rest upon the same sanction, and are carried into practice from the same motives, and that when once the question of expediency in any given case is prayerfully decided, all further distinction is a "distinction without a difference."

From Canada and the Canadians, in 1846. By SIR RICHARD HENRY BONNYCASTLE.

"In the whole North American continent, Canada is only exceeded by the States of New Hampshire and Connecticut in the lists of insanity; and to show that intemperance, as well as climate, has something to do with this melancholy result, I shall only state, without entering into details, that a well-informed resident has calculated, that when the province contained the above number of inhabitants [506,505], the consumption of alcoholic liquors, chiefly whiskey, was, excluding children under fifteen years of age, five gallons a year for every inhabitant; whilst in 1843, in England and Wales, where the most accurate returns of the excise prove the fact, it is only 0.69 of a gallon; in Scotland, 2.16; in Ireland, 0.64; and the total consumed by each individual, not excluding those under fifteen, is only 0.82 per annum for the three kingdoms. If the children under fifteen in Canada are to be included, still the consumption of spirit is awful, being 2½ gallons for each; but it must be much higher, since the excise is not regulated as at home. That such excessive drinking prevails in Canada, may be attributed partly to the cheapness of a vile mixture called Canadian whiskey, and partly to climate, with a thermometer ranging to 120°, and with such rapid alternations. In Canada, also, man really conquers the earth by the sweat of his brow; for there is no harder labour than the preparation of timber, and the subduing of a primeval forest in a country of lakes and swamps. I have an instance of the effect of excessive drinking daily before my door, in the person of a man of respectable family, and of excellent talents, who, after habitually indulging himself with at least the moderate quantum of sixty glasses of spirits-and-water a-day, now roams the streets a confirmed idiot, but, strange to say, never touches the cause of his malady. Are therefore, not idiocy, madness, and, perhaps, two-thirds of the dreadful calamities to which human nature is subject here, owing to whiskey? I have seen an Irish labourer on the works, take off at a draught, a tumbler of raw whiskey, made from Indian corn or oats, to refresh himself: this would kill most men unaccustomed to it, but a corroded stomach it only stimulates. Canada is a fine place for drunkards—it is their paradise—'Get drunk for a penny; clean straw for nothing' there. Think, my dear reader, of whiskey at tenpence a gallon—cheaper than water from the New River in London. Father Mathew, your principles are much wanted on this side of Great Britain!"

Sir Richard says, the improved mental cultivation of the soldier is the only cure for this destructive vice. Describing a visit to the remote fort of Penetanguishere, he says:—

"I was agreeably surprised to find at this remote post that only one soldier drank anything stronger than beer or water; and of course very little of the former, owing to the expense of transport, was to be had. The soldier that did drink spirits did not drink to excess. How did all this happen in a place where drunkenness had been proverbial? The soldiers, who were of the 82nd regiment, had been selected for the station as married men. Their young commanding officer patronised gardening, cricketing, boating, and every manly amusement, but permitted no gambling. He formed a school for the soldiers and their families, and, in short, he knew how to manage them, and to keep their minds engaged; for they worked and played, read and reasoned; and so whiskey, which is as cheap as dirt there, was not a temptation which they could not resist. In winter, he had sleighing, snow-shoeing, and every exercise compatible with the severe weather, and the very deep snow incident to the station. I feel persuaded that, now government has provided such handsome garrison libraries of choice and well-selected books for the soldiers, if a ball-alley, or racket-court, and a cricket-ground were attached to every large barrack, there would not only be less drinking in the army, but that vice would ultimately be scorned, as it has been within the last twenty years by the officers. A hard-drinking officer will scarcely be tolerated in a regiment now, simply because excessive drinking is a low, mean vice, being the indulgence of self for unworthy motives, and beneath the character of a gentleman. To be brought to a court-martial for drunkenness, is now as disgraceful and injurious to the reputation of an officer, as it was to be tried for cowardice, and, therefore, seldom occurs in the British army. The vice of Canada is, however, drink; and temperance societies will not mend it. Their good is very equivocal, unless combined with religion, as there is only one Father Mathew in the world, nor is it probable that there will be another."

[It is a matter of great surprise, that a writer of considerable acuteness, and manifesting so general a knowledge of society, and in the face of what temperance societies have done in Canada, should hazard so bold an assertion as that contained in the conclusion of the above quotation. According to the Canadian

Economist, in enumerating the "leading arts in which we have made some progress," distilling and brewing come first. "Montreal alone produces about 4,000,000 gallons of whiskey annually, and as many more of table ale; and the quantity produced in the whole province may be judged of by these facts." That the mere inculcation of temperance principles will not do all that is required we are fully persuaded, but it must accompany the other means, if intemperance is ever to be banished effectually; without that all other reforms will be mere palliatives. It is, however, very satisfactory to find in the above work many passages on this vice of drunkenness. They will serve to call attention to the evil, which is of a frightful character in Canada.—ED. N.T.C.]

WORKING MEN'S DEMONSTRATION IN EXETER HALL.

On Monday evening Nov. 9th, Dr. Oxley, who had the honour of originating the movement, took the chair at a quarter past 6 o'clock, amidst the cheers of the audience. He said, he had often appeared before them to advocate the principle of total abstinence from strong drinks. His opinion, founded on extended practice and observation, from all he had seen and all he had read, was that intoxicating drinks were not suited to the frame and constitution of man; on the contrary, those drinks were calculated to destroy the health and vigour of the body, the improvement of the mind, and the seriousness of the soul in reference to eternal realities.—(Hear.) The instances in which they were needed as medicine were very few, and as beverages they were altogether unnecessary. But it was not necessary to dwell upon that point, when even brewers were giving up the doctrine of the nutritious qualities of ale and porter, and other drinks, and declaring that they could be made equally good from treacle and sugar.—(Hear.) He believed that Exeter Hall had never been so honoured as on the present occasion.—(Much cheering.) As to his own experience of the value of teetotalism, he could testify that he had been a teetotaler for nearly fifty years.—(Cheers.) He adopted the principle at the age of about eighteen, when he was accustomed to work in the hay and harvest field. Since then he had been in various climates, both hot and cold; he had gone nearly as far north as Captain Ross, and had not taken any beverage but cold water. During fifty or sixty years he had practised medicine, and had many opportunities of witnessing the evils resulting from the use of strong drinks, even when taken moderately. He had seen individuals and families ruined, valuable estates sold, persons dying before they arrived at maturity, and other serious evils, arising from the use of strong drink. The great majority died before they reached the age of twelve years, and that was to be attributed to the use of unnatural stimulants by themselves and by their parents. Let strong drinks be banished from the community, and there would be a healthy generation, requiring neither pills nor blisters, nor physic of any kind; a generation free from head-aches, heart-aches, and pocket-aches; a generation rejoicing in much happiness here, and acquiring a meanness for a happy eternity.—(Cheers.) He called upon those who were not teetotalers to say why they were not. "Come with us," said he in conclusion, "and we will do you good. We will feed you better—clothe you better—and improve your condition and your character in every respect. Turn your backs upon the public-house; adopt and recommend our principles; adhere to our practice, and the blessing of the Most High will rest upon you. Few people at seventy years of age will be found able to shout and to speak as I do; and if you would enjoy life, and be vigorous and active, see that from henceforth you use cold water."—(Much cheering.)

MR. RENDALL, one of the Secretaries, then read the following propositions, which he said were to be regarded as a text, or topic, on which the successive speakers would furnish an ample and instructive comment :—

"That the evils which result from the use of intoxicating beverages fall with peculiar weight upon the labouring classes, whom it injures physically, socially, and morally, weakening their bodily powers—checking the development of their intellectual faculties—depriving them of comforts which they might otherwise enjoy as the just fruit of their labour—placing insurmountable barriers in the way of their improvement, elevation and independence—and bringing many of them to poverty, degradation and misery. That these intoxicating beverages, are by no means necessary to promote health, strength, or vigour; and that the heaviest labours can be well performed without the use of any portion of them, as hundreds and thousands of mechanics and labouring men in every possible occupation are able and willing to testify.—And that the labouring portion of the great teetotal body can conscientiously and confidently recommend total abstinence from every intoxicating liquor, as a principle that is at once PRACTICABLE, SALUTARY and BENEFICIAL."—(Cheers.)

MR. M'KECHNIE, a tailor, said, I have been balancing on the chances of destruction, ruin hovering in my track, hopeless, heartless. All the circumstances of my life have been unfortunate. I heard of teetotalism, I became a member of the teetotal society, and I have great reason to be proud of the name. Masses of our countrymen, rich and poor, learned and illiterate, despise our doctrines, and repudiate our principles. We are come to this hall to-day to endeavour to root out such error, to endeavour to remove a prejudice so fatal in its consequences. This is a proud day for the working men of England. Here, in the National Hall of his country's philanthropy, is his voice for the first time heard, and shall be echoed, through the lightnings of the "press," to the uttermost ends of the earth.

MR. JACKSON, gun-smith, said, I am one of those long despised class of men called gun-makers. I have seen in my teetotal career, since I have been elevated to the position of a man by the influence of teetotalism, that I was created for a nobler purpose than to be a grovelling creature below the brute, by indulging in those drinks which many of our fellow-countrymen and countrywomen indulge in; bringing themselves, like me, to desolation, woe, and misery. I was taught to drink, and my own parents especially taught me that strong drink was a strengthening beverage and would make me grow. So I partook of those drinks which at last nearly ruined me, both body and soul. When I became, through the influence of teetotalism, a member of that blessed society, I abandoned every other bad practice connected with the drinking-usages. I can read, and, by the bye, since I have become a teetotaler, I have learned to write, and as society carried me on, so I was in that society an ignorant man. I could not write a letter to my own parents; but since I have learned to write I have not confined my love and sympathy to one class of men. And I would say, men, don't be despised any longer! begin to think, let us unite that we may be happy and powerful, to pull down the strongholds of sin and drunkenness.

MR. ROE, gas-stoker, could tell them, from his own experience, that they would be better able to perform their labour without strong drink than with it.—(Cheers.) He was himself a proof. In consequence of his adoption of teetotalism, his wife, from having tears flowing down her cheeks, was brought to cheerfulness and to smiles; rejoiced in comfort, and almost in independence.—(Cheers.) He had been a teetotaler for seven or eight years, and had, for the greater part of that period, advocated the principle. He was engaged in a profession, the duties of which, according to the editor of the Dispatch, could not possibly be performed without the aid of strong drink. He was exposed to great heat, which occasioned much thirst, and had to lift heavy weights which required much strength. But he found that he was well able to perform all his labour without any aid from those heating and unnatural stimulants.—(Cheers.) Besides this, teetotalism had taken away the stain from his character, which was upon it while he used strong drinks. His wife and children shamed in the good, and now, instead of cursing and blasphemy, there were heard the sounds of prayer and praise.—(Cheers.)

MR. J. DAVIES, house-carpenter, said, at the age of 21 he possessed an income of £100 a year, and a reversionary interest in £60 a year more. He had a good house, and paid about £16 a year for various parish rates; and in about seven years, through the use of strong drink,—such was the desperate facility of drunkenness,—he became an inmate of the very workhouse he had assisted to support. If he was now a master-builder, he owed it to teetotalism. While a drunkard, he never had a shilling to give to his poor mother; but since he had been a teetotaler he had sent her at various times about £40, to keep her out of the workhouse.—(Cheers.) Every way was he changed for the better by the practice of teetotalism.

MR. J. PALMER, excavator, said, that the question was, had intoxicating drinks been a blessing or a curse? If ever there was a period when more than another working men ought to join and support such a society as the present, it was now, when food was so dear, and when there was a scarcity, or the prospect of a scarcity.—(Hear.) Every drop of strong drink which was poured down the throat even of the moderate drinker, rendered food made from grain more dear than it otherwise would be. He would not then state what he once was; but he had felt that strong drink was an enemy to the working classes. He was taught to use strong drink when young, and was told that if he did not use it he would never be a man; but the truth had proved the awful reverse. Those who used it were injuring their bodily frames, were inflicting misery on their families, were setting a bad example. Many working men were spending six or seven shillings a week in drink while their wives were obliged to do slop-work at 9d. per day, some articles of which required 2611 stitches to be made for 2d., besides finding their own thread. If teetotalism were but extensively practised, thousands who now at the age of forty, had to labour hard, would have the means of comfortable subsistence, free from fatiguing labour.—(Cheers.)

MR. MORRIS, coal-whipper, said that it had been declared that coal-whippers, and men in similar occupations, could not perform their duties without strong drink. What hard-working men needed was good food, a good bed to rest upon, and plenty of cold water.—(Cheers.) Here, [pointing to a row of coal-porters in the gallery,] were living witnesses of the truth of that—(Long continued cheers.) Much was said about appeals to the legislature; he advised working men to have a house of commons in their own houses; to make their wives chancellors of the exchequer, and to manage the affairs of their own little state.—(Cheers.) Prayers were offered in churches and chapels because of the scarcity and dearness of food; but why not pray to God to induce men to stay the destruction of wholesome grain, occasioned by the manufacture of strong drinks?—(Hear.)

MR. J. REYNOLDS, bricklayers' labourer, had for some time been one of the "foolish" teetotalers. Before that, he was in rags and tatters; the toes peeped out from his shoes; his hair stuck out from his hat; and in that state, he sat for hours in a public-house, with a pot of beer and a yard of clay before him. He inhabited a poor hovel, which was now converted into a pigeon-house, while he dwelt in a comfortable home.—(Cheers.) He had exchanged his hod and shovel for a neat cart and horse; and had become his own master.—(Hear.) Thanks to Father Mathew for having made a man of him.—(Cheers.) Drunkenness caused him to be turned out of the public-house and kicked down the three steps, head foremost, the person who did so exclaiming, "Tis high time you were a teetotaler." He had become one, and was now happy. He had a good home, good clothing, a good appetite, and good food to satisfy it.—(Cheers.) And what the system had done for him it would do for every working man.—(Cheers.)

Mr. D. WALTERS said, he was brought into the army by means of strong drink; that, it was thought, would cure him; but no, it caused him to be put into the black hole; still his appetite for drink raged, and it was gratified at any rate or risk. At length, he was discharged, and went to live in Rosemary Lane. There he indulged in drink, if possible, more than ever, so that he became a pest to the neighbourhood. He heard the cause of teetotalism advocated in the open air. At that time he had another man's shirt on, and a borrowed jacket. He determined to try the principle, for he was convinced that it was the only system that would meet his case. He signed the pledge for three months, at the end of which period he felt no disposition to go back to the Mariners' Church to have his name taken off the list.—(Cheers.) He thanked God that he had been the honoured instrument of great usefulness.—(Cheers.)

Mr. ROBINSON, paper-stainer, said, when lying on a sick-bed, he noticed his children at play. One of the boys played at being drunk, and imitated the reeling and staggering gait of a drunkard; his little girl said, "Ah, but father should not be a drunkard!" That saying cut him to the heart; conscience, his misery, all around him, said, "Fathers should not be drunkards!"—(Hear.) He made resolutions again and again, but in vain. He laboured for some time under delirium tremens; he was often cupped, and was brought to the very borders of the grave, with a deep sense of his guilt as a man, a husband, and a father. He prayed to God to enable him to adopt and keep the abstinence principle; he was restored to health; began to improve in bodily and mental vigour; took food that nourished his body; got clothing that kept out the cold; obtained books that instructed his mind; and rejoiced greatly with his wife and family. That was his practical experience.—(Cheering.)

Mr. BUTIEX, iron-moulder, said he was the first of his trade in London who adopted the principle; and he was able to testify that he could perform his very arduous labour without any aid derived from strong drinks.—(Cheers.) Hence he had numerous advantages over those who spent the proceeds of their labour on such drinks, to the misery of their wives and families. He wished to address himself to the sons of toil; he wished their freedom from strong drink and from the numerous miseries attendant on its use. Some spoke of the pleasures of the tap-room, and of the friendships cultivated there; but they were short-lived; let the money fail, and the friends would soon disappear.—(Hear.) How much greater would be their pleasure if they laid out their money in fuel, in food, in clothing, and in furniture.

Mr. MCBAIN, coal-porter, said he was advancing a principle that was in strict accordance with truth. He did not remember a period in which he had not serious impressions. In his youth he was a Sunday-school teacher; and those were happy days. When he awoke on the Sabbath, he repaired to the Sabbath-school, and was never so happy as when he got the dear little children around him, and pointed them to Jesus. If at that period any one had told him that he should become a drunkard, he would not have believed it. But he began to use strong drinks, and he soon became a drunkard. And because of the prevalence of drinking-customs, even Sabbath-school children become drunkards, Sabbath-breakers, swearers, thieves, and all that was evil.—(Hear.) His occupation required him to work hard for his living, and he had thought it utterly impossible for a coal-heaver to do without two or three pots of porter per day. He used it, and went down the inclined plane; and he lived as a drunkard for eighteen years, forgetful of his high duties and destiny. When the principle of total abstinence was propounded to him, he treated it with derision as an impracticable thing. But then he had heard enough to induce him to ask what strong drink had done for him. He looked on his home, and saw a large bundle of pawnbrokers' duplicates, the pallid cheeks of his wife, the wretched appearance of all around him, and he determined to give the system a trial. He took the pledge, and prayed to God to give him strength to keep it. He had to labour among a great number who were all using strong drink, and who chaffed him finely because of his abstinence. But at the end of the week he went with them to receive his wages. Much was deducted from theirs for strong beer, but he received his full sum. Then he was able to say, "Friends, you have been chaffing me all the week, but you see that here is the corn."

Mr. APPEGATE, coal-whipper, observed that much had been said that evening about the ability of working men to do hard labour without the aid of strong drink. As to labour, he had been surrounded by clouds of dust in the summer's heat and in the winter's cold, and, in consequence of the oppression of covetous publicans, he had been obliged to trench upon the rest of night, when no man should work, and labour as a ballast-heaver on the Thames, in order to obtain support for his family. And under these trying circumstances, he was better able to discharge his duties without strong drinks than with their aid.—(Cheers.) He rejoiced that the cause was still going on, and believed that the day was at hand when the temperance pledge would find its way to the heart and the home of every labouring man.—(Hear.)

Mr. MCCURRIE, bricklayer, had suffered long and fearfully from intemperance. When he first heard the teetotal system propounded by Mr. Whitaker, he thought that half of what was said was lies, but listening afterwards to Mr. Grosjean, he began to think that it was truth, then that if it was truth, it was the thing for him. He was at that time in great poverty and wretchedness through his use of strong drink; but, by the blessing of God upon his labour, though he had suffered so deeply, few men enjoyed more than he had enjoyed since he had become a teetotaler.—(Cheers.) If any present were suffering from the use of strong drink, he could assure them that there was but one rational and efficient mode of cure, and that was by abandoning the use of the drink which caused that suffering.—(Hear.)

Mr. BOOTH, clock-maker, stated, that eight or nine years ago he was a poor degraded outcast, distressed beyond description in every possible way. He had proved the use of intoxicating drink to be his greatest barrier through life. After hearing of the principle of teetotalism, and considering the subject for a few minutes, he determined to bid farewell to all kinds of strong drink, whatever their name, or colour, or country.—(Cheers.) Through strong drink, he was on the tramp for eight and twenty years, though able to earn good wages, and was lost to his family, to the church, and to the country. He came up to London some years ago with as good a set of tools as a man need work with; but tools, and clothes, and furniture, all went for strong drink, till he found himself in a poor room in the Seven Dials, cutting wood for a coal shed! Often had he wished that he had been anything but a rational and intelligent creature. But now, all was changed for the better. The bible was restored to its proper place. His home was a scene of comfort. His life was spent in usefulness.—(Cheers.) He concluded by expressing his belief that the man who, in any way, encouraged the use of strong drinks, was an enemy to his country and to his God.—(Cheers.)

MR. GREEN then read the following memorial, and moved its adoption:—

“To the Right Honourable Lord John Russell, first Lord of the Treasury, &c.

“The humble memorial of a large number of inhabitants of London and suburbs, assembled in Exeter Hall, November 9th, 1846.

“Sheweth.

“That your memorialists have heard with heart-felt sorrow of the great distress which prevails in various parts of the United Kingdom, in consequence of the general failure of the potato crops, and the scarcity and high price of wholesome grain; and that in some portions of the kingdom, especially in Ireland, breaches of the peace have occurred, the alleged reason being the prospect of absolute starvation.

“That your memorialists have ascertained that seven or eight millions of quarters of barley and other grain, are annually consumed in the United Kingdom, in the processes of malting, brewing, and distilling, and that the liquors manufactured by these processes are not only unnecessary and innutritious, but greatly productive of bodily disease, mental derangement, poverty, crime and wretchedness.

“Your memorialists can declare, further, that total abstinence from such liquors greatly conduces to the enjoyment of sound health, mental vigour, and individual and social comfort,—as the experience of nearly eight millions of total abstainers in the United Kingdom, including persons of various ranks and occupations, abundantly proves.

“Your memorialists have reason to believe, that the withholding barley, from breweries alone, would redeem from compulsory waste one million and a half of quarters of grain; a quantity which would suffice for a year's food for one million and a half of the people of this country.

“Your memorialists might enlarge on the impolicy and immorality of a traffic, by the success of which inconceivable mischief is done to the health, the morals, and the comfort of the community. But they now desire to direct the especial attention of your Lordship to the criminality of converting into injurious liquors those precious fruits of the earth, which were given by the wise and bountiful Creator for the nourishment and strength of his creature, man. Nor can your memorialists wonder, that the Almighty should see fit to withhold some measure of His bounties from a people so prone to convert those bounties into the means of frustrating his gracious purposes and designs.

“Your memorialists, therefore, humbly and fervently pray, that your Lordship may be pleased to recommend to the members of her most gracious Majesty's government, that wholesome and nutritious grain may no longer be allowed to be used in the processes of manufacturing any kind of intoxicating liquors

“Signed in behalf of the meeting,

“WILLIAM OXLEY, Chairman.

MR. RENDALL seconded the resolution. He said that the present assembly, many of them moving in humble life, would thus go to the foot of the throne, or to the adviser of the throne, and make known their feelings and opinions in reference to the use of strong drinks made from the precious grain of the earth.—(Cheers.) He believed the great majority present to be teetotalers; the memorial, therefore, was a fair expression of their opinion. He could wish to be satisfied as to that fact, as some of his brethren entertained doubts. (About nineteen-twentieths of the whole audience immediately held up their hands; which was followed by considerable cheering.)

MR. BAYLISS signed the pledge of total abstinence about eight years ago, and confidently hoped that he should never act so cowardly a part as to go back from the pledge he then gave. Strong drink had not wrought those mischiefs upon him that it had upon many. But though he had not abused his wife, or injured his children, as many had done, he was a drunkard, and was on the high road to ruin. Since he had become a teetotaler, he had made it his aim to bring others to the enjoyment of the same good, and it was an unspeakable comfort to him to hear one and another say, “God bless you, Bayliss; you have brought more comfort to me in the last twelvemonths, since I have been a teetotaler, than I have enjoyed for twenty years before.—(Cheers.) The thought of having been thus useful had added greatly to his comfort.—(Cheers.)

MR. J. WATSON, baker, belonged to a class of men who, he really believed, were more degraded by the use of strong drink than any class beside; he referred to journeymen bakers. About eleven years ago, he thought it absolutely impossible that he could adopt that system; but he was at length induced to try it, though he had but little faith in its utility. He had, however, experienced from it the greatest benefit, even physically, and he now rejoiced to be able to proclaim its benefits to that vast assembly. At the time he used strong drink, he was often laid up with acute rheumatism, and was so bad at one time, that he was attended by five surgeons, for the purpose of considering whether the amputation of a limb was not necessary. To that he would not consent; that limb was now as strong and healthy as any other, and he could perform his very fatiguing labours with far less difficulty than formerly. He had been blessed in his occupation. He took a house which had been used as a beer-shop, and converted it into a baker's, and he had since taken a watchhouse for a similar purpose.—(Cheers.) He was carrying on a good trade, and that without any desecration of the Sabbath. He was able to give his men as good wages as any in the Metropolis, and yet allowed them the full liberty of the Sabbath.—(Cheers.) Time would fail if he were to attempt a relation of the benefits which had resulted to himself and to others, from the adoption of the total abstinence system. Hundreds then within those walls could, he was sure, bear similar testimony.—(Cheers.)

MR. MANN, a farrier, said that he felt much greater pleasure in being in Exeter Hall, than if he had been invited to Guildhall with the Lord Mayor and Aldermen of the City of London.—(Cheers.) The statements of that evening were statements of facts, and the reasonings were those of experience. His occupation was that of a farrier. On the principle of teetotalism he had shod horses in the metropolis for nearly ten years. For ten years he had enjoyed uninterrupted good health, a statement, he believed, which very few drunkards would be able to make. He was happy that he had been selected as one of the twenty, to bear his testimony to the great fact, that intoxicating drinks were wholly unnecessary to enable a man to perform manual labour.—(Cheering.)

MR. WOOD, stone-mason, as a stone-mason he had often had to labour hard, and to carry his heavy tools from place to place; but he was convinced that strong drink would not benefit a man under such circumstances.—(Hear.) Much had been said about the tyranny and oppression exercised towards the labouring classes, but he hesitated not to say that the greatest tyrant under the sun was strong drink. Most of the large "strikes," some of which had proved so ruinous, held their meetings in public-houses. He knew of one large strike, in which, after the men had held out for a time against the masters, they submitted to a reduction of wages; and the reason was, that being lovers of strong drink, they had no funds, upon which to lean during the period they were out of employ.—(Hear.)

The CHAIRMAN concluded the meeting with a few congratulatory observations. He informed the audience that the committee for conducting that meeting had it in contemplation to obtain Covent Garden Theatre, if possible, for a meeting during the ensuing Christmas holidays, and that subscriptions had already been handed to him to the amount of ten pounds for that object; an announcement which was received with considerable cheering.

The meeting concluded a little before ten o'clock, and the company retired, expressing their satisfaction with the proceedings of the evening, and their hope that a similar meeting might soon be held.

EXTRACTS FROM THE REPORT OF THE SELECT COMMITTEE OF THE HOUSE OF COMMONS ON SHIPWRECKS.—That the number of ships and vessels belonging to the United Kingdom which have been wrecked and lost during 6 years past, amount to 2905. That, taking the number of vessels wrecked and lost at the assumed value, £5000 for each ship and cargo, the loss of property occasioned by these wrecks would amount to the sum of £14,525,000, being an average of £2,420,833 per annum. Number of vessels of which the entire crews were drowned during the 6 years, 130. Number of persons drowned in addition to the foregoing, which are distinctly known by the same return from Lloyd's books, during the 6 years, 3414. Among the principal causes of shipwreck, the Committee state, drunkenness and use of spirits. That drunkenness is a frequent cause of ships being wrecked, leading often to improper, and even contradictory orders, on the part of officers, sleeping on the look-out, or at the helm among the men, occasioning ships to run foul of each other at night, to being taken aback and overpowered by sudden squalls, sinking, upsetting, or getting dismasted for want of vigilance in preparing for the danger, or in steering wrong courses, so as to run upon dangers which might otherwise have been avoided. That the practice of taking large quantities of ardent spirits as part of the stores of ships, and the habitual use of such spirits in what is ordinarily considered the moderate quantity served to each man at sea, is itself a very frequent cause of the loss of ships and crews, ships frequently taking fire from the drawing off of spirits, which are always kept under hold, crews getting access to the spirit-casks, and becoming intoxicated, hence insubordination, insolence, disobedience of orders, and refusal to do duty, as well as confinements and punishments as connectives, both which must for the time greatly lessen the efficiency of the crews. Experiments in American vessels.—That the happiest effects have resulted from the experiments tried in the American navy and merchant service, to do without spirituous liquors as an article of daily use, there being more than 1000 sail of American vessels traversing all the seas of the world in every climate, without the use of spirits by either officers or crew, and being in consequence of this change in a so much greater state of efficiency and safety than other vessels, that the public insurance companies in America, make a return of 5 per cent. of the premium of insurance on vessels completing their voyages without the use of spirits, while the example of British ships sailing from Liverpool on the same plan, have been productive of the greatest benefit to the shipowners, underwriters, merchants, officers, and crews.

A BIBLE TEETOTAL ANECDOTE.

In the large engineering establishment of Messrs. Fenton, Murray, and Co., of Leeds, an innovation was made on the drinking-customs. On the marriage of one of the workmen it is usual to exact "footings" to be spent in drink. The foreman, a teetotaler, suggested that it would be more reasonable for the "shop" to pay to the bridegroom than to exact from him, and proposed they should subscribe to purchase a Bible for him. This was done, and the "book of books" was presented by the foreman on behalf of the shop. We hope teetotalers will take the hint, and try to change the tyrannical customs so prevalent among workmen. How much better to evince friendship in this way than to extort money to be spent in that which frequently rends the bond of kindness.

It is now fully ascertained that the last session of Congress wound up with a general drunken spree, in which a great majority of the members participated. What blacker stain could disgrace any country's history.—New York Organ.

HULL.

The last number of the Hull Temperance Pioneer contains an excellent article on the low state of christianity in Hull, contrasted with what it should and might be; one of the chief causes of neutralizing the operations of its spirit, being strong drink.

We wish that every temperance society would set earnestly to work to prepare similar statements relative to their several localities. This article ought to be put into the hands of every professing christian in Hull.

"The object of the argument is to prove, that the various means of moral, intellectual and spiritual instruction, are, to a very great extent, neutralized by the drinking-customs of the country.

"The nightly parade in our streets of walking pestilences under a human form, furnishes frightful evidence of the degradation of a great portion of this borough. Prostitution and drink are ever associated. According to the Criminal Returns, there were in 1843, 144 houses in which prostitutes were kept; and 45 houses of accommodation and 549 prostitutes, 134 of whom were 15 years old and under 20. Again, the various ages of the criminals furnish matter of serious reflection. Of 2139 cases, 47 were under 10 years of age; 313, under 15; 423, under 20; 460, under 25; 313, under 30; 319, under 40; 163, under 50; 77, under 60; and 24, above 60 years of age. Here is contained a volume of instruction, but our limits oblige us to proceed to shew, that there is a cause for all this depravity, and that cause every man who supports by his example the drinking system, is involved in the responsibility of perpetuating. That the demonstration of the truth of our position may be unsuspected, we draw our data from public documents. Our object is to lay the proof before our fellow-townsmen, as much as possible independent of all teetotal evidence, and submit it to their unbiased judgment. We are persuaded, that the mind of every enlightened citizen and good man must derive benefit from the facts thus placed before his view.

"We affirm then, that one of the chief causes of this evil is in the drinking system. We do not say public-house; for this is the effect of the former. Banish the drinking system, and the downfall of the public-house system follows. The public-house system is the ultimate effect of the drinking system. But in the latter, we must look for the public development of the evils in order to behold its dreadful havoc upon the prosperity and happiness of the people. At present there are 296 licensed houses and 146 beer-shops in this borough, amounting to 442. The population is nearly 80,000, and reckoning one-third of them from the adult male population, it leaves 60 of them for each of these houses. Some of these houses have large rooms especially accommodated for the young, 12 and 14 years old, where it is no uncommon thing to find twenty or thirty carousing over their glass, and are furnished with all things that can attract and ensnare the unsuspecting youth. Many others have large musical saloons attached to their premises; and others are houses of infamous accommodation. Is not such a state of things a horrible cancer in our social system? The effects of the public-house system upon the social and pecuniary loss of the people, will be measured by the loss of money expended in its support. We have shown, that the houses are divided into two classes: licensed houses and beer-shops. Licensed houses include inns, public-houses and gin-palaces. It was publicly asserted by Alderman Thompson, some time ago, that some of these inns let off the tap in connexion with them for as much as £100 per annum. Many of these large houses keep a great number of servants, and all the houses one or more. When therefore, rent, taxes, support of the family, and profit are considered, it will be a low average to suppose, that the sum of £300 a year is expended in the support of each licensed house. Averaging the beer-shops at £150, we shall have spent in public-houses and beer-shops as follows:

296 Licensed houses at £300 . . .	£88,800
146 Beer-shops at £150 . . .	£21,900
	£110,700

This estimate cannot be above the real amount. The average amount per head spent in Great Britain and Ireland is about £2. 10s., which gives for Hull £200,000; but, in the above estimate, the brewer, the maltster and the wine merchant, together with that portion of the public who make their domestic purchases of intoxicating drinks of the brewer and wine merchant, are not taken into account. This calculation receives confirmation from the following considerations.

"Assuming one-third of the inhabitants to be adults, there will be 26,666. If each spends on an average 1s. 6d. weekly with the publican, it will amount to £103,997. 8s. Is it at all to be matter for surprise, that the mass of the inhabitants, who are generally well employed, when trade is not so brisk, should have made no provision, but are dependent on "strap" at the shopkeeper, and thus continually should pawn their prospective labour? There are working men in this town, who are poorer with 28s. per week than others in the same establishment, with 15s.: others spend all they get. The consequences are vice, barbarism and savage cruelty, neglect of their children both in morals and education.

"Take for instance, in reference to education, Salthouse-lane School, which admits children of all denominations, where at some £130 annual subscriptions, donations, &c. &c. &c., that large establishment is sustained, at only one shilling per quarter charge to the parent. The number in attendance on January 1st, 1842, was 430; the average time at school, 1 year, 3 months, 1 week, 6 days; and the average age, at the time of leaving school, 9 years, 4 months, when they are put generally to some employment. Now, if men were sober, would they not endeavour to keep their children at school, till these had received a good education? Instead of fifteen months, we should find that fifty months would be the average attendance. It is a principle implanted in the mind of an Englishman, notwithstanding all his faults, to educate his child. But in this case strong drink, as in other cases, reigns alone. Its blighting influence withers every noble feeling of the heart. It deadens, pauperizes, and then incapacitates. It contaminates the fountain of domestic virtue, emitting a miasma of corruption, which pollutes every vein in the moral character of the young. In this lies the great stagnation to intellectual and moral progress. As well might farmers attempt to grow corn in smouldering embers, as the minister or the moralist to raise from such abodes of depravity either a virtuous, an educated, or a happy people. Amongst them, religion becomes a despised sentimentality: therefore they reject it, and fly its approaches. According to the census of 1841, there were 3,464,007, of inhabited houses; the number of inhabitants 26,870,143. Taking the population of Hull to be 79,000 this ratio gives 10,184 inhabited houses in this town; and as there are 442 licensed houses and beer shops, it shews there is one public-house (deducting the 442 public-houses from 10,184) for every 22 houses. In the face of such indisputable evidence, is the extent of demoralization and crime at all matter for surprise?"

EXTRACT FROM A PAPER READ BY DR. GUY, BEFORE THE STATISTICAL SOCIETY OF LONDON.—The injurious effects of intemperance (says Dr. Guy,) are clearly shown by the comparisons instituted between classes who have more and less easy and constant access to the means of intemperance. Age from 30 to 40, licensed victuallers, deaths, 20; tradesmen, deaths, 16; pot-boys, deaths, 29; footmen, deaths, 18; draymen, deaths, 39; labourers, deaths, 18. The above comparison, however, displays but feebly the baneful influence of habits of intemperance: to show it in its fearful reality, it would be necessary to contrast the intemperate men belonging to the several employments, with the temperate men following the same occupations.—Journal of Statistical Society, vol. vi. p. 4.

EXTRACT OF A LETTER FROM CANADA.

Our house is altogether on the abstinence principle, and I attribute a considerable part of our health to that circumstance. I desire most devoutly to thank God that I saw the danger of strong drink so soon, for scores, if not hundreds, who bid as fair for life and credit as I did on my arrival here, are now either gone to the drunkard's grave or hastening to it. Scarcely a week passes that I do not hear of some one cut off by that terrible scourge: I do what I can to inspire my scholars with detestation of it, and I believe not in vain.

The following is so awful an instance of the effects of strong drink, that I think it ought to be made known as a warning to others. I know all the parties and vouch for the facts:—J. C. was born in Scotland, of poor but respectable parents, and had a good knowledge of the Holy Scriptures from his childhood. He enlisted as a soldier at a very early age, and being remarkably tall, strong, and handsome, and possessed of excellent common sense, was a sergeant before he was 20 years old. He served all through the Peninsular war with great credit from his officers, and was looked upon as one of the most deserving men in the regiment. Having excited the anger of the sergeant-major, who usurped undue authority over him, he was tried by a court-martial, the result of which was, the degradation of the accuser, and putting the accused party in his place; I merely mention this to show how high his character must have stood. He married an Irishwoman, to whom he was much attached, she was of the Roman Catholic persuasion, and, unfortunately, fond of drink, of which he took his share, but in moderation. After a few years his wife became a confirmed drunkard, and his conduct towards her was marked with the greatest tenderness and forbearance, even in most provoking circumstances.

He was at length made quarter-master, and served in Canada with very great credit, being a man of most exemplary conduct as a soldier and an officer, and respected by all ranks. He continued many years in this responsible situation, filling its duties in such a way as enabled him to tell the plain truth to every one, for his conduct required no concealment. His judgment in matters of discipline was so much thought of, and his reason so clear, that he not unfrequently brought all the members of a court-martial over to his opinion. His wife still went on in her horrid career, being frequently dead drunk early in the morning, yet he was never known to give her a harsh word, nor was he ever seen the worse for drink, as it is called. At length he determined on leaving the army and entering into business, which he did, and finding his expectations disappointed, took to drinking as a remedy. The custom which he had kept under so many years, now prevailed against him, and he speedily became a complete drunkard! his remarkably handsome face became bloated and unsightly, and the top of his nose like a mulberry. At the same time, although advanced in life, (I suppose at least 55), he began to give loose to other bad passions, and used frequently to beat his poor wife, now almost an idiot from the effects of drink. He would frequently be unfit for business for days together, leaving his stores at the mercy of hirelings. He took an abandoned woman into his house, and kept her there in spite of her husband; but, at length, the latter being employed in the store and getting feed, allowed things to go on quietly. The store was at last shut up, and he retired to a private house, and then the husband demanded his wife, and took her away by the assistance of the police. She however returned, and the unhappy man came, after preparing himself with drink, and called on this once respectable and conscientious man to turn out his wife, swearing if he did not he would kill himself with a carving knife he had in his hand. The wretched drunkard only laughed at him, and the poor infuriated creature plunged the knife into his heart in the presence of his wife and her paramour! So desperately hardened is he by the effects of drink, that he seems to feel no kind of remorse or shame, though he is now spurred by those who once courted him; and he still keeps the vile creature under his roof, and commits such atrocities as would in England be punished under the vagrant act—such is the effect of this “mockery,” strong drink. The sentiments of religion inculcated in childhood, and cherished during the temptations of many campaigns, the experience acquired during many years’ service in the army, the respectability earned by a long course of upright conduct in an exposed situation, the sense that though uneducated, overthrew many a college-bred man,—all this undermined, and, at last, overthrown and swept away by strong drink. I record it as a warning for my fellow-creatures, praying God that, it may not be without its effect. I was intimately acquainted with the subject of this fearful tragedy; and it is a satisfaction to me to reflect, that I did all I could to induce him to become a teetotaler.

SOLDIERS AND TEMPERANCE.

“Nor, could any one much lament, under the circumstances in which the brigade was placed, that not one drop of spirits remained in store. As an article of daily consumption, it is now universally acknowledged that ardent spirits tend only to weaken, not to invigorate, the human constitution. So long as English soldiers are encouraged to regard the habit of drinking spirits as a privilege, crime, as well as disease, will abound in the army. In Jellalabad, however, there were no spirits, nor could any of the places round about supply them; and the consequence was, that through the continuance of this siege there was no crime, no sickness; the highest courage, the very best honour, and a docility and quickness such as had never before been noticed. . . . The officers of the garrison had celebrated Christmas-day, first by reverently attending divine worship, and then by dining together, and remembering in their talk, the friends and relations whom they might never, perhaps, see again. Their beverage was only water, yet they drank it to the health of many far away; and were as happy, with a sobered joy, as they could expect to be apart from the society of those dearest to them. . . . Patience, good-humour, unwearied zeal, from the beginning to the end of the siege, characterized the behaviour of all classes, and rendered the garrison of Jellalabad, though few in number, invincible.—Sale's Brigade in Affghanistan, by the Rev. G. B. GLEIG, M.A.

TEMPERANCE SOCIETIES.

Of the Fifteenth and Sixteenth Centuries.

On the revival of literature after the dark ages, intemperance in drinking was exceedingly prevalent, but as men became enlightened they had recourse to measures calculated to prevent it; and it is a curious fact that in the fifteenth and sixteenth centuries temperance societies were formed by the most influential men, for the purpose of stopping intemperance in drinking. One was called the society of St. Christopher, others were called temperance societies; and the members of one took the name of the Golden Band. These societies were productive of great good; they augmented industry, and contributed to the improvement of manners, and the establishment of good order.—Dr. Bingham on Mental Cultivation.

PUBLIC POISONERS.

What I find culpable in this adulterator, this vender of intoxication, is not only his poisoning the people, but his debasing them. Man, fatigued with work, enters his shop with all confidence; he loves it as his house of liberty. Well, what does he find there? Shame! The spirituous liquor sold to him under the name of wine, has, as soon as drunk, an effect that a double or triple quantity of wine would not produce. It masters the brain, troubles the mind, the tongue, and the motions of the body. Drunk and penoiless, he is cast by the tradesman into the street. Who is not pierced to the heart in seeing sometimes, in winter, a poor old woman, who has partaken of this poison to warm herself, thrust out in this state, to be a butt for the barbarity of children? The rich man passes by and says: “Behold the people!”—This is from “The People,” a new work of Michelet's, just published, translated by Cocks.

National Temperance Society.

OFFICE 11, TOKENHOUSE YARD.

VICE-PRESIDENTS.

The EARL of ARUNDEL and SURREY, M.P.

Sir Wilfrid Lawson, Bart.

R. D. Alexander, Esq.	G. S. Kenrick, Esq.
Thomas Beaumont, Esq.	Rev. Theobald Mathew.
Samuel Bowly, Esq.	W. J. Morgan, A.M., M.D.
Rev. J. Brewster, D.D.	Richard Peek, Esq.
J. S. Buckingham, Esq.	Rev. P. Fenson, M.A.
Robert Charleton, Esq.	Rev. W. W. Robinson, M.A.
Rev. T. Clowes, M.A.	Rev. J. Sherman.
Isaac Collins, Esq.	Rev. C. Stovel.
Joseph Eaton, Esq.	Rev. T. Spencer, A. M.
Joseph J. Gurney, Esq.	Rev. W. H. Turner, M.A.
S. C. Hall, Esq., B.L.P.S.A.	Edward Thomas, Esq.
Lawrence Heyworth, Esq.	Robert Warner, Esq.
William Janson, Jun., Esq.	Edward Webb, Esq.
Ven. Archdeacon Jeffreys.	Rev. J. Wilson.

TREASURER.

G. W. Alexander, Esq., 40, Lombard Street.

EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE.

George W. Atwood.	Charles Gilpin.
Richard Barrett.	Richard Hicks.
Jabez Burns, D.D.	C. H. Lovell, M.D.
William Cabell.	John Meredith.
William Cash.	Richard Potter.
John Cassell.	T. B. Scutt.

SUPERINTENDENT OF MISSION.

John Meredith.

AGENT.

William Gawthorp.

SECRETARY.

Thomas Beggs.

NATIONAL TEMPERANCE SOCIETY.

The Committee have been anxiously engaged in preliminary labours to their movements for next year, and derive considerable encouragement from the fact, that their plan of operations has been well received in all quarters and the liveliest interest felt in its details. The symptoms are every where cheering, and promise for the temperance cause a much higher place in the public regards than it has ever yet occupied. A series of large meetings will commence with one in Sion Chapel, to be held about the time this Chronicle goes to Press, to be followed by one in Dr. Campbell's church, the first week in December. The Committee are prepared to work vigorously, the rest remains with the public. They have received the following promises of pecuniary support, and trust their friends will place at their disposal the necessary means to work efficiently:—

George W. Alexander, Esq., for the years 1847-8-9	£ 100
Joseph Sturge, Esq.,	100
Joseph Eaton, Esq.,	100
J. D. Bassett, Esq.,	100
J. J. Gurney, Esq., for the years 1847-8	100
A. A. for the years 1847-8-9	50
A. B.,	50
William Cash, Esq.,	50
William Janson, Esq., Jun.,	50
James Charlton, Esq.,	50
R. D. Alexander, Esq.,	45

W. D. Sims, Esq.,	£ 30
Robert Charlton, Esq.,	25
Mr. John Cassell	10
Mr. Charles Gilpin	10
Thomas Catchpool, Esq.,	5
Mr. F. J. Thompson,	5
Mr. Richard Barrett, Jun.,	5
W. C. Walters, Esq.	5

MISSION.

Per Mr. Meredith.	£	s.	d.
S. Sturge, Esq.	5	0	0
Anderton, Mission Box	0	7	7
Contributions to the Metropolitan Mission, by Dr. Ellis, Sudbrook-park.
Mrs. Trevanion, Sudbrook-park	10	0	0
C. Cochrane, Esq., Devonshire-place	5	5	0
James Ellis, Esq. Sudbrook-park	1	0	0
Capt. Caldwell, 3, Audley-square	1	0	0
W. Prendergest, Esq.	1	0	0
C. Bayneard, Esq., Paris	1	0	0
R. E. Smith, Esq., Grays-inn	1	0	0
G. Canofari, Esq. Secretary to the Neapolitan Legation, 2, Old Cavendish-square	1	0	0
Miss Otway, 2, Hyde-park-gardens	1	0	0
Miss Caldwell, 3, Audley-square	1	0	0
Miss Bell, Alton, Hants	0	5	0
John Maynard, Sudbrook-park	0	5	0
Kotheime Spunist, 10, Alfred-place, Newington-causeway	0	5	0
John Brame, Sudbrook-park	0	2	6
Mary Maynard, Ditto	0	2	0
Amico	0	2	6
	£29	14	7

SUBSCRIPTIONS.

Mr. Cabell	£	s.	d.
Mr. Thomas Smith	a	1	1
J. Meredith, Esq., sundries collected	a	5	5
	0	16	11

SPECIAL FUND.

C. Bowly, Esq.	£ 25	0	0
------------------------	------	---	---

CHRONICLE.

Mr. J. Thomson	0	10	0
Mr. T. Clarke	0	10	0
J. Meredith, Esq.	0	12	5

WORKING MEN'S DEMONSTRATION—EXETER HALL.

In another part of this number will be found a report of a meeting at Exeter Hall. We attended this gathering of working men with some expectation, and left it with unalloyed satisfaction. It is an era in the history of our country, when a meeting of such magnitude can be convened and conducted by working men. It speaks of hope and promise for the downcast millions of our country, and raises our confidence in the ultimate triumph and universal adoption of that principle, which has rescued these men from degradation, and placed them in so proud an attitude on this memorable occasion. We regret we cannot give a full report; nor can we convey by any language the effect produced. The words uttered might be given, but the fervency and power with which their statements were poured forth, will be lost to all but those who heard them. Hall, platform, and gallery, were all full of delighted people, almost wholly working men and women. Great credit is due to all parties concerned—those engaged in the preliminaries—those who spoke on the evening—and the crowded and intensely excited audience, whose good order and attention showed that the labouring classes of our country are progressing to a higher intellectual and social position. Twenty years ago, the bare idea of such a meeting would have been ridiculed. We hail it as the forerunner of great and glorious results. Dr. Oxley, who originated the proposal, and who presided, deserves our warmest thanks. Sure are we, he was well paid for his trouble and anxiety, by the magnificent sight before him.

It will be seen, that in Bristol a large meeting was held of a similar description, addressed by reformed drunkards. Let the country follow so excellent an example. We should be glad to hear of such meetings in every town in Great Britain.

MR. INWARDS' LECTURES.

The committee feeling the importance of calling public attention to the waste of grain in the manufacture of intoxicating drink, have engaged Mr. Jabez Inwards, to give a series of Lectures, in London and its neighbourhood. Some report of these Lectures will be found in another part of this number. The accounts from the various meetings have been highly satisfactory and complimentary to the talents of the Lecturer, and there is every reason to believe his labours have been very useful. It is impossible to insert all the letters received, and, we trust our friends will be satisfied with this general acknowledgment.

TRACTS FOR THE YOUNG.

We have received copies of several tracts issued by Mr. Alexander of Ipswich, adapted for the young. They are beautifully got up, and will supply a desideratum long wanted. Now that attention is so strongly turned to the rising generation, this series will be of great value, we refer to the advertisement in this Chronicle for further particulars.

TEETOTAL TIMES' PRIZE ESSAYS

At the Convention no point was more strongly enforced than the importance of improving our temperance literature. Numerous and valuable as our publications are, there is great need of improvement, and room for others of a superior stamp. And we rejoice to see that the proprietor of The Teetotal Times, has hit upon a plan so excellent, and is carrying it out with so much vigour. The Teetotal Essayist, is a happy thought, and as, no doubt, the plan pursued will bring out great talent and the articles be of a superior kind, we are certain that he will be encouraged to still greater efforts. The present one is deserving the greatest possible support; and, we hope, that he will be able to send 100,000 of each of these Essays through the country. The plan he has marked out will enable societies and individuals to spread information in a most effective and economical way. We notice, also, the announcement of the republication of the Idolatry of Britain, at a price which will enable our friends to circulate this valuable work by thousands. The public spirit and enterprize which has marked the conduct of the proprietor of the Teetotal Times, is worthy of all praise.

The Life of Gough, published in Glasgow, at an astonishing cheap rate, is worthy of full encouragement and support; and we beg our readers to procure the cheap issue from the press of W. J. Paterson.

“It is a curious and important fact, that, during the periods when distilleries were stopped in 1796 and 1797, although bread and every necessary of life was considerably higher than during the preceding year, the poor, in that quarter of the town, where the chief part reside, were, apparently, more comfortable, paid their rents more regularly, and were better fed than at any period for some years before; even although they had not the benefit of the extensive charities which were distributed in 1795. This can only be accounted for by their being denied the indulgence of gin, which had become in a great measure inaccessible, from its very high price. It may fairly be concluded, that the money formerly spent in this imprudent manner, had been applied to the purchase of provisions and other necessaries, to the amount of some hundred thousand pounds. The effect of their being deprived of this baneful liquor was, also, evident in their more orderly conduct. Quarrels and assaults were less frequent, and they resorted seldom to the pawnbrokers' shops, and yet during the chief part of this period, bread was fifteen-pence the quarter loaf, and meat higher than the preceding year, particularly pork, which arose from the stoppage of the distilleries, but chiefly from the scarcity of grain.”—Colquhoun on the Police of the Metropolis, page 326.

MALICIOUS BURNING OF WHEAT.—On Sunday night (says the Tipperary Constitution), about the hour of eight o'clock, two sacks of wheat, the property of Mr. Michael Tobin, were maliciously set fire to, at Clerihan, by seven incendiaries, and were it not for the exertions of the police, and Mr. Tobin's neighbours, two other stacks would have shared the same fate. There is a police station within 600 yards of the scene of this outrage. What reckless ruffians must those be who thus destroyed one of the principal necessities of life in these days of misery and distress.

[What indignation is excited in our newspaper writers, at a misguided and desperate man, who fires a stack of grain. It is, we admit, a flagrant outrage, and excites our abhorrence. But how is it that this writer cannot see any wrong in taking the grain and converting it into poison? Does the magnitude of the destruction lessen the evil or the sin; or is it not rather as many of our other sins, winked at, because public opinion sanctions the manufacture of whiskey, and condemns the burning of a single stack of grain. The poor incendiary merely destroys it; the distiller and brewer convert it into a potent agent of crime and death.—ED, N.T.C.]

Foreign Intelligence.

CANADA.

EPISCOPAL METHODISTS—BAY OF QUINTE CONFERENCE.

The report on temperance which follows, was not designed by the committee for publication, but merely an expression of opinion upon this great moral movement. It was, however, ordered for publication, and will show that the temperance cause is one of vital importance in the estimation of the conference:—

"The committee, to whom was referred the subject of temperance, beg leave to report, that from their own personal knowledge, together with all the information they have obtained relative to the progress of temperance, or total abstinence from intoxicating drinks, throughout this province, believe the time has come when the efforts made by many of its professed friends, and by those who profess a true spirit of philanthropy, should be put in practice with more zeal and energy, and with a settled determination never to give up the contest until victory is complete.

"Your committee are fully aware of the great good done, and victory already gained in many places over the demoralizing and soul-withering influence of the foul serpent, intemperance, by those who have so much desired the peace and happiness of their fellow-men. Should, however, every minister of the gospel, together with all the lovers of truth, put their shoulder to the wheel of the temperance reformation, the conquest would soon be gained, and we would not be so much behind our neighbours in the United States in so noble and praiseworthy an enterprise.

"Your committee, in view of the whole, do earnestly recommend, that the members of this conference, both by precept and example, do all they can to suppress in their congregation, and the people generally among whom they are called to labour, an evil, that has been the cause of so much misery and wretchedness in our land, and throughout the world. All of which is respectfully submitted.

"WILLIAM BIRD.

"ROBERT EARL.

"JOHN H. ANDREWS."

—Canada Christian Advocate.

TEMPERANCE IN HONOLULU, SANDWICH ISLES.

All ships of war visiting this port, will bear witness to the general hospitality that prevails, so far as the means of the inhabitants will allow, and even further. This virtue extends to the missionary families, to whose quiet, orderly tea-parties, all strangers are welcome, who show any desire to cultivate their acquaintance. There are few towns of the same extent, where religious feeling more prevails, and certainly, none where more decency and order are preserved on the Sabbath. Another virtue peculiarly pervades the society of Honolulu, and that is TEMPERANCE; during eight months that I have been here, I have not seen one native intoxicated, and not one beggar.—Simmons' Colonial Magazine.

TEMPERANCE ABROAD.—A correspondent writes from Christiania that the Temperance Society has great influence over the sailors of the navy of Sweden and Norway. Out of the 444 men forming the crews of the Norwegian frigate the Freca, and the Swedish sloop the Nordsternen, which have just left Christiania for the Mediterranean, 302, that is more than two-thirds of them, have desired to receive rations of tea or coffee instead of brandy.

THE CAUSE IN VAN DIEMEN'S LAND.
HOBART TOWN.

(From the New South Wales and Van Diemen's Land Temperance Herald.)

March 3.—The usual meeting was held this evening in the Temperance Hall; Mr. Bonwick in the chair. The room was well filled with attentive listeners.

Mr. HODGSON said, there was expended in Van Diemen's Land, for colonial beer alone, £50,000 per annum. This amount might be made available for the purchase of 300,000 bushels of wheat, and would provide every man, woman, and child in Hobart Town, with 500 loaves. He then stated the number of public-houses in Hobart Town to be 160, their receipts being at least £120,000 per annum; so that, including the amount paid by families who purchased direct from merchants, or imported, it might be calculated that at least £150,000 per annum was spent for alcoholic drinks in Hobart Town alone, "and where (asked the speaker) are the results of this large expenditure seen? where, but in our hospitals and gaols?" Mr. Hodgson then exposed the fallacy of the arguments that the farmer benefited by the manufacture of alcoholic drinks; and showed that out of eight-pence spent for beer only two-pence went to the corn-grower; while out of eight-pence spent for bread, the corn-grower received sixpence: so that it might be truly said of the expenditure for strong drinks, that the few gain while the many suffer.

Mr. CROUCH then addressed the meeting, dwelling particularly upon some recent serious cases tried in the Supreme Court, arising mostly from intemperance. He also alluded to the important advancement of the noble band of Rechabites, whose numbers had now increased to 300,000.

Mr. JORDAN followed Mr. Crouch, and spoke with much feeling and effect. He referred with intense anxiety to the temptations to which the young teetotaler was exposed, and to the active means constantly resorted to by those by whom he was surrounded, to hurry him again into the vortex from which he had but just emerged.

The interest of the meeting appeared well sustained throughout the evening, and the audience separated highly pleased with the proceedings.

April 3.—A party of about thirty of the 11th regiment, who have recently attached themselves to the Total Abstinence Society, held a social tea-meeting at their temporary barracks, Old Wharf, on Wednesday evening last, to which Messrs. Jordan and Dickenson, and other friends of temperance, had been previously invited.

NEW ZEALAND.

From the New York Organ.

We are glad to find that in the new settlement of New Zealand the cause is progressing. The Wellington Total Abstinence Society lately held their annual festival in the Wesleyan chapel in that place. We have not received any details of the proceedings, but in the Wellington Spectator we have this notice of the meeting:—"The proceedings of the meeting were harmonious, and the members of the association appear determined to wage war against the frightful evil of intemperance. We wish success to everything that can in any way benefit our species. The Rev. Messrs. Watkiss and Inglis, and Messrs. Bradshaw, Harding, Hartley, and others, assisted in conducting the meeting. One of the chief attractions was the music and singing: there were several instrumentalists present, and their performances were excellent.

Home Intelligence.

WASTE OF FOOD, MR. INWARDS' LECTURES.

The first meeting in this series was held in the School Room, Harp Alley, Farringdon Street, on Tuesday evening, the 10th instant. G. W. Atwood, Esq., presided. It was a fearful thought that the liquors produced from grain, went to fill up poor houses and prisons, hospitals and lunatic asylums. And this, too, at a period when hundreds and thousands, especially in the neighbouring country Ireland, were actually famishing with hunger. If all classes felt duly for human woe and misery, what a change would come over their purposes and resolutions, and the whole of their conduct! A memorial had been resolved upon at the great meeting held in Exeter Hall, to be presented to the Prime Minister of this country; what answer was likely to be returned to that Memorial? Would he say that the Government had no right to control the people as to the use they should make of grain? Then, he would reply, The Government have no right to Excise laws, no right to grant licenses for the sale of the drinks made from that grain. He trusted, however, that a satisfactory answer would be returned to the Memorial. The Government certainly should make it their business to control all public nuisances.

Mr. INWARDS then delivered his address. He said that his particular object was to consider the subject in connexion with the corn question. God had given grain to men for food, and man was responsible for the use he made of it. If men had it in their power to improve any thing, they were bound to do so, but if they injured or destroyed that which was good or valuable, they would have to render a strict account to their Creator. Next to wheat, barley was the most nutritious grain grown in this country. Excellent bread might be made from it. But every change made in it by the process of malting, distilling or brewing, not only rendered it far less nutritious, but absolutely converted it into poison. In the hands of the farmer, barley was a means of life;—in the hands of the brewer, beer was a means of disease and death. Every tree was known by its fruits. The fruits of barley were good, all over the world; the fruits of malt liquors were evil, wherever used; disease, crime, want and misery were the results of their use according to the proportion in which they are used.

Mr. Inwards then proceeded, in a familiar and interesting manner, to detail the process through which it had to pass if it were converted into ale. He supposed two persons one a teetotaler, the other a beer-drinker, to have each 30 pounds of barley; the one intending to apply it to its legitimate uses, the other wishing only for beer. By expenses incurred in the processes of manufacturing and preparing for sale a gallon of ale, including the duties paid to government, and the profits required by the manufacturers and venders, the beer-drinker would have his 30 pounds of barley reduced to one pound and a quarter; while the teetotaler would retain his full quantity, and by making it into bread, or feeding pigs upon it, and so converting it into flesh meat, would greatly improve it and increase its value. The teetotaler would have the whole of his two shillings-worth, the beer-drinker would have the small—the very small—quantity contained in a gallon of two shilling ale. The teetotaler would have his free from tax; the beer-drinker would have his heavily taxed. The teetotaler would use the barley for the purpose for which it was sent, and be innocent and happy; the beer-drinker would pervert it, and expose himself to guilt and danger.—Again;—it was computed that, at least, seven million quarters of barley were consumed in the processes of malting and brewing. Seven million quarters of barley would cost fourteen millions pounds sterling; and that quantity would supply seven millions of people with bread for one year. But if that quantity of barley were converted into strong drink, it would cost seventy millions pounds sterling. Let it be used as barley should be used, and no harm would be done to any one, but much comfort would be diffused; let it be used as beer and how many bodies would it sustain? Not one; it was deprived of its nutritious properties; it became a source of disease. 50,000 persons were annually slain, thousands of professing christians became backsliders; thousands of mothers were made to weep, and thousands of children to suffer deeply. However plentiful grain might be, it would be wicked thus to employ it; but how was that wickedness increased, when by that perversion thousands were deprived of wholesome food? The failure to such an extent of the potato crop was deeply to be lamented; but it ought not to be forgotten that at the same time, thousands were destroying that grain which was still more valuable as food for the people. But for the large portions of grain destroyed in the manufacture of strong drinks, it would not be necessary to send to other countries for one single grain of corn. It could be proved that we in this country had never imported more than about two million and a quarter quarters of grain, while not less than seven million quarters were consumed in making strong drink! Enough grain was grown in this country for the supply of the population with bread, if it were only properly used. If the malt-houses and distilleries and breweries were closed, there would be plenty of food. Amidst all the scarcity, teetotalers could console themselves with the reflection that they had not assisted to render grain scarce by any perversion of it from its legitimate uses. They would account it wrong to make strong drink out of the nettles of the field! much more to destroy by its manufacture such large portions of wholesome food. Mr. Inwards concluded a very powerful address, by an earnest appeal to all present, beseeching them, for their own sake, and for the sake of others, to abstain altogether from the use of beverages which were so injurious, and which involved such a wholesale destruction of the precious gifts of Providence.

On Wednesday evening, Mr. Inwards delivered a similar address in the Temperance Rooms, Prince's Place, Westminster, when J. MEREDITH, Esq. presided. On Thursday evening, in the Hall, Henry Street, Portland Town, Mr. J. CASSELL, in the Chair.—On Friday evening, at the Welch Chapel, Aldersgate Street.—BENJAMIN ROTCH, Esq., in the Chair. On Saturday evening, Mr. Inwards lectured in the Hall, Fox's Lane, Shadwell, when the chair was occupied by T. B. SCUTT, Esq.

HAMPSHIRE.

Mr. James Balfour has been labouring in this district with considerable success. He has visited Branshott, Alton, Ryde, Newport, Cowes, Southampton, Romsey, Fordingbridge, Blandford, Wareham, Swanage, Bridport, Dorchester, Weymouth, Portland, Poole, Ringwood, Basingstock, Winchester and Andover during this last month. He has visited several workshops, in addition to his evening lectures, and has drawn attention to the compulsory drinking-usages. We have not space for the whole of his interesting journal, but give the following extracts:—

Oct. 1st. — Attended a harvest-supper at Alton, Hants, on the property of William Holmes, Esq. The hall was decorated with flowers and evergreens in various tasteful devices. A plentiful supper was spread, which 110 persons did ample justice to. The greater part of the company were farm-labourers and their families. The sight of the clean white smock frocks and rosy faces of the rustic guests was most delightful. The greater number of them were teetotalers of from 1 to 3 years' standing, and their appearance as regarded health and respectability, was highly creditable to the cause, and furnished a forcible contrast to most of the ale-drinking labouring men, in this famous ale-drinking and ale-brewing place. After supper the company adjourned to the Town Hall, which was densely crowded. The chair was taken by William Holmes, Esq. Several working men spoke with good effect, after which, my lecture concluded the business of the evening. Several signatures were obtained. The society in this place seems in a prosperous condition.

Oct. 8th.—Lectured at Southampton, in the Primitive Methodist chapel, kindly granted by the Rev. Mr. Hartly, who with his wife, are zealous friends of our good cause. The meeting was well attended. The teachers of the Sabbath-school met the children, previous to the meeting, to converse with them on total abstinence principles. The cause is going on well.

LEEDS TEMPERANCE SOCIETY.

The first monthly meeting of this society was held in South Parade (Baptist) chapel, last Tuesday evening. The chapel was comfortably filled, and the attention from first to last was well kept up, the audience testifying their approbation with enthusiastic applause. Alderman Carbutt was called to the chair, and opened the meeting in a neat and appropriate address, dwelling on the importance of the subject, and soliciting a patient and unprejudiced hearing to the various advocates who were to address them. Mr. Jervis Crake, agent and town missionary to the society, and Mr. W. Nelson, a reformed drunkard, severally addressed the meeting, in speeches of great power and pathos, the latter detailing a portion of his experience in a very affecting and telling manner, and also demonstrated how much may be accomplished by persevering individual exertion, by the fact that above 1600 individuals had signed the pledge through his instrumentality, whose names he kept in a book of his own.—W. Gordon, Esq., M.D., F.L.S., President of the Hull Temperance Society, gave a lucid exposition of the physiological effects of alcohol on the human system, and made what would otherwise have been a somewhat dry and abstruse subject, at once interesting and instructive. The following are a few extracts:—"Extraordinary exertions may be made by taking opium, and similar are the effects of alcohol. Does the fever give the patient strength? that strength depends upon the morbid state of the system; which is precisely the case with alcohol. Permanent strength depends upon the muscles; whatever increases the muscles, increases also the strength. Alcohol cannot enlarge the muscles, and cannot nourish or impart strength. It is after muscular exercise that recourse is had to these drinks. During exercise the nervous tissues undergo considerable waste, which alcohol is incapable of furnishing. Nitrogen does not enter the composition of this alcohol." Referring to different sensations we at times experience, Dr. Gordon observed—"Besides the sensation of fatigue, we have others such as hunger. If we take food, that will satisfy;—news of a startling and unexpected character will take away appetite, but does that nourish?" In reference to water and its benefits—"You cannot live without it. Steam is not more necessary for a locomotive than water is necessary for the animal system."—The Rev. Newman Hall, B.A., Independent minister, of Hull, congratulated the Leeds Temperance Society on the renewed efforts they were about to make on this important question, and testified his increasing conviction and attachment to the great principles of teetotalism, stating that as education is progressing—as monopoly was thrown down in regard to our trade and commerce—as peace principles were making rapid progress—as the gospel is spreading, there was no cause more likely to promote all these good works than temperance, and none hindering them so much as intemperance. Mr. Hall's very able and interesting address occupied above an hour in delivery, and was most rapturously applauded.—Mr. J. G. Thornton moved a vote of thanks to the deputation and the deacons of the chapel, remarking that this commencement of the proposed series of meetings was an exceedingly auspicious one, and trusted that they would prove efficient instruments in accelerating a cause calculated to elevate mankind, to glorify God, and to bless the world.

GREENWICH.

A large and influential meeting was held in the Hall of the Greenwich Literary and Scientific Institution, on the evening of Thursday, November 9th, to form a temperance association for that borough. B. Rotch, Esq., occupied the chair, and gave a very lengthy and powerful speech, occupying above an hour and a half in its delivery. This address made a great impression on the audience. After which Mr. Henry Cole read the Rules. S. C. Hall, Esq., then gave a very interesting and instructive address, containing some pleasing particulars about Ireland. The meeting concluded by a few observations from Mr. Beggs. Several signatures were obtained—and the new association was launched under the most encouraging auspices.

SHEERNESS.

On Monday evening, November 9th, a social teaparty was held in Bethel School Room, Mile Town, when upwards of 50 sat down to tea and cake, a sober man's repast; after which Mr. G. Morgan, Sec., T. Apsey, S. Wickham Lee, and Thomas Lee, severally addressed the meeting on the importance of individual exertion and support, after which the Rev. T. Denniss, Bible Christian Minister, gave an address on the blessings of total abstinence from all intoxicating drinks. The secretary stated that a letter had been received from a member in the East Indies, stating that he had got one of his shipmates to sign the pledge, and another had promised to sign: (he was happy and comfortable).

G. STUBBINGS, Secretary.

DEPTFORD.

The annual festival and public meeting of the Deptford Total Abstinence Society, was held on Monday, (November 2nd,) at the Infant School, New Street, Flagon Row; about one hundred persons sat down to a plentiful supply of tea, plum-cake, and bread and butter, and appeared highly to enjoy the treat. At the evening meeting, presided over by William Oxley, Esq., of Hackney, the secretary, Mr. Paine, read a report of the Society's prospects and progress, which report had the unusual feature of versification, and appeared highly gratifying to the audience; the pointed allusions, and animated style of the poetical document, eliciting their earnest applause. The different resolutions were supported by Messrs. English of Greenwich, Nelson of Woolwich, Johnstone of Peckham, Green of London, and other gentlemen. The crowded state of the meeting, and the general tone of feeling which prevailed, must have been highly gratifying to the friends of the Society in Deptford.—West Kent Guardian.

DOWN, FARNBOROUGH, KENT.

On Tuesday evening, November 3rd, 1846, a public meeting was held in the Calvinistic Chapel in the village of Down, near Farnborough, Kent, to introduce the principle of total abstinence from all intoxicating drinks, at the request of Miss Wedgwood, a lady of influence living in the village, and a warm and long tried friend of the cause. The National Temperance Society sent W. Claridge from the Office to give an address; he was well received, and listened to with attention by a crowded audience, amongst whom was the respected minister of the chapel, (who is practising the principle,) with nearly the whole of the members of his church and congregation, much interest was excited, and a good feeling evinced, which, if attended to and cultivated, will no doubt issue in a flourishing society, a Mr. Hemings, living in the family of Miss W. being an indefatigable and zealous labourer in the cause.

BRISTOL.—On Monday evening, November 16th, a large and enthusiastic meeting was held in the public-room, Broadmead, which was filled to overflowing, Robert Charlton, Esq., in the chair; when Messrs. J. Cox, J. Wheeler, N. Bailey, W. Parkinson, J. Grant, and J. Chapman, all reformed drunkards, related in brief terms, their sufferings and degradation, through intemperance, and their comfort, happiness, and enjoyments, through the instrumentality of teetotalism. Afterwards Henry Clapp, Jun. Esq., of Lynn, Massachusetts, delivered an interesting and stirring address on the origin, progress, and present position of the Washingtonian movement in America, together with some other features of the temperance reformation in that country, and concluded his most eloquent speech in appeals which we conceive will not soon be forgotten. Mr. Russom, having made some suitable observations, proposed a vote of thanks to Mr. Clapp, which was unanimously passed, and at the close of the Washingtonian meeting several individuals signed the pledge.

CHEDDAR, SOMERSET.

The tenth anniversary of the Cheddar Temperance Association was held in the British School-room, October 8th, 1846. The tea-party was well attended, and from the statements made at the public meeting which followed, by the Rev. E. Webb, the chairman, secretary to the Association, and by Mr. William Tanner, the treasurer, it appeared that the present state of the cause in this neighbourhood is very encouraging. Nearly £100 has been paid by the members of the Deposit Club connected with the Association, and a considerable increase in the number of associations for membership in the ensuing year has taken place. There have been very few, if any, instances of forfeiture arising from the breaking of the pledge in the last twelve months.

A distinct club for juveniles has now been formed. A large issue of tracts has taken place during the year, including the whole of the Ipswich, and many of the Bristol series.

Several other speakers addressed the meeting, and amongst them, Mr. Russell of Wedmore, a medical gentleman from Bristol, Mr. John Mason, surgeon to the General Hospital: though not a member of the Society he has totally abstained from alcoholic drinks for four years; and he bears a striking testimony to the belief which his personal experience and observation have induced as to the uselessness of such beverages, and as to the great benefit which would arise to the country from their entire disuse, as articles of diet.

Mr. Williams, agent to the Association, made a powerful appeal to the company, in support of total abstinence principles,

OPENING THE PORTS.

A meeting of the inhabitants of Bolton, convened by the Mayor, was held in the Temperance Hall, on Tuesday. The Mayor in the chair. After the adoption of the following resolution:—

“Resolved that the present state of the country in reference to its supply of food, is such as to require the immediate attention of her Majesty’s Government, and that it is desirable, therefore, to memorialize the Queen in council, praying that the ports of the United Kingdom may be forthwith opened for the free importation of all kinds of food.”

And a memorial to her Majesty’s Government founded upon it.

Mr. MATTHEW STEVENSON addressed the meeting. He alluded to another evil, which he considered as bad as the using of flour and rye for manufactured goods; and a remedy for which might easily be applied, without the aid of government. He would have them put a stop to the destruction of grain by making intoxicating fluids.—(Much applause.) And he contended this might be done without any sacrifice. The amount of grain used for this purpose was perfectly astonishing. Let them do this and endeavour to get the ports open also. But were it to be considered a sacrifice to give up intoxicating drinks, surely it was such a one as ought to be made by every one who wished to do good to his fellow-man, since his fellow was dying for want of food.

Mr. JAMES VICKERS, who was in the gallery, said the amount of grain annually consumed for the purpose named by Mr. Stevenson would supply 2,000,000 persons each with 2lb. of bread per day, for twelve months.

Mr. JAMES RAPER spoke in support of the arguments of Mr. Stevenson. He referred to the amount of grain used in the preparation of intoxicating drinks, he thought they were in a similar position to the waggons in the fable, who was commanded to do what he could himself towards extricating his waggon from the hole into which it had got, before he called on Jupiter for help. Mr. Raper then moved “That the members of this meeting feel it their duty to discontinue the use of liquors made from grain and potatoes, in consequence of the present scarcity of food.”

Mr. BRIDSON said he was called upon to second it,—(applause, which continued for some time)—and if Mr. Raper would put instead of the words, “their duty,” that it was “desirable,” he had no objection to do so. He had all along, hitherto, subscribed to the temperance movement. He was not yet a teetotaler; how soon he might become one he really did not know.—(Applause.) But he was quite sure it was now desirable that all parties should discontinue the use of the liquors in question.

Mr. RAPER considering expediency or “desirable” to be the next door to “duty,” and acting on the advice of friends around him, he should consent to alter the resolution as required.

Mr. SUTTLE opposed the motion, and made an amendment, that the motion be not put to the meeting.—(Laughter.)

The motion was put and carried, there being a considerable number of hands held up for it, and none that we could perceive against it.

The marriage of Miss Hannah Dickenson, the amiable daughter of Bernard Dickenson, Esq., of Coalbrookdale, to Joseph Sturge, Esq., of Birmingham, was celebrated at Coalbrookdale, on Wednesday, the 14th of October, when thirty-six of their friends sat down to dinner, and enjoyed the festivities of the day without the use of one particle of intoxicating liquor.—Bristol Temperance Herald.

CORNWALL.

(To the Editor of the National Temperance Chronicle.)

Believing the readers of the Chronicle to be interested in the success of the advocacy of total abstinence principles by James Teare, I venture to inform them, through the columns of the Chronicle, he is now labouring, and with considerable success, in this county. During the last week, I have attended seven meetings held by him, in each of which, he must have spoken near two hours, to well attended, and mostly to crowded meetings; and it is worthy of being recorded, the people listened most attentively, and were apparently well satisfied with the advocacy of thoroughgoing teetotalism, he feared not to tell the truth, and the people at the close assented to its being no more than the truth. The meetings held by him last week are, first, on the 12th, at Liskeard, a crowded meeting; 13th, at Looe, a fair meeting; 14th, at Liskeard, the Temperance Hall well filled, at the close 14 signatures; 15th, at Trevelnana, a capital meeting; 16th, at West Caradon Mine, in the middle of the day, to about 500 miners, forty-eight of whom signed the pledge, and many more were fully convinced the money they earn by the sweat of their brow ought not to be spent in intoxicating drink; in the evening, at St. Cleer, three miles distant, a full meeting, followed by eighteen signatures; the 17th, at West Mary Mine, to near three hundred miners, 18 signed the pledge. The result of these meetings have been, that more than 100 persons have signed the pledge. The cause which had been in a low state is again revived, the principle again brought before the people and faithfully explained, and we are hoping a fresh and a sound impetus is given that will not soon be effaced.

Liskeard, Cornwall.

J. C. ISAAC.

(To the Editor of the Temperance Chronicle and Recorder.)

RESPECTED FRIEND.—I sit down to give a notice of our temperance movements in this town; our experience convinces us we are not to be governed in our views by the signatures we may obtain to the pledge, these are always fluctuating and uncertain. We are more encouraged by perceiving the influences of our movements operating in various ways amongst the population generally, and amongst the upper class of society, through the influence of our highly esteemed President, Edward Hornor, to a great extent, who are now in many cases, ready to peruse our publications, admitting the soundness of our maxims, and in some cases frankly acknowledging that the love of their little drop is the only reason they can urge against adopting the principle; surely, if we persevere, we can ultimately induce such as these to value the interests of their fellow-creatures as of far more importance than the flavour of their glass of wine.

Trusting we shall all feel encouraged by each others exertions and the cheering results thus following, I subscribe myself your well-wishing friend though feeble co-adjutor.

B. SMITH, Treasurer.

Halstead, 11 Mo. 16, 1846.

DRINKING CUSTOMS AT FUNERALS.—DUNFERMLINE.—Some time ago, the Provost, magistrates, and ministers of Dunfermline, having taken into consideration, the prevailing custom of presenting liquors at funerals, appealed to the community, and recommended the abandonment of this useless and pernicious custom. In August last, the recommendation was made from the pulpits, and published in the local journals, and since that time the alteration has been effected without the least symptom of dissatisfaction from any party.—Scotsman.

THE EFFECTS OF ALCOHOL ON THE ANIMAL FRAME.

When alcohol is introduced into the circulation, its elements combine with the oxygen of arterial blood; and the globules becoming thereby deprived of this vivifying principle, no longer assume a florid red colour. The animal becomes asphyxiated; and if the quantity of alcohol be large, it dies as speedily as if it had been plunged into an atmosphere deprived of oxygen. Carnivorous animals, as the dog, which has a large stomach compared with the rest of the alimentary canal, are very easily affected by alcohol and may be destroyed by a moderate dose; for the liquid is rapidly absorbed, and is not carried beyond the duodenum. Herbivorous rodentia, as rabbits, are, in like manner, easily killed by small quantities of alcohol. Absorption takes place rapidly in the stomach, and alcohol is not found in the intestines. Granivorous birds, such as chickens, will bear comparatively larger doses of alcohol. The inner cavity of their stomachs is of limited extent, and the organ itself is formed of powerful muscles. When alcohol is injected, it is soon expelled from this cavity, and is found in the intestines; it is thence carried to the liver by the vena porta, and only reaches the great mass of the circulation slowly. Fish will live at a temperature of 41 degrees in water, which contains one half-hundredth part of alcohol.—Dublin Medical Press, from the Comptes Rendus.

INFANT MORTALITY.

"How pitiful is the condition of many thousands of children born in this world. Here, in the most advanced nation of Europe—in one of the largest towns in England—in the midst of a population unmatched for its energy, industry, manufacturing skill—in Manchester, the centre of a victorious agitation for commercial freedom—aspiring to literary culture—where Percival wrote and Dalton lived—thirteen thousand three hundred and sixty-two children perished in seven years over and above the mortality natural to mankind. These 'little children,' brought up in unclean dwellings, and impure streets—were left alone long days by their mothers, to breathe the subtle, sickly vapours—soothed by opium, a more 'cursed' distillation than 'hebenon'—and when assailed by mortal diseases, their stomachs torn, their bodies convulsed, their brains bewildered, left to die without medical aid,—which, like Hope, should 'come to all';—the skilled medical man never being called in at all, or to be summoned to witness the death, and sanction the funeral."—From the Registrar-General's last Report, just published.

[There is no reference here to the intemperance, which is the main producing cause of the numerous evils so very strongly put, and yet its close and intimate connection with the wretchedness of which it is in so many instances the parent, must be obvious to the most casual observer. The fact that the lower in degradation the population are sunk, the more numerous are the gin and beer shops, is in itself enough to excite attention. Ed. N. T. C.]

DISTILLERIES STOPPED IN IRELAND.

In Ireland this evil has been frequently felt. During the half century preceding the "Union," her parliament frequently "suspended" the distilleries in times of scarcity; and the interference of Great Britain in favour of some distilleries, which the king wished to be excepted from the general rule, was one of those causes which, acting upon the feelings of Irishmen, led to the achievement of legislative independence in '82.

Considered merely as regards the vast amount of food which it destroys, intemperance is, indeed, a very great evil.

BREWERS, DISTILLERS, &c., INIMICAL TO SOCIETY—FAMINE IN ENGLAND, 1316.

That the trade exercised by brewers, distillers, and other makers and venders of intoxicating drinks, is (independent of its immorality) inimical to the welfare of society, may be demonstrated by reference to history as well as to political economy. The following, from Lingard, vol iii, page 312, may be taken as a case in point:—

“A. D. 1316.—For three years the people (of England) groaned under the two most direful scourges that can afflict the human race—pestilence and famine. The deficiency of the harvest in 1314 had created an alarm, and the merchants of Newcastle, and probably those of the other ports, obtained the royal license to purchase corn in France and import it into England; but the supply was so scanty, that the king, at the request of parliament, which assembled in February, fixed a maximum on the price of provisions. This measure was of no avail. In defiance of the statute, the price of every article still advanced—wheat, peas, and beans, sold at 20s. the quarter; and even the king's family found it difficult on some occasions to provide bread for the table. Unfortunately, the following season was preternaturally wet and stormy, so that the more early crops were damaged by the rain; the others never ripened at all, and before Christmas the scarcity of the preceding year had been doubled. To add to this calamity, a pestilential disease raged among the cattle, and the want of nourishment, and the insalubrity of the food, produced dysenteries and other epidemic diseases among the people. The parliament, convinced by experience, repealed the maximum, and the king, at the suggestion of the citizens of London, suspended the breweries as a measure without which not only the indigent but the middle classes must have perished for want of food.”

He that will not apply new remedies, must expect new evils; for time is the greatest innovator.—Bacon.

FUNERAL OF RICHARD TURNER, OF PRESTON.—

In our obituary of the present week we have recorded the death of this noted individual, who, it is generally known, was the first to use the word “teetotal,” in reference to abstinence from all intoxicating liquors. His mortal remains were consigned to their last resting place on Sunday last, in St. Peter's Churchyard, Preston. The Rechabite band led up the procession, which was of great length, followed by Mr. Thomas Swindlehurst, Mr. William Howarth, Mr. Joseph Dearden, and other veterans in the cause of temperance belonging to that town. There were also a number of teetotalers from Blackburn, Bolton, Wigan, and the surrounding country, who were present to pay their last tribute of respect to one whose name will ever be identified with the teetotal movement. It was the misfortune of Richard Turner to be not only poor, but illiterate; yet by the mere accident of applying a vulgarism of his native county to a principle destined to lead the way in all substantial moral and social reforms: his memory will be revered, and a blessing pronounced upon it, when victorious warriors and ambitious statesmen, who have been popular in their day, are remembered but with disdain and abhorrence. To the last moment of his earthly pilgrimage he maintained his teetotal pledge inviolate, and as for several years he had been a consistent member of a christian church, his friends have the consoling assurance that he is now beyond the reach of temptation, in the land of “the pure in heart,” where he will for ever drink of the “pure river of the water of life.” He was interred in a new grave, purchased expressly for him by the donations of a few friends.—Correspondent of the Bolton Free Press.

Miscellaneous.

Providence has gifted man with reason; to his reason, therefore, is left the choice of food and drink, and not to instinct, as among the lower animals. It thus becomes his duty to apply his reason to that object; to shun excess in quantity, and what is noxious in quality; to adhere, in short, to the simple and the natural, among which the bounty of his Maker has afforded him an ample selection, and beyond which, if he deviates sooner or later, he will suffer the penalty.—Dr. Prout.

There exists at present in Great Britain, not less than 300,000 Sunday school teachers, and the number of the rising generation having no other instruction is two millions, making only about one out of ten who attend schools on a Sabbath day. (How important to influence such a large mass of teachers.)

PRIZE YOUR INTELLECTS.—The intellectual faculties are impaired by alcohol. Even moderate drinking weakens the intellect, blunts the power of discriminating perceptions, and, if it does not, as is often the case, make a man dishonest, renders him more liable to be deceived, and to make mistakes.

A second fertile source of pauperism, as already hinted, is the gin-shop. Our unwashed population have learned to carry their scanty means to the nearest dram-drinking shop, to enable them to destroy the ennui induced by discomfort. In cases where abundance of wholesome food is partaken, dram-drinking but slightly affects the constitution; but on the starved dwellers of our lanes, the effects of drinking are immediate, and fearfully fatal in destroying at once body and mind. Medical reports supply terrible evidence of the enfeebling, corroding effects of intoxicating drinks on the ill-fed part of the city. Every one who seeks the good of the community, is bound to encourage rational means for putting a stop to the fearful ravages intoxicating drinks are daily making. The temperance reformation has unquestionably been the means of effecting much good, though it is to be regretted, that its efforts have scarcely yet reached the class most in need. Like other and older institutions, its efforts have not yet been directed to the plagues and pests of society, though members of various societies have advocated that cause as they attended to the interests of Christian Instruction Societies and Sabbath Schools, &c. The industrial classes have chiefly derived the benefits of the movement, while the poor outcasts of our lanes have found no one to care for them. The difficulty of reaching such is, no doubt, great; but we trust that means will soon be adopted to make these the object of its solicitude.—Pauperism and Crime in Glasgow.

THE NATION'S CURSE.—Public houses are the curse of Scotland. I never see a sign, “Licensed to sell spirits,” without thinking that it is a license to ruin souls. They are the yawning avenues to rags and poverty in this life, and, as another has said, the “short cut to hell.” Is it to be tamely borne in this land of light and reformation, that these pest houses and dens of iniquity—these man-traps for precious souls—shall be open on the Sabbath—nay, that they shall be enriched and kept afloat by this unholy traffic—many of them declaring that they could not keep up their shop if it were not for the Sabbath market-day? Surely we may well say—“Cursed is the gain made on that day!” Poor wretched men! Do you not know that every penny that rings upon your counter on that day, will eat your flesh as if it were fire—that every drop of liquid poison swallowed in your gas-lit palaces, will only serve to kindle up the flame of a fire that is not quenched?—Rev. R. M. M'Cheyne.

It has been said, that "one half of the world little knows how the other half lives." This was forcibly brought to my mind a short time ago. I had heard of the great misery which exists in many parts of our famed metropolis; I had read of the almost heathen ignorance in which many are sunk; and being acquainted with one who esteems it a privilege to rise early and spend many an hour in dark abodes of wretchedness, there to speak of the gospel of a crucified Saviour, I determined to be an eye-witness of several cases, which had been named to me. I sallied forth one bright and joyous May morning with the above individual and after walking for a short distance, we turned into a small court, leading into a dark passage, we then mounted a steep and broken staircase, and entered a small and unfurnished room; and here a scene of poverty and woe presented itself. A poor woman, seated on part of an old box, was endeavouring to feed a dying infant. By her side stood her husband, a respectable carpenter, but who confessed that he had taken to drinking, had lost his employment, pawned his very tools, and was in a state of the deepest distress. I spoke to him of the hardmaster he was serving, whose only wages was sorrow and death, and of the blessed Master who gives eternal life, to those who serve him. Mark! the steps by which sin draws down its victims, and flee from the beginning of temptation.—Churchman's Penny Mag. September.

TONICS.—This word, derived from the Greek, signifies to give elasticity, and is employed by medical men to describe an elasticity of muscular fibre. That ardent spirits are not capable of giving this elasticity is well known. Anything which should give additional excitability to the brain, and increase the sensitiveness of the nerves, would be known to act diametrically opposite to tonic. The slight tanning principle in port wine may give it the character of a tonic, whilst the alcohol acting as an irritant impairs its value; and other tonics, such as bark, quinine, rhatany, columba, gentian, camomile, &c., may be applied with better effect, in infusions extracted by boiling water, or in making tea, or the dilute nitric or sulphuric acid, besides many preparations of iron. But for a moment we will suppose the wines to be tonic—if so, how long will a tonic medicine be beneficial? Every medical man knows that after a few weeks—say four at the most, generally at the end of half that time—a tonic becomes useless, and he has occasion to vary it and give another: but he will in the case of wine order it six months, and the patient will continue it for six years. Again, who ever heard, prescribing a tonic medicine to be taken on a full stomach? If a dose of any bitter infusion, or of acid, or of iron, is ordered, it is directed to be taken fasting; before breakfast, an hour before dinner, or at such times after dinner as that the stomach shall be unburdened; but in the case of wine, it is ordered at dinner-time, or generally after a full meal. Oh! the inconsistency and delusion of habit and custom, even upon scientific minds!

"When do you intend, Mr. B., to leave off selling intoxicating liquors?" said a by-stander to a publican, who replied, "When respectable people leave off buying."—New York Paper.

The wine of the wealthy, and the beer of the poor, are similar in kind and effect, and tend to evil. Habits of intemperance are progressively formed—the way is a precipice, and the first step over it—unless there be almost miraculous prevention—is enough. Our primeval parents who ate once of the forbidden fruit, ruined themselves.—F. A. Cox, D. D.

There is no zeal, no faithfulness, no pity, if we can see the wicked die, and refuse to save them. If a man were placed among a spirit-drinking population, where he saw thousands hurried down to death by that vice it would be his plain, undeniable duty to abstain. And if he lived among a population where it was not spirits, nor wine, but beer which was hurrying people to misery in time and eternity, it would clearly be his duty, according to the apostolic example, totally to abstain from beer. If we, as the disciples of Christ, are really anxious to convey blessings to the degraded, we must, we are absolutely bound to set them an example in this matter.—B. W. Noel, M. A.

HAS ALL BEEN DONE THAT CAN BE DONE?

When we look around us and see the general apathy that pervades the public mind on the great and momentous cause which we advocate, we are constrained to ask the friends of humanity if they think they have no more labour to perform? Has the world of speculation so engrossed the minds of men—even philanthropists—that they cannot see and also lend a hand in this great work, viz.: the salvation of men from the deepest degradation of intemperance, and show them the right way which they have perverted? If men were rightly affected by the sin with which they are surrounded, we think their whole souls would be enlisted for the good and ultimate salvation of the fallen ones by whom they are surrounded. Take them by the hand—teach them their remedy, which is a plain one; but it must be kept before the wind.

Let every believer in the revealed word of God, reflect, every time he sees the poor victim of intemperance stagger by him, that no drunkard can inherit the kingdom of HEAVEN. Then remember he can be saved; all that is necessary is proper effort, and I am God's minister for good, and the work belongs to me, I am individually responsible. If all professedly good men, or all who are truly good, would commence to reason in this matter, and act from their reasoning, how long, think you would you see men and women staggering in the streets? We venture to say not one day. O that such a spirit would come over the people. The Washingtonians have demonstrated to the world, that none are so deep in misery but that they may be raised to the highest enjoyment of God's creatures on earth. Then why doubt your power to do the work? If you will not work by crushing the tempter, will you lay hold and snatch the victim from his cruel grasp? We would urge these principles upon our readers by saying—SEE TO IT—SEE TO IT—SEE TO IT—and avoid the great responsibility.

Where are our Western Delavans, or have we none? if not, may the Lord send us some speedily. We plead not for ourselves, but for the cause of mankind, and we confidently hope and expect to see a great revival on this great subject. We are glad to know that measures have been taken to prosecute and bring to justice those in the city who tempt to sin; but, at the same time we would recommend that committees be appointed to go about and pick up those who have fallen by their swift arrows, and are at this moment struggling for life. This should be done, or they will perish from the wounds already received. It may well be said, in these latter days, THE HARVEST IS TRULY GREAT AND LABOURERS FEW.—Buffalo Cataract.

Poetry.

LUXURY AND WAR.

(By BISHOP PORTEUS.)

Yet say, should tyrants learn at last to feel,
 And the loud din of battle cease to bray—
 Should dove-eyed peace o'er all the earth extend
 Her olive-branch, and give the world repose.
 Would death be foiled? Would health, and strength, and youth,
 Defy his power? Has he no acts in store—
 No other shafts save those of war? Alas!
 Ev'n in the smile of peace—that smile which sheds
 A heavenly sunshine on the soul—there basks
 That serpent—Luxury. War its thousands slays—
 Peace its ten thousands. On the embattled plain
 Though death exults and claps his raven wings,
 Yet reigns he not ev'n there so absolute,
 So merciless, as in yon frantic scenes
 Of midnight revel and tumultuous mirth,
Where in the intoxicating draught concealed,
 Or couched beneath the glance of lawless love,
 He snares the simple youth, who nought suspecting
 Means to be blest, but finds himself undone!"

Notices.

The People's Temperance Library or Miscellany of Philanthropic Literature.

A beautiful little volume. The design is excellent, to collect from the ephemeral publications of the last ten years, and put in a permanent form the most deserving productions of our various temperance writers. We have often regretted that many meritorious articles worthy of preservation, were from the very nature of the works in which they appeared, short lived in their influence. The compiler of this volume will render a service quite as important as many of more ambitious pretensions. Much of the contents we are glad to see. Some few we should have been quite as well pleased to let remain in their obscurity. The book is cheap and excellent.

A Sermon delivered in the Lecture Room, London Lane, Hackney, on the occasion of the death of Mr. Wm. Biscombe. By J. W. GREEN.

We should rejoice to see this little tract obtain an extensive circulation, both on account of the charitable object, as its proceeds go for the benefit of the widow of Mr. Biscombe, and its own merits. Mr. Green has been one of our most useful temperance writers and known for a number of years as a labourer in the cause. His productions are always characterized by a good sense and a thorough knowledge of his subject. This tract will well repay perusal.

The History of J. B. Gough.—A reprint of this powerful production has just been published by Mr. Paterson, at the office of the Scottish Temperance Journal, in a new and popular shape, at one-eighth of its former price; thus bringing it within the reach of all, and will enable many to circulate it gratuitously. No plan they could adopt, seems more likely to show the effect of strong drink on the mind and character, than this striking piece of biography; and we hope that those who can employ means to that purpose, will assist in giving an universal circulation to the work in its present shape.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

We must beg of our correspondents to favour us with their articles a little earlier in the month. No article should reach us later than the 15th; and articles of intelligence not later than the 18th. The latter should always be accredited by the name of the party sending, which need not be given to the public.

"A Teetotaler" will see that our November No. had noticed the matter to which he refers.

G. F. will see that his article is anticipated.

A. L. The matter to which he calls our attention, is solely of a personal nature, and we therefore decline his article; hoping that he will see with us the great importance of keeping out personal discussions from our pages.

Advertisements.

WANTED, ONE HUNDRED THOUSAND SUBSCRIBERS.

On 1st January, 1847, will be published, No. 1. of

THE BRITISH LEAGUE;

OR,

TOTAL ABSTAINER'S MAGAZINE,

PRICE ONE PENNY.

THE CHEAPEST PERIODICAL IN GREAT BRITAIN.

This Magazine will be published on the first day of each month, and will consist of TWENTY-FOUR PAGES Demy Octavo. During the year, FOUR Supplements, of Twelve Pages each, will be given without extra charge to Subscribers of Twelve Months. These Supplements will contain a complete and authenticated history of the present state of the Temperance Cause all over the world. The number for MARCH will contain a HISTORY of the CAUSE as it at present exists in ENGLAND. Arrangements are being entered into with many of the most Eminent Literary Characters of the present day, for regular contributions on the various branches of the subject, namely,—the Church—the Government—the People—the Young, and an Original Song, with music, in each Number, and occasional Portraits of distinguished Advocates; and the services of the faithful Advocate, Lecturer, Secretary, and Agent, will be sought and secured, to render this work one of reference. Every Original Article inserted or made use of will be paid for according to a scale of the utmost liberality.

Robert Lofts: C. Zeigler, Edinburgh; Houlston and Stoneman, London; George Gallie, Glasgow.

Just Published.

THE WORLD'S

TEMPERANCE CONVENTION.

THE REPORT OF THE

PROCEEDINGS OF THE CONVENTION,

WITH AN INTRODUCTION,

By ELIHU BURRITT.

And a selection of the most valuable papers sent into the Business Committee.

The Committee, in order to invite a large sale, have decided upon publishing the volume at cost price.

Sewed in wrapper, 1s. Bound in cloth, 1s. 6d.

C. GILPIN, Bishopsgate Street Without; HOULSTON AND STONEMAN, Paternoster Row.

ASSOCIATION FOR THE REDUCTION OF THE DUTY ON TEA.

WILLIAM NICOL, Esq., Chairman.

CHRISTOPHER RAWSON, Esq., } Deputy Chairmen.
HENRY WINCH, Esq., }

WILLIAM BALLENY, Esq., Treasurer.

ROBERT C. CROSBIE, Esq., } Honorary Secretaries.
JOHN SCOTT, Esq., }

COMMITTEE.

GEO. ARMSTRONG, Esq.
THOMAS BOLD, Esq.
EDWD. BRODRIBB, Esq.
W. P. BUSHBY, Esq.
MALCOLM CORRIE, Esq.
C. COTESWORTH, Esq.
EDWARD CROPPER, Esq.
JOHN CROPPER, Jun. Esq.
J. CROSFIELD, Esq.
R. DUCKWORTH, Esq.
A. FINDLAY, Esq.
W. F. FOSTER, Esq.
R. FRY, Esq.
T. FRY, Esq.
GEORGE GRANT, Esq.
W. F. GRAY, Esq.
DANL. HARRISON, Esq.
L. HEYWORTH, Esq.

J. HOSACK, Esq.
A. KELSO, Jun. Esq.
H. LITTLEDALE, Esq.
T. LITTLEDALE, Jun. Esq.
H. MATHESON, Esq.
W. G. MOLYNEUX, Esq.
WILLIAM POTTER, Esq.
W. PROWSE, Esq.
WM. RATHBONE, Esq.
W. RATHBONE, Jun. Esq.
W. ROTHERAM, Esq.
G. C. SCHWARBE, Esq.
T. W. SHARLAND, Esq.
JAMES STEAINS, Esq.
J. THOMSON, Esq.
CHARLES TURNER, Esq.
JAMES TYRER, Esq.

In announcing the formation of this Association, the committee feel that little introduction from them is necessary to ensure from the public their hearty concurrence and support, seeing the benefit which would accrue to all classes of the community from the realisation of the object they have in view.

It has long been the conviction of philanthropists, that the obtaining for the poor, at a moderate price, a beverage so wholesome as Tea, would be an inestimable boon, not merely on account of its comfort as an article of daily use, but especially on account of its tendency to promote social feeling and temperance, with all the domestic and orderly habits consequent thereupon.

Ample experience has also convinced the merchants engaged in the trade with China, as well as those engaged in the Tea trade at home, that our export trade with the Chinese is in danger, and that to preserve it, there is the most urgent necessity for a large reduction of the present high duty on Tea.

The committee earnestly request attention to the following considerations on this important subject:—

That the present duty on Tea is exorbitant, being 2s. 2½d. per lb., or nearly 200 per cent. on the average value, and from 300 to 400 per cent. on the lower qualities, a much higher duty than that imposed on any other necessary of life.

That pressing, as this duty does, most heavily on the lower kinds, it prevents the use of Tea amongst the most numerous class of our countrymen.

That the original cost of Tea is very moderate, the bulk of the qualities generally consumed varying from 8d. to 2s. per lb., and that its consumption is restricted by no indisposition on the part of the public to purchase it, but by its high price, caused solely by the present oppressive duty.

That there is scarcely a limit to the capacity or disposition of the Chinese to purchase our manufactures.

That while, as already stated, our duty on Tea ranges from 200 to 400 per cent., the Chinese admit our imports at an ad valorem duty of five per cent.

That this impolitic duty materially limits our exports to China, and seriously interferes with the employment of labour.

The committee feel confident that a similar increase to that which has taken place in the consumption of coffee, by the material reduction of the duty, may be anticipated from a proportionate reduction of the duty on Tea.

That thereby the consumption of Tea would be greatly augmented, and the revenue correspondingly benefited.

The committee feel assured, that there will hardly be found a single opponent to the justice of their claim, and that it only requires the hearty co-operation of the public to ensure success.

Subscriptions will be received by the Treasurer, or any member of the committee.

WILLIAM NICOL, Chairman.

No. 1. Exchange Buildings, Liverpool, Nov. 2, 1846.

TO TEMPERANCE AND TOTAL ABSTINENCE SOCIETIES.

HOULESTON & STONEMAN beg to announce for sale:

1. THE SERIES OF TRACTS PUBLISHED WITH THE SANCTION OF THE NATIONAL TEMPERANCE SOCIETY, upwards of 150 sorts. 2 pages, at 8d. per 100; 4 pages, at 1s. 4d per 100; 8 pages, at 2s. 8d. per 100.

2. The above Tracts, done up in packets, Nos. 1 to 4, at 6d. each.

3. THE LOAN TRACTS, to form a series of sixty numbers, done up in covers for Loan Circulation. Nos. 1 to 30 are now ready, containing sixteen pages each, at 8s. per 100.

4. A NEW TEMPERANCE MANUAL, containing Rules and Suggestions for the formation of Auxiliary and Branch Associations. Price 3d.

5. THE COLLECTING, PLEDGE & MINUTE BOOK; for the use of Branch Temperance Societies. Price 3d.

6. A new 4 page Tract, entitled "Scarcity," at 1s. 4d. per 100.

7. THE NATIONAL TEMPERANCE SOCIETY'S PLEDGE TICKETS, price 3d. per sheet; each Sheet contains 32 Tickets.

8. THE NATIONAL TEMPERANCE SOCIETY'S RULES for BRANCH SOCIETIES, 4 pp. 8vo, price 1d.

The above publications are offered to Associations with the sanction of the National Temperance Society. Parties who order quantities of either of them will receive the full trade allowance from the Publishers.

65, Paternoster Row, London.

January 1, No. I. Price Twopence, New Series.

EDITED BY A TEETOTALER.

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL MAGAZINE.

Richly illustrated with Engravings, and admirably adapted to the Superintendents, Teachers, Scholars, and Friends of the Sabbath Schools in every Evangelical denomination.

From the Rev. Dr. James of Birmingham,—

"I conscientiously and earnestly recommend this periodical."

London: Simpkin, and all booksellers.

HYDROPATHY.

Dr. G. H. HEATHCOTE, Licentiate of the College of Physicians in London, &c., receives patients at Grosvenor House, Tunbridge Wells, to be treated on the principles of Hydropathy.

IPSWICH JUVENILE TEMPERANCE BOOKS.

A Series of little books, consisting of sixteen pages each, 32mo., with coloured covers, and each illustrated with a handsome woodcut, is now coming out in six-penny packets, of glazed coloured paper, containing with covers 320 pages. A sample will be sent for 12 penny stamps.

The following are now ready :—

1. The History of Teetotalism.
2. Scriptural Teetotalism.
3. Teetotalism of Ancient History.
4. Teetotalism of Modern History.
5. The cost of Intemperance.
6. Self-denial.
7. Early Habits.
8. The Force of Example.

Eight more little books, with Anecdotes, Tales and Biography, are expected to be ready next month.

IPSWICH TEMPERANCE TRACTS.

1. The Doctor Scrutinized, or for what purpose do Physicians prescribe Alcoholic Beverages, by R. D. Alexander, F.L.S., 122 thousand... 8
2. Striking Facts, 79 thousand... 2
3. Maker and Vender, 44 thousand... 2
4. Our Creed, 47 thousand... 2
5. Adulterated Beer, 34 thousand... 4
6. Adulterated Wine, 40 thousand... 4
7. The Maltster, 37 thousand... 4
8. Go Feel what I have Felt, 53 thousand... 2
9. Facts are Stubborn Things, 48 thousand... 2
10. The Spirit Dealer, 35 thousand... 2
11. Christian Teetotalism, 70 thousand... 2
12. The Trade, 33 thousand... 4
13. Alcohol, 33 thousand... 4
14. The Town of Ipswich, 33 thousand... 4
15. Song of the Water Drinker, 37 thousand... 2
16. Stimulation not Strength, 30 thousand... 8
17. Farmer Woodman's Speech, 41 thousand... 4
18. The Beer Barrel Examined, 23 thousand... 8
19. Teetotal Recipes, 38 thousand... 4
20. Speech of J. J. Gurney, 30 thousand... 4
21. Pity the Poor Drunkard, 49 thousand... 2
22. The Fool's Pence, 25 thousand... 8
23. Why am I a Teetotaler? and the Inch Auger, 26 thousand... 2
24. Dost thou smoke, Bill? 34 thousand... 4
25. William the Laudanum Drinker and John the Tradesman, 30 thousand... 4
26. The Ox Discourse... 4
27. Letter to the Clergy, by a Brother Clergyman, 21 thousand... 20
28. Common Sense for those who do not think by proxy, by a member of the University of Cambridge, 20 thousand... 20
29. Ralph the Soldier... 4
30. Testimony of Eminent Physicians, 30 thousand... 4
31. The Working Man, 25 thousand... 20
32. Is I not happy? by Hugh Stowell, 30 thousand... 4
33. David the Shoemaker, and Who is my Brother? 49 thousand... 4

	PAGE
34 The Drunken Couple, 38 thousand	2
35 Confessions of a drunkard, 29 thousand	2
36 Master Tailor, 20 thousand	4
37 The Fatal Gift, 36 thousand	2
38 Poor Sandy	4
39 Use and abuse, by Archdeacon Jeffreys, 34 thousand	2
40 The Schoolmaster	4
41 Water is Best, by J. J. Gurney, 37 thousand	8
42 Cobbett's Advice	4
43 Take a Public House	4
44 A Sailor's Yarn	4
45 Moderate Drinking Calmly Considered	16
46 The Pledge	4
47 John Jarvis, or the Pledge Signed	12
48 The Fifteen Friends	2
49 Sunday School Teachers, 22 thousand	12
50 Sunday School Children, 40 thousand	12
51 Money better than Beer, 37 thousand	4
52 Little Mary; or a Daughter's Love	8
53 Philosophy of the Temperance Movement, by R. T. Trall, M.D.	20
54 Love to Man, or an Appeal to the Pious in Favour of Total Abstinence	20
55 The Young Woman's Tract	12
56 The Young Man's Tract	16
57 Dr. Campbell's Testimony to the Temperance Reformation: its Importance; and the Duty of Christians in regard to it, 18 thousand	8
58 Why Sign the Pledge? 40 thousand	2
59 The Poor Man's House Repaired	4
60 The Mother's Tract	8
61 The High Price of Food	4
62 Ladies' Tract Societies	8
63 The Praise of Water; Extract of a Lecture by the Rev. T. Spencer, 25 thousand	2
64 Important Calculation, on the back of which is a LIST OF ALL THE IPSWICH TRACTS, 30 thousand	2
65 The Farm Servant, 25 thousand	4
66 Teetotalism Declining; with an Address to the Directors of Railways, 15 thousand	8
67 The Reformed Drunkard, and the best means of Reforming the Drunkard, 20 thousand	8
68 The Recruit of the British Legion	8
69 No. 1 of Temperance Anecdotes and Teetotal Varieties	12
70 No. 2 ditto	12
71 No. 3 ditto	12
72 No. 4 ditto	12
73 Luke Husler, or "I did not like to say No."	8
74 The Drunkard's Wife	8
75 The Unexplored Island	4
76 Ancient Wines; by R. D. Alexander	8
77 Influence of Example—and Address to Christians 2	2

ASSORTED PACKETS.

- No. 1, containing Tracts No. 1 to 35 inclusive.
 " 2, " " 36 to 57 "
 " 3, " " 58 and upwards.
Each Sixpence.

Twenty-four Sixpenny Packets, of either Juvenile Temperance Books or Tracts, will be delivered in London for Half-a-guinea, or 50 Packets for a Guinea, being sent by a Post-office Order to Richard Dykes Alexander, Ipswich.

SAMPLES OF THE WHOLE WILL BE FORWARDED POSTAGE PAID, in return FOR 40 PENNY STAMPS, SENT TO THE EDITOR OF THE TEMPERANCE TRACTS, IPSWICH.

London, Simpkin and Marshall; Ipswich, Burton; Leeds, Kershaw; Norwich, Jarrold and Sons; Manchester, Holker; and of all Booksellers.

TEETOTAL TIMES PRIZE ESSAYS.

FIFTY POUNDS has been offered by the Proprietor of the Teetotal Times for the five best Essays, upon as many subjects connected with the principle of total abstinence from strong drinks. The subjects selected are the following.—“The Importance of the Temperance Reformation, as a Means of Elevating the Working Classes, Physically, Socially, morally, and religiously;”—“In its Relation to Trade and Commerce;”—“In its Influence upon Females in the several relations of life;”—“In its Connexion with the Maintenance and Spread of Christianity;”—“A Discussion of the Question, Is it right or wrong for Persons, especially for the followers of Christ, to Use, or to Countenance the Use of Alcoholic Beverages?”

For the first of these Essays, the Adjudicators have awarded the premium of Ten Pounds to Mr. D. G. PAINE, of Deptford. This will be published early in January next, and will form the first of a series to be entitled,— to form a companion to the Teetotal Times, which it will resemble in size and appearance. This number will be followed, as the title imports, monthly, by the Essays already named, which, in their turn, will be succeeded by other Essays, from the pens of the most able writers in the Temperance Body.

THE TEETOTAL ESSAYIST; OR, MONTHLY TEMPERANCE STANDARD

Single copies will be sent regularly, post free, to the residence of every subscriber of one shilling per annum in advance. Societies and individuals, who are desirous of availing themselves of this very eligible mode of advocating the teetotal system, will be supplied with the Essayist, at 6s. per 100, which will be sent to them free, either in parcels, or in single copies, to such individuals whose names may be furnished. Any society sending three pounds may receive one thousand copies for circulation, or folded and sent singly by post to one thousand persons, whom they may choose to name. A large town may thus be cheaply supplied with important information on the temperance question.

As much time will be required to prepare the lists, &c., orders should be sent without delay, addressed to Mr. JOHN CASSELL, Tea Merchant, Nos. 14 and 15, Budge-row, London.

It is the anxious wish of the Proprietor to forward copies of these Essays gratuitously to ministers, magistrates, medical practitioners, members of parliament, and other influential individuals. The great good likely to result from such a circulation will, it is hoped, induce every friend to the cause to assist the Proprietor to carry out this part of his plan most extensively by contributions for that purpose. As a guarantee for the due appropriation of such fund. JOHN DUNLOP, Esq., G. W. ATWOOD, Esq., and the Rev. W. R. BAKER, have kindly consented to act as a committee.

INTEMPERANCE THE IDOLATRY OF BRITAIN.

This Volume, written by Rev. W. R. BAKER, author of Intemperance the Curse of Britain, has long been esteemed one of the most ingenious, interesting, and impressive, which has been published during the temperance movement. Two editions have already been exhausted, at 2s. 6d. per copy, and the work is still in demand. The Proprietor of the Teetotal Times, anxious that this most instructive volume should have a very extensive circulation, has purchased the copyright, with the intention of publishing a neat edition, complete, at THREEPENCE! It is obvious that a very large edition must be sold, merely to cover the expenses of print and paper. But this he confidently anticipates. As teetotalers are anxious to enlist the religious portion of the community in their cause, and as this volume contains the most powerful appeals to that class, its extensive circulation may prove the means of large accessions to their numbers. The Book will be ready by JANUARY 1st, 1847; but orders should be sent some time before that day.

W. BRITAIN, 11, PATERNOSTER ROW.

TEMPERANCE PROVIDENT INSTITUTION,

39, MOORGATE STREET, LONDON.

ESTABLISHED 31 DECEMBER, 1840.

FOR MUTUAL LIFE ASSURANCE, ANNUITIES, &c.

NOTICE IS HEREBY GIVEN THAT THE SIXTH ANNUAL MEETING OF MEMBERS WILL BE HELD AT THIS OFFICE ON FRIDAY, THE 1ST JANUARY AT 3 O'CLOCK.

THEODORE COMPTON, Secretary.

Members are admitted at all ages, and of both sexes, for any sum from £10 to £2000.

The whole of the profits will be divided amongst the members, according to the date of the entrance.

THE STATISTICAL DOCUMENT READ AT THE CONVENTION IS NOW PRINTED, AND MAY BE HAD GRATIS AT THE OFFICE.

Papers to fill up; Rules, and every information will be given, or sent gratis to any part of the kingdom.

* * The NATIONAL TEMPERANCE CHRONICLE and TEMPERANCE RECORDER is published on the first day of each month, at HOULSTON & STONEMAN, the Depot of the National Temperance Society, 65, Paternoster-row, and will be sent post-free for one year on receipt of 2s. 6d. postage labels. Annual Subscriptions received at the Society's office, 11, Tokenhouse Yard, London, and subscriptions and donations for the general purposes of the Society, by the Treasurer, G. W. ALEXANDER, 40, Lombard Street; by any Member of the Committee; and at the office as above.

London: Printed by RICHARD BARRETT of 3, Regent-terrace City-road, in the Parish of St. Luke, in the County of Middlesex, Printer; at his Printing Office, No. 13, Mark-lane, in the Parish of Allhallows Staining, in the City of London; and published by JOHN STONEMAN, of 24, Brooksbury Street, in the Parish of Islington, in the County of Middlesex, at HOULSTON and STONEMAN'S, No. 65, Paternoster-row, in the Parish of St. Michael-le-Querne, in the City of London, Publishers.—Tuesday, December 1st, 1846.

THE
NATIONAL TEMPERANCE CHRONICLE
 AND
TEMPERANCE RECORDER.

It is good neither to eat flesh, nor to drink wine, nor anything whereby thy brother stumbleth, or is offended, or is made weak.—ROM. XIV. 21

No. 13, JOINT SERIES.]

JANUARY, 1847.

[PRICE 1d., STAMPED 2d.]

CONTENTS.

	PAGE		PAGE
Juvenile Delinquency	1	National Temperance Chronicle and Recorder.....	9
Teetotalism and Sunday Schools	2	Tracts for the Young	9
Opening of the Temperance Hall at Cirencester.....	4	Teare Testimonial	8
Temperance Meeting in the Tabernacle, City Road	5	HOME INTELLIGENCE—
Edinburgh	7	Leeds Temperance Society—Bradford—York Working
Origin of Wine	7	Men's Temperance Demonstration—Dover—Ninth
Prospects of 1847	8	Anniversary of the Chatham, Brompton, &c., Tempe-
National Temperance Society. Fund for 1847-8-9.....	8	rance Society—Dorset and Hants—Saffron Walden—
Subscriptions	9	Rochdale—Walthamstow—Gateshead—Central Asso-
Teetotal Times' Prize Essays.....	9	ciation—Mr. H. Clapp's Labours in the West	10-14
World's Temperance Convention	9	To Correspondents—Advertisements	14-16

JUVENILE DELINQUENCY.

At the last Middlesex Sessions Mr. Serjeant Adams drew the attention of the Grand Jury to the fact, that there were no less than 24 of the offenders on his list whose ages did not exceed 12 years. Since the abolition of summary conviction, our juvenile delinquents having been transferred from the police office to a higher court, the amount of youthful depravity and crime has been brought more prominently before the public eye. The same high authority informs us, "that in one year there had been 1600 cases, where summary convictions had taken place, of children between the ages of 7 and 15." The Morning Chronicle, in an article on this subject, gives an instance, where a child only seven years old, and as the report stated, only two feet ten inches in height, was found guilty of picking pockets. The writer records the observations of the commiserating judge. "What can be done with this little child? It would be ruin to send him to prison. These scenes are positively heart-rending. Am I to pass over the cases of these children as though the fact of their being brought here was a mere matter of course? Am I to change my nature, and steel my feelings against the claims and helpless condition of so small a creature as that brought before the court? What can be done with this little child?" The writer proceeds,—“Aye, my lord, a serious question for you in your judicial, and vastly more so for society in its collective capacity. There are hundreds of thousands of children in this country in the like condition of neglect and ignorance to that ‘small creature’ of seven years old, who stood for justice and mercy at the bar of your lordship’s court; whom justice pronounced guilty, and mercy sentenced to one hour’s imprisonment, restoring him at the expiration of that term, to the charge of his unhappy parents.”

The writer goes on to give what he calls “a brief epitome of the entire physiology of crime,”—describes the way by which boys are allured to petty frauds and thefts, by older accomplices, and spend the money in gingerbread, often in “gin and cigars” and other flash luxuries, for which the precocious delinquent has acquired a taste; and after stating that some 1600 are caught, and probably some ten or twenty times that number are continuing an undetected course of crime, the writer concludes by recommending instruction, and very justly says, that the “state is lavishing on gaols and gaolers, and police; on culprits and convicts, and on law expenses, many times the amount that would secure to every child in the land, the blessings of a good education.”

True, society has always wasted in its blundering attempts to cure, ten times the amount of labour and means, which would have been needed to secure efficient measures of prevention. However expert the writer in the Morning Chronicle may be in dissecting the causes of crime, there is some fear that he has much to learn in the physiology of society. He has mentioned the love of gin as one of the temptations supposed to influence the youth in his pursuit of theft or fraud; but why has he not inquired, whether the love of intoxicating drink in the parent, may not have been the first cause in the life of crime, that is ultimately to terminate at the penal settlements? Juvenile immorality must be sought not only in the want of education, but in the degeneracy of morals found among the very base of society—fed and fostered by strong drink. All reforms will be mere palliatives, that are not associated with an entire abolition of the drinking habits. Immensely important as education is, it would be ineffectual so long as parents are themselves slaves to the most selfish of all vices. Only a few months ago, the Morning Chronicle gave an account of a poor child, 9 years of age—brought before the magistrates—and it was proved, in evidence, that his mother, a drunken washerwoman, had sent him into the streets to steal. Is it not notorious to all who have paid the least attention to the subject, that thousands of these poor children are trained systematically to crime, whilst others who have the benefit of Sabbath-school instruction, and kind and indulgent parents, take their first lesson in dissipation at the tavern, where music and dancing are allowed, nay, actually licensed by law. Skilled as our contemporary is in the anatomy of crime and accustomed to the monotonous records of our police and criminal courts; it would be well if he could show us how education is to effect the desired change? how it is to operate in removing this hideous evil—an evil that sickens as we think of it. We are friends of education. But there is an education besides that of the schoolmaster—the education of the home: and it is desirable that writers on our social maladies, should penetrate into our darkened abodes, where vice broods in every form, and from which dens of filth, drunkenness, and riot, thousands of children are trained up, without any knowledge of religion, or any cultivation of their mental and moral powers, except, that which makes them adepts in fraud. One hour's active visitation in these neighbourhoods where squalor and gin-shops are found in equal proportions, from whose population, the fever-hospital, the poor-house and the gaol are tenanted, would do much to correct the theories of men, who philosophise on the state of society at a distance, and would fain adapt its wants to their own theories, instead of adapting their reforms to meet its wants. The government may offer facilities for education, and establish schools, but it has licensed and encouraged a traffic that will, so long as it exists, create a far larger amount of evil than seminaries for instruction can in the very nature of things counteract. It is true, that the higher and middle-classes know little of the actual state of our poorer population, and are as little able to legislate for them, as if they were devising means of improvement for the people of China and Peru. But writers like those who furnish the articles to our leading journals, and thus give a tone to public sentiment, have opportunities to judge practically of our social condition. How is it, that their eyes are blinded to the evil of our drinking-system? Judges, magistrates, governors of prisons, &c., have all spoken out as to its effect upon morality and crime, and yet, to our amazement, the press takes it up only as a matter of course, and in treating a subject of overwhelming importance, like the present one, that has startled some of the greatest minds of the present day, it does not condescend even to inquire into the nature or extent of our drinking-habits, or whether they are proximate or remote causes of that juvenile delinquency, which the writer so eloquently deploras.

Is it true, that to supply the parents' love of drink, children are deprived of home and education, and sent to labour at an early age, reared up decrepit and ignorant, to follow the pernicious example set them? Is it true, that a vast number of our Sunday-scholars are destroyed by the snares connected with our drinking-customs? Is it true, that the majority of cases of children brought before our judges and magistrates, have debauched parents, or are entrapped by adults of dissipated habits? and that drunken mothers are living upon the wages of sin of their poor unhappy daughters? All these things are capable of proof by facts; not solitary or isolated ones, but such as will remove all doubt and scepticism. On a recent investigation of some parts of the metropolis, out of 885 persons, who entered one large gin-shop, in the space of an hour and a quarter, 339 were women, 28 were women with infants at their breasts, and 49 were children, apparently under 12 years of age. In the same parish, almost entirely filled with poor inhabitants, out of nearly 3000 children, of a suitable age for instruction, only 513 were attending regularly Sabbath-schools. What were the reasons assigned by superintendents and school-masters? 1st, Intemperance of parents. 2nd, Poverty. But we shall make these and some other facts the subject of another article, and conclude this, by calling attention to the second article in our present number, in which some extracts are made from the important report lately published by the Rochdale Total Abstinence Society.

TEETOTALISM AND SUNDAY-SCHOOLS.

(From the London Teetotaler.)

We rejoice to find that the attention of SABBATH-SCHOOL TEACHERS, in various parts of the kingdom, is directed to the great importance of connecting the inculcation of strict sobriety with their other efforts; and of bringing the children under their care more fully within the influence of temperance, by forming societies expressly for the teachers and their pupils. The necessity of this measure has been forced upon them by frightful cases of juvenile delinquency which are almost continually coming to their knowledge. In the REPORT OF THE ROCHDALE Total Abstinence SOCIETY, just published, considerable stress is laid upon this point. After quoting largely from DR. CAMPBELL'S article on the subject, which appeared a few months ago in the Christian Witness, they refer to "the great number of elder scholars, who are dragged from our schools by the drinking system. Some cases are then cited. The first is that of a school near London, the account of which appeared in the first volume of the Temperance Intelligencer, where "out of one hundred boys taken from the School Register, ninety-one were known to be open drunkards. A similar investigation took place in Launceston, and the result proved that "in a well-conducted Sabbath-School, one hundred names of boys were taken as they stood on the register, and out of that hundred, twenty-six had left the neighbourhood, and were unknown; of the remaining seventy-four, forty had been overcome by drunkenness.

May we not rationally conclude, that the principle of temperance was not duly inculcated, by precept and example, even in this "well-conducted" School? And may not the following cases, from the Rochdale report, be cited in proof?—"A few months ago, a member of Committee visited one of the singing saloons in Rochdale, and on Saturday evening about eleven o'clock, he observed sixteen boys and girls seated at a table in front of the stage; several of the lads had long pipes, each with a glass or jug containing intoxicating liquors, and no less than fourteen of the number were members of Bible classes in our different Sunday Schools. There they sat, listening to the most obscene songs, witnessing scenes of the most immoral kind, and spending the interval in swallowing liquid fire." It is added, "These sinks of iniquity are thronged with old Sunday-scholars, especially on Sabbath evenings, and not infrequently until twelve o'clock. One of the landlords lately appeared before the magistrates, and sneeringly stated to the gentlemen on the bench, that his saloon was open until twelve o'clock, and that in his opinion, they were very appropriately closing the Sabbath, by singing 'Praise God from whom all blessings flow,' to the tune of the Old Hundredth."

Again:—"In 1840, an interesting lad was a member of a bible-class in one of the schools in this town: (Rochdale) but commenced to frequent a public-house on Saturday and Sunday evenings; and shortly after left the school, and in consequence of irregular habits was turned out of employment. He continued to plunge deeper and deeper into wickedness, until one day in 1841, he went home rather intoxicated, and demanded half-a-crown of his widowed mother. 'I have no half-crown to give thee,' she said. 'I must have it,' he replied, and seizing a large knife, he threatened to take his mother's life. The neighbours became alarmed, and called in the police, and on his way to the prison, one of his pot companions whispered that a pint of ale would be handed into him about nine o'clock. At the hour referred to, the youth inquired eagerly for the beer, but it was not forthcoming, and at ten, the prison was locked up for the night. The turnkey ascertained early next morning, that the lad had taken off his shoes and stockings, then fastened the ends of the latter together, put them around his neck, and fixed them on a large nail in the wall, and there the turnkey found the old bible Sunday-scholar hanging dead by the neck! When inquiring of the keeper of the prison, how he left the lad on the previous evening? he replied, 'Why, sir, he was raging for that pint of ale!'"

Still further:—"The appalling results of the drinking system are not wholly confined to the children in our schools; many a promising teacher has fallen a victim. A warm friend of Sunday-schools and the temperance cause, stated sometime ago, as a solemn fact, that in a certain town in Lancashire, no less than four 'unfortunate females' were seen together in the street, every one of whom had been once a teacher in a Sabbath-school."

Is it not, then, high time that this subject should be urged on the attention of Sabbath-school teachers, and of all who feel an interest in the success which has attended efforts of this kind? In several places in the North of England the question has been discussed with very satisfactory results. "About twelve months ago, an adjourned quarterly meeting of the Sunday School Union of Manchester, was held at the Roby Rooms, for the purpose of discussing the question,—'Have the promoters of the temperance movement any special claims to the sympathy and co-operation of Sunday-school teachers at the present time?' There were nearly a thousand individuals in the spacious room, and after a keen but friendly discussion, the following resolution was, with the exception of two or three, unanimously adopted, viz:—"That superintendents and promoters of Sabbath-schools be recommended to form, in connexion with their several schools, Juvenile Temperance Associations.—A number of societies have already been established in connexion with schools in Manchester, and hundreds of the scholars, and many of the teachers, too, have adopted the principle. There are upwards of 300 connected with the Rev. William M'Kerrow's school; and a short time since, the teachers of the Roby schools—where there are eleven hundred children, under the ministry of the Rev. Richard Fletcher,—established a society, and upwards of a hundred and fifty have already joined, and about four hundred attend their weekly meetings on Tuesday evening."

These are encouraging beginnings: we trust they will be consistently followed up, and that similar movements will be made in every part of the kingdom. Such a movement has long been talked about for the Metropolis: it must not longer be delayed. Nor must the movement be confined to Sabbath-schools; an attempt must be made to introduce the subject into day-schools also. Familiar lectures, with a few pictorial illustrations, would deeply interest and impress the minds of the children; it would furnish them with something to talk about to their parents and friends; and, especially, if in addition to these addresses they were furnished with a few suitable tracts to take home, seed would be sown which might result in an abundant harvest.

In reference to the importance of this subject in connexion with Sunday-schools, we feel that we cannot do better than repeat the words of DR. CAMPBELL:—"Our hope is in the rising race; hence the necessity and importance of sowing broad-cast the seeds of the system in the youthful mind. It is well worthy the deepest study, by what means the question may be most successfully brought before the minds of the Sunday-school teachers in England—a noble band, comprising some two hundred thousand young people of both sexes—the flower of British society. It is impossible to express adequately our sense of the importance which attaches to their services among the juvenile population, but, incomparable, vast, immeasurable, religiously considered, as those services are, their value would be enhanced unutterably, if the temperance principle could be universally incorporated with their religious instruction. Now, this is a consummation which, we think, ultimately attainable. These teachers are at a time of life, and in a state of mind highly favourable to the entertainment of the question as a subject of inquiry; and we feel confident that, with the bulk of them, that inquiry, wisely prosecuted, would infallibly issue in the adoption of the temperance principle. When we reflect, then, that these two hundred thousand youthful and generous spirits are not only now the teachers of some two million of scholars, but are at an early age to become, not only heads of families, but many of them christian pastors, officers of churches, and missionaries to foreign climes, it will at once appear that no degree of care and labour to conciliate their opinions, engage their hearts, and enlist their services in the cause of truth and righteousness, piety, and patriotism, can be deemed too high a price at which to purchase such a result."

OPENING OF THE TEMPERANCE HALL, AT CIRENCESTER.

SPLENDID ACT OF MUNIFICENCE.

On Tuesday last, the Temperance Hall erected at the sole expense of Christopher Bowly, Esq., and presented by him to trustees for the use and enjoyment of the public, was formally opened by a series of interesting and impressive meetings. Mr. Bowly is an aged, highly respected, and affluent member of the Society of Friends, is uncle to Mr. Samuel Bowly of Gloucester, and has been a member of the Temperance Society for several years, and has freely opened his purse to the spread of those principles—on many occasions previously to this noble act of munificence.

The Temperance Hall is from a plan by Mr. Dankes, architect—which Mr. Bowly decided upon after personal inspection of other similar halls in various parts of the country. It is a very beautiful building, well adapted for meetings, lectures, and other public and instructional purposes, and highly ornamental to the town. The object has been to combine architectural beauty and proportion, with capability of endurance—and the gothic of all styles has been found most satisfactory to the eye, and most fitted to withstand the ravages of time. Fronting the street, the Hall rises to a point between 40 and 50 feet high, and is embellished with a very elegant arched window with its usual and handsome gothic tracery. Inside the hall, which has a capacious and well proportioned area, is fitted up with a rostrum for speakers and lecturers, commodious seats with backs, and a gallery, and is arranged to seat in the whole an audience of about 400 individuals; the seats, moreover, being so constructed with shifting backs, that every alternate row can be converted into tea-tables. Gas fittings for lighting, and two handsome stoves have been introduced for warming. The rostrum is admirably adapted for the exhibition of scientific and philosophical experiments, as well as speaking. The speakers and hearers find it well suited for carrying the human voice; adjoining the hall is a cottage—the residence of the hall-keeper—a kitchen for the manufacture of tea—a large and convenient committee-room—and various other necessary and useful appurtenances, all tastefully and substantially built of stone like the hall. The whole has cost Mr. Bowly from £1400 to £1500, notwithstanding which, he has generously offered the building to trustees, to be held in perpetuity for the good of the inhabitants of his native town, and for any other object of an intellectual and moral nature, which does not infringe upon controversial theology or politics. It is also right to mention, that in addition to this noble act of generosity he has built, and has been for some time maintaining, a number of almshouses, in which several decayed and aged inhabitants find a refuge for their declining years. It is a curious incident that it is built on the ruins of a defunct brewery, and the flooring of the hall is mainly composed of the staves of demolished beer barrels.

On Tuesday morning the proceedings opened with a public meeting, at which the Rev. W. J. Turner, vicar of Banwell presided; the other gentlemen on the platform being Christopher Bowly, Esq. of Cirencester; Samuel Bowly, Esq. of Gloucester; Rev. Jabez Burns, Baptist Minister of London; Henry Clapp, jun. Esq. of Lynn, Massachusetts, United States; Mr. Newman, the secretary, &c. &c.

The Rev. CHAIRMAN, proposed that before proceeding with the business of the day, a small portion of time should be given to the members of that peculiar profession, to whose liberality they were indebted for the hall, and that afterwards, those who were accustomed to worship God in the same manner as himself, should join with him in a brief prayer for the divine blessing on the undertaking in which they were engaged.

The CHAIRMAN again remarked that in the church to which he belonged, before dedicating a building to God, it was a rule to call upon the founder to state the grounds upon which he made his bequest. He should like to follow that example upon the present occasion; and would, therefore call upon Mr. Christopher Bowly to explain the terms upon which he gave that room to the public.

C. BOWLY, Esq., who was received with much applause, said,—It has afforded me great pleasure and satisfaction to have had it in my power to erect this hall, which I wish to be devoted primarily to the advancement of the temperance cause.—(Hear.) But also to the promotion of all benevolent and philanthropic objects unconnected with sectarian or political party—(hear)—to the spread of useful knowledge by literary and scientific lecturers, and indeed to any purpose which is calculated to increase the welfare and happiness of my fellow-man.—(Cheers.) I intend, by the appointment of proper trustees, to secure the use of the hall for these purposes, free of any charge, excepting the necessary expense of lighting, heating and cleaning.—(Cheers.) I have not only endeavoured to make the building as convenient as possible for the purposes for which it is intended, but have done my best, by adopting a substantial and durable style of architecture, to secure its advantages to posterity—(cheers)—and have every reason to hope it will stand for the benefit of the inhabitants of my native town for generations to come.—(Much applause.) I consider it incumbent on me to do all in my power to promote and encourage the principle of total abstinence, from having derived so much advantage from it myself, and from having often observed the great and permanent benefits it has conferred upon others who have adopted it, in every class and condition of society.—(Hear, hear.) Since I have refrained from the use of alcoholic stimulants, which is now nearly six years, I have felt myself in better health, and more capable of exertion.—(Hear.) I have travelled 2000 miles on the continent last summer, at the rate of 100 miles a-day, for several weeks, without taking one drop of spirit, wine, or other fermented liquor, and with little or no fatigue.—(Hear.) But as there are several able advocates of the cause present, I will not detain you, but only add, that I am fully convinced that the more we endeavour to advance the temperance and other benevolent societies, the more we shall promote our own real happiness and the consummation of that beautiful anthem which we have adopted as a motto—"Peace on earth and good will to men."—(Much cheering.)

The CHAIRMAN next addressed the meeting in a long and very able speech. As an individual anxious for the welfare of the temperance cause, and desirous that those principles which he had himself long held should be universally diffused over the land, he need not say that he was peculiarly gratified and highly delighted by the sight of that splendid room; for when he saw what progress temperance doctrines had made under the very inefficient means which they possessed of making their principles known, he must say that the room in which they were met, was indeed a splendid room,—splendid not less for its architectural beauty than for the splendour of that munificence which had so liberally founded it. After expatiating on the value of the temperance cause, he justified himself, as a minister of the Established Church, for joining in so good a work with those who were opposed to him in religious views, and he concluded a forcible and convincing speech amidst general applause.

Mr. HENRY CLAPP, an American literary gentleman, and an advocate of total abstinence, next adressed the meeting; and concluded a very eloquent address in the following manner:—The great command of christianity was "love one another;" and he that conformed to that law could not fail to love and honour the God who made all mankind. This sentiment had been beautifully conveyed in the lines of a poet, who, though born and living in England, was yet known and appreciated in America; and it was not one of the least blessings which the two countries enjoyed, that they possessed a common language and a common literature, a fact of itself which ought to link them together in the bonds of intellectual amity and brotherhood. With the lines to which he alluded, he would beg to conclude his address:—

ABON BEN ADHEM.

Abon Ben Adhem—may his tribe increase!—
Awoke one night from a deep dream of peace,
And saw within the moonlight of his room,
Making it rich, and like a lily in its bloom,
An angel writing in a book of gold.
Exceeding peace had made Ben Adhem bold;
And to the presence in the room he said,
"What writest thou?" The vision raised its head,
And with a look made of all sweet accord,
Answered,—"The names of those that love the Lord."
"And is mine one?" said Adhem. "Nay, not so,"
Replied the angel. Adhem spake more low,
But cheerly still, and said, "I pray you, then,
Write me as one who loves his fellow-men."
The angel wrote and vanished: but next night
Appeared again, with great awakening light,
And showed the names which love of God had blest;
And lo! Ben Adhem's name led all the rest!

The appropriateness of the quotation, and the manner in which it was delivered, called forth much applause, and the meeting then adjourned.

In the evening of the same day, another meeting was held; Rev. W. H. Turner in the chair.

The Rev. Mr. WHITE, Baptist minister of Cirencester, next addressed the meeting. He said,—My christian friends and neighbours, I rise not to make a speech, but to propose a resolution from this meeting, which I am sure will need no comment nor anything I can say to commend it both to your judgment and your feelings. I am sure it will find a seconder, and if it does not, that it will be carried by your unanimous acclamation. The resolution which I have great pleasure in proposing is this—that the cordial thanks of this meeting be given to Mr. Christopher Bowly, for the munificent liberality he has manifested in the erection of this beautiful room, and for the liberality he has also manifested in putting it upon a basis at once so generous and so consistent with everything philanthropic and everything calculated to promote the interest and well-being of his native town.—(Great cheers.) And to this resolution, thus imperfectly expressed, I wish also to add, that this meeting expresses its sincere hope that he may live long to see extensive good result to his native town from the operation and use of this beautiful edifice.—(Much applause.)

Mr. PARSONS, a publican of Cirencester, seconded the resolution, which was put to the meeting, and carried with the warmest acclamation.

Mr. C. BOWLY said he did not court applause; but it was exceedingly gratifying to him to witness such unanimity and so much kindness.—(Applause)

The Rev. JABEZ BURNS, D. D., then addressed the meeting in a speech of great ability; after which Samuel Bowly, Esq., spoke at some length and with much effect.

The proceedings of this interesting occasion wound up on Wednesday evening by a public tea meeting, which was addressed by H. Clapp, Esq., Rev. B. Parsons, and Mr. S. Bowly, and thus terminated a series of meetings, all of them of the most interesting and impressive character; and more especially memorable for the extraordinary but honourable act of individual benevolence which they were held to commemorate.

TEMPERANCE MEETING IN THE TABERNACLE CITY ROAD.

A public meeting, preparatory to the formation of a Total Abstinence Society in connexion with the congregation assembling in the above place of worship, was held on Thursday evening, December 17th, under the direction of the Committee of the National Temperance Society. The REV. JOHN CAMPBELL, D. D., the pastor of the congregation, presided. After a suitable hymn had been given out by Mr. J. W. Green, prayer for the Divine blessing was implored by the REV. JABEZ BURNS, D. D.

The Rev. CHAIRMAN then said, we have been praying for light: let light prevail, and our principles will succeed. Let light be diffused as to our principles through the nation, and intemperance will be banished. I would that you were "altogether such as I am." Yes, I wish sincerely that all my congregation were as I am. The more I think on the subject, the more I am attached to the principle, the more I am struck with the importance of the movement. I find no one but objects to intemperance; and most admit that ours is a good system, only they hesitate to adopt it, from the fear that it is not consistent with the enjoyment of health. That, certainly, is a reasonable objection, if it can be shown to be true. But I am certain that, as to the great mass of the population, it is not so. The use of strong drink is opposed to health, and is detrimental to it. I have myself made the experiment of total abstinence for a considerable time, and I feel that I have sustained no loss. I feel assured that its adoption would do you good,—good to yourselves, and good to your families, while no mischief could possibly result. But who can speak aright of the mischiefs which result from the use of strong drink? Melancholy instances are continually coming to our knowledge. We have three missionaries in connexion with this congregation, and they, as well as myself, are all teetotalers; and I hope they will prove the means of enlarging the congregation and the church. The use of strong drink, as I have said, is injuring, and impoverishing and ruining many, and it is our duty to do all we possibly can to remedy the evil. I rejoice to find myself surrounded by so many good men—the friends of education and religion—of man and of God. In whatever point of view I regard the principle which they have come to advocate, I see nothing in it but good, nothing but what warrants its recommendation.

Dr. LOVELL, who was introduced as a member of the Rev. J. Sherman's church, stated that he had been a teetotaler nearly eleven years, and a medical practitioner for nearly forty years. He had no hesitation whatever in declaring, that no portion of intoxicating drink was necessary or useful for persons in health, and that they were very, very seldom necessary or useful in cases of disease. During the last ten years he had never prescribed any such drinks to his patients, nor had he felt the need of it for any of them, either in health or sickness. He believed that if post mortem examination were more frequently to take place, and the hearts of those who died were examined, it would be found that most of the cases which were deemed cases of apoplexy, would prove to be cases of diseases of the heart, occasioned by the use of strong drinks. By the use of those drinks the heart was enlarged, and its valves were hardened, and then came disease and danger, and death often ensued. It was his firm conviction that three-fourths of all the diseases with which medical men had to contend, were brought on by the use of intoxicating drinks.

Mr. M'BAIN, member of a Wesleyan church said, teetotalism had raised him from a state of great degradation, to the honour of addressing the present large and respectable assembly. When young, he was a Sunday School teacher, then he was accustomed to think that strong drink was necessary to preserve him in health, and to qualify him for his arduous labours; but while using that moderate portion, he slid insensibly down the inclined plane of intemperance, and he became a drunkard. For twenty years he lived a life of wretchedness; and often was he afraid to close his eyes, lest he should open them in a miserable eternity! At length, he heard the principle of total abstinence expounded; he adopted it, and had ever since been able to perform his labour with cheerfulness and comfort. Since then, too, he had ever been endeavouring, in various ways, to cultivate his mind.

The Rev. Dr. BURNS was exceedingly happy to find that temperance had got into the Tabernacle; that a theological Doctor was President of the Assembly; and that a christian witness bore testimony to the excellence of the principle. About twenty years ago, the temperance principle was first introduced in America; it was afterwards promulgated in Scotland, Ireland, Yorkshire, and other parts of England. There were now temperance societies in every part of the world; and a large number of temperance periodicals were diffusing important information on the subject. Still, however, intemperance was the curse of Britain. Important principles, however, were established. It was proved that the drunkard, however debased and degraded, could be reclaimed, could be restored to sobriety and comfort, could be elevated in society, could become altogether a new creature; a member of the kingdom of Christ upon earth, and the heir of a glorious immortality. Dr. Burns furnished a striking instance of this in the case of a person named Plato, residing at Chesham, who was once renowned as "the king of the Buckinghamshire drunkards," but who, by the instrumentality of teetotalism, had become a respectable and useful member of society, after having for many years lived a most debased and degraded life. Dr. Burns then declared his opinion that it was unsafe for any person to use strong drink. A case was here related of a person in Scotland, who was for many years a respectable and useful member of a Christian church. On one occasion, he went with a commercial traveller to an inn, to transact some business; took some strong drink, and returned home in a state of intoxication; murdered his aged wife, was tried, condemned, and executed, at the age of three-score years and ten, within sight of the place of worship where he had attended for years! (The recital of this case appeared to produce a deep impression on the audience.) He trusted sincerely that the respectable assembly he had the honour of addressing, would go away under a teetotal influence; and if they employed that influence in a right direction, he and his friends near him would have abundant reason to bless God.

The CHAIRMAN said, "Are these things so? Are the statements which have been made true, or are they fictions? If they be true, they are dreadful to think upon. Madness is dreadful, considered as a malady; how much more dreadful is this voluntary madness! What if madness seized a number of individuals in any place! What if it spread over a village, over a town, over a country! It has been said that but one in five hundred is thus afflicted; but look at the drunken madness! And what shall be done to stop it? Who will refuse his aid? I hope that all who hear those statements will adopt the salutary principle of abstinence. I adopted it myself entirely on public grounds. I had no occasion for it whatever upon personal grounds. Indeed, I felt a sort of objection to the teetotal pledge: I regarded it as a kind of bondage; but I find that it is not so; and I find an advantage in it in many respects; and when I find a man who has signed the pledge, or is willing to do so, I rejoice. Two speakers have been introduced to us this evening as "members of Mr. Sherman's;" this is very good, but it must not long continue so; we must have friends and members "from the Tabernacle." If the spirits of the blessed in heaven, rejoice in the movements made upon earth, I sincerely believe that the spirit of WHITFIELD would rejoice in this movement, for he was eminently the friend of the masses. Men may laugh at this system, and for a time they may oppose it; but they cannot long withstand the truth." Dr. Campbell here referred to a pleasing circumstance which had taken place a few days before, in connection with the settlement of the Rev. Mr. Kennedy, from Scotland, over the congregation at Stepney, formerly under the pastoral care of the late Dr. Fletcher, who, on the very first occasion on which he had been called to preside at a public entertainment, exerted his discretionary power to protest against the practice of drinking toasts. That was a thing worthy of notice. It was something to see Surrey Chapel filled to listen to a sermon on total abstinence; and it was next to something to see a goodly number assembled in the Tabernacle at a total abstinence meeting.

Mr. BAILEY, formerly a coal-porter, but now a coal merchant, said that he appeared before the audience as a reclaimed drunkard, and as a monument of God's mercy. He firmly believed that but for teetotalism, he should long ago have filled a drunkard's grave. Nine years ago he signed, and he had been a member at Surrey Chapel upwards of eight years. As soon as he became a teetotaler, he felt that he ought to aim at doing something for the good of others.

Mr. T. WHITAKER said that no man living was more indebted to the temperance principle than himself; and no one was called upon more imperatively to advocate the principle wherever he went. He appeared there as the friend of the drunkard, though as a foe to drunkenness. He believed that the drunkard had been but too much neglected. Some said that they would not place a straw in the way of the progress of teetotalism; but while they continued to use strong drink, they placed a great stone in the way. There were two systems—the system of drinking and the system of teetotalism, and every person who adopted the system of drinking, was, in fact, opposing the system of teetotalism.

R. HICKS, Esq., Surgeon, began by explaining the motives which induced him to sign the teetotal pledge. When he first came to the Metropolis, an Undertaker and himself had, unknown to each other, been keeping an account of the number of deaths which had ensued, together with their causes; and upon comparing notes, though the Undertaker was not a teetotaler, he had ascertained that they both found that four-fifths of the deaths which had occurred were traceable to the use of alcoholic drinks; though many of the persons had used those drinks moderately. He firmly believed that the majority of persons would reach the ages of seventy or eighty, but for the use of alcoholic drinks. In reference to the opinion of medical men upon that subject, he said that the advocates of teetotalism were teaching them valuable lessons. They could not but feel that if teetotalism prevailed, their profession would be greatly injured, and yet he believed that they were too honourable and too humane to withhold the truth when they became fully convinced. He had lately introduced patients of his to Sir Benjamin Brodie, and to Dr. Chambers, both of whom had enjoined abstinence from strong drinks, as the only conditions of a hope of cure.

J. MEREDITH, Esq., then moved a resolution of thanks to Dr. Campbell, and to the managers of that place, for their kindness in granting the use of it for that meeting, and to the Chairman for his further kindness in presiding. This was seconded by G. W. Atwood, Esq., and carried unanimously.

The Chairman said, The obligation is quite on the other side. We are very glad that you came. We are quite sure that you have done great good. I regard this audience as a sort of jury. You have had amiable, modest, honest men in the capacity of witnesses, and you have also had advocacy of a very superior character; and now, you are to give the verdict. How say you? Are we right or are we wrong? Many present have signed the pledge, but many have not. And if not, why not now? Or if not this night, why not at a very early period? Do so, my friends; you will find your account in it. As to the managers of this place, to whom you have voted thanks, I can say that they feel it a comfort and an honour to have you here. This is but the first meeting of the kind; about a month hence we shall have a meeting in the School, (Cowper Street,) and I hope that the event will prove an era in the history of many families, and tell powerfully upon the best interests of the locality.

The meeting, which was one of deep interest, was then concluded by singing the Gloria Patri. Several persons signed the pledge in the room adjoining.

EDINBURGH.

TENTH REPORT OF THE EDINBURGH TOTAL ABSTINENCE SOCIETY.

This is a valuable document. It contains several important testimonies from eminent medical men and others, to the fact, that intemperance is not only a cause of disease but of crime, and an impediment to the spread of the gospel. Such testimonies procured by every temperance society and appended to their annual reports, would serve a great and good end.

The following is a statement received from Dr. Tait, Surgeon to the Edinburgh Police Establishment, in answer to a letter sent to him by your Committee:—

Edinburgh Police Chambers, 4th September, 1846.

“DEAR SIR,—I beg to acknowledge receipt of your letter of this date, containing the following queries, and requesting that I should answer them. The answers which I have appended to these questions, with the exception of that referring to suicides, are not derived from accurate statistical data, but from general impressions produced on my mind. They may, however, be considered very near the truth:—

“1st. What proportion of the accidents, which come under your observation as Surgeon of Police, are attributable to intemperance. Ans. Nearly one-half.

“2nd. What proportion of the assaults, to which you are professionally called, originate in the use of intoxicating drinks. Ans. Fully Four-fifths.

“What is the proportion of suicides, or attempted suicides, within the bounds of the Edinburgh Police, which owe their origin to intoxicating liquors. Ans. During the last year, exactly seventy-three per cent.

“Hoping this reply will serve your purpose—

“I am dear Sir, yours faithfully.

WILLIAM TAIT, M.D.

“J. H., Secretary.”

From these answers, it is evident that the vice against which we are set is by far the greatest cause of the many cases of suffering and breaches of the peace with which our newspapers continually abound. Through the influence of strong drink, men are not only led to neglect that precaution which is necessary to the safety of their own lives, but also to infringe the rights of others, by assaulting their fellow-citizens to whom they owe the duty of protection; and is too often the case, after they have lost the respect of friends, and become degraded in their own estimation, they are led to attempt that awful and revolting crime of self-destruction.

It has sometimes been stated by individuals who have minutely examined the effects of drunkenness, that it is the parent of nearly all the destitution which exists in society. This statement is confirmed by the annexed letters received from the committees of two benevolent institutions in Edinburgh, in answer to the following query:—Is it your belief that a great many of the persons who apply to your society for assistance have been brought to poverty through intemperance?

Edinburgh, 28th August, 1846.

“DEAR SIR,—I received yours of the 14th instant on the 18th, and have laid your communication before the Committee.

“The Committee desire me to state, in reply to your question, that judging from all the cases applying for relief from the Society, it is their belief that intemperance is the cause of poverty in the vast majority of cases. The Committee are, however, very particular in granting relief, not giving any assistance when they expect that it will be spent on intoxicating liquors: and where there is a doubt, they guard against the funds of the society being improperly bestowed, by giving applicants tickets for meal and other articles of food, and passes by steamboats and other conveyances to their own homes.

I am, &c., RICHARD BLADWORTH,
“Secretary, Benevolent and Strangers’ Friend Society.”

“J. H. Secretary.”

Edinburgh, 8th September, 1846.

“DEAR SIR,—In reply to the query submitted by you to the Committee of the Society for Relief of the Destitute Sick, I am instructed to say that the Committee, after thinking over the scenes of poverty and wretchedness with which they are unhappily familiar, have no hesitation in believing that a very great majority of them are the result of intemperance.—I am, &c.,

“J. H. Secretary.”

“ANDREW JACK.”

ORIGIN OF WINE.

The Persians relate the following anecdote in reference to the invention of wine. It is extracted from Moullah Ackber’s MSS.; and is quoted by Sir John Malcolm, in his History of Persia.

“Jem Sheed, the founder of Persepolis, was very fond of grapes, and, with the view to preserve some, placed them in vessels which were lodged in vaults for future use. When the vessels were opened it was found that the grapes (or rather the liquor which had issued from them) had fermented. The juice in this state was so acid that the king believed it to be poisonous. A label, with the word ‘poison,’ was accordingly placed upon each of the vessels. One of the favourite ladies of the Court was afflicted with most distressing attacks of nervous headache in a paroxysm of which she resolved to put an end to her existence. By accident she found one of the vessels with the word ‘poison’ written on it, and, intent on her purpose, swallowed its contents. Stupefaction, as might be expected, followed this act, and strange to say, unlike similar indulgence in modern times, her headache was gone. Charmed with the remedy, the lady was induced often to repeat the experiment, until the monarch’s poison was all drunk. The theft was soon discovered, and the fair culprit confessed the deed. A quantity of wine was again made, and Jem Sheed and all his court partook of the newly-discovered beverage. This circumstance gave rise to a name by which inebriating wine is known in Persia in the present day—Zaher-e-Koos-hon—“The delightful poison.”

National Temperance Society.

OFFICE 11, TOKENHOUSE YARD.

VICE-PRESIDENTS.

The EARL of ARUNDEL and SURREY, M.P.
Sir Wilfrid Lawson, Bart.

R. D. Alexander, Esq.
Thomas Beaumont, Esq.
Samuel Bowly, Esq.
Rev. J. Brewster, D.D.
J. S. Buckingham, Esq.
Robert Charleton, Esq.
Rev. T. Clowes, M.A.
Isaac Collins, Esq.
Joseph Eaton, Esq.
Joseph J. Gurney, Esq.
S. C. Hall, Esq., B.L.F.S.A.
Lawrence Heyworth, Esq.
William Janson, Jun., Esq.
Ven. Archdeacon Jeffreys.

G. S. Kenrick, Esq.
Rev. Theobald Mathew.
W. J. Morgan, A.M., M.D.
Richard Peck, Esq.
Rev. P. Penson, M.A.
Rev. W. W. Robinson, M.A.
Rev. J. Sherman.
Rev. C. Stovel.
Rev. T. Spencer, A. M.
Rev. W. H. Turner, M.A.
Edward Thomas, Esq.
Robert Warner, Esq.
Edward Webb, Esq.
Rev. J. Wilson.

TREASURER.

G. W. Alexander, Esq., 40, Lombard Street.

EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE.

George W. Atwood.
Richard Barrett.
Jabez Burns, D.D.
William Cabell.
William Cash.
John Cassell.
Charles Gilpin.

Richard Hicks.
C. H. Lovell, M.D.
John Meredith.
Richard Potter.
W. W. Robinson.
T. B. Scutt.

SUPERINTENDENT OF MISSION.

John Meredith.

AGENT.

William Gawthorp.

SECRETARY.

Thomas Beggs.

PROSPECTS OF 1847.

The year 1846, with its bustle and excitement, is now gone—and we naturally look back to its eventful days, to find grounds of encouragement for the labours of the year 1847. The main topic for reflection is, the famine which is desolating the sister kingdom. However calamitous it may appear, although the heart sickens at the distress and suffering it produces, yet it is one of those events which controlled by infinite wisdom, are meant to teach lessons to nations. This will force upon our people and our government, the consideration of that question, which has been treated with so much indifference; and, probably, they may learn in the school of calamity, what they have refused to receive at the hands of science and reason, that it is a great national crime, whilst thousands are starving, to waste in the manufacture of an intoxicating beverage, the food of five or six millions of people. This is an appropriate time for Temperance Reformers to press home this powerful argument.

We hear loud cries of reform in every direction. The friends of sanitary measures are full of activity. Various schemes of education are discussed, and in every walk of life, men are discussing their social grievances, and proposing their favourite schemes of improvement. The main question then for us to consider is, not what is our duty—that is plain enough—but what amount of effort and energy can we bring to bear upon the drinking system, and how can we best employ the means at our disposal. We rejoice that in the temperance world there are signs of activity also, and we believe a greater spirit of unity than we have had for many years.

The British Association occupying a most important field of usefulness, in the north of England, has issued a circular inviting attention to the subject of statistics. As the diffusion of sound knowledge is absolutely essential to the advancement of this principle, it is a valuable first step. They are also entering upon another session of agitation on the Sunday Traffic, and whatever may be the difference of opinion on this question, every one must approve the plan they have taken, of procuring, by a prize; well written Essays, to be published as tracts, thus awakening inquiry and thought.

Our neighbours in Scotland are working diligently. They have commenced a systematic attack upon the drinking usages. The Financial Committee of the Scottish Temperance League are busy in raising a fund of £20,000, and we are informed, nearly £2000 of this is already raised. They expect to announce the first volume of the Uniform Temperance Library, in a few weeks. An important effort is making in Edinburgh, called the Children's Movement. They have seven weekly meetings of youth, all numerously attended. They instruct the children in the principles of total abstinence, and enliven the meetings by teaching them to sing temperance songs, &c. Branches are opened in various parts of Scotland, and they propose to unite them in one goodly band, to be called "The British League of Juvenile Abstainers." In addition to what is doing by the Scottish Temperance League, a body that has done incalculable good since its commencement; we see that another society has been formed, calling itself the BRITISH LEAGUE, and is about to publish a new temperance periodical of unparalleled cheapness, the first Number of which appears on the 1st of January, graced by a portrait of John Dunlop, Esq., the originator of the movement in Scotland.

In the West of England, the societies are still going on with their agents, and our old friend, the Bristol Temperance Herald, is announced to come out in January in a new and improved shape. This has been one of the steadiest and most consistent advocates of the cause, and it deserves that every encouragement should be given to its spirited proprietor.

We hear cheering accounts of Cornwall. An improved and enlarged publication is announced for January; and the labours of Mr. Teare, Mr. Gawthorp, and others, have been attended with great success.

Mr. Kenrick, in the Midland Counties, is still labouring by his publication, the Temperance Gazette, and his band of agents, and spreading the good seeds of temperance. The Temperance Gazette is a very meritorious periodical, which we shall more fully notice in another number. On all hands we see signs of progress, and hope that the reviving spirit, now animating our temperance brethren will prepare the path for great triumphs, and make the year 1847, the most successful in the history of our cause.

It will be seen by the present number that our efforts in London have begun by a highly successful meeting in London; other societies are at work, among the fruits of which will be another Working Men's Demonstration in Exeter Hall, early in the year.

NATIONAL TEMPERANCE SOCIETY. FUND FOR 1847-8-9.

THE Committee have much pleasure in stating that they continue to receive expressions of approbation relative to their plan of operations for the next three years. As yet they have not realized the £1500, which they are pledged to have promised before they call in any of that sum. The time for effort is now drawing on, and their plans all arranged, and they most respectfully urge the desirableness of their friends throughout the country coming promptly to their assistance.

Without this the efforts of the Committee must be paralyzed. The following sums have been promised.

George W. Alexander, Esq., for the years 1847-8-9	£	100
Joseph Sturge, Esq.	100
Joseph Eaton, Esq.	100
J. D. Bassett, Esq.	100
J. J. Gurney, Esq., for the years 1847-8	100
A. A., for the years 1847-8-9	50
A. B.	50
William Cash, Esq.	50
William Janson, Esq., Jun.	50
James Charlton, Esq.	50
R. D. Alexander, Esq.	45
W. D. Sims, Esq.	30
Robert Charlton, Esq.	25
Richard Barrett, Esq., Sen.	25
Rev. P. Penson Durham	15
Mr. John Cassell	10
George W. Atwood, Esq.	10
Richard Hicks, Esq.	5
Mr. Charles Gilpin	5
Thomas Catchpool, Esq.	5
Mr. F. J. Thompson	5
Mr. Richard Barrett, Jun.	5
W. C. Walters, Esq.	5

SUBSCRIPTIONS RECEIVED.

R. J. Shafto, Esq.	10
W. Wilson, Esq., Torquay	5
Mr. John Locke	10s.

SUBSCRIPTIONS.

	£	s.	d.
Mr. E. Spoug	a	0	5 0
Mr. T. Perran	a	1	1 0
Mr. T. Candler	a	0	10 0
Messrs. R. Benson & Son	a	1	1 0
Rev. P. Penson	a	1	1 0
Mr. F. J. Thompson	a	1	1 0
Mr. Thomas Morland	a	1	1 0
Mr. J. Backhouse	a	2	0 0
Miss E. Barclay	a	3	0 0
Mr. W. F. Nicholson	a	1	1 0
W. Wilson, Esq., Torquay	a	1	1 0
Mr. George Peile	a	1	1 0
Mr. Roberts, Chester	a	1	0 0
E. Beck, Esq., Isleworth	a	1	0 0
Miss Aldam	a	1	1 0
Miss Grange		0	10 0
W. Slade, Esq.		1	0 0
E. Bicknell, Esq.		1	0 0
Mrs. Atkinson		0	10 6
Mr. W. Field		0	5 0
Mr. S. Carter		0	5 0
Mr. J. Heath		0	10 0
Mr. J. Smith		0	10 0
Mr. J. Corduroy		0	10 0
Mr. Doulton		0	10 0
Mr. F. Doulton		0	10 0
Mr. Nash		0	10 0
Mr. R. Nash		0	5 0
Mr. Watts		0	10 0
Mr. Filmer		0	10 0
J. H. Capper, Esq.		0	10 0
T. Grissell, Esq.		1	1 0
R. Brookes, Esq.		1	0 0
Mr. Olney		0	10 0
Mr. Cleare		0	5 0
G. Pilcher, Esq.		0	10 0
Mr. Sharp		0	5 0
J. Field, Esq.		1	0 0
J. Edger, Esq.		1	1 0
Susan Smith		0	2 2

CHRONICLE.

James Haughton, Esq.	£1	0	0
John Locke, Esq.	0	5	0

TEETOTAL TIMES PRIZE ESSAYS.

The first of these Essays is now announced for publication. "The importance of the Temperance Reformation, as a means of elevating the working classes, physically, socially, morally, and religiously," by Mr. D. G. PAINE of Deptford. The plan proposed by the spirited proprietor will enable societies to carry 1000 of these addresses to the homes of the people, and thus furnish them with valuable lectures from the principal temperance writers, at a less cost than the expense of one lecture, under ordinary circumstances. We hope that the public will appreciate this praiseworthy effort.

WORLD'S TEMPERANCE CONVENTION.

The Committee wish to present to every Delegate, and also to every Subscriber to the Convention Fund, a copy of the Report just published. As it is too large for transmission by post, they will be greatly obliged by any Delegate or Subscriber, who has not received a printed circular, stating whether it can be forwarded through any bookseller's parcel, or any other means by which it can be enclosed; or whether they can get any friend in London, to call for it at the Office of the Society.

NATIONAL TEMPERANCE CHRONICLE AND RECORDER.

The Chronicle this month appears in a reduced size, and at the charge of One Penny. The Committee have been looking over its accounts, and found, that in consequence of a large gratuitous circulation, they were expending upon it a much larger sum of money than they feel warranted in devoting to that object. They found also, that some inconveniences were attached to the price, and they have resolved to lower it, making it 16 pages. As this publication has for a length of time been circulated over this country very extensively, as well as in the United States; and as it will from this time contain reports of the movements the National Temperance Society is now originating, they hope that by the liberality of the temperance public, they will be enabled to continue an extended gratuitous circulation.

TRACTS FOR THE YOUNG.

Mr. Alexander of Ipswich, is now engaged in getting up a series of Tracts for the Young. Since our last notice we have received several others. They are beautifully got up, and their literary matter is excellent. They come forth most opportunely. We urge our readers to make an acquaintance with these charming and useful little books. They will find a packet of them a most acceptable present to their children, and a most excellent reward for Sunday Schools.

TEARE TESTIMONIAL.

We notice with great pleasure that a local Committee has been formed to promote this object. They have announced that the subscription will close on the 7th of February. We wish it all the success it deserves, and hope that it will be worthy the high desert of the man.

Home Intelligence.

LEEDS TEMPERANCE SOCIETY

The second monthly meeting of the above society was held on Tuesday evening, December 1st., in the Music Hall.

The Rev. WALTER SCOTT, President of Aire-dale College, Bradford, was called to the chair, and commenced his address by observing, that he esteemed it a very great honour to be invited to preside at one of the monthly meetings which the Leeds Temperance Society had commenced. He felt some degree of surprise that such a cause was not more generally supported by the wise and good. There could be no loss of enjoyment if all intoxicating liquors were banished at once and for ever. But suppose that any serious loss should accrue, when the misery that results from their use was duly considered, and how many christian churches would be saved from some of the most painful cases that ever came before them; when the amount of good was contemplated that would inevitably be the result of abstinence from this curse of our country; when the loss, if any, and the good, certain to follow, were put into the scale, the latter would be as heavy as gold, and the former like feathers or chaff. He had read, that, in a missionary station, nineteen out of twenty of the missionaries had become teetotalers, because spirituous liquors had been introduced into their churches, and they adopted the principle in pure self-defence. Mr. Scott also delivered a very strong and powerful philippic against smoking and snuffing.

The Rev. JOHN VICTOR from natural laws exhibited the injurious effects of all alcoholic liquors on the human body. He distinguished between the animal and the organic organs, showing how vital and admirably protected were the latter; the exalted pleasure arising from their right appropriation, and the exquisite pain from their subversion. He glanced at the economy of feeling, through the medium of the nerves, as our guardian angel in the human system, warning us of exterior and interior exposure, and, in its relation to alcohol, demonstrated the assertion of Dr. Trall, that "there never was a man or animal that did not find alcoholic drinks disgusting in every shape, and abhorrent to every sense, unless his or its nature had become changed from its pure and pristine condition." He alluded to the effects of the alcoholic fluid on the stomach, brain, liver, blood vessels, blood secretions, and nerves, showing it incompatible with every function of the human economy, and every vital process of every living thing.

The Rev. J. TUNNICLIFFE said he held in his hand a pamphlet lately published, and addressed to the Wesleyan Conference, by Mr. Eli Walker of Hull, which contained matter for a thousand speeches. First, as the great waste of food which the drinking of intoxicating liquors occasioned—"We have a national waste of barley for the purpose of malting, besides a considerable quantity of oats, rye, carrots, potatoes, and even wheat, used in the distillation of gin, whiskey, and English rum, to the amount of between forty and fifty millions of bushels annually, which would supply three millions of persons, or one-tenth of the nation, with food for one year. Here is a perversion of heaven's bounties!" And then as to the ravages which these liquors occasion to the Church of Christ, he would again quote from the same pamphlet, which contained a very awful calculation, if true. It was—"that no less than thirty thousand members are annually expelled from the Christian Church for drunkenness." The venerable Rev. Wm. Jay, of Bath, had stated "that where he had known one individual rescued from intemperance by the preaching of the gospel, a hundred have been reformed by total abstinence societies"—(cheers)—and again, the same authority stated, that "next to the glorious gospel, God could not bless the human race so much as by the abolition of intoxicating spirits."—(Applause.)

The Rev. JOHN PETERS, Wesleyan Association Minister said, that whether the number was literally correct or not, this he knew, that there were hundreds and thousands of soakers and tipplers now in the church who ought to be excluded, who were an injury rather than a benefit to the cause of Christ, and who also would be better off for their own sakes, as such persons were more likely to be reclaimed if they were separated from such an unnatural connexion.

The SECRETARY stated, that the next monthly meeting would be held on the 5th of January, and the Rev. W. H. Turner, M.A., Vicar, of Banwell, and Mr. Henry Clapp, jun., of Massachusetts, United States, would be the speakers.

BRADFORD.

OPENING OF THE HALL OF THE BRADFORD LONG PLEDGED TEETOTAL ASSOCIATION.

On Wednesday, December 9th, this Hall was publicly opened and dedicated to the object for which it was erected. The platform was ornamented with banners belonging the order of Rechabites, and tables were placed for thirty trays. The attendance was not so good as had been expected, which is accounted for by the depression in trade, and the attractions of the Fair.

After tea, a public meeting was held, John Priestman, Esq., presiding, who, after some introductory remarks, introduced Mr. George Halliday, the secretary of the society, who read letters of sympathy with the cause and apologies of absence from Messrs. James Brownledge, G. T. Anderson, and Elihu Burritt; the Rev. William Morgan, B.A., and William Band, Esq. The report of the society was read, by which it appears that the building would cost more than £600. The sum of £287 had been received from various sources, leaving a debt of about £324.

Mr. Rowntree of White Abbey, Mr. George Spencer, Mr. F. Hopwood of York, Mr. John Shan of Leeds, and Mr. G. E. Lomax, agent of the British Association, severally addressed the meeting with much effect.

Another meeting was held on Thursday, when a numerous party sat down to tea, the chair was taken by Mr. Joseph Banen. The speakers on the occasion, were Messrs. Parker of Leeds, Fleming of Liverpool, W. Walton and G. E. Lomax.

On Friday evening, another meeting was held, at which the Rev. R. Ingham presided. The speakers were, besides the chairman, Mr. J. Walmsley, Rev. G. Dawson, Mr. Rowntree, Mr. Halliday and Mr. Lomax. On this occasion, a gold watch was presented to Mr. Halliday, who returned thanks in a feeling and appropriate speech.

On Saturday evening, a meeting of an interesting kind was held—a Washingtonian meeting, the speakers being exclusively reformed drunkards, Mr. William Stubley of Bristol, presided, and the meeting was addressed by 24 reformed drunkards.

On Sunday, a sermon was preached from I Cor. vi. 10, the hall was crowded.

On Monday evening, Dr. F. R. Lees of Leeds, delivered a lecture "On the accordance of teetotalism with the arrangements of nature." The audience was not so large as had been anticipated. The lecturer entered into a scientific and philosophical discussion of the question of teetotalism, and shewed that God had fixed those laws, by which our own frames were to be governed as well as the physical laws of the universe, and the world in which we are placed, and remarked upon the loss and injury sustained by the processes of maling, &c.; and then considered the loss sustained by the community, in their annual expenditure of £75,000,000, in taxes alone, in imbibing intoxicating drinks.

This ended this interesting series of meetings.

YORK.—WORKING MEN'S TEMPERANCE DEMONSTRATION.

One of the largest and most interesting meetings of the working-classes that has ever been held in the York Lecture Hall, took place on Monday night. The meeting was in imitation of the great demonstration recently held in Exeter Hall. The speakers were twelve working men, and their healthy appearance did no discredit to the cause which they espoused.

Mr. F. Hopwood occupied the chair, and called upon JOHN BERRY, foundry whitesmith: had been a teetotaler for nine months, and worked in a shop where 10 smiths' fires are constantly going on through the heat of summer, and enjoys better health than he did when he drank intoxicating liquors.

JOHN MORGAN, glass-house fireman: teetotalism was recommended to me, and I tried it. I was then in rags and tatters; but now I have a good suit of clothes. I can assure you that my occupation as a fireman at the glass-house is a trying one, but I can stand my work longer than many who drink ale and beer.

ROBERT BUCK, coachmaker's labourer: I have been for seven years in a coachmaker's shop, and have had all kinds of work. During this time, I have been a teetotaler, and I am now as strong as ever I was in my life. I feel great comfort, as a professor of religion, in being a total abstainer.

JONATHAN WHITEY, coachman: I am thankful that I can tell you of the advantage of drinking cold water for seven years and twenty days; it has wrought a blessed change. I have proved it, and therefore hold it fast.

JOHN BEATTIE, stone-mason: I was never accounted a drunkard, but for seven years drank intoxicating liquors in moderation. Masons' work is not easy, we have to bear extreme heat and extreme cold, but I can get through my work as well as any of my comrades. I am not a teetotaler from expediency. The money I formerly spent in ale, I now expend in books and periodicals, and I have now quite a nice travelling library, which I should like you all to see. Men must be got to read and think if we would elevate them in society.

BENJAMIN STUBBS, glass-house fireman: it is ten years last September since I became a teetotaler. For the last eighteen months I have had to work over hot fires in the York Glass-house; my drink has been water, and I have found that I can work as well as any of the men that get beer.

JAMES WARRILOW, railway-porter: I am thankful that ever I became a teetotaler, I have every reason to hate strong drink, for it turned me out of my home at nine years of age, and threw me upon the wide world. It has always done me harm. I am strong and healthy, and can do my work equal to any who use intoxicating drinks.

THOMAS HARTLEY, sawyer: I have been a teetotaler five years, and have tested the system in hot and cold weather, and at both out-door and in-door work. I am in all respects better—better in health and pocket. If you want to rise to the standard of men, come and sign our pledge.

ANDREW BULMER, brickmaker: it is seven years since I dropt these drinks. It's just seven years since I was in quod, and t' magistrates got seven shillings of my money for giving me my liberty, but they haven't got sevenpence from me since I signed the pledge. Teetotalism has bettered my condition. I haven't now a workhouse in view, as I once had, but I can put something by for a rainy day.

HENRY BARSTOW, pipe-maker: last year I was a drunkard and an infidel, but now I'm a teetotaler and a believer in Christ. My trade, although not a very labourious one, is yet a trying one, from the fumes of sulphur and smoke which we have to bear.

WILLIAM EYRE, soap-boiler: when I saw what drink was doing around me, I felt it to be my duty to sign the pledge. I get through my work well, without any of those drinks that have ruined so many precious souls.

EDWARD ROOKE, carpenter: my experience is different from some of the speakers, for I believe that I was never drunk in my life. It is two years since I signed, and I never felt better in my life than I do now, and I can do my work with comfort. I did not sign so much for my own sake, as for that of my fellow-workmen, for I have seen such sad effects from drinking amongst them, that has made my blood run cold. We have trials and conflicts to bear, but the temperance cause is a good one for working men, and I am therefore not ashamed of it.

A few remarks were then offered by the CHAIRMAN. The meeting retained its interest to the last, and did not break up until nearly eleven o'clock.—Yorkshire-man.

DOVER.

(To the Editor of the Temperance Chronicle and Recorder.)

21st Eleventh Month, 1846.

DEAR FRIEND.—The temperance cause is making steady progress in Dover, and although it may be, judging from an increase of beer-shops, that there has been an increased consumption of malt-liquor, yet there is a considerable increase of total abstainers from all alcoholic beverages. The increase of beer-shops may be accounted for by the improved circumstances of our artizans, mechanics and labourers, together with an increased population in this town and neighbourhood, but it affords no proof that teetotalism is on the decline. It has, within the last few weeks, been very delightful to witness the ready, cheerful and earnest desire of the youth, of both sexes, to attach their names to the pledge and to take cards of membership, these now amount to 330, from 6 years old to 14 or 15; this has not been done under excitement, but deliberately, and pursued during the last 3 months. On the 16th instant, a festival was given to about 200 of the boys, none being admitted who did not produce their card of membership and pay twopence. This was a day not to be soon forgotten by the youthful teetotalers; they were especially addressed by our highly respected friend of the cause, Theophilus Pugh, superintendent Wesleyan minister and others, in kind, encouraging and appropriate language. After the repast, which consisted of bread and butter, milk and water, and plum-cake, and about a quarter of a pound of almonds and raisins, neatly enclosed in paper-bags pasted down, to each boy, the doors were thrown open to the public. The boys evinced great attention to the observations and pleadings of the several speakers. Thus the good seed of temperance has been sown in the minds of a numerous body of the rising generation of the town, which, it is only fair to conclude, will rise in after life, bud and bring forth good fruits. Very many having scarcely ever tasted the poisonous cup, and have expressed the most determined resolution never to do so; two or three instances have occurred, wherein the children have broken the pledge at the instigation of their parents, but many others have encouraged or enjoined the children to adopt and keep it. Cards of membership were supplied to the young teetotalers gratuitously, and a great number of them have purchased temperance medals, with which they have been supplied at twopence each. This, of all the efforts hitherto made to promote and extend the principle of total abstinence in this locality, is, perhaps, the most important movement, and is likely to produce the most permanent and substantial good. To encourage others to go and do likewise, I send this imperfect sketch of the proceedings.

Thine truly,

W. HORNSNAILL.

NINTH ANNIVERSARY OF THE CHATHAM, BROMPTON, &c., TEMPERANCE SOCIETY.

This interesting event took place on Tuesday the 8th instant, at Mr. Higgin's spacious School-room, High Street, Chatham, on which occasion, about 240 persons partook of an excellent tea, cake, &c., which was gratuitously provided by the ladies of Chatham and Brompton: it was truly interesting to observe amongst the company, upwards of forty persons who through the instrumentality of this Society had been reclaimed from the paths of drunkenness, poverty, and degradation, now respectably and comfortably clothed, with their happy wives and smiling children, enjoying real and heartfelt pleasure on this occasion.

The chair was ably occupied by the Rev. P. Thompson, A.M., who after supplicating the Divine blessing, delivered a powerful and eloquent speech. The report stated that lectures had been given by the Rev. H. Prior, Rev. Theophilus Pugh, Messrs Thomas Hudson, J. Williamson, Thomas Whittaker, Thomas A. Smith, J. Buckle, and others, and that 217 had been added to the list of pledged teetotalers during the year.

Resolutions were moved and seconded by the Rev. T. Rix, the Rev. R. Kinsman, Mr. F. Wheeler, Mr. Thomas Beggs, secretary of the National Temperance Society; the Rev. A. Jones, and other gentlemen. It would be quite out of my power to do justice to the powerful and argumentative addresses which were delivered by those gentlemen, particularly those of the Rev. P. Thompson, and Mr. T. Beggs. The Rev. J. Stock, Baptist minister, was likewise present and had a resolution to move, but owing to the crowded state of the room, was obliged to leave early. The meeting separated shortly before ten o'clock, highly gratified with the proceedings of the evening, which was enlivened by a teetotal choir, singing several temperance hymns, &c.

It is truly cheering to the Committee to find so warm an interest manifested toward the temperance movement. The meeting was attended by ministers and influential members of most of the christian churches; the various school-rooms and chapels are always readily lent for the purpose of holding public meetings, &c.; and through the kind liberality of the ladies, the debt which was bequeathed us from the Old Moderation Society, has been extinguished. "Onward" is the watchword of the Committee, and they humbly trust that through Divine assistance, the glorious cause of temperance will continue its triumphant progress, pervading the minds of all classes of the community.

I remain, Sir,

Yours obediently,

ROBERT DRAKE, Secretary.

DORSET AND HANTS.

(To the Editor of the National Chronicle and Recorder.)

25, Canon Street, Winchester, 1846

DEAR SIR.—The cause of teetotalism is progressing in Dorset and Hants, particularly since the formation of our district association, in working which your agent Mr. Balfour, has been indefatigable. To the formation and subsequent arrangements connected with the organization of this union, I have given my constant attention, from a conviction that, by so doing, I was serving the interests of the temperance cause and fulfilling the mission entrusted to me by the National Temperance Society. I might mention several instances of societies, all but extinct, being revived and put into good working-order as the result of united effort. But as Mr. Balfour will forward you his journal, I need not enlarge upon this branch of our operations.

I continue to devote a considerable portion of my time to domiciliary visitation, and lecturing in those places where an opening presents itself. Some of the meetings have been more numerous attended than on former occasions, and pleasing instances of success have not been wanting.

At Amport, four miles from Andover, I attended a meeting about a month ago. The chapel was crowded, T. Tasker, Esq., presided; Rev. Mr. Hartley of Southampton, Mr. Williamson and myself addressed the audience. At the close, a young man rose, and acknowledged he had long been a drunkard, but added, he was determined to become a teetotaler. He signed the pledge, an example which was followed by several others. The chairman drew the attention of the meeting to a man well known in the neighbourhood as having been for years a notorious drunkard. This person, it appears, is an iron-founder, in the employ of Mr. Tasker, and although a good workman, he was discharged because of his intemperate habits. After this, he was again employed by the same master at a considerable reduction of wages. He subsequently signed the pledge, and since becoming a teetotaler, has been respected by all who know him. His employer has borne testimony to the advantages of sobriety, by again raising his wages. Many such instances could be easily adduced.

At the village of Winterslow, about 8 miles from Salisbury, I gave a lecture in the Baptist chapel, to a large audience, who appeared anxious to learn all they could about this (to them) strange scheme. During the course of my address, a person interrupted me by saying, it was a worldly subject, and ought not to be advocated in such a sacred place. Supposing the objector to be a mistaken but religious man, I endeavoured to disabuse his mind on the subject, he, however, abruptly left the meeting. Judge of my surprise, upon learning at the close of my lecture, that this man was the keeper of a beer-shop in the village.

In addition to the above, I have attended meetings at Crowhill, Gosport, Andover, and other places. A grant of tracts would be very acceptable. It is a long time since I made a similar application, having obtained a supply from my friends in the country.

Yours sincerely,

A. W. HERITAGE.

WEST CORNWALL

Extracts from the Journal of W. GAWTHORP, Agent.

MY six months' engagements in this association will soon expire, and as I have been actively occupied publicly, by holding meetings, and privately, by planning, suggesting, and organizing the societies. I have pleasure in stating, that I have, on several occasions, been most ably and efficiently assisted, at public meetings, by ministers of the following denominations:—Primitive Methodists, Bible Christians, Wesleyan Association, and Teetotal Wesleyans, by one Independent minister, the Rev. Edward Lokdale of Penzance, whose chapel has always been at my disposal; and by one Episcopalian, the Rev. H. C. Graham, rector of Ludgvan and a county magistrate, who has been an abstainer all his life, and he has kindly lent the National School-room for the meetings, and invariably presided, and most willingly promoted the cause, by vigorously and eloquently advocating our principles. We have had no support from the Wesleyan Connexion; this is the more to be regretted, as this denomination is a sort of "establishment" in Cornwall, and consequently possesses vast influence. Who can account for this strange position? If they were instrumental in saving drunkards in any other way, it might account for their not taking a part with the great mass of temperance reformers, but I have not heard, during my sojourn in this district, of one solitary drunkard becoming religious, and joining this section of the church, except he first became a teetotaler.

Our principles have taken deep root in the minds of the Cornish people. James Teare was the honoured instrument employed in their introduction to Cornwall, and highly esteemed and greatly beloved is he by its inhabitants in consequence. I have no statistics by which to give an accurate statement of the number of teetotalers in this association. At any rate, I may say there are thousands, and great numbers of reclaimed drunkards; that a new connexion of Wesleyan Methodists has been formed, called the "Wesleyan Teetotal Methodists;" they have built several chapels, have five or six ministers, a considerable number of local preachers, and 1000 members, and abstinence is part and parcel of their discipline.

A very interesting monthly temperance periodical, published at Hayle, and under the able management of Mr. F. Harvey of the same place, is amongst the means employed in promoting our cause. There is also a tract depôt, at the same place, for the same object. Last, is the organization of individuals into an association, for the purpose of employing lecturers, and using other means for advancing the principle.

SAFFRON WALDEN.

Mr. F. Collins has, during the last month, visited and lectured in the following towns, viz.:—Debden, Hallstead, Braintree, Colchester, Earls Colne, Brightlingsea, Kelvedon, Coggeshall, Witham, Walden, Rotchford, Chelmsford, Roxwell, Brentwood, Dunmow, Enfield, Hoddesdon, Cambridge, Great Chesterford, and Saffron Walden.

He reports, that in all those places, the cause is in a hopeful and promising state, many of the meetings are numerously attended, and throughout the whole, the most pleasing and marked attention was given to the lectures, and in several places, a wish to have other visits from the agent, who says the state of things throughout the union was highly encouraging.

At Colchester, the anniversary of the society was celebrated by a tea and public meeting. About 150 sat down to tea, which was admirably prepared by the ladies of the society. Thomas Catchpool, Esq., jun., was called to preside. Among other pleasing matters, the report stated, that during the last year's operations, a juvenile society has been organized in connexion with the parent society. The meeting was addressed by two gentlemen of Colchester, one of whom rose to give in his name to the society as a member, Mr. J. Inwards and Mr. F. Collins. The audience, which was highly respectable, appeared delighted and satisfied with the evening's entertainment. At the close some signatures were taken to the pledge.

ROCHDALE.

TEMPERANCE ANNIVERSARY.—On Tuesday evening, the 24th ult., a crowded meeting in connexion with the eleventh anniversary of Rochdale Total Abstinence Society, was held in the Public Hall. Jacob Bright, jun., Esq., occupied the chair. Mr. Joseph Petrie, read an interesting report, the adoption of which was moved by the Rev. George Hallott, and seconded in a few appropriate observations by Mr. John T. Pagan. The chairman, after making a few pointed remarks on the necessity and duty of the religious portion of the community taking a more active part in the temperance question, called upon Mr. R. Smith of London, the Rev. Joseph Townend and Frederick Douglass, who respectively addressed the people on various important aspects of the abstinence movement. Each of the speakers, but especially Mr. Douglass, were listened to with great attention; and at the close a number of respectable individuals purchased schedules, preparatory to joining the Society. Mr. William Logan proposed, and Mr. Oliver Ormerod seconded, a vote of thanks to the chairman and the gentlemen who had taken part in the proceedings of the evening, and then one of the most interesting temperance meetings ever held in Rochdale, quietly separated.

TEMPERANCE AND SUNDAY SCHOOLS.—On Thursday evening, 3rd December, Mr. John Cassell, of London, delivered a lecture in the Temperance Hall, Rochdale. Mr. Thomas Booth, president, in the chair. Subject:—"The claims of total abstinence on the teachers, scholars, and friends of Sabbath Schools." Mr. Cassell treated the question in a lucid, forcible manner, and was listened to with marked attention by the audience. Although this is Mr. C.'s first visit to Rochdale, it will be long remembered by the friends of Sunday Schools here. W. L.

WALTHAMSTOW.

On Tuesday evening, December 7th, by consent of the Committee of the National Temperance Society, Mr. Jabez Inwards attended at the Lecture Room, Walthamstow, and delivered an interesting and instructive lecture on Food and Famine, to a numerous and most attentive audience, R. L. Pinching, Esq., in the chair. Throughout the lecture the interest of the audience was well sustained. At the close, a vote of thanks was given to Mr. Inwards, who afterwards met the members of the Committee, and threw out several practical suggestions for the more efficiently carrying out the principles of total abstinence from intoxicating liquors.

GATESHEAD.

The temperance movement has been most ably advocated, throughout a course of nine lectures, and the cause of peace in two additional lectures, by Mr. Edwin Paxton Hood, in the Lecture-room, Nelson-street, Newcastle. These lectures have produced quite a sensation in the town. On the first and second evenings, the lectures were but thinly attended; but the interest began to awaken—the popular merits of the advocate began to be appreciated—and the meetings presented a more stirring aspect, and increased from scores to hundreds—until at length neither seat-room nor standing-room could be obtained in the spacious arena of the lecture-room. The lectures were useful in their subjects, as well as popular in their character, and admirably calculated to interest and instruct a general assembly.

CENTRAL ASSOCIATION.

From a report sent us by Passmore Edwards, it appears that that gentleman "has been lecturing in the Midland counties including Gloucestershire, Oxfordshire, Warwickshire, Worcestershire, Shropshire, Staffordshire, Derbyshire, Cheshire and Lancashire. He has visited many of the most important towns and places in these counties. Some of these meetings have been very large, and others have been rather small and cold." Besides the general meetings which Mr. Edwards has attended at Worcester, Banbury, Leamington and other places, he has spoken to large numbers of children, some of whom have been brought together for the purpose, and others have been visited and spoken to by him at their usual day and Sunday-schools.

MR. H. CLAPP'S LABOURS IN THE WEST.

HENRY CLAPP, jun., of Lynn, Massachusetts, the delegate to the World's Temperance Convention from the Washingtonians, during the last week has been delivering exceedingly interesting lectures at Gillingham, on Friday October 30th; at Lyme Regis, on Monday November 2nd; at Bridport, on the 3rd; at Yeovil, on the 4th; and at a tea-party at Glastonbury, on the 6th. I had the pleasure of attending all the above lectures, except the one at Lyme Regis, and believe I never attended a series of lectures more likely to advance the good cause. At Gillingham, there was a good attendance in the commodious and comfortable Temperance Hall, enlivened by their unequalled Teetotal Band, consisting of ten or twelve musicians, all of whom are Rechabites. H. Clapp, spoke about an hour and a half, and gave us a very full account of the present state of the temperance cause, the origin and progress of the Washingtonian movement, and, what was most especially interesting, the mode adopted by the Washingtonians of Lynn, in visiting drunkards:—They invite themselves, with his consent, as a social party to his house, and there they talk to him kindly, never reproachfully, telling him home truths nevertheless, and being accompanied by individuals who had formerly been in a worse state than himself, they generally succeed in making a teetotaler of him, being always careful to say nothing likely to offend him, or to arouse his opposition. In the same manner they invite themselves to hold meetings in the houses of the spirit-sellers—taking with them reformed men who had been made drunkards in these very houses—telling the clearest truths, but never abusing the rum-seller, pointing out perhaps the graves in the church-yard filled by drunkards of his making, but in such a way as to arouse his conscience, if he have any, but not to offend him. In America, the houses of liquor-sellers are always apart from their place of business, and women never attend to them; the owners showing their good sense in keeping their families at a distance from the abominations connected with the traffic. H. Clapp drew a thrilling comparison, of the eagerness to extinguish the burning barn of the farmer—the almost reckless indifference to danger in the endeavour to extinguish the flames—and on the other hand, the almost total indifference when the farmer himself was on fire, and perishing by fire that not only consumed the body but destroyed the soul. He would rather hear that his father or mother had suffered the most cruel of deaths, than hear that they had died of delirium tremens. At Lyme, the meeting was held in the Town Hall, and was densely filled; the respected Baptist minister of the town, Mr. Wayland, came forward at the close, and publicly signed the pledge. At Bridport we had a large and crowded meeting; Mr. Bowden, a commercial traveller from Bristol, was the first speaker, and having worked in a glass house, gave valuable testimony as to the power of enduring severe labour without the aid of strong drink; his looks speaking eloquently the good he was deriving from teetotalism,—his speech was very humorous and effective, and will long be remembered. H. Clapp followed, and for about an hour and a half, was listened to with much attention, and at the conclusion, considerably after ten o'clock, the people seemed in no haste to leave. At Yeovil, we had a good meeting, Alfred Gillett in the chair, and a most telling speech from H. Clapp; some "navies" signed the pledge at the conclusion. At Glastonbury a tea-party was got up; the meeting was first addressed by Mr. Timbury, Primitive Methodist minister; Frederick Gale, Esq., then gave a valuable medical testimony, and H. Clapp occupied, with great effect, the remainder of the evening.

JAMES CLARK.

Bristol Temperance Herald.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

We have several communications in type, but which we are compelled by the amount of intelligence to postpone. We must urge upon our correspondents the necessity of condensation, and the importance of having their articles not later than the 18th.

We are in receipt of a circular announcing a new publication, under the management of William Howitt. We understand that the Temperance question is to be one of the features of this new work.

J., inadmissible.

Advertisements.

EDITED BY A TEETOTALER.

January 1, No. 1, New Series, Price Two-pence,

THE

SUNDAY SCHOOL MAGAZINE

AND

RAGGED SCHOOL ADVOCATE.

CONTENTS:—Engraving, Haman Impeached—New Year's Day—Sunday School Brotherhood, by Elihu Burritt—Alliance Dove—Sunday Schools versus Infidelity, Anarchy and Atheism—Ragged Schools—The Grand Stand at Manchester converted to a Sunday School—The dying Peasant—Sunday School processions—Another Man—Poetry—The Senior Class—Vice progressive—Anecdotes—The Teacher—Engraving, Scripture Horns—The Sunday School Portrait Painter—A Teacher lost! lost! lost!—Varieties—The Library, best mode of keeping Books—Kingdom cursed at Coldstream—Children's Box—Engraving, Hyena—Uncle Harry's Letters—New Year's Tea Party—Sunday Anecdotes, Two eyes, &c.

From the Rev. T. A. James of Birmingham,—
"I conscientiously and earnestly recommend this Periodical."

The vols. for 1845 and 1846 are now on sale at 2s. 6d.
London: Partridge and Oakey, Paternoster Row.

IPSWICH JUVENILE TEMPERANCE BOOKS.

A Series of little books, consisting of sixteen pages each, 32mo., with coloured covers, and each illustrated with a handsome woodcut, is now coming out in six-penny packets, of glazed coloured paper, containing with covers 320 pages. A sample will be sent for 12 penny stamps.

The following are now ready:—

1. The History of Teetotalism.
2. Scriptural Teetotalism.
3. Teetotalism of Ancient History.
4. Teetotalism of Modern History.
5. The cost of Intemperance.
6. Self-denial.
7. Early Habits.
8. The Force of Example.
9. A Letter to Sunday School Children.
10. H. Hawkins the Drunkard's Daughter.
11. Christian Courtesy and Benevolence.
12. The Young Chemist's Inquiry.
13. Little Henry and the Teetotal Festival.
14. The Young Reasoner's Objections to Teetotalism.
15. The Fear of Ridicule.
16. The Teetotalism of Travellers.

Eight more books, of 12 pages each, with Tales and Anecdotes are expected to be ready next month.

IPSWICH TEMPERANCE TRACTS.

1. The Doctor Scrutinized, or for what purpose do Physicians prescribe Alcoholic Beverages, PAGES by R. D. Alexander, F.L.S., 122 thousand... 8
2. Striking Facts, 84 thousand..... 2
3. Maker and Vender, 44 thousand..... 2
4. Our Creed, 47 thousand..... 2
5. Adulterated Beer, 34 thousand..... 4
6. Adulterated Wine, 40 thousand..... 4
7. The Maltster, 37 thousand..... 4
8. Go Feel what I have Felt, 53 thousand..... 2
9. Facts are Stubborn Things, 48 thousand..... 2
10. The Spirit Dealer, 35 thousand..... 2
11. Christian Teetotalism, 70 thousand..... 2
12. The Trade, 33 thousand..... 4
13. Alcohol, 33 thousand..... 4
14. The Town of Ipswich, 33 thousand..... 4
15. Song of the Water Drinker, 37 thousand..... 2
16. Stimulation not Strength, 30 thousand..... 8
17. Farmer Woodman's Speech, 41 thousand..... 4
18. The Beer Barrel Examined, 28 thousand..... 8
19. Teetotal Recipes, 38 thousand..... 4
20. Speech of J. J. Gurney, 30 thousand..... 4
21. Pity the Poor Drunkard, 49 thousand..... 2
22. The Fool's Pence, 25 thousand..... 8
23. Why am I a Teetotaler? 26 thousand..... 2
24. Dost thou smoke, Bill? 34 thousand..... 4
25. William the Laudanum Drinker and John the Tradesman, 30 thousand..... 4
26. The Ox Discourse..... 4
27. Letter to the Clergy, by a Brother Clergyman, 21 thousand..... 20

	PAGES
28 Common Sense, by a member of the University of Cambridge, 20 thousand.....	2
29 Ralph the Soldier.....	4
30 Testimony of Eminent Physicians, 30 thousand.....	4
31 The Working Man, 35 thousand.....	20
32 Is I not happy? by Hugh Stowell, 30 thousand.....	4
33 David the Shoemaker, 49 thousand.....	4
34 The Drunken Couple, 48 thousand.....	2
35 Confessions of a drunkard, 29 thousand.....	2
36 Master Tailor, 20 thousand.....	4
37 The Fatal Gift, 36 thousand.....	2
38 Poor Sandy.....	4
39 Use & abuse, by Archdeacon Jeffreys, 34 thousand.....	2
40 The Schoolmaster.....	4
41 Water is Best, by J. J. Gurney, 37 thousand.....	8
42 Cobbett's Advice.....	4
43 Take a Public House.....	4
44 A Sailor's Yarn.....	4
45 Moderate Drinking Calmly Considered.....	12
46 The Pledge.....	4
47 John Jarvis, or the Pledge Signed.....	12
48 The Fifteen Friends.....	4
49 Sunday School Teachers, 22 thousand.....	12
50 Sunday School Children, 40 thousand.....	12
51 Money better than Beer, 37 thousand.....	4
52 Little Mary; or a Daughter's Love.....	8
53 Philosophy of the Temperance Movement, by R. T. Trull, M.D.....	20
54 Love to Man, or an Appeal to the Pious.....	20
55 The Young Woman's Tract.....	12
56 The Young Man's Tract.....	16
57 Dr. Campbell's Testimony to the Temperance Reformation, 18 thousand.....	8
58 Why Sign the Pledge? 40 thousand.....	2
59 The Poor Man's House Repaired.....	4
60 The Mother's Tract.....	8
61 The High Price of Food.....	4
62 Ladies' Tract Societies.....	8
63 The Praise of Water; Extract of a Lecture by the Rev. T. Spencer, 25 thousand.....	2
64 Important Calculation, 30 thousand.....	2
65 The Farm Servant, 25 thousand.....	4
66 Teetotalism Declining; with an Address to the Directors of Railways, 15 thousand.....	8
67 The Reformed Drunkard, and the best means of Reforming the Drunkard, 20 thousand.....	8
68 The Recruit of the British Legion.....	8
69 No. 1 of Temperance Anecdotes.....	12
70 No. 2 ditto.....	12
71 No. 3 ditto.....	12
72 No. 4 ditto.....	12
73 Luke Husler, or "I did not like to say No.".....	8
74 The Drunkard's Wife.....	8
75 The Unexplored Island.....	4
76 Ancient Wines; by R. D. Alexander.....	8
77 Influence of Example, 15 thousand.....	2

ASSORTED PACKETS.

- No. 1, containing Tracts No. 1 to 81 inclusive.
 " 2, " " " 32 to 55 " "
 " 3, " " " 56 and upwards.
Each Sixpence.

Twenty-four Sixpenny Packets, of either Juvenile Temperance Books or Tracts, will be delivered in London for Half-a-guinea, or 50 Packets for a Guinea, being sent by a Post-office Order to Richard Dykes Alexander, Ipswich.

SAMPLES WILL BE FORWARDED POSTAGE PAID, in return FOR 40 PENNY STAMPS, SENT TO THE EDITOR OF THE TEMPERANCE TRACTS, IPSWICH.

London, Simpkin and Marshall; Ipswich, Burton; Leeds, Kershaw; Norwich, Jarrold and Sons; Manchester, Holker; and of all Booksellers.

PRIZE TRACTS.

On the subject of Petitioning the Legislature to Prohibit the sale of intoxicating liquors on Sundays.

The Committee of the British Association for the promotion of Temperance, anxious to diffuse correct information on the above important question, has resolved to offer a premium of Three Guineas each for the two best eight page tracts in favour of seeking legislative aid. As the tracts are designed for general circulation, they must be plainly and pointedly written, embracing the following considerations:—

1st. Reasons for preferring at the present time an effort to obtain the Prohibition of the Sunday traffic, rather than the entire abrogation of the License Laws.

2nd. The necessity existing for legislative aid to accomplish the object in view.

3rd. The right and the duty of the friends of temperance and the people generally to promote the effort.

4th. The beneficial results likely to follow the enactment of such a law.

N.B.—One of the tracts must be written without any reference to the sanctity of the Sabbath. The other must embrace that view of the subject in addition to those already stated.

The Committee of the Association will be the adjudicators, and the competitors must send their manuscripts sealed up to the Office, 3, Low Ousegate, York, not later than the 1st of January, 1847. The manuscript must be accompanied by a note, containing the real name of the author, and bearing a mark corresponding with one on the manuscript. The notes of course will not be opened till after the Prizes have been awarded. The tracts to be the property of the Association.

POSTPONEMENT.

The Committee of the Association having deemed it desirable to postpone the time for receiving the manuscripts of the above tracts one month, viz., to the 1st of February, 1847; parties who may have forwarded their manuscripts previously to seeing this notice may have them returned for alteration or improvement, on applying to the Secretary, Mr. F. Hopwood, 3, Low Ousegate, York.

Just Published.

THE WORLD'S
TEMPERANCE CONVENTION.

THE REPORT OF THE
PROCEEDINGS OF THE CONVENTION,

WITH AN INTRODUCTION,
By ELIHU BURRITT.

And a selection of the most valuable papers sent into the Business Committee.

The Committee, in order to invite a large sale, have decided upon publishing the volume at cost price.

Sewed in wrapper, 1s. Bound in cloth, 1s. 6d.

Considerable allowance will be made to Individuals and Societies wishing to distribute gratuitously.

C. GILPIN, Bishopsgate Street Without; HOULSTON AND STONEMAN, Paternoster Row.

TO TEMPERANCE AND TOTAL
ABSTINENCE SOCIETIES.

HOULSTON & STONEMAN beg to announce for sale:

1. THE SERIES OF TRACTS PUBLISHED WITH THE SANCTION OF THE NATIONAL TEMPERANCE SOCIETY, upwards of 150 sets. 2 pages, at 8d. per 100; 4 pages, at 1s. 4d per 100; 8 pages, at 2s. 8d. per 100.

2. The above Tracts, done up in packets, Nos. 1 to 4, at 6d. each.

3. THE LOAN TRACTS, to form series of sixty numbers, done up in covers for Loan Circulation. Nos. 1 to 30 are now ready, containing sixteen pages each, at 8s. per 100.

4. A NEW TEMPERANCE MANUAL, containing Rules and Suggestions for the formation of Auxiliary and Branch Associations. Price 3d.

5. THE COLLECTING, PLEDGE & MINUTE BOOK; for the use of Branch Temperance Societies. Price 3d.

6. A new 4 page Tract, entitled "Scanty," at 1s. 4d. per 100.

7. THE NATIONAL TEMPERANCE SOCIETY'S PLEDGE TICKETS, price 3d. per sheet; each Sheet contains 32 Tickets.

8. THE NATIONAL TEMPERANCE SOCIETY'S RULES for BRANCH SOCIETIES, 4 pp 8vo, price 1d.

The above publications are offered to Associations with the sanction of the National Temperance Society. Parties who order quantities of either of them will receive the full trade allowance from the Publishers.

65, Paternoster Row, London.

TEMPERANCE
PROVIDENT INSTITUTION,
39, MOORGATE STREET, LONDON.

For Mutual Life Assurance, Annuities, &c.

TRUSTEES.

Robert Warner, Esq. | Edward Webb, Esq.
Rev. W. R. Baker. | Richard Barrett, Jun., Esq.

The Sixth Annual Meeting of Members will be held at this Office this day, Friday January 1st, at 3 o'clock precisely, to receive the Directors' Report.

THEODORE COTTON, Sec.

The Report will be printed immediately, and may be had with the Tables, Rules, &c., on application.

Lately published, price 2d., Fourth Edition.

General Scripture Reading

PERPETUAL BIBLICAL CALENDAR.

Embracing in an Annual Cycle THE ENTIRE SCRIPTURES, in consecutive order. In a course of three lessons each day, for every day in the year. By ALGERYMAN.

Also, a HYMN on the same subject, with the Music. Price One Halfpenny.

London: Houlston and Stoneman, 45, Paternoster Row.

* * * The NATIONAL TEMPERANCE CHRONICLE and TEMPERANCE RECORDER is published on the first day of each month, at HOULSTON & STONEMAN, the Depot of the National Temperance Society, 65, Paternoster-row, and will be sent post-free for one year on receipt of 2s. 6d. postage labels. Annual Subscriptions received at the Society's office, 11, Tokenhouse Yard, London, and subscriptions and donations for the general purposes of the Society, by the Treasurer, G. W. ALEXANDER, 40, Lombard Street; by any Member of the Committee, and at the office as above.

London: Printed by RICHARD BARRETT of Regent-terrace City-road, in the Parish of St. Luke, in the County of Middlesex, Printer; at his Printing Office, No. 13, Ark-lane, in the Parish of Allhallows Staining, in the City of London; and published by JOHN STONEMAN, of 24, Brook Street, in the Parish of Islington, in the County of Middlesex; at HOULSTON and STONEMAN'S, No. 65, Paternoster-row, in the Parish of St. Michael-le-Querne, in the City of London, Publishers.—Friday, January 1st, 1847.

THE
NATIONAL TEMPERANCE CHRONICLE
 AND
TEMPERANCE RECORDER.

It is good neither to eat flesh, nor to drink wine, nor anything whereby thy brother stumbleth, or is offended, or is made weak.—ROM. XIV. 21

No. 14, JOINT SERIES.]

FEBRUARY, 1847.

[PRICE 1d., STAMPED 2d.]

CONTENTS.

	PAGE		PAGE
Famine in Ireland	17	EDITORIAL REMARKS—
To Manufacturers, Vendors, and Consumers of Intoxicating Drinks	18	National Temperance Society—The Late J. J. Gurney, Esq.—Temperance Literature—Influential Accession to the Temperance Cause—The World's Temperance Convention	24, 25
Ragged Schools	19	HOME INTELLIGENCE—
Anti-Usage—Indigestion [Dyspepsia] not Heart Disease—Crime and Intemperance—"To the pure all things are pure"	19, 20	Metropolitan Meetings—Camberwell and Peckham Temperance Society—Sunday School Children—Devizes — Berkhamstead — Dorking — Lampton — Sunderland—Exeter—Newcastle—Leeds Temperance Society—Bristol Total Abstinence Society—Journal of James Balfour—Sunday School Temperance Meeting at York—Wales—Seventh Annual Report of the Protestant Total Abstinence Society—Hastings ..	26, 30
Literary Notices	21
Facts for the People—Important—Drunkards not allowed to Travel by Railway	22
FOREIGN INTELLIGENCE—
Response to the World's Convention—Extract of a Letter from Sydney	23

FAMINE IN IRELAND.

The horrors of famine are thickening in Ireland, notwithstanding large public grants have been made, and private charity has been drained off in enormous sums, to mitigate this fearful visitation. It is now the engrossing subject of the day. The press teems with accounts, each more alarming than the past; and along with the sounds of wailing are heard the murmurs of discontent, the clank of arms, and all those ominous signs of insecurity to life and property which famine invariably produces. Anarchy and pestilence, demoralization and crime, have ever dogged the steps of want. Already we hear of agrarian outrage and open assassination once more prevailing in a country, from which they were just departing, before the mild and pacific influence of its great apostle of temperance. The bonds of confusion seem broken, and it is difficult to foresee the end.

The condition of Ireland was, very properly, made the leading point of the Speech from the Throne, and formed a prominent feature of the debate which took place on the address. A state of things that baffles the speculations of the political economist, was admitted to exist; and the obvious remedy of opening the ports, as well as the expedient one of permitting the use of molasses and sugar in brewing and distillation, were topics dwelt upon by several speakers in both houses. These point to the measures of Ministers, and indicate the nature of the remedy they will be likely to prescribe for the distress. To the former, we can offer no objection—it is a measure of just and humane policy in this emergency—and the substitution of molasses for grain, if the manufacture of drink must continue, may be a proper course. But is it not a fitting time for the temperance public to exert its moral influence, and press upon the Government and the country the monstrous evil of that drinking system which is converting into a pernicious drink the food of the people, and call upon the piety and intelligence of the age to apply the practical cure.

Lord George Bentinck stated some alarming facts: he had a letter from the Protestant clergyman of Skibbereen, in which it was stated, that between the 1st of September and the 1st of January there had been 140 deaths in the Skibbereen workhouse. On the Sunday previous, there were in the same parish 14 funerals waiting in the churchyard while the first was being completed. In the next parish, there were 9 funerals in the churchyard at one time; and in another, 6. The writer stated, that the barony of Skibbereen, the population of which comprised 100,000 men, had been desolated, and that 10,000 persons had perished by the 6th of January. Other gentlemen gave descriptions perfectly heart-rending, by which it appeared that the people were dying by hundreds.

Many of these gentlemen have their own peculiar remedies, but none of them seem to pay any attention to the waste of food in manufacturing what some of them confess to be only a luxury. When many of our law-makers and leading country gentlemen are endeavouring to indoctrinate the public mind with the notion that malt liquor is a necessary of life, we cannot expect any very clear or comprehensive views on a subject so novel, vulgar, and fanatical, as that of entire abstinence from strong liquors. But this is a fit time for those who have been engaged in this unfashionable movement for many years, to bring the fruit of their experience before the understanding of these gentlemen, and show them that thousands of their hard-working countrymen are improved in health and circumstances by its disuse; that these drinks are the perpetual fountains of crime, pauperism, and disease, and that, independently of their evil effects, they are consuming

8,000,000 quarters of good grain, for which the people of Ireland are famishing; and that the sum expended in these drinks is equal to the total annual amount of property assessed to the poor-rate in England and Wales—which, in 1841, amounted to about £62,540,000.

Whilst this want of food is felt so severely amongst us, what do we find on the other side of the Atlantic? Europe, in its scarcity, looks to that great continent as the granary of the world; and its almost inexhaustible resources encourage us to hope, that the proper cultivation of friendly relations with the United States, will protect us in the future from evils like that which presses upon us now. It was stated in the House of Commons, that Indian corn was selling at New York for 3s. a bushel, while at Liverpool and in Ireland, the price was 9s.: wheat was 40s. at one place and 80s. at the other. An enlightened agriculturist from Massachusetts informed us lately, that they had thousands of barrels of flour for which they could not find warehouse room. This superabundance in one country, with positive destitution in another, is a strange anomaly in this day of advanced civilization. But America owes this, not only to her immense extent of territory and natural advantages, but to the fact, that in many states she has stopped her distilleries, and declared against the sin of wasting the fruits of the earth. This powerful example ought to point us to effort. It is well known, that large brewers, knowing the scarcity of grain, have been making unprecedented purchases. Are not these things sufficient to arouse the lethargic energies of our people. At all times the waste of food is an evil that admits of no palliation, no excuse; but now it is aggravated by the cries of perishing thousands, who are driven to an extremity of misery, and threaten in their desperation the public safety.

In this emergency, the abstainers of the kingdom ought to come out. Meetings in every town should be held, and a simple petition adopted to the government, or memorial to the crown to stop the distilleries. These documents should be declaratory of the settled conviction of the Temperance public, that it is wrong to convert food, under any circumstances, and at all times, into a drink, which the highest scientific authorities have declared to be unnecessary, and all experience has proved to be pernicious, but that there are special reasons why it should be taken into consideration at the present alarming crisis.

Not only should the government be addressed, but the morality of our people should be aroused. The people of America achieved their triumphs over the drinking system by the voice of public opinion. It is the duty of every man to examine his individual responsibility in this matter. All who drink assist in maintaining the drinking system, and help to perpetuate the mischievous consequences inseparable from it.

TO MANUFACTURERS, VENDORS, AND CONSUMERS OF INTOXICATING DRINKS.

“Resolved, that, in view of all the information given to this Convention, our conviction of the immorality of the manufacture, sale and use of intoxicating drinks, as a common beverage, is deepened and strengthened, and we desire loudly to enunciate to the world this strong conviction. Whether men may or may not be prepared to receive this great truth, this Convention is not able to determine, neither are they anxious on that point. They desire faithfully to do their duty, and to impress on the consciences of all men who are engaged in the demoralizing practices referred to, that it is their bounden duty to renounce them at once and for ever.”

35, Eccles Street, 23rd October, 1846.

GENTLEMEN,—Truth is not made any more true by being adopted and proclaimed by many, yet it is, nevertheless, brought to bear with greater force on most minds when it comes before them sanctioned by the voice of the wise and the good, assembled in large numbers to give their opinions and their convictions to the world. With a view of giving the sanction of such authority to my own feelings, I have placed at the head of this letter the deliberate and solemn conviction of as intelligent and influential a body of men as could be collected together—of men who are, in various and widely and distant parts of the earth, operating steadily and surely on the public opinion of the world,—sowing those seeds of virtue and morality, which will assuredly take root, germinate, and grow to maturity.

“Truth crushed to earth will rise again,
The eternal years of God are hers,
But error wounded writhes in pain,
And dies amid its worshippers.”

It is God's truth that the drinking-customs of society are a curse to the world, and that they must be overthrown before man can be virtuous or happy.

The body of men I refer to, are those who composed the Temperance Convention (about 350 in number) which assembled in London in the month of August last. They were brought together from America, from the West Indies, from India, from France, from England, and Wales, and Ireland, and Scotland, the delegates of millions, to confer together as to the best means of banishing intoxicating drinks from the world, and after full deliberation they adopted, with but a few (I think three or four) dissentient voices, and they have returned to their homes to impress it upon the hearts and consciences of all men, the solemn resolution I have laid before you.

If it be the bounden duty of all men to benefit and not to injure their fellow-creatures, and if we shall be made accountable before God in another state of existence, for our actions in this life, then indeed is that resolution a solemn one. It is worthy your deepest, your most serious consideration. Every puncheon of whiskey, every cask of wine, every hogshead of porter, every barrel of cider, ever gallon of cordial, which leaves the premises of the manufacturer, goes forth charged with a mission of mischief so great as to be beyond calculation. The responsibility for which must rest somewhere. So sure as there is a God in heaven it rests upon you, and upon the respectable moderate drinkers of your poisons. You cannot shake off this responsibility, it will stick to you for ever while you participate in your evil practices. A few years ago, you were innocent, because ignorant of the mischief you were doing. But the light of science is shed abroad, and it has pronounced in language heard by all, that alcohol is a poison. You have no right to make, and vend, and consume poison. The evidence of experience has proved beyond contradiction, that what is called moderate drinking has an inevitable tendency to lead men on to drunkenness. It is now known to all intelligent men, that the use of alcoholic stimulants leads, in innumerable instances, to their abuse, that a craving for them is gradually created, which, in the end, becomes all but irresistible. Thus rendering their victim almost the slave of a physical necessity, over which he has little more control, than over the fatal miasma of fever or plague which floats around him. Hence we see the reason why it is that the mightiest intellects, and the most pious minds are so frequently prostrated by this pitiless foe of the human race—by this demon which you create and foster, for love of gain, and in obedience to fashion which demands at your hands implicit obedience to its inexorable demands. The love of gain stimulates you and makes you unmindful of all the crimes and woes which assuredly flow from your manufactories, as it is certain that effect follows cause. Fashion loads your tables with wine and ale, and ardent spirits, and deadens your moral sensibilities, which would otherwise be alive, and make you mindful of your duties to your fellow-men—duties which are imperative, and which demand from us the avoidance of all practices that are inimical to the happiness of the human race; duties, which I verily believe call upon you to relinquish your business, and to turn your attention and capital to occupations which will not be injurious to society; duties, which I believe in my heart require every man and woman in our land to abandon at once and for ever, all use of intoxicating drinks.

If these were but my own solitary convictions, you might call me an enthusiast or a fool, and cast them aside, but that is not the case. They are the convictions of millions, and they will become deeper and stronger convictions, until a virtuous and irresistible public opinion shall declare that it is the voice of humanity, it is the voice of christianity, it is the decree of God, that the manufacture, sale, and use of intoxicating drinks shall be discontinued.

I am yours respectfully,
 JAMES HAUGHTON.

RAGGED SCHOOLS.

Nottingham, 24th Nov., 1846.

(To the Editor of the National Temperance Chronicle and Recorder.)

MY DEAR SIR,—A few days ago, I found amongst my temperance papers, an autograph memoir of Edward Smith, who died about eight years since. He was the first secretary of the Nottingham total abstinence society, an office he filled for several years, with great ability, zeal and diligence, he also became a consistent member of a christian church.

At an early period of life, he had been a most useful character in instructing the young, and as a village preacher, but from his oft-repeated statement, he fell by the hands of his kind friends, who gave him ale, wine and spirits, with the mistaken idea of supporting his strength under his arduous labour and fatigue.

When made a drunkard, he was, of course, banished from the church, and became a lost and depraved being; he was so reduced in circumstances, as to be compelled to apply for relief to the parish, and was sent to break-stones on the high-way. He was mercifully rescued from his lost state, by the agency of the Nottingham total abstinence society. The following paragraph I have copied from his very interesting memoir, which has led me to suppose, that he, his wife, and a young man, were the originators of the "Ragged Schools," then designated, the "Good Samaritan School."

Should you think this suitable for insertion in your valuable temperance periodical, you will oblige

Yours very sincerely,
 JOHN HIGGINBOTTOM.

"There is at Birmingham, a school established for the reception of poor children, whose destitute appearance forbids their admittance into other schools. It is called 'The Good Samaritan School.' This school was commenced by myself, my first dear wife, and a young man, who lived some time at my parents' house. It originated from the circumstance of our seeing so many ragged, bare-foot children, strolling about the streets. We received upwards of 100 children the first Sabbath, and in a short time, we had 500 or 600 boys and girls, anxious to enjoy the blessings of a Sabbath-school instruction. I understand it is still in a very prosperous state, and as the children improve in their appearance, they are recommended to and received into other schools, to make room for the more destitute.

"I remember about Christmas, 1821, we brought these poor, forlorn looking children to Bond Street, when the Rev. Mr. Gray of Chipping-Norton, preached a sermon for them, from those words, 'The Son of Man is come to seek and to save that which was lost,' and I shall never forget the impression made, when the children in their rags and tatters rose, and sung a hymn, composed for the occasion, two verses of which I will transcribe.

"Are we too wretched for relief,
 Beyond the reach of prayer,
 Too worthless and too mean to be
 The objects of your care?
 O no, your sympathy directs
 Your hand to give relief,
 And bids you feel another's woe
 And share another's grief."

"We were in the habit of inviting the parents of these children to come to the room in the evening of the day, and we used to address them on things which accompany salvation. Sometimes we were obliged to take the forms into the yard, and speak in the open air, the room not being large enough to contain the vast concourse of people."

ANTI-USAGE.

It appears that the teetotalers of Scotland have commenced operations on this point. Several large towns have abjured their drinking-customs at funerals, and Glasgow is following in the train. If such a delicate matter as a partial change of funeral-usage is being attempted, it will be less difficult to make an aggression on the drink fines and footings, and the fatal usages prevailing at the payment of wages, and at the benefit society meetings. We give from a Glasgow newspaper the commencement of the movement in that important community.

"At a meeting of the Town Council of Glasgow, on Thursday, a deputation was admitted, consisting of the Rev. Dr. Symington, Rev. Dr. Wardlaw, Rev. Dr. Willis, Rev. Dr. Beattie, Rev. Mr. Borland, Rev. Mr. McBeath, and another clergyman, who stated that their object was to obtain the co-operation and countenance of the civil authorities to a resolution, which had already been agreed to by 80 ministers of various denominations in the city, with the view of putting an end to the custom of giving refreshments at funerals. Dr. Symington briefly enforced the objects of the resolution. Drs. Wardlaw, Beattie, and Willis shortly expressed their views to the Council, when the deputation retired. Mr. Lumsden then briefly moved that the Council should adopt the resolution which had been agreed to by the clergyman, and support its recommendations with all their influence. Bailie Smith seconded the motion. Mr. Leadbetter heartily approved of the motion, and wished it to be understood that each member of Council would pledge himself to discontinue the custom which had been found so injurious, in the event of bereavement unhappily visiting their own families. [This suggestion seemed to accord with the mind of the Council.] After a few words from Bailie Bryson, Mr. Chapman, and the Lord Provost, the motion was unanimously agreed to; and it was remitted to the Magistrates to prepare a resolution in concurrence with the sentiments of the clergymen.

INDIGESTION [DYSPEPSIA] NOT HEART DISEASE.

I beg to confirm the view I took of Dr. Chambers's cases being not heart disease at all, by the following extract from a clinical lecture of Dr. Wright's, of Birmingham, one of the first of living authorities. See Medical Times for December 19th, 1846. The patient was cured, he it is observed, without gin or port wine.

H. MUDGE.

"To have only superficially examined him, would have been to conclude that there was something wrong about his heart, especially as he had a quick and somewhat irregular pulse. This is a very common pulse in some forms of flatulent dyspepsia, when the accumulation of gas in the stomach and bowels really produces some feeling of suffocation in the patient, and often interferes mechanically with the free action of the heart. All his unpleasantness and pain subsided, as I told you they would, after a mild course of vegetable tonics, with ammonia and resinous purgatives, with assafœtida."

CRIME AND INTEMPERANCE.

Among the trials in the York county assizes, were five cases arising from intemperance. 1 manslaughter, 1 wounding with intent to murder, 1 cutting and maiming, 1 robbery, and 1 assault.

"On looking through the calendar, I find that it gives an intimation that a great many of the prisoners are utterly uneducated, and that those who have received some education, have received it in a very slight degree. We may, therefore, still hope that by increased exertion in educating the rising generation, an amendment in their moral habits may take place."—Mr. Justice Cresswell, York County Assizes, December, 1846.

When a man inflicts a grievous wound with a weapon calculated to inflict it, it is natural to suppose that he intended to do so. In this case, the whole of the prisoner's family—his father, mother, sister, and himself,—had been drinking with the prosecutor, and all, more or less, were affected with liquor; and after that, without any apparent provocation or assignable motive, he appears to have attacked the prosecutor, and with a knife inflicted these wounds. The only account given of it is, that the prisoner was drunk. Voluntary drunkenness is no excuse at all for crime committed. It has been supposed, that in instance may occur under this statute, that a man may be so drunk as to have no knowledge of what he is doing, then it may be said he cannot intend to inflict bodily harm; but I should hesitate long before I advised a grand jury to throw out a bill on that account.—Extract from Mr. Justice Cresswell's charge to the grand jury at the York City Assizes, December 7th, 1846.

The above was the only case for trial at the City assizes.

"TO THE PURE ALL THINGS ARE PURE."

A correspondent in No. 3. of Hewitt's Journal thus writes:—"The first great step in the improvement of the masses, and without which no further step will ever be effectually taken, must be the fixing down and the barring up of the floodgates of insobriety; it must begin with the closing up of drinking shops for ever; the reduction of taverns to the smallest number consistent with the convenience of strangers and travellers; the strict enforcement of reasonable hours on all these establishments throughout the working days of the week, and the non admission of any but strangers and travellers during any of the twenty-four pertaining to the Lord's day; on which day, holy as it is, more evil perhaps than on any other day is incurred in the way of intemperance. I am no teetotaler, friends. I know not of any good thing given to us of God needing to be rejected on general principles. Neither reason, nature, or scripture teach any such doctrine. To the pure all things (eatable or drinkable) are pure; only let our moderation be known unto all men. At the same time, no blame attaches to him who thinks it concerns his safety entirely to abstain from liquors, but on the contrary his total abstinence is in him praiseworthy; and it certainly will not lessen his merit, if he presume not to measure others by his own standard, nor to dictate to those, who, on his own shallow grounds of argumentation, are much better judges of the question than he can be. Let these liquors be saleable on working days by all persons who choose to deal in them, but on a rigorously penal condition that none be consumed in the shop. Beer carried home and shared with his wife will never, I should hope, create intemperance; but as to children they undoubtedly need it not, and ought never in childhood and youth to taste of such liquors."

A WELL WISHER.

We do not question the sincerity or good intentions of "A WELL WISHER," when we venture to state that he has not made himself acquainted with the temperance question. He seems to be fully alive to the evils of intemperance, as the above quotation will testify, but he is decidedly wrong as to both its causes and remedies. Why does he call upon legislation to interfere, and put down drinking on the premises where intoxicating drinks are sold? Why does not the same rule apply to houses where they sell tea or coffee? Is there any difference in the mere establishments, any contamination in the mere building, in the one case that there is not in the other? Or is it not the drink that makes the place so evil, and renders such measures necessary. If it be good, why the necessity for limitation and restriction? We should rejoice to see the measures he suggests; but would they compel sobriety? We doubt it; they might mitigate the evil, but would not destroy the deeply-seated appetite, which so long as it exists will seek gratification.

We grant, no good gift of God should be rejected; but is alcohol good—can it be fairly considered a gift of God at all? Opium in the same sense is a good gift of God, but good for what? Alcohol is good, but good for what? The hemlock, and henbane, and deadly nightshade are good gifts of God, but do men therefore make tea or liquors from them, and drink them, and justify their use on that ground: they all have their uses, as every particle of the material world has, but man has to discover that use. Alcohol is useful in the arts; possibly may be in extreme cases as medicine, although that is disputed by many, but does it therefore follow that it is good when taken into the human stomach as an ordinary beverage.

Is it not a perversion to apply the apostle's rule to the drinking of alcoholic liquors. Can the good man claim an exemption from the effects of certain physical agents? Will not opium excite him—poison kill him—bad food nauseate him or make him sick—alcohol make him drunk? What does he mean, then, by "to the pure, all things eatable and drinkable are pure?" Does he mean that noxious food or drink will cease to be so to the pure? The good man, equally with the sinner, must observe the laws of health to secure it, or suffer the punishment: and no amount of excellence or piety will preserve a man from the effects of intoxicating liquor, if he takes them. The question, therefore, is purely one of science, and will not be disposed of in the summary way that it is here treated. There is an absolute puerility in this application of the text quoted, for no moral purity—which we apprehend is what is meant—on the part of the person taking it, can make any alteration in the material qualities of food or drink. If intoxicating liquor be physically injurious to the human constitution, it will not be affected by any moral quality on the part of the person imbibing it; if it were so, it would be destroying the independence and integrity of the natural laws. Now, we assert, that the evil is in the drink; and invite our friend, "A Well Wisher," to a careful inquiry of the subject, resting assured that as he enters into it, he will find the only real cure for intemperance in an abstinence from its cause; and that it is far more important than legislation, to rouse the people to that voluntary effort in this case, which can alone secure the blessings of temperance and good order.

TEMPERANCE AND INTemperance:—HINDOO AND CHRISTIAN.—When, six years ago, the 13th was cantoned at Cabal, Lieutenant-Colonel Dennie, "called upon the men to consider the mortality which for a long time had afflicted the regiment, and to reflect upon the undoubted truth, that of nearly one hundred men who had perished within the past year, the remote (if not immediate) cause of their disease and death, with few exceptions, had been liquor." He also said:—"As soldiers you must all know that the drunkards of the corps, whether in quarters or in the field, are always the most worthless. They can neither stand heat, nor cold, nor fatigue; and the more sober have their duties to perform. Observe the health and efficiency of the native regiments in garrison, with the condition of the followers of both corps, (together more than four times the number of the 13th.) These Indians, born in a tropical climate, never before saw nor felt snow or ice; whereas the British soldier may here be said to be at home, with every advantage on his side; and yet they are healthy, and you are weak and sickly. Ask yourselves the causes of so wonderful a difference, and you must be conscious the only answer is, that the Indians are a temperate, and you are an intemperate people."—The author of the Camp and Barrack Room, who offers many suggestions for the correction of intemperance in the army, observes that "missionaries would be fully as well employed in converting the soldier, their own countryman, as in endeavouring to convert the Hindoos." He also recommends the suppression of "canteens."—Gateshead Observer.

Literary Notices.

The Teetotaler's Companion, or his Silent Plea for Temperance Reform. By PETER BURNE.

Parts 4 and 5 of this valuable compilation have reached us. Mr. Burne has given a book highly important and useful to the advocate of temperance, whether preparing for the labours of the platform, or a more retired field; and we trust the circulation will be extensive.

The Children and Youths' Temperance Magazine. Jan. 1847. London: Brittain. Leicester: T. Cook.

This is a magazine for youth deserving of encouragement, well got up, and very cheap.

The Hull Temperance Pioneer. Dec. 1846.

This old devoted advocate of the temperance cause, under the management of Dr. R. F. Ith, comes out this year much improved. It contains an excellent article on Sectarian Temperance Societies. We hope it will never be forgot that our cause is one that admits upon a common platform men of all creeds, as well as those who have none.

The Bristol Temperance Herald. Jan. 1846.

This publication has come out this month, increased in bulk and improved. As a carefully and prudently conducted periodical, it is second to none of our publications; besides which, it always contains a variety of short and pithy articles, as well as carefully selected gleanings from the public press, on the subject of temperance.

Howitt's Journal. Part I.

It is highly satisfactory to notice a much-improved taste in the readers of our periodical literature, and that such works as the present are fast superseding the trashy penny publications of the day. This work is devoted to the popular philanthropic movements, and promises to be no unworthy advocate of the cause of humanity. We are assured that its editors are desirous of giving the temperance movement a share of their powerful advocacy. Mr. Howitt has announced an array of literary assistants that will soon raise his journal to the first rank amongst its class.

Scottish Temperance Review. Jan. 1846.

This work maintains its high rank among our temperance periodicals. Its articles are calm and dignified, without dogmatism or bigotry. The conductors are evidently men who feel that the movement has to be promoted by cultivating the public intelligence, and their ground is occupied accordingly. Every praise is due to the Committee of the Scottish Temperance League for their enlightened exertions. They commenced their work as men who had measured the difficulties of the struggle. They are not without enthusiasm, but it is subdued by reflection and a correct estimate of the philosophy of all reformation. They have never depended upon any convulsive effort, but upon continuous and steady exertion—the only pathway to success.

A Perpetual Biblical Calendar,—embracing, in an Annual Cycle, the entire Scriptures, in consecutive order, in a course of Lessons each day, for every day in the year.
—By A CLERGYMAN.

This is a very useful help to the Bible reader, and its arrangement reflects great credit upon its compiler.

The Conqueror—a Poem on the lamented death of William Biscomb.—By ROBERT GRAY MASON.

This little publication is a tribute of respect on the part of the writer to the deceased William Biscomb. The sentiments contained in it, and the appropriation of the profits reflect great credit on the heart of its author. Such testimonies from one advocate to another, are extremely gratifying. We hope that this little tract will have an extensive circulation, and that the leading friends of the cause will promote its sale as far as possible. It is a duty they owe to the bereaved widow of a worthy man and laborious advocate.

The Effects of Intemperance on Discipline. By J. V. HATHERLY.

THIS is an address delivered at the Working Men's Teetotal Hall, Westminster, by Sergeant Hatherly. He does not, however, apply the term discipline to his profession as a soldier, but views the effects of intemperance upon mental, moral, physical, social, professional and religious discipline.

We cordially recommend it to our readers, as well worthy of perusal, and containing much excellent matter.

FACTS FOR THE PEOPLE.

(From the New York Organ.)

For the following we are indebted to Mr. Sparks, the head-clerk in the office of Chief of Police. We are also indebted to the Chief of Police, and clerks in his office, for their politeness in affording us facilities for collecting our statistics of drunkenness, and tender them our thanks.

During the month of May, there were taken up, in the streets of this city, 846 persons; in June, 806; July, 805; August, 741; September, 679; October, 649; making, in six months, four thousand five hundred and twenty-six persons!—and this for intoxication alone. In addition to this number, there were, in May, 430; June, 518; July, 599; August, 593; September, 561; and, in October, 538; making, for the same time, three thousand two hundred and thirty-nine persons, arrested for drunkenness and disorderly conduct. This is, indeed, a gloomy picture of the effects of rum-selling. Fellow-citizens, look at it! and reflect that seven thousand seven hundred and sixty-five (7765) persons were arrested, in six months, for intemperance, and then refer to the rum-sellers' card,—published during our late election,—calling upon their fellow-citizens to aid them in electing men to our legislature who were pledged to sustain them in a business, the effects of which incite to more than three-fourths of the crimes that are committed in our city. During the same time, ONE THOUSAND NINE HUNDRED AND FORTY-FIVE CHILDREN were picked up as lost.

IMPORTANT.

All the barley now used for malting and distilling would make wholesome and nutritious food, and if it were applied to its legitimate use, to feed and not to intoxicate, there would be plenty and cheapness.

The barley to be used as food is first passed through a mill to remove the husk: in this state it is called Scotch barley, and may be purchased at the grocers for 2½d. or 3d. per lb.

It can be used the same as peas for soup, or as rice for making baked or boiled puddings; and in this way the barley is more palatable to an Englishman, than if made into bread. To make a thick soup or stew, with a marrow-bone or a little meat and vegetables, the Scotch barley is excellent.

The Scotch barley must be soaked in water some hours before using, to soften the grain.

The above, in the shape of a hand-bill, has been extensively circulated in Bridgewater.

DRUNKARDS NOT ALLOWED TO TRAVEL BY RAILWAY.

John Day, a tradesman of Croydon, was charged at the Southwark Police-office with having introduced himself into a railway carriage in a state of intoxication. John Hamilton stated, that on the preceding night, defendant came on the platform at the London-bridge terminus, and, it being observed that he was under the influence of liquor, he was told that he could not be allowed to enter a carriage. He, however, insisted on going in, and, before the officer could prevent him, he threw himself into a compartment of a second-class carriage, and assaulted a lady who was sitting there. The passengers called out for the removal of the drunken man; and, after considerable trouble, and the risk of many lives, he was expelled from the carriage, and given into custody. In answer to the charge, the defendant said, he was intoxicated at the time, and did not know what he was doing. Mr. Secker, the magistrate, eulogised the conduct of the railway officers, in prohibiting persons, in the condition the defendant was described to be in, from entering their carriages, to the very great annoyance of the other passengers, and the dangers likely to result to them. He should, under all circumstances, convict him in a penalty of twenty shillings, or twenty-one days' imprisonment.—Globe.

[It would be well if this regulation was enforced on every line of railway. It appears not only a necessary measure of protection to the poor inebriates themselves, but a matter of comfort and convenience to other travellers. A drunken man, at all times, is a most disagreeable companion, from the odour of his breath, and his incoherent, and frequently obscene, conversation. We cannot see why any person should be imprisoned, at the will of a railway company, with one, or two, or three drunken companions. Some general rule, no doubt, will have to be adopted.]

THE MIGHTY SLAIN.—How the mighty have fallen! Go to the grave of Martin, of Maryland, who forty years ago stood at the head of the American bar, who died a sot. Go to the Senate of the United States, and witness that vacant chair out of which a Senator tumbled into a drunkard's grave. Witness the end of Mirabeau, of Savage, of Sheridan, of Burns, of Byron, and of more than one Doctor of Divinity. One minister I knew, who, if human eloquence could avail, would have scattered salvation as from an angel's wings, had he not found a drunkard's grave. The more mind, the more danger. Excitement is the food of the mind; and when the species of excitement is suffered to sway the energies of a gigantic intellect, there is no predicting the results.—Weld's Lectures.

A young man cannot learn too early that the easy swagger, the flippant speech, the ready oath, the cigar puffed in the face of the town, the glass tossed off among the admiring associates, are no marks of real dignity, but they lower him very much in the respect of others.—Fountain.

Foreign Intelligence.

RESPONSE TO THE WORLD'S CONVENTION.

Soon after our return from England, it was proposed in our Committee that there should be held a public meeting in New York in response to the World's Convention; but the delay of Dr. Cox, Mr. Wheelock and others, prevented its being held as early as was desirable. Our British friends will not feel, however, that we have been unmindful of them. The 29th of December was finally fixed upon as the earliest day convenient, when a highly-respectable audience was convened in the Broadway Tabernacle, at 7 P.M. The chair was taken by Anson G. Phelps, Esq., and the meeting was opened with prayer by the Rev. Dr. De Witt.

The Secretary of the American Temperance Union then made a brief statement relating to the character and proceedings of the Convention: The number of persons who attended the Convention was 300; the reception of the American delegation was eminently gratifying, and called for the warmest thanks of the American people; the Convention was in session five days, during which numerous measures were discussed, having an important bearing upon the temperance cause. The march of intemperance was much more deplorable in England than in this country; property amounting to 60,000,000 pounds sterling was annually expended for intoxicating liquors. But a strong counteracting influence is exerted by a noble band of teetotalers. The absence of Father Mathew from the Convention was regretted; but he was visited by some of the American delegation, and found going on triumphantly. The results of the Convention, and subsequent meetings held in various parts of the country, are believed to have been of the happiest character.

He then presented for the consideration of the meeting the following resolutions.

Resolved, That the World's Temperance Convention, held in London on the 4th of August last, was one which met the views and designs of the friends of temperance in all countries; that it was a noble convocation of brethren, reformers and reformed, who, in various countries, had long toiled in the cause; that its harmony of principle and unity of action is the subject of devout gratitude; and that its various resolves and acts, its appeals and counsels, should inspire us with new zeal and devotion in our blessed enterprise.

Resolved, That the kind care exercised by Divine Providence over the American delegation, in carrying them out and bringing them home in safety, through dangers to which few are exposed, and the ability given them to speak boldly, as men ought to speak, in behalf of temperance before hundreds and thousands in the fatherland, call for our grateful remembrance, and bid us go forward with more energy and perseverance in every well-organized plan of well-doing in the world.

Resolved, That the reception given to the American delegation in England, was alike honourable to British philanthropists, and gratifying to the delegation; and that it has bound us together in new bonds, and raised in us an increased anxiety that Britain, as well as America, may be relieved of that alcoholic curse, which is annually costing her 60 millions of treasure, and sweeping 60,000 of her citizens into the drunkard's grave.

Resolved, That we are more deeply impressed than ever with the truth that our field is the world;—that one nation is greatly dependent for moral reform upon another;—that if we relax our energies in America, our brethren will feel it to the ends of the earth;—and that the sorrowful and the suffering from intemperance in all parts of the world, have a claim upon us to sustain the cause, and give it continually a new impulse, to that home and through every nation,

Resolved, That we bid our brethren and fellow-labourers in the cause of temperance God-speed in every part of the world; and when all shall have toiled a few years more in America, and Britain, and Germany, and Sweden, in Africa, Asia, and the islands of the Sea, we shall cordially welcome a delegation from every nation to our own shores, and hear with gladness their signal triumphs over a long-continued and desolating scourge of the human race.

The Rev. Alonzo Wheelock, minister of the Baptist denomination and delegate to the Convention, moved the adoption to the resolutions.

He had been gratified in his attendance on the Convention, but he regretted to say that he found the drinking usages very bad among his Baptist brethren. He told them, if he should drink in New York as they did, he would not keep his pulpit three weeks. He related several interesting occurrences and developments of truth in the Convention. He spoke of the effect of English example upon the heathen world as most disastrous, and that in some countries, English missionaries were denounced as the followers of the drunkard's religion. But he rejoiced to know that there was a little but noble band in that country, who were ready to do battle against the mighty curse, and said it was the duty of the American people to do all in their power to help them. The higher classes, so called, were the bitterest opposers of the glorious cause; and he mentioned an anecdote, going to show that the worst thing that could be said of a man with them was, that he was a teetotaler.

Dr. Patton seconded and sustained the motion. He alluded to his various visits to London. In 1825, he was actually afraid that he would be sent to the British Museum, as a natural curiosity, merely because he actually refused to take the rum cup when proffered to him. In 1828, matters had improved a little; in 1839, a regular movement was commenced, a procession three miles in length actually passed through the streets of London; that procession was the largest temperance lecture England ever had, and the sneers with which thousands gazed upon it would have annihilated every thing but cold water men. But the climax was reserved for 1846, when a World's Convention was held, to the astonishment of the world. There were many things yet undone, but the prospect was cheering. In 1839, he did not find a single family without intoxicating liquors upon the table. In 1846, he found many strong in the cause.—Journal of the American Temperance Union.

EXTRACT OF A LETTER FROM SYDNEY.

The clergy (so called) do not assist in the work; they are almost all in favour of moderate drinking, and, in fact, consider total abstinence from all intoxicating drinks, in some degree sinful. This latter opinion is entertained more especially by the bishop and clergy of the Established Church; there are a few exceptions amongst the dissenters. The Roman Catholic clergy only take an active part in the work. The number of members of this society, and its branches, are upwards of six thousand, they have scattered themselves in various parts of the colony, and wherever they have advocated its principles, their labours have been successful; but in the city of Sydney, the question has of late become somewhat dull; in fact, the members are so dead to the great benefits which would result to the society, if actively supported, that they will not support a newspaper to advocate their principles.

I remain (with respect),

Thy friend in the temperance cause,

JOHN MORING.

National Temperance Society.

OFFICE 11, TOKENHOUSE YARD.

VICE-PRESIDENTS.

The EARL of ARUNDEL and SURREY, M.P.

Sir Wilfrid Lawson, Bart.

R. D. Alexander, Esq.	Rev. Theobald Mathew.
Thomas Beaumont, Esq.	W. J. Morgan, A.M., M.D.
Samuel Bowly, Esq.	Richard Peek, Esq.
Rev. J. Brewster, D.D.	Rev. P. Penson, M.A.
J. S. Buckingham, Esq.	Rev. W. W. Robinson, M.A.
Robert Charleton, Esq.	Rev. J. Sherman.
Rev. T. Clowes, M.A.	Rev. C. Stovel.
Isaac Collins, Esq.	Rev. T. Spencer, A. M.
Joseph Eaton, Esq.	Rev. W. H. Turner, M.A.
S. C. Hall, Esq., B.L.F.S.A.	Edward Thomas, Esq.
Lawrence Heyworth, Esq.	Robert Warner, Esq.
William Janson, Jun., Esq.	Edward Webb, Esq.
Ven. Archdeacon Jeffreys.	Rev. J. Wilson.
G. S. Kenrick, Esq.

TREASURER.

G. W. Alexander, Esq., 40, Lombard Street.

EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE.

George W. Atwood.	Richard Hicks.
Richard Barrett.	C. H. Lovell, M.D.
Jabez Burns, D.D.	John Meredith.
William Cabell.	Richard Potter.
William Cash.	W. W. Robinson.
John Cassell.	T. B. Scutt.
Charles Gilpin.

SUPERINTENDENT OF MISSION.

John Meredith.

AGENT.

William Gawthorp.

SECRETARY.

Thomas Beggs.

THE NATIONAL TEMPERANCE SOCIETY.

The Committee have been anxiously engaged in efforts to raise the proposed Fund. The Irish distress, and other causes, have prevented that success which they had reason to expect. It will be recollected, that they imposed upon themselves a condition, that £1500 of the proposed £5000, should be subscribed before they called in or expended any part of it. They have made exertions to obtain subscriptions to that amount, in order that their carefully prepared plans might be fairly put in operation. At present, they are paralyzed for want of that pecuniary assistance, without which their labours cannot be prosecuted. Several inquiries have been made about the projected movements. The Committee are prepared, when the condition referred to is fully met. The whole sums, as yet subscribed, are here given, by which it will be seen, that nearly £300 are yet required to put the Committee in working order. It is highly important that efforts should be made, at once, in one or two directions. The Committee are prepared, on realizing the sum named, to throw their whole energies into the work, and improve the present public sentiment in favour of the Temperance cause, to the utmost of their ability.

George W. Alexander, Esq., for the years 1847-8-9	£ 100
Joseph Sturge, Esq.	100
Joseph Eaton, Esq.	100
J. D. Bassett, Esq.	100
J. J. Gurney, Esq., for the years 1847-8	100
Edward Thomas, Esq.	100
Mrs. H. Grant	100
A. A., for the years 1847-8-9	50
A. B.	50
William Cash, Esq.	50
William Janson, Esq., Jun.	50
James Charlton, Esq.	50
Frederick Schwann, Esq., Huddersfield	50
R. D. Alexander, Esq.	45
W. D. Sims, Esq.	30
Robert Charlton, Esq.	25
Richard Barrett, Esq., Sen.	25
Rev. P. Penson, Durham	15
Mr. John Cassell	10
George W. Atwood, Esq.	10
Thomas Catchpool, Esq.	5
Mr. F. J. Thompson	5
Mr. Charles Gilpin	5
W. C. Walters, Esq.	5
Richard Hicks, Esq.	5
B. Wilson, Esq.	5
Richard Place, Esq.	5
Jacob Post, Esq.	5
Mr. Richard Barrett, Jun.	5
SUBSCRIPTIONS RECEIVED.
R. J. Shafto, Esq.	10
William Dent, Esq.	10
W. Wilson, Esq., Torquay	5
Mr. John Locke	10s.

THE LATE J. J. GURNEY, Esq.

We have, in this number, to record the loss of one endeared to every friend of humanity by his zeal, able, and untiring endeavours to promote the happiness of the human family.

Joseph John Gurney, Esq., of Norwich, is no more.

To those of our readers who were acquainted with him, we need say nothing of our sense of the loss every good cause has sustained in his removal: and to those who knew him not, it may suffice to say, that of every work of mercy and labour of love, he was a warm and generous supporter. Endowed with intellectual abilities, of no common order—placed by Divine Providence in an exalted position of life, with much of this world's wealth, and very extensive influence, his consistent and untiring aim seemed to be, to promote the glory of God and the good of his fellow-creatures. He was, in the highest, best, and widest sense of the term, a Philanthropist. His sympathies, unlimited by clime, colour, or country, were not repelled, even where drunkenness had debased or crime degraded. He strove to relieve the wretchedness of the drunkard's miserable home; and often has the cell of the hardened criminal echoed to the tones of kindness with which he was wont to speak of hope to the almost hopeless, and of mercy to those upon whom a cold and heartless world had turned its back. He was a zealous, consistent, and most liberal supporter of the Temperance cause, and employed both voice and pen in the furtherance of its objects.

The theme is a tempting one to dilate upon; but we must close our remarks with the resolution adopted on the subject by the Committee of the National Temperance Society, and with the expression of our earnest desire that it may please Him, who has seen meet to call his servant to himself, to raise up other labourers who may fill his vacant place, and labour in his spirit of devotedness and zeal, for the temporal, moral, and eternal welfare of the sons and daughters of humanity.

At the Committee Meeting of the National Temperance Society, January 18, 1846, the following resolution was unanimously adopted:—

“That this Committee feel bound to record, with feelings of deepest regret and Christian sorrow, their irreparable loss, in the removal, by death, of their late estimable friend and Vice-President, J. J. Gurney, Esq., of Norwich—a loss which will be greatly felt and deeply deplored by the friends of temperance, humanity, and religion, in this and other lands: and they would present the sincere expressions of their unfeigned sympathy and condolence to his bereaved widow and relations, under the heavy affliction which, in the order of Divine Providence, they have been called to experience.”

TEMPERANCE LITERATURE.

Many of our temperance friends are disposed to look dependingly upon the movement, because we are not making as much noise as formerly. Our feelings, as to excitements, are well known. They make scarcely any abiding impression on the public mind, and disappoint the hopes of many who build upon them. We prefer the steady quiet mode of cultivating a public opinion. When we look at our Meetings, there may be ground for discouragement; but when we see what is doing by the press, we have every reason to take courage. All is not done that might be done, or that we could wish; but Temperance Literature is improving in usefulness, and rising in tone; and, what is still better, the principles are recognised by other portions of the press, that a few years ago treated the cause with indifference, if not contempt. Newspapers are continually reaching us, with long and well-digested reports of meetings; and if our friends in various parts of the country would take pains to supply good articles to those papers favourably disposed, much good might be done. A new paper, under the most flattering auspices, is coming out in Scotland—The Glasgow Times. The temperance question, as well as other measures of social reform and improvement, will be fully treated. Howitt's Journal is to be devoted to all these questions; but we advise him to secure writers who have at least paid some attention to the arguments used by temperance advocates. Mr. Cassell is assuming the place in our literature that the Chambers' have so long occupied in a more general department. His first essay has circulated above 30,000 already, and he expects to send out 50,000 of the second. An effort displaying so much judgment and spirit is worthy of all support. Mr. Baker's "Curse of Britain" is now in its third edition, and going off rapidly—a token that the thirst for temperance information is not yet slaked. Mr. Cassell has purchased the copyright of the "Idolatry of Britain," and printed it in a beautiful style for 3d. He has announced a republication of Nott's Lectures at 1d., and has in preparation a number of other valuable works. These are signs of activity and progress infinitely more gratifying to us than the sound of large meetings and great noise. They indicate that the mind of the people is at work seeking information. Mr. Alexander of Ipswich, is employed with much industry and good taste, in adding to his excellent little books for children.

The Statistical Committee have under deliberation one of the most important movements probably ever made in the working of the cause. We shall be able in our next to state the results.

INFLUENTIAL ACCESSION TO THE TEMPERANCE CAUSE.

We learn, that the Temperance movement is about to receive an important impulse from several of the leading Free Church ministers of this city (Edinburgh), who, having acted privately, for some time past, on the principle of abstinence from intoxicating liquors, are now proposing to make a public movement on the subject. In order to recommend the subject to the influential classes of society, and invest the movement with a higher and nobler aspect, it is suggested by some, we believe, that individuals, in the middle and upper ranks especially, who adopt the abstinence principle, should devote the money, formerly spent in wines and liquors, to the relief of the poor, and other benevolent objects. [The above gratifying intelligence, which we copy from the Scottish Herald, will strengthen the hands and encourage the hearts of the friends of temperance throughout the country.]

THE WORLD'S TEMPERANCE CONVENTION.

Enniscorthy Temperance Society, January 15, 1846.

MY DEAR SIR,—Permit me to draw your attention to the report from Enniscorthy, as published in the proceedings of the World's Temperance Convention, and you will perceive that there are two omissions, which I am satisfied were quite unintentional on the part of the Committee. There is no mention of the first teetotal society, which was founded by Mr. George Gibbs, in November, 1838, and which numbered 300 members, when the Rev. Mr. Mathew visited the town in January, 1840, and established the second society. There is, likewise, no mention of the fact, that the two societies have always cordially co-operated for general purposes, by means of a Union Committee; thus setting an example worthy of general imitation—unity of action being much needed amongst the friends of temperance in Ireland. About one-fourth of the population of Enniscorthy may be staunch teetotalers, but there is a difficulty in ascertaining the exact number, as the names of many are borne, not on the rolls of the local societies, but on the books of the Cork society.

Ever, my dear sir,
Yours, very sincerely,
JOHN GIBBS.

*Thomas Beggs, Esq.,
Secretary, National Temperance Society.*

Home Intelligence.

METROPOLITAN MEETINGS.

A series of very interesting and influential meetings, chiefly of the class called "festivals," has been held during the last few weeks, in the metropolis and suburbs. We have only space to notice a few of them. All were well attended, and many pleasing results followed.

More particular notice may be taken of the meeting held in the National Hall, High Holborn, on Wednesday, January 13. This festival and meeting was conducted by the Committee recently formed for holding demonstration meetings of the working classes. It was one of a series which commenced with the great meeting in Exeter Hall, in November last, and which is to be succeeded by similar meetings in other places.

Dr. OXLEY presided. He expressed the pleasure he felt at seeing the working men of the metropolis taking the lead in these "demonstration meetings;" and it was encouraging to find that their example had been followed in various large towns in the kingdom—at Bristol, York, Newcastle-on-Tyne, &c.; and he sincerely trusted that the result would be, to rid the country of that great hindrance to its prosperity—intemperance.

Mr. PARKER, a coach-joiner, stated, that he had been in the employ of one master for 23 years; for several years as a journeyman, and latterly as a piece-master. He had worked on the principle of teetotalism for more than ten years, and he would venture to say, that he worked as well as any man in his business, and that without any aid from strong drink. Teetotalism was a system peculiarly valuable for working men; and by working men he meant, not only those who laboured with their hands, but those also who laboured with their brains. In fact, it was a system suited to all classes.

Mr. MORRIS, a coal-heaver, said, that he had to labour hard to maintain his family. He was able to do so far better without strong beer than with it: indeed, now that labour was so scarce and food so dear, no working man had anything to spare for strong drink. Nor were such drinks necessary, but, on the contrary, very injurious. Let a working man have good food, good water, and a good bed to rest upon, and he would be able to perform the hardest labour.

Mr. T. A. SMITH remarked, that no person ever used strong drink in consequence of his perfect knowledge of its constituent parts and properties; nor could any man, who was truly acquainted with them, conscientiously recommend them to others. Serious examination and inquiry on those points, would lead to the disuse of such drinks, and the results would be a great increase of health, comfort, and true national prosperity.

Mr. APPEGATE, formerly a coal-whipper, called upon the working men present to reflect aright, upon the important relation they sustained to the community at large, and to shake off the slavery of drinking customs, and rise to the enjoyment of that comfort and independence, both of body, mind, and circumstances, to which they were justly entitled.

Mr. T. BEGGS addressed himself chiefly to the working classes present, at the same time, cautioning them against the danger of making invidious class distinctions. They often complained, he said, of bad governments, and of undue degradations to which they were sometimes subjected; but he would remind them, that the legislators were, principally, what they (the people) made them, and that, after all, no legislators, no tyrant or despot, ever inflicted upon a people such burdens and oppressions as they inflicted upon themselves, through their own shameful and abominable drinking usages. Let them but rouse themselves, and shake off that chain, and they would rise to the enjoyment of domestic comfort, and intellectual and moral pleasure.

Mr. HUDSON, agent of the British Temperance

Association, rejoiced that the labouring classes of London were setting an example, which the inhabitants of the provinces were beginning to follow, very greatly to the advantage of the Temperance movement.

Mr. CHURCH of Yarmouth, stated, that he had passed several of his earlier years in tropical climates; and though many died, whose constitutions were naturally harder than his own, he had, in consequence of his abstemious habits, been preserved. For the last ten years, he had totally abstained, and so great was the comfort he had derived from the practice, and so numerous were the cases in which he had known it to benefit others, that he was determined to maintain and extend it as far as possible.

The speakers were much cheered throughout, and the whole of the proceedings appeared to give great satisfaction.

CAMBERWELL AND PECKHAM TEMPERANCE SOCIETY.

The fourth anniversary of the above society was commemorated by a festival and public meeting held at the Lecture Room, Hill Street, Peckham, on 4th January, 1847,—Wm. Cash, Esq., in the chair.

The business was commenced by reading the annual report, which, considering the continued and persevering opposition to teetotalism manifested in this locality, was of a very flattering character.

The meeting was addressed by Mr. D. G. Paine, from Deptford; Mr. Campbell of the Blackfriars Road; Mr. MacBain, a coal porter; Mr. T. Beggs; and Mr. Warren from Massachusetts, United States, who addressed the meeting in a speech of much talent; Mr. Johnstone; and Mr. McCurrie of Chelsea. A vote of thanks was moved to the chairman for his services on that and other occasions in the cause of temperance, and the meeting separated, highly gratified with the proceedings.

J. STANDING, Secretary.

SUNDAY SCHOOL CHILDREN.

An interesting meeting was held in the school-room, Nevil's-court, Fetter-lane, on Wednesday evening, December 9th, at the instance, we believe, of some zealous members of the Farringdon Youths' Total Abstinence Society. The meeting was composed of the children, male and female, of the Sabbath-school in connexion with Fetter-lane chapel, (the Rev. Caleb Morris, pastor,) together with several of the teachers. Mr. W. SPRIGGS, after having implored the Divine blessing, addressed a suitable exhortation to the children and teachers. Mr. CORDELLER followed, and by obtaining replies to a number of pertinent and familiar questions, drew from the children several interesting particulars respecting the injuries done by the use of strong drink, and the nature and advantages of total abstinence. This he followed up by suitable exhortations to teachers and children. Mr. BEGGS next addressed them on the great importance of total abstinence in connexion with their health, their morals, their usefulness, and their comfort through life; furnishing some illustrations from the history of two or three of his youthful companions of the fatal results of tampering with so dangerous a thing as strong drink. Mr. J. W. GREEN having observed that children, and many adults also, were often disposed to laugh at the foolish pranks played by men and women when under the influence of liquor,—cautioned those present against indulging in mirth under such circumstances. Drunkards were not only foolish but wicked. We were much interested in this meeting, and recommend those of our friends who have sufficient influence, to obtain similar opportunities of addressing children. Such meetings should commence at half-past six o'clock, and conclude not later than eight.

DEVIZES.

TEMPERANCE SOCIETY.—On the afternoon of Monday, the 23rd inst., about two hundred of the members and friends of the Devizes Temperance Society, assembled and drank tea together, in the British school. After tea, the public were admitted, when the assembly was increased to upwards of three hundred. Appropriate and effective addresses were then delivered by G. W. Anstie, Esq., president of the Society; the Rev. W. Griffith of Melksham; Messrs. J. Staples, and R. Mack. On one or two former occasions, there might have been larger meetings; but none of the previous gatherings of the friends of temperance in Devizes, have been so respectable. We make this remark, in consequence of the apprehensions which some have expressed respecting the ultimate success of the temperance reformation; it must not be inferred from a few partial declensions, that temperance must necessarily retrograde. It is true, in some localities, there may be a diminution in the number of abstainers, but there it must be remembered, that this diminution is more than counterbalanced by the moral and intellectual worth of those who are now constantly constrained, by a sense of their responsibility both to God and man, to give their countenance and support to a cause which merits and demands the active aid of every enlightened and patriotic Christian. We understand that Mr. Williams, from Preston, who delivered a highly interesting lecture about three months since, will again lecture in the British school, on the evening of next Thursday, the 3rd of December.—From a Correspondent.

BERKHAMSTEAD.

DEAR SIR,—I have attended meetings at Chessham, Watford and St. Albans; in the latter places, the cause is making progress, my village visits and conversational meetings are interesting, and I trust useful; at Tring, Mr. Sexton, the Baptist minister and some of his members have signed the pledge—another minister in that town is abstaining, and our prospects are getting brighter. I believe a good impression has been made in this district by shewing how much of the people's food is taken to make strong drink, and this too, in a time of great scarcity: it has been the subject of conversation in most of my cottage meetings, and I am glad to find that several have followed my advice in making their bread with a fifth part of barley-meal and four-fifths of wheat-meal, which certainly makes very nice and wholesome bread. Temperance principles have been the means of shewing where the poor man is most injured; for during the late inclement weather, when many were of necessity thrown out of work, the drinkers could only stand one week without presenting themselves at the Board of Guardians, while the teetotalers have enjoyed the fruits of their labour by having a store of both food and firing, with the addition of a little fund to supply further need. I do not, for one moment, wish to cast any reflection upon those kind-hearted individuals who contribute funds for providing coals and soup for the poor during the winter; but how many receive those things who, during the summer months, spend their earnings in drink, and even while their wives are making application for a tinfull of soup, they are to be found at the public-house if they can get a few pence to buy drink; but not one member of any temperance society in this district, that I am aware of, have received anything of the kind, and I have made extensive inquiry. I know one family where a clergyman called and offered soup-tickets; he received a grateful reply for his kindness, but, says the woman, my "husband is a teetotaler, and we do not need it." My great object is to impress on the minds of the labouring classes their ability to feed and clothe themselves, and, more particularly, to wean the teetotalers from that spirit of mendicity which so often takes the place of activity and industry in those who take strong drink. I have some cheering instances in which families have been raised from destitution to comfort and the enjoyment of their earnings in my district.

Yours most respectfully,
ROBERT GAMBLE.

DORKING.

The temperance cause in this town has lately received a fresh impetus from a course of three lectures delivered in the Lecture Room, by Mr. Jabez Inwards. On Monday evening, the 4th of January he gave a lecture, "What is Moderation." On Tuesday evening the 5th instant, the sixth anniversary of the society was celebrated by a tea meeting; after the tea, the report having been read, the second lecture was delivered, Mr. Isaac Brown of Pitsbrook House, in the chair, who, after a short speech, introduced Mr. Inwards. His subject this evening was, "The popular objections against teetotalism." On Wednesday evening, the 6th instant, he delivered his third lecture on "Public House Signs." At the close, a few signed the pledge, amongst them was a confirmed drunkard who declared to the meeting that he had spent 1000 pounds in drink. The whole of the lectures were well attended; many of the respectable part of the inhabitants being present.

W. C. ISAAC.

LAMPTON.

Ealing Road, January 13th, 1847.

On Tuesday evening, January 5th, a Temperance Soirée was held in the Chapel of Lampton. After the tea, a Temperance Meeting was held, and addressed severally by the chairman, the Rev. Mr. George, of Harlington, a dissenting minister; the Rev. Mr. Dickenson, of Hounslow; the Rev. Mr. Young, of Brentford; Messrs. Walker and Anderson, City Missionaries; Mr. Hunt, of Harlington; and W. Miller, brickmaker, of Drayton. The chapel was well filled by a very respectable audience, and who I am happy to say paid every attention. Mr. Young delivered a good address particularly to the young, on the advantages derived from total abstinence.

Five signatures were taken at the close of the meeting,

SUNDERLAND.

This town has been favoured with a fourth visit of the Rev. R. G. Mason, agent of the British Association; his lectures have on this, as on former occasions, been attended by respectable audiences and salutary results: the Assembly-Rooms, the Athenæum, and the Wesleyan Chapel, the latter of which, seats nearly three thousand, have all been crowded. Through his gratuitous services on the Sabbath, he has brought to his temperance lectures, great numbers who were never at such meetings before. At the close of his last meeting, forty signed the pledge, the most of which were Sunderland sailors. Similar effects have been produced in several other places in this district by the labours of Mr. Mason.

JOSEPH FOSTER.

EXETER.

The social tea meeting, with which the Exeter Temperance advocates have been accustomed to greet the returning year, was held last night at the Subscription-rooms.

The table having been removed, and the meeting reinforced, till it amounted to above a thousand persons.

The Rev. JAMES FORD was called to the chair, and opened the meeting with an appropriate speech.

R. W. FOX, Esq., then read the report, which stated, that during the year, the weekly meetings had been held regularly; 6000 tracts had been circulated by the committee of ladies; and 300 houses visited fortnightly. Occasional lectures had been given at the Athenæum; 256 new members had been added; many of them rescued from the awful sin of drunkenness; and many had practically adopted the principle, who had not yet joined the united movement. The alteration in public opinion was shown by the decreased consumption of strong drinks.

SAMUEL BOWLY, Esq., of Gloucester, addressed the meeting, in one of the most forcible and argumentative speeches we have ever had the pleasure of hearing.

The Rev. HENRY SOLLY, Unitarian minister, of Shepton Mallett, made a long and eloquent appeal, fervently pressing home the unutterable moral ruin, the misery of families, the perdition of the soul, consequent on the practice of drunkenness. He proved, by several instances, and by argument and medical authority, that strong liquors are not necessary to nursing mothers, but that they pass the undiluted alcohol into the tender veins of their babies, and debilitate their own constitutions.

The Rev. F. BISHOP presented, in the name of the society, a handsome testimonial to their late secretary—five volumes of Hallam's History of the Middle Ages—with a well-deserved expression of thanks.

R. W. FOX, on the part of his son, acknowledged the kind compliment.—Abridged from the Western Times.

NEWCASTLE.

WORKING MEN'S TEMPERANCE DEMONSTRATION.

Yesterday se'night, a very interesting temperance soiree, for the working men of Newcastle, was held in the Nelson Street School Room. The attendance was exceedingly numerous, including a large number of the fair sex. After tea, the audience adjourned to the chapel above, to hear addresses delivered by working men of various trades, on the subject of temperance.

Mr. George Dodds was called to the chair; and the meeting was afterwards addressed by James Alexander Whitfield, a blacksmith; S. Rowell, blacksmith; Samuel Wright, an engineman; Neasdale Parker, stonemason; William Roberts, a striker; Mark Littlefair, a bottle-maker; Thomas Dixon, a carrier; Wm. Peel, a hatter; J. F. Pickup, a painter; Ralph Cook, a crown-glassmaker; John Blackburn, clock and watchmaker; Wm. Shaw, tanner; John Blackett, a shoemaker; Thomas Carr, painter; James Bruce, keelman; Edward Elliott, stonemason; J. Rewcastle, printer; Anthony Brown, waterman; Capt. Brochie, seaman; Jacob Weir, joiner.

Mr. W. C. Walters, barrister, then rose and said, that, some years ago, being afflicted with a weak digestion, he consulted the most scientific medical men in London, who all recommended a glass or two of wine every day. After following this prescription, without benefit, for some time, he met with the Rev. Mr. Collinson of Blydon, to whom he mentioned his case. Mr. Collinson advised him to drink nothing but cold water, which he did every morning, and now enjoyed perfect health.

The meeting was afterwards addressed by the Rev. W. Wight, Mr. George Charleton, and Mr. Buchanan; after which, a vote of thanks was given to the chairman, and the company separated, highly delighted with the proceedings.

LEEDS TEMPERANCE SOCIETY.

The third monthly meeting of this rapidly increasing society, was held on Tuesday evening last, in the Music Hall, and its proceedings were of an unusually interesting character. The chair was occupied by Edward Baines, Jun., Esq.; and the hall was filled by an auditory principally composed of the operative class, with a sprinkling of the tradesmen of the borough. Among the speakers were the chairman, Mr. Baines; the Rev. W. H. Turner, M. A., Vicar of Banwell, Somersetshire; Mr. Henry Clapp, Jun., of Lynn, Massachusetts, editor of the Lynn Pioneer, &c.; and George Kirk, a reformed drunkard, of the Leeds Temperance Society, &c., &c. We deeply regret that a press of matter, much of which was in type from last number, prevents our giving even an abstract of the excellent speeches delivered on this occasion. These meetings are got up with much spirit, and doing much good.

BRISTOL TOTAL ABSTINENCE SOCIETY.

The annual meeting of the above society was held on Monday evening, December 28, in the Public Rooms, Broadmead. Mr. Joseph Eaton, the indefatigable treasurer of the society, was called upon to preside.—The meeting was numerously and respectfully attended.

The CHAIRMAN said, he could not but revert to the first meeting of that kind held in the city of Bristol; it was now ten years ago; there was nothing which struck him more, or which he believed was more novel to those who heard it, than the declaration of hard-working men, that they were able to get through the hardest labour without the use of intoxicating drink—(hear). He, at that time, hoped, that after a lapse of ten years, at least four-fifths of the professing Christians of the world would come forward and join the movement. If he was asked if he had not been disappointed, he would confess that he had been. Although many had not joined, immense numbers had changed their opinions, and he felt a confident hope that the time was approaching when total abstinence principles would be practically supported by the great body of the British people—(applause).

Mr. ROBERT CHARLETON read the report. Amongst other matter the report stated, that during the last twelve months upwards of 45,000 copies of the Bristol Temperance Herald had been put into circulation, and about 230,000 tracts issued from the depot. About 240 meetings had been held in this city and its immediate neighbourhood, and more than 2000 persons had had their names affixed to the pledge of the society. The committee would, however, greatly underrate the effects of the temperance reformation were they to regard the number of signatures to the pledge as affording a complete test of the progress of the cause. A more encouraging and correct criterion of its advancement was to be found in the alteration steadily going forward in public opinion on this question, and the decreased consumption of strong drink by the more intelligent and educated classes of the community.

The meeting was afterwards addressed by Mr. Thomas Beggs, secretary of the National Temperance Society; Mr. Mark Bowden, commercial traveller; Mr. Hudson; Mr. J. V. Hatherly, a sergeant in Her Majesty's guards at Windsor; and Mr. Williamson, agent of the Somerset Temperance Association, who made some impressive observations on the evils of intemperance.

The CHAIRMAN having made a few closing remarks, the meeting separated, well pleased with the proceedings of the evening.

JOURNAL OF JAMES BALFOUR,

AGENT OF THE NATIONAL TEMPERANCE SOCIETY, IN THE "DORSET AND HANTS ASSOCIATION."

DURING the months of November and part of December, the agent has visited Poole, Wareham, Swanage, Portland, Blandford, and Bridport in Dorset; Ringwood, Fordingbridge, Alton, St. Mary Bourne, Basingstoke, Gosport, Forton, Crowdhill, and Southampton, in Hants; and Newtontoney, in Wilts. In the whole of these places good meetings have been held, and lectures delivered by the agent, on fines and footings in workshops, and the artificial and compulsory drinking usages of British life. From observation made during this tour, the agent is delighted to state that the good cause is progressing, numerous signatures have been obtained, and those who have previously signed our pledge, are going on well. Visits have also been paid to the homes of the poor in Alton, and also to the railway labourers near Ringwood. The cause at the latter place was found in a very languishing state, there being no organized society. But assisted by the Rev. Mr. Harris and other friends, four good meetings have been held, and thirty signatures taken.

On Sunday, December 6th, 250 persons, principally railway labourers, were collected in one of the sheds on the line, and addressed by a sub-contractor and the agent; great attention was paid by all present. One drunkard signed the pledge.

At Wareham no organized society existed. The agent collected a few friends, and formed a society, and on December 7th, a good meeting was held in the Town Hall. Six signatures.

A. W. HERITAGE, Sec.

SUNDAY SCHOOL TEMPERANCE MEETING AT YORK.

On Monday, January 11th, a large and interesting Meeting was held in the Lecture Hall in this city, for the purpose of promoting the spread of temperance principles amongst the young.

James Backhouse, Esq., ably occupied the chair. He stated that during his travels in Van Diemen's Land, he had conversed with many of the convicts, who referred their ruin to the "drinking customs" of the different workshops in which they were apprenticed.

The following resolutions were submitted to the meeting, and unanimously passed:—

1. That the fearful prevalence of intemperance in this country, and the numerous temptations which the "drinking usages" of society present to the young, solemnly call upon all parents and Sunday-school teachers to urge upon the rising generation the adoption of the practice of entire abstinence from all intoxicating drinks.

Moved by Mr. Thomas Hodgson, Superintendent of the Wesley Place Sunday School; and Seconded by Mr. William Pickwell, Superintendent of the Wesleyan Association Sunday School; and Supported by Mr. James Hollins, Superintendent of the Independent Sunday School.

2. That the Committee be requested to take such steps as may be considered most prudent, for bringing this subject under the notice of every Sunday-school superintendent in York.

Moved by Mr. Thomas Monkhouse, Superintendent of the Wesley Place Sunday School; and Seconded by Mr. T. B. Smithies, Secretary of ditto.

The speakers dwelt at some length on the fearful counteracting influences which the use of intoxicating drink is exerting on the labours of Sabbath-school teachers; and urged upon all parents and teachers the adoption of the temperance pledge, in order that they might set the young an example, which, if followed, would certainly save them from the evils of intemperance.

The Secretary stated that the Committee would supply Sunday-school teachers with neat pocket pledge-books for the use of their classes; considerable good having already resulted from this plan. It was also stated, that two of the superintendents and two-thirds of the teachers in the largest Wesleyan School in York, are pledged teetotalers.

Several signatures were obtained at the close of the Meeting.

WALES.

(To the Editor of the National Temperance Chronicle.)

Newmarket, Flints, December 14th, 1846.

DEAR SIR,—Since I had the pleasure of writing to you before, I have been lecturing on temperance at Rhyll, in the Independent Chapel; and at Sarn Chapel, on Holywell Road; and in my own Chapel in Newmarket. Several young people came forward to sign the pledge. I have also distributed many Welch and English tracts, which are anxiously received and read.

Some of my own congregation are most faithful in assisting me with the good work.

I am sorry to say that very few of my brother ministers, of any denomination, are boldly and perseveringly advocating the great cause; settled ministers are afraid of disturbing the peace of their own churches and congregations. But my humble opinion is, that keeping the peace is much more dangerous—as we should "cry aloud and spare not." * * * Common sense and public opinion are so very favourable to the great movement. I believe that all christian ministers must take up the subject of temperance, and the sooner the better.

A letter of mine appeared in our Welch periodical for December, comparing slavery in America and the drinking-system in this country—showing the inconsistency of advocating the anti-slavery cause, and neglecting the temperance cause, &c.

Yours very truly,

EVAN DAVIES.

SEVENTH ANNUAL REPORT OF THE PROTESTANT TOTAL ABSTINENCE SOCIETY, 1845-6.

This report has come to hand. We look at all documents from Ireland with much interest, and, although this is a small association, it seems conducted with spirit and energy, and doing good. The following statement in the report, will be deplored by every friend to Ireland:—"Public documents and statistical accounts, prepared for the purpose, uniformly bear evidence to the fact, that this evil (intemperance) has been increasing for the last three years, calling loudly for increased exertions on the part of every sober member of the community to stem this torrent of iniquity that rolls through our land." Amidst conflicting statements on this head, it would be well if the Committee of the Protestant Association, who have access to such documents, would carefully examine them, and give to the world authentic information on the subject.

HASTINGS.

A public meeting was held here, December 16th, 1846, in the lecture-room of the Baptist chapel, at which our treasurer Mr. Lott presided, and a powerful address was delivered by Mr. T. Davey of Lewes, showing the adaptation of the temperance movement to the social, moral, and political elevation of the working classes. At the close of the meeting 2 persons signed the pledge.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

We must beg the indulgence of our correspondents. A mass of intelligence has been sent to us this month that would fill at least two numbers of the Chronicle. We have been obliged to use the scissors very freely, and still could not make room for all, without injustice to our other departments.

SUBSCRIPTIONS.

	£	s.	d.
Acton, R. R., Esq.	0	10	6
Barrett, Richard, Jun.	1	1	0
Bevington, Mr. P.	1	1	0
Cash, William, Esq.	5	5	0
Cash, Mr. Joseph	0	10	0
Christy, Mr. James	1	1	0
Clayton, Rev. G.	1	1	0
Cotterill, J. H., Esq.	1	1	0
Digby, Mr.	0	10	0
Gurrey, Mr. Charles	0	10	0
Hanbury, Mr. C.	1	1	0
Harvey, Bridges	1	1	0
Jowett, Mr. Robert	1	1	0
Miles, Mr. Edward	0	10	6
Morland, Mr. John	2	2	0
Morris, Mrs.	0	10	0
Monro, M. M., Esq.	1	1	0
Neave, Josiah, Esq.	1	1	0
Norton, Thomas, Jun., Esq.	5	5	0
Pryor, Samuel, Esq.	1	0	0
Richards, W., Esq.	1	1	0
Rutter, John, Esq.	1	0	0
Smith, Edward, Esq.	5	5	0
Stoneman, Mr. W.	0	2	6
Whiting, Joshua	1	0	0
Per Mr. Robert Gamble
Chesham Society	0	10	0
Hertford Society	0	10	0
Tring Society	0	10	0
Five Reformed Drunkards	0	5	0

CHRONICLE (GRATUITOUS FUND.)

Bassett, J. D., Esq.	5	0	0
Grant, Mrs.	5	0	0
Pope, M.	1	0	0

Advertisements.

THE MATHEW ANNUITY FUND.

A Plan being in progress for raising in England, Ireland, and Scotland, and the British Colonies and dependencies, a sum of SEVEN THOUSAND POUNDS, to procure a Life Annuity of £800. for the REV. THEOBALD MATHEW, in order to enable him to continue the great Temperance Movement, this Appeal for aid to the Temperance Cause, being intended to be final, subscriptions (large or small) are generally solicited to secure the attainment of the high and important purpose.

The project is grounded on the following Resolutions, proposed and seconded at a meeting of the Committee.

1st RESOLUTION.—Proposed by the Marquis of LANSDOWNE,—Seconded by General CAULFIELD,—

That the position of the Rev. Theobald Mathew being such as to involve the danger of his inability to continue his labours in promoting and sustaining Temperance in Ireland, from want of necessary funds, we invite the co-operation of all friends of social and moral improvement, and of all who are interested in the welfare of the Irish people.

2nd RESOLUTION.—Proposed by the Earl of WICKLOW,—Seconded by the Bishop of NORWICH,—

That ample evidence has been afforded that Temperance, while improving the habits of the Irish peasantry, and advancing their social and moral condition, essentially aids in preventing disaffection and crime,—no prosecution for outrage having been instituted against any member of a Temperance Society.

3rd RESOLUTION.—Proposed by the Marquis of SLIGO,—Seconded by Lord CAMOYS,—

That applications for subscriptions to the Fund be made to English Noblemen and Gentlemen possessed of property in Ireland, setting forth the benefits which have resulted to the Irish people from the labours of the Reverend Mr. Mathew, and the advantages thus rendered to Irish Landlords, by introducing comparative prosperity and tranquillity into their localities.

4th RESOLUTION.—Proposed by Lord MORPETH,—Seconded by Admiral Sir Edward CODRINGTON,—

That the sums subscribed be devoted to the purchase of an Annuity, to be transmitted quarterly to the Reverend Mr. Mathew, under the control of four members of the Committee, the Treasurer, and the Honorary Secretaries.

5th RESOLUTION.—Proposed by the Earl of ARUNDEL and SURREY,—Seconded by JOHN BRIGHT, Esq., M.P.

That the various Temperance Societies throughout the Kingdom, be applied to for co-operation and aid, less with reference to the amount of assistance thus anticipated, than as evidence of sympathy with the cause, and affection towards the Irish people.

Subscriptions will be received at the Temporary Offices of the Committee, 3, Hare-court, Inner Temple,
By the Hon. Secretaries,

LUKE HANSARD.
S. C. HALL.

The Committee being on the eve of publishing a full list of the Subscribers, it is exceedingly desirous that such individuals or societies as intend to subscribe, should immediately forward their names and amounts.

LONDON TEMPERANCE TRACTS,

UNDER THE SANCTION OF THE

National Temperance Society.

The above Tracts comprise a variety of 150 different sorts, and embrace every point of the principle of Total Abstinence. Upwards of

THREE MILLION

have already been circulated. 2 pp. 8d.; 4 pp. 1s. 4d.; 8 pp. 2s. 8d. per 100., or in packets, assorted, 6d. each.

For the convenience of LOAN CIRCULATION, they are assorted into 60 sets, containing 16 pp. in each, and stitched into a strong wrapper, with a suitable address upon each, price 8s. per 100. Liberal allowance for large quantities. Lists may be obtained of the Publishers gratis.

HOULESTON & STONEMAN, 65, Paternoster Row.

IPSWICH JUVENILE TEMPERANCE BOOKS.

A Series of little books, 32mo., with coloured covers, and each illustrated with a handsome woodcut, is now coming out in six-penny packets, of glazed coloured paper. A sample will be sent, post free, for 18 penny stamps.

The following are now ready:—

	PAGES
1. The History of Teetotalism	20
2. Scriptural Teetotalism	20
3. Teetotalism of Ancient History	20
4. Teetotalism of Modern History	20
5. The cost of Intemperance	20
6. Self-denial	20
7. Early Habits	20
8. The Force of Example	20
9. A Letter to Sunday School Children	20
10. H. Hawkins the Drunkard's Daughter	20
11. Christian Courtesy and Benevolence	20
12. The Young Chemist's Inquiry	20
13. Little Henry and the Teetotal Festival	20
14. The Young Reasoner's Objections to Teetotalism	20
15. The Fear of Ridicule	20
16. The Teetotliam of Travellers	20
17. Temptation Resisted	12
18. What Little Boys can do for Teetotalism ..	12
19. Little Mary	16
20. Lucy Grey and her Pet Pigeon	8
21. What Little Girls can do for Teetotalism ..	12
22. Poor Little Willie	12
23. Sixpenny Glass of Wine	12
24. The Town Meeting; License or no License ..	12

IPSWICH TEMPERANCE TRACTS.

1. The Doctor Scrutinized, or for what purpose do Physicians prescribe Alcoholic Beverages, by R. D. Alexander, F.L.S., 122 thousand...	8
2. Striking Facts, 84 thousand	2
3. Maker and Vender, 44 thousand	2
4. Our Creed, 47 thousand	2
5. Adulterated Beer, 34 thousand	4
6. Adulterated Wine, 40 thousand	4
7. The Maltster, 37 thousand	4
8. Go Feel what I have Felt, 53 thousand	2
9. Facts are Stubborn Things, 48 thousand	2
10. The Spirit Dealer, 35 thousand	2
11. Christian Teetotalism, 70 thousand	2
12. The Trade, 33 thousand	4
13. Alcohol, 33 thousand	4
14. The Town of Ipswich, 33 thousand	4
15. Song of the Water Drinker, 37 thousand ..	2
16. Stimulation not Strength, 30 thousand ..	8
17. Farmer Woodman's Speech, 41 thousand ..	4
18. The Beer Barrel Examined, 28 thousand ..	8
19. Teetotal Recipes, 38 thousand	4
20. Speech of J. J. Gurney, 30 thousand	4
21. Pity the Poor Drunkard, 49 thousand	2
22. The Fool's Pence, 25 thousand	8
23. Why am I a Teetotaler? 26 thousand	2
24. Dost thou smoke, Bill? 34 thousand	4
25. William the Laudanum Drinker, 30 thousand...	4

	PAGES
26. The Ox Discourse	4
27. Letter to the Clergy, by a Brother Clergyman, 21 thousand	20
28. Common Sense, by a member of the University of Cambridge, 20 thousand	2
29. Ralph the Soldier	4
30. Testimony of Eminent Physicians, 30 thousand ..	4
31. The Working Man, 35 thousand	20
32. Is I not happy? by Hugh Stowell, 30 thousand ..	4
33. David the Shoemaker, 49 thousand	4
34. The Drunken Couple, 48 thousand	2
35. Confessions of a drunkard, 29 thousand	2
36. Master Tailor, 20 thousand	4
37. The Fatal Gift, 36 thousand	2
38. Poor Sandy	4
39. Use & abuse, by Archdeacon Jeffreys, 34 thousand ..	2
40. The Schoolmaster	4
41. Water is Best, by J. J. Gurney, 37 thousand ..	8
42. Cobbett's Advice	4
43. Take a Public House	4
44. A Sailor's Yarn	4
45. Moderate Drinking Calmly Considered	12
46. The Pledge	4
47. John Jarvis, or the Pledge Signed	12
48. The Fifteen Friends	4
49. Sunday School Teachers, 22 thousand	12
50. Sunday School Children, 40 thousand	12
51. Money better than Beer, 37 thousand	4
52. Little Mary; or a Daughter's Love	8
53. Philosophy of the Temperance Movement, by R. T. Trull, M.D.	20
54. Love to Man, or an Appeal to the Pious	20
55. The Young Woman's Tract	12
56. The Young Man's Tract	16
57. Dr. Campbell's Testimony, 18 thousand	8
58. Why Sign the Pledge? 40 thousand	2
59. The Poor Man's House Repaired	4
60. The Mother's Tract	8
61. The High Price of Food	4
62. Ladies' Tract Societies	8
63. The Praise of Water, 25 thousand	2
64. Important Calculation, 30 thousand	2
65. The Farm Servant, 25 thousand	4
66. Teetotalism Declining, 15 thousand	8
67. The Reformed Drunkard, and the best means of Reforming the Drunkard, 20 thousand	8
68. The Recruit of the British Legion	8
69. No. 1 of Temperance Anecdotes	12
70. No. 2 ditto	12
71. No. 3 ditto	12
72. No. 4 ditto	12
73. Luke Husler, or "I did not like to say No." ..	8
74. The Drunkard's Wife	8
75. The Unexplored Island	4
76. Ancient Wines; by R. D. Alexander	8
77. Influence of Example, 15 thousand	2

ASSORTED PACKETS.

No. 1, containing Tracts No. 1 to 31 inclusive.

" 2, " " " 32 to 55 "

" 3, " " " 56 and upwards.

Each Sixpence.

Twenty-four Sixpenny Packets, of either Juvenile Temperance Books or Tracts, will be delivered in London for Half-a-guinea, or 50 Packets for a Guinea, being sent by a Post-office Order to Richard Dykes Alexander, Ipswich.

SAMPLES WILL BE FORWARDED POSTAGE PAID, in return FOR 40 PENNY STAMPS, SENT TO THE EDITOR OF THE TEMPERANCE TRACTS, IPSWICH.

London, Simpkin and Marshall; Ipswich, Burton; Leeds, Kershaw; Norwich, Jarrold and Sons; Manchester, Holker; and of all Booksellers.

A NEW ERA IN TEMPERANCE LITERATURE!

TEETOTALERS!

If you are desirous that others should partake in the blessings you enjoy as the result of your abstinence from strong drinks; if you wish that the world should be disenthralled from the dominion of Alcohol; then be careful,

First, to store your own minds with sound Temperance knowledge, that you may be able successfully to discuss the Teetotal question in all its bearings, in every circle in which you move.

Secondly, place in the hands of those whom you wish to inform and to influence, a succession of well written Temperance publications.

To aid you in these two respects; to render this class of literature at once accessible and efficient; the Proprietor of the Teetotal Times has issued the following powerfully written works:—

INTEMPERANCE THE IDOLATRY OF BRITAIN; by the Rev. W. R. BAKER.

Two editions of this celebrated work at 2s. 6d. each, having been exhausted, the copyright has been purchased, and a revised edition, with additions to the Appendix, very neatly printed, is now published at THREEPENCE!

THE REPLY OF NATURE and PROVIDENCE to the question, "What is the Duty of Man in relation to the use of Intoxicating Liquors?"

In Lectures delivered by ELIPHALET NOTT, D.D., LL.D., President of Union College, New York. This important question is discussed in a most masterly style of eloquence, and powerful appeals are founded upon the Reply, addressed to the Manufacturers and Venders of Strong Drinks,—to Parents,—to Females,—and to the Young. In 32 very closely printed pages, for ONE PENNY.

LIVSEY'S famous MALT LECTURE.

Including a complete exposure of the great delusion as to the properties of Malt Liquors. Formerly published at Sixpence. A new edition for ONE PENNY.

THE TEETOTAL ESSAYIST.

This new work will be published regularly every month. Every Number will contain an Essay on some one of the most important points involved in the Teetotal question, for which PRIZES of TEN POUNDS each have been paid by the Proprietor of the Teetotal Times. Every Teetotaler in the Kingdom ought to have this periodical; and by subscribing One Shilling in advance, a copy will be sent regularly throughout the year to the subscriber, or to any person he may name, Postage Free! When was such an admirable and cheap mode of communicating information ever before devised?

ASSORTED TEETOTAL TRACTS.

Packets containing 150 pages of the most useful tracts, enclosed in a neat wrapper. SIXPENCE each.

THE TEETOTAL TIMES; or Monthly Temperance Messenger.

This paper claims to be considered as the Advocate, the Defender, and the Messenger of the Teetotal Body; to unfold and enforce its principles and objects, and to report its real state and progress in various parts of the world. And the commendations bestowed upon it, both by coadjutors and friends, prove that a title has not been arrogantly claimed to which it has no pretensions.

TEETOTALERS! you have proved yourselves a reading people, and have nobly stood by us in our effort to furnish a cheap and good Periodical, assist us yet further to spread the light of Teetotalism that the dismal darkness of Intemperance may be for ever chased away.

W. BRITAIN, Temperance Depot, 11, Paternoster Row, London.

TEMPERANCE
PROVIDENT INSTITUTION,
39, MOORGATE STREET, LONDON.

For Mutual Life Assurance, Annuities, &c.

TRUSTEES.

Robert Warner, Esq.
Rev. W. R. Baker.

Edward Webb, Esq.
Richard Barrett, Jun., Esq.

THE SIXTH ANNUAL REPORT is now ready, and may be had with the Tables, Rules, &c., on application to the Office or Country Agents.

THEODORE COMPTON, Sec.

Just Published.
THE WORLD'S
TEMPERANCE CONVENTION.

THE REPORT OF THE
PROCEEDINGS OF THE CONVENTION,
WITH AN INTRODUCTION,
BY ELIHU BURRITT.

And a selection of the most valuable papers sent into the Business Committee.

The Committee, in order to invite a large sale, have decided upon publishing the volume at cost price.

Sewed in wrapper, 1s. Bound in cloth, 1s. 6d.

Considerable allowance will be made to Individuals and Societies wishing to distribute gratuitously.

C. GILPIN, Bishopsgate Street Without; HOULSTON AND STONEMAN, Paternoster Row.

* * The NATIONAL TEMPERANCE CHRONICLE and TEMPERANCE RECORDER is published on the first day of each month, at HOULSTON & STONEMAN, the Depot of the National Temperance Society, 65, Paternoster-row, and will be sent post-free for one year on receipt of 2s. 6d. postage labels. Annual Subscriptions received at the Society's office, 11, Tokenhouse Yard, London, and subscriptions and donations for the general purposes of the Society, by the Treasurer, G. W. ALEXANDER, 40, Lombard Street; by any Member of the Committee, and at the office as above.

London: Printed by RICHARD BARRETT of 8, Regent-terrace City-road, in the Parish of St. Luke, in the County of Middlesex, Printer; at his Printing Office, No. 13, Mark-lane, in the Parish of Aithallows Staining, in the City of London; and published by JOHN STONEMAN, of 24, Brooksby Street, in the Parish of Islington, in the County of Middlesex, at HOULSTON and STONEMAN'S, No. 65, Paternoster-row, in the Parish of St. Michael-le-Querne, in the City of London, Publishers.—Monday, February 1st, 1847.

THE
NATIONAL TEMPERANCE CHRONICLE
 AND
TEMPERANCE RECORDER.

It is good neither to eat flesh, nor to drink wine, nor anything whereby thy brother stumbleth, or is offended, or is made weak.—ROM. XIV. 21

No. 15, JOINT SERIES.]

MARCH, 1847.

[PRICE 1d., STAMPED 2d.]

CONTENTS.

	PAGE		PAGE
Legislation for Ireland	33	FOREIGN INTELLIGENCE—
Address to the people of England	34	Warren County—Delaware	42
The temperance principle at sea	35	HOME INTELLIGENCE—
Education in the Army—Affecting incident.—Drunken Villages	36, 37	Leeds—Demonstration Meeting, Aldersgate Street Chapel—Hitchin Working Man's Temperance Demonstration—West Malling, Kent—Total Abstinence Soiree of Reformed Presbyterian Churches—Tunbridge Wells—Homersfield—Chatham	42-44
The Utilitarian argument for abstinence from liquor	37	The English Clergy—To Working Men and Women—Drunkenness in the Anglo-Indian Army—A few Social Facts	44, 45
The Spirit trade of Dundee—State of Crime in Edinburgh—Operations of the Scottish Temperance League	38, 39	Literary Notices	45, 46
EDITORIAL REMARKS—		To Correspondents—Advertisements	46
National Temperance Society—Subscriptions—National Temperance Chronicle and Recorder—National Temperance Society—Temperance Literature—Important—Providing against a rainy day	40, 41

LEGISLATION FOR IRELAND.

Irish distress is still the general theme. Night after night the House of Commons is occupied with the discussion of remedies for an evil which every one looks upon with dismay, and which deepens in sorrow as days are added to its duration. "It is a famine," said the premier, "of the 13th century with a population of the 19th." The usual consequences of starvation are found in several parts of Ireland. The excessive mortality, and the immense amount of contagious and febrile diseases, are fearful exponents of the state of that country. Whilst this is going on, whilst christian benevolence is opening its hand, and sending over food and clothing, our legislators are bringing their proposed panaceas to cure by one universal remedy the social ills of that unhappy country. If we might judge of their efficacy by the pomp of introduction, or the rhetorical embellishment with which they are built up, we should expect large things from them, and, we fear, reap a harvest of disappointment. The vexed question of Poor Laws has given place for the time being, to one of Railways; and the employment of English capital to an enormous amount in their construction, has enlisted supporters of the first talent, and aroused on the part of the government an opposition so great, that they staked their official existence upon its success. Poor Ireland cannot now be made the rallying cry of party. It has been the "great difficulty" with which ministers have had to contend for many years, but never under more disastrous circumstances. In former seasons, it has been how "Ireland should be governed—now it is, how Ireland shall be fed."

It is not within our province to canvas the merits of these questions, though we may express our grief at the delay which necessarily arises from the discussion, at a time when pestilence and death are busy among the population. To our humble judgment the most brilliant of these plans, promises no immediate relief to the starving poor, and many of them are only removing the burden from one shoulder to another. The best of these schemes offer advantages too remote, and are too much contingent upon circumstances to meet the case. It is no consolation to the starving man, that some nine months hence there is every probability he will be fed. Food is the necessity of every day. Almost every other human want admits of postponement, but the stomach must be fed, and will not derive nourishment from hope, however beautiful it may paint its promises.

How is it that in these protracted debates, scarcely any reference has been made to the crying evil of using food in the manufacture of intoxicating drink, except by the honourable member for Salford Mr. Brotherton, and one or two others? Is it that the subject is of trifling importance, or that these gentlemen have really much to learn as to the actual state of the population. Too intent upon some great political panacea they have neglected, we fear, to penetrate, into the depths of society—where social questions can be alone solved. Mr. D'Israeli remarked, "It was not at all impossible that a man who was always studying one subject would view the general affairs of the world through the prism of his usual pursuit." There are every day instances of this, and we can easily excuse some members of that house mistaking one element in civilization for civilization itself, and perceiving no road by which food and comfort could reach the poor of the sister country but by a railroad. But there are others who know something of English and Irish society, who have views more enlarged, and have been accustomed to a closer investigation of the habits of the people. How is it they were silent? £16,000,000 are asked to open a field of profitable industry; and that is much less than the people spend in whiskey. Thousands are perishing while the distilleries are busy; and these are swallowing up the food of a whole nation. The question is not of that recondite nature to require much research. The facts lie upon the very surface; they do not elude but challenge inquiry. How is it that in the legislature of a christian country, this fearful waste is scarcely adverted to when they are dilating upon so heart-rending a theme as the destruction of human life, under its most distressing and horrible form.

And this is strange, too, when the discussion is about Ireland; for that country has been made the theatre of an experiment for which the world finds no counterpart. She has proved her capabilities upon a scale that attracted general notice and admiration. It is no theory, for it has been proved that Irishmen can do without whiskey, and that the results which may be expected only, from some other measures, have already flowed wherever Father Mathew has made disciples. Crime and misery fled before him; he left behind his progress returning industry and its fruits. The achievements of that great but simple-hearted man are now matters of history. Does any one doubt that the stopping of the distilleries would have tended greatly to soften the severity of the evil, and would have done more to promote the industry of the population than anything else. In the Chronicle of some months back, we quoted Colquhoun to show the decided advantages which had followed such a step in a previous period of our history. Why has there been a neglect of the admonitions of experience. We have our own solution of the anomaly, but we have at present to do with the people. Those who support the drinking system, are assisting in a national waste, that is impoverishing the people and the state, and consuming food. It is a time for teetotalers to be awake. To our view, God in his providence, is giving his protest against such an appropriation of the gifts of his bounty, as is annually expending £60,000,000 upon intoxicating drink. Let us urge that petitions to the House of Commons be poured in without delay, and, if possible, that the teetotalers of every constituency press upon their representatives the consideration of this great question.

The following Address has been prepared, and is now in course of circulation. Editors and others are requested to reprint and distribute as extensively as possible.

ADDRESS

TO THE PEOPLE OF ENGLAND.

London, February 8th, 1847.

The following statements are respectfully submitted, and your serious consideration invited:—

1. The distress in Ireland is still the prevailing topic of the day. By the failure of the potato crop alone, three millions of the population of Ireland, and above 300,000 of the same class in the islands and highlands of Scotland, have been deprived of the provision upon which they chiefly depended for subsistence; and in addition to the failure of the potato crop, it is stated that there is a deficiency of the corn crop, to the extent of 1,500,000 to 2,000,000 quarters. The consequence has been severe privation and actual starvation over extensive districts of country, causing serious alarm to the government and the people, and threatening insecurity to life and property. One of the Irish members, on February the 9th, stated in the House of Commons: "It had been estimated that 5,000 adults and 10,000 children had already perished from famine; and that 25 per cent of the whole population would perish unless the house should afford effective relief."

2. This suffering is not confined to the Irish population. Thousands are dying from a soil, where starvation stares them in the face. Lord Brougham presented a petition to the House of Lords, on February 1st, from a number of highly respectable inhabitants of Liverpool, complaining of the influx of Irish paupers into that seaport. The petition stated that in fourteen days, no fewer than 11,184 paupers had come over from Ireland, being at the rate of 800 per day—and the number was increasing. He anticipated that complaints would soon reach them from Glasgow, Greenock, Bristol, and other parts. This vast immigration is pressing heavily upon all classes in our own land, but with greater severity upon that class whose daily toil has to supply their daily wants. The necessaries of life are raised to them in price by the prevailing scarcity; and that evil is aggravated by the numbers who come to compete with them for the means of subsistence.

3. It is to be feared too, that this is not a temporary privation. Serious apprehensions are entertained that it will extend over several months. At any rate six or seven months must elapse before any supply can be obtained from another crop; whilst from the continuance of the disease in the potato, and from the small quantities planted from those usually kept for seed being consumed for food, immediate relief cannot be expected through the regular channels. The heavy expense attendant upon a pressure of disease arising from long-continued subsistence upon insufficient and improper food, will add a very serious item to the national burdens.

4. Consistent with the usual benevolence of the English people—the public and private purse has been opened to a liberal extent, and many propositions have been made as to the means of economizing food. Some have suggested that bread should be made of flour retaining all but the mere bran—others have suggested the destruction of all unnecessary animals, in order that their food might be saved. These suggestions, whatever may be their practical character, indicate good feeling on the part of those who offer them. It is obviously recognised by them as the duty of the community, to practise every kind of self-denial, in order to administer to the necessities of the perishing. Such feelings will, now, be general, and it cannot be doubted, that the following considerations will meet with due attention.

5. Whilst such is the state of a great bulk of our population—and such are the gloomy prospects of the future—we find, on the authority of the Economist, of the 24th October, that the "total quantity of barley used for distilling and brewing in 1845, was 8,748,000 qrs. Thus we have 8,748,000 quarters of barley consumed annually, for the purpose of making beer and spirits. Now it is calculated, that one quarter of wheat is sufficient to support one person for a year, and making allowance for the difference of weight between wheat and barley, the above quantity may be considered equivalent to the support of between six and seven millions of persons."

6. With these facts before us—when under the pressure of such a heavy calamity, is it not a waste, and, consequently, a great national sin, to convert the fruits of the earth, sent by the bounty and beneficence of the Almighty, as food for the people, into a pernicious luxury—which a great number of the first scientific and medical authorities of the day, have declared to be totally unnecessary, and which all experience has proved to be a prolific parent of crime, poverty, and disease.

7. Not only is this waste to be deeply deplored at this season of trial, but at all times it is dissipating the means of the people, draining the resources of the empire, and, diverting from the channels of useful industry, the wealth that would give it activity and vigour. Mr. Chadwick, secretary to the poor law Commissioners, says:—"In the United Kingdom, full twenty-six millions per annum are spent in gin and British spirits, on which the duty is paid, that is to say, four or five times the annual poor rate, or nearly as much in one year, and on one pernicious article of indulgence, as the accumulated savings in the whole of the savings banks, during the 18 years that they have been in operation." This expenditure, it must be observed, is mainly by the labouring classes—augmenting local taxation—preventing the formation of provident and industrious habits—and operating as a barrier, to the spread of education and religion. Besides;—if the grain now consumed in the manufacture of intoxicating drinks, was sent into the market for food, it would furnish abundance, and greatly diminish the price to the consumer. The amount of grain, annually converted into drink, is about four times the amount of that imported into this country from foreign climes. It will be seen, that as an economical question, it is of the first importance,—whilst the effects of the disuse of alcoholic drinks, in a social, moral, and religious point of view, is worthy of the serious attention of every christian philanthropist.

8. The cry of hunger is a fearful cry! and speaks of peril. Before now it has been the herald of bloodshed—and where it has not led the way to massacre—it has made a harvest for the hand of pestilence. Disease has ever followed in the steps of want, and both have slain more than ever fell by the sword of war. Hunger is a fearful thing! It has made nations mad before now, and prepared them for anarchy and every species of crime. It will be the prayer of every well-wisher of his kind, that God in his graciousness and mercy, will turn these trials from our land. But our prayers alone will not avail—we must examine whether we are faithful stewards of the bounties provided by His providence. It is a momentous question at all times, but one of urgent necessity now. Surely it is not too much to ask of the followers of Him who, while on earth, would not permit the fragments of his feast to be lost—to consider well the question before them. There is the food of a people converted into a deleterious drink, while thousands are perishing—that drink is the agent of every unholly passion—the fountain of lewdness, depravity, and crime. It is impossible to estimate the blessings which would result to the human family, from the total disuse of intoxicating drinks. For these, and other cogent reasons which might be assigned, would space permit, your co-operation is earnestly requested, to bring about so desirable a consummation.

THE TEMPERANCE PRINCIPLE AT SEA.

We had prepared an article on this subject, but prefer giving the following, which we extract from the Inquirer, of January 23rd. In the Number for February 6th, is a letter from A FOREMAST HAND, worthy of the most serious attention, which we shall give in our next Number, with some remarks on the important subject on which it treats. The paragraph quoted originally appeared in the Times of January 7th, 1847, and was dated Plymouth, January 1st, 1847.—Ed. N. T. C.

Under this title, a paragraph is passing from one paper to another throughout the country, which is of most flagitious character, and bears every appearance of being intended to deceive. It runs as follows.—

"The merchant barque Columbus, of London, Capt. Edie, arrived at Plymouth last week; left Calcutta the 9th of July. This ship has been sailed on the Temperance principle, a mode which appears to have worked very unfortunately on the present voyage. The Columbus did not touch anywhere, or speak to any ship on the passage home. Before the ship reached the latitude of the Western Isles, the scurvy broke out among the crew, and one man, named John Bunnington, of Bute-shire, Scotland, died on the 25th of November. On the 22nd of December, in heaving-to, they lost their maintopsail, had their topgallant bulwarks carried away, after which last accident the want of some exhilarating drink on board was most especially felt. The vessel had been under close-reefed topsails for nearly a month, the crew being fearful of shaking out the reefs, not having strength enough to take them in again, should heavy weather come on. On nearing the Sound, her crew was strengthened by an addition of some hands from the trawlers, John Hooper and Jane. Five of the ship's crew have been taken to the hospital. The Columbus is fortunately a good ship, and is laden with a very valuable cargo of silks and other East Indian products."

It is well known to those who attend to such matters, that of late years, a few English, and a good many American vessels, have sailed on the Temperance principle, carrying no intoxicating drinks, except what may be judged requisite for medicinal purposes. The general result of the experience on the subject, extending as it does to some very trying cases, is, that the crews are better conducted, and sustain their labours under all changes of weather and degrees of exposure, far better; whilst the ship is so much safer from accident, that the adoption of the Temperance principle has been seriously thought of as a reason for insuring at a lower rate than usual. The paragraph before us is so artfully constructed as, at first, to appear to contradict this previous experience; but, when we carefully separate the facts alleged, all we find is, that the vessel suffered much from scurvy, of which one man died; and having met with an accident in a storm, the men, dejected, and accustomed, no doubt, to a very different practice, felt the want of (or, in other words, wished for) some exhilarating drink: finally, that the crew, thus weakened by the scurvy, had great need of assistance to get into port. Before these facts have any bearing on the Temperance question in respect to ships, it must be asked, Would the use of intoxicating drink have probably checked the scurvy? And if this were answered in the affirmative, it must be asked again, Is this, in other respects, undoubtedly pernicious practice, the only means readily used for checking the disease? Since no one, we presume, would think of answering these questions in the affirmative, the case simply proves that Temperance is not a certain preservative against either scurvy or storms, and that a crew, or some portion of it, desired what was not good for it. The impression intended to be given, that Temperance caused the weakness to which the crew was reduced, is utterly false, and no one knowing anything of the subject, or having ever in practice compared the opposite plans, would venture to affirm it. Yet this paragraph, running the round of the British press, is creating in many minds doubts about the practical working of the Temperance system, and encouraging the prejudices of those who still fondly cling to the use of strong drinks. It is a great popular delusion, that the use of ale and spirits contributes to produce strength for labour. The contrary is the well-established fact, ascertained both by comparative trials and by considerations drawn from physiology and chemistry. It is greatly to be desired that the subject should be well understood, and we are unwilling to allow an attempt to encourage and support popular error to pass without exposure.

EDUCATION IN THE ARMY.

We regret we cannot make room for the whole of an article which appeared in the Times, of Feb. 17, on this subject. The following extract points to one great cause of the soldier's demoralization:—

"Without a room to dress in—without a room to sit in between the hours of duty—where is the soldier to study, how is he to profit by, the lessons which it has been attempted to instil into him? If the barrack-room is more than ordinarily comfortable,—i. e., if it is not damp, dirty, and squalid,—it is more than ordinarily full. Study, under such circumstances, is impossible. If it is what it generally is, it is the most uninviting place that can be conceived. Where, then, can the soldier retire to, to enjoy his leisure, and ruminate over his instruction? One place does remain open to him. One place has been provided for him by the beneficence of the State, and the sagacity of his officers. The canteen is accessible at all times, and in all weathers. It is under the patronage of the authorities; it is a profitable investment of the Ordnance-office. It is the accredited and favoured instrument which strict disciplinarians maintain for the encouragement of vices which they visit with penalties even more disgusting and humiliating! The curse of a soldier's life is drunkenness. It is the source of all his crimes and all his sufferings. Yet he is familiarised with it under the auspices of a service which traffics in the degradation of its followers! Can it be wondered at that education in the army has made so slight a progress against such a monstrous system as this? Can it be wondered that the mass of the army has been branded by its own officers with the epithet of "brutal?" It may be brutal; but those who use the word so freely should remember what has made it so. Of all the infernal contrivances that ever were planned for demoralizing men, none was ever so execrably ingenious as that which is perpetually tempting barbarous ignorance by the allurements of an easy inebriety.

"On this account, the project is censurable, because it is virtually null. Education cannot be promoted against such a mountain-weight of obstruction as is offered by the canteen system alone. It crushes every effort made to improve the mind, by the deadly pressure of a gross and sensual habit. Not one soldier in forty has the courage to resist the joint temptation of example and discomfort. The genius loci is against him; it deadens his resolution and overcomes his principles. The best conducted recruit yields, after a few months, to the scoffs and persuasions of his comrades; or, if not to them, to the necessities of his own uncomfortable position. He becomes a drunkard, and is flogged for it; he is flogged again, till he has been hardened into callousness, or drilled into a stubborn simulation of parade sobriety. How can such a man be taught anything good, useful, or elegant? Yet the French and Prussian soldiers learn in the army accomplishments which are useful to them, both as soldiers and citizens. But in the French and Prussian armies the canteen is under strict surveillance. It is managed by non-commissioned officers. Spirits are not permitted to be sold in it, and only a small quantity of wine; but coffee and chocolate are sold, and—we believe—it has a reading-room attached. Lastly, their governments do not make a profit by it. Why not pursue the same salutary course in England? Abolish, or restrain the canteen, and military education will cease to be an impossibility. While it continues to be what it is, so long will it continue to be a standing wonder that the whole army is not what some regiments have shown themselves to be,—totally and irrecoverably demoralized."

AFFECTING INCIDENT.

(From the Speech of Gov. Briggs at Lowell, Mass.)

"In my neighbourhood, is a gentleman of my acquaintance, well educated, who once had some property, but now reduced—poor! He has a beautiful and lovely wife, a lady of cultivation and refinement, and a most charming daughter."

"This gentleman had become decidedly intemperate in his habits, and had fully alarmed his friends in regard to him. At one time, when a number of his former associates were together, they counselled as to what could be done for him. Finally, one of them said to him, 'why don't you send your daughter away to a certain distinguished school which he named?' 'Oh! I cannot,' said he, 'it is out of the question. I am not able to bear the expense. Poor girl! I wish I could.' 'Well,' said his friend, 'if you will sign the temperance pledge, I will be all the expense of her attending school for one year.' 'What does this mean,' said he, 'do you think me in danger of becoming a drunkard?' 'No matter,' said his friend, 'about that now, but I will do as I said.' 'And I,' said another, 'will pay the rent of your farm a year, if you will sign the pledge.' 'Well, these offers are certainly liberal, but what do they mean? Do you think me in danger of becoming a drunkard? What can it mean? But gentlemen, in view of your liberality, I will make you an offer,—I will sign it if you will!' This was a proposition they had not considered, and were not very well prepared to meet, but for his sake, they said we will, and did sign, and he with them.

"And now for the first time the truth poured into his mind, and he saw his condition, and he sat down bathed in tears.

"'Now,' said he, 'gentlemen, you must go and communicate these facts to my wife; poor woman, I know she will be glad to hear it, but I cannot tell her.' Two of them started for that purpose. The lady met them at the door, pale and trembling with emotion—'what,' she inquired, 'is the matter?—what has happened to my husband?'

"They bid her dismiss her fears, assuring her they had come to bring her tidings of her husband—but good tidings, such as she would be glad to hear.

"'Your husband has signed the temperance pledge—yes, signed in good faith.' The joyous news nearly overcame her—she trembled with excitement—wept freely, and clasping her hands devotionally, she looked up to heaven and thanked God for the happy change. 'Now,' said she, 'I have a husband, as he once was, in the days of our early love.'

"But this was not what moved me," said the gentleman. "There was in the same vicinity another gentleman—a generous, noble soul—married young—married well—into a charming family, and the flower of it. His wine drinking habits had aroused the fears of his friends, and one day when several of them were together, one said to another, 'let us sign the pledge.' 'I will if you will,' said one and another, till all had agreed to it, and the thing was done.

"This gentleman thought it rather a small business, and felt a little sensitive about revealing to his wife what he had done. But on returning home, he said to her, 'Mary, my dear, I have done what I fear will displease you.' 'Well, what is it?' 'Why, I have signed the temperance pledge.' 'Have you?' 'Yes, I have, certainly.' Watching his manner as he replied, and reading in it sincerity, she entwined her arms around his neck, laid her head upon his bosom, and burst into a flood of tears. Her husband was affected deeply by this conduct of his wife, and said, 'Mary, don't weep, I did not know it would afflict you so, or I would not have done it—I will go and take my name off immediately.' 'Take your name off!' said she, 'no, no!—let it be there. I shall now have no more solicitude in reference to your becoming a drunkard. I shall spend no more wakeful midnight hours. I shall no more steep my pillow in tears.'

"Now for the first time the truth shone upon his mind, and he folded to his bosom his young and beautiful wife, and wept with her. Now I can't stand these facts, and am going to sign the pledge."

DRUNKEN VILLAGES.

There is a remarkable specimen of a drunken village in the neighbourhood of our own city, namely, the fishing village of Newhaven. A curious primitive place it is, and one of the native seats of those angularly-dressed fishwomen whom strangers are accustomed to remark on the streets of Edinburgh, which they daily perambulate, selling their fish from huge baskets carried on their backs. The men work as fishers and pilots, the women carry fish to town, and thus a good deal of money is made amongst them. Nevertheless, it is an enigmatically mean-looking and filthy village; so very much so, indeed, that one had better, for the sake of his shoes and his olfactory sense, avoid passing through it. The explanation is—drink.

It appears from a document, drawn up by one of the people themselves—one, however, who has a desire of better things, and wishes to reform his neighbours—that there are thirty-three public-houses in Newhaven, being one for every sixty persons in the village. If children are left out of sight, as they ought to be, it will be observed what a small number of the productive labourers of the place undertake to support a family for the supplying of themselves with liquor. Although strangers, no doubt, consume not a little liquor in the place, perhaps it would not be too much to say, that every dozen families in Newhaven maintain a public-house out of their earnings. The worthy fisherman, who is endeavouring to effect a reformation, says, "Suppose that each public-house draws, on an average, 15s. a-day, in a year this will amount to £8033 15s. Suppose that one-third of the population, or 660, spend, on strong drink, 6d. per day, in a year this will amount to £6022. 10s." He adds, "One wholesale spirit merchant confesses that he draws from the public-houses in Newhaven £100 per week. There are three or four others who supply them with strong drinks. Suppose that among these, another £100 is taken; in a year, £200 per week amounts to £10,400. Take the average of those sums as the truth, and we have, as the annual sum spent on intoxicating drinks in Newhaven, £8485. 8s. 4d., or, in round numbers, £8500. These calculations are purposely made at low rates. Any one who knows the customs of the place, and the high rents and licenses charged for public-houses, will perceive that much higher sums might have been fixed on." [True, indeed.]

"Let us now," he continues, "calculate what good might be done with the £8500 thus foolishly squandered.

Clothing for 600 men and women, at £3 each	£1800
Clothes for the rest of the population of the village, namely, the young, 1400, at 30s. each	2100
House rents for 400 families, at £5	2000
Education for 300 children, at 12s.	180
Sittings in the house of God for 1000, or, half of the population, at 5s.	250
Say that there are 30 couples married every year, allow each couple £20 for providing furniture, this would amount to	600
£5 a-year to each of 100 poor persons	500
Ten boats may be built yearly, at £25 each	250
For the repair of old boats	220
Three missionaries to the heathen, at £200 each	600
	<hr/> £8500

After all this, we have only to add, as a crowner, a passage, from the notice of Newhaven, in the "New Statistical Account of Scotland."—"This Newhaven colony is pre-eminent over others for its sober, industrious, and peaceable habits." Quite so. This is what Newhaven thinks of itself, no doubt; and yet, as we see, it annually drinks up, at the very lowest computation, some eight or nine thousand pounds' worth of whisky! —Chambers's Edinburgh Journal.

THE UTILITARIAN ARGUMENT FOR ABSTINENCE FROM LIQUOR.

INDEPENDENT OF ANY SCRIPTURAL SANCTION OR CONDEMNATION.

(From Lectures on the Use of Intoxicating Liquors; by DR. NOTT.)

Milk and honey were among the promised blessings of the land of promise, and they are employed in Scripture as emblems of the richest mercies; and yet, who does not know that honey is often deleterious, and that there are times and places in which to taste of milk is death?

"At Logansport"—I quote here from a letter in the Danbury Herald, dated July 11th, 1833—"At Logansport, on the banks of the Wabash, I was cautioned by an elderly lady against using either milk, butter, or beef, on my way to Vincennes; as a reason for her caution, she informed me that the milk sickness was common in that state. I had heard of it before, but knew little of it; she informed me that very many deaths occurred annually by this dreadful malady. There is a difference of opinion as to the cause that produces it; but the general opinion is, that it is occasioned by the yellow oxide of arsenic in the low ground and woodland, and particularly near the Wabash river; and that some weed, yet unknown, imbibes the poison, and when eaten by the cattle, causes them to quiver, stagger, and die, within a few hours. If cows eat it, the milk is poisoned, or butter that is made from the milk; and it is sure death to those who eat of either, as it is to the animal that eats of the weed. Great care is taken to bury such cattle as die with it; for if dogs eat their flesh, they share the same fate, and it operates upon them as violently as upon the creature that was affected with it. The butcher, uniformly in this State, runs the victim of the knife a mile to heat the blood, and, if it has eaten the weed, it will at once, on stopping, quiver and shake; if it does not, it is considered safe to butcher; and this is the uniform test, even when beef cattle show no signs of having eaten the weed.

"Indiana is not alone in this misfortune; there have been many cases in some parts of Ohio, and south of St. Louis, and other south-western States. I have seen many farms, with comfortable buildings and improvements, entirely abandoned, and their owners fled, to avoid this dreadful curse."

Now, what I ask, would be thought of the sanity of a man who, with his Bible in his hand, and his finger pointing to the text that speaks of the milk and honey of the Holy Land, should undertake to rebuke that mother in Israel, for presuming to recommend to that stranger traveller, not the moderate use, but total abstinence from an article in Indiana, which God himself had authorized to be used in Palestine? What would be thought of the sanity of the man who, standing in the great valley of the West, amid the dying and the dead, and after having surveyed the sick-rooms where the victims of milk were agonizing, or the fresh graves where their corpses had been buried, should gravely talk, not of abstinence, but moderation, in the use of this fatal aliment—should provide it for his family, place it on his table, proffer it to his friends, and even make a show of tasting it himself, out of reverence for the Bible, and through the dread of appearing to give countenance to ultraism? What would be thought of the sanity of such a man? And yet, what are all the ills which milk has occasioned on the other side of the mountains since the foot of the white man first trod the great valley of the West, compared with those which intoxicating liquor occasions annually in any one of the cities of the East?

If these cases are not parallel, their want of parallelism only gives additional force to the argument drawn from their comparison. For, the milk in the valley of the West, deadly as it may be, is, notwithstanding, truly the milk of kine, whereas the drunkard's drink of the East is not even the fruit of the vine, but the product of the brew-house; or if it indeed ever partake of the fruit of the vine, it is not of that fruit in its purity, but in admixture with articles that debase it, so that the mixture no longer comes within the limits of that license granted to the wine of Palestine, whatever that license may be; so that the whole question of the merit or demerit of the intoxicating liquors here in use, and of the innocence or guilt of using them, is to be decided, not by appealing to the Bible, but to observation and experience. To that tribunal we appeal, and are prepared to abide the issue—the only rightful issue; and, in making this appeal, we take no vantage ground, we claim no right to bind the conscience of others, or to sit in judgment on our brother.

If patriots shall think—I speak as to wise men—if patriots shall think, having examined the facts of the case, and with all these evils before their eyes, that it is befitting in them to continue the use of the brandied, or even brewed, wines; if they shall think, on the whole, that the happiness these liquors confer exceeds in amount the miseries they inflict,—let them drink on, and abide the consequence.

If Christians think—I speak as to conscientious men—if Christians think, having examined the facts of the case, and with all these evils before their eyes, that the benefits resulting from this drink of drunkards are so numerous, or so signal, as to require the influence of their example in the furtherance of its use, especially on gala-days and at weddings, let them give to the good cause the benefit of their influence; but let them do this understandingly, and on account of the benefits which the church and the world are likely to derive from continuing its use, and not because the Bible sanctions it. If this drunkard's drink is to be hereafter drunk by Christians, let it be done by the authority of reason, and in the name of Ceres or Vesta, and not of Religion and Jesus. And why by the authority of Religion, and in the name of Jesus? Neither the Bible, nor its Author—whatever may have been said of the mere fruit of the vine in Palestine—has said anything in commemoration of the products of the still and the brew-house in America.

These unbidden, exciting, maddening mixtures, are in every sense profane, and befit the orgies of Bacchus, rather than the festivities of Christians. They are, at best, mixed wines—mixed with brandy, or even worse materials; which mixture the Bible nowhere tolerates, and which cannot, therefore, under its sanction, be distributed even to bridal guests. If hereafter, therefore, any Christian shall claim the liberty of countenancing the use of wine, falsely so called, on gala-days and at weddings, let him do so as a man, not as a Christian; nor let him lay to his soul the flattering unctious that in doing so he is borne out by the Bible, and sheltered behind the example of his Saviour. If the use of these articles as a common beverage can be vindicated at all, it is because of their utility, and only because of their utility, and not because religion either requires or sanctions their use; for no such article as even the brandied wine of commerce existed in our Saviour's time, for brandy itself did not then exist. This intenser poison is a product of human skill, and of later times.

THE SPIRIT TRADE OF DUNDEE.

(From the Northern Warder.)

In our last article upon this subject, we stated that 480 spirit shops were regularly opened in Dundee upon the Sabbath; and we calculated the weekly value of the Sabbath sale of spirits at £1440, in which 14,000 persons, besides the spirit dealers themselves and their families, were implicated. We proceed now to inquire into the extent of the traffic upon the other days of the week also. There are several modes by which we can approximate the truth upon the subject. Let it be assumed that upon an average each publican makes an annual profit of £50, and that his profit is 20 per cent. upon the sale. Thus there is £250 worth of spirits annually sold by each, or £140,000 worth by the 560 publicans of Dundee. Again, the quantity of spirits entered for home consumption in Scotland in 1845, was 5,922,421 gallons. This gives an average 2½ gallons per head to the whole Scottish population. Sheriff Alison estimates the consumption of Glasgow at six gallons per head. Let us assume that of Dundee at the same rate. Our population is now about 70,000, and our entire consumption therefore 420,000 gallons, which, estimated as sold at 12s. per gallon, amounts to £252,000. The mean of these two estimates is £196,000. There are 14,000 families in Dundee, and the annual expenditure of each upon strong drink averages £14, that of each individual averages £2.16s. This is a sum almost incredibly large, but that it is a close approximation to the truth we are compelled to admit. It reminds us with a painful emphasis of the hold which drinking usages have taken upon Scottish society. The guilt of drunkenness seems to attach far more deeply to Scotland than to the sister island. Ireland, with her population of eight millions, consumes only six-and-a-half millions of gallons of spirits. If Ireland drank as largely as Scotland, she would consume seventeen millions of gallons. If Scotland drank no more than Ireland, she would consume only 2,000,000 of gallons.

But returning for a moment to our calculation regarding the use of spirits in Dundee, it is very desirable to ascertain the proportions in which this consumption falls upon the various classes of society. There are no authentic data upon which such an inquiry can be replied to. It will scarcely, however, be denied by those who are at all conversant with the subject, that the working-classes bear a share of this huge self-imposed taxation at least equal to the average sum we have named. We cannot escape the conclusion that very many of the labouring families of Dundee expend £14 of their hardly won earnings upon intoxicating drinks; and that the expenditure of many of them must be set down at a still larger sum. We believe instances are not very rare of working-men who earn from 20s. to 28s. per week, and who do not bring home a single farthing for their families.

STATE OF CRIME IN EDINBURGH.

INCREASE OF INTIMPERANCE.—Mr. Haiving, the superintendent of the City Police, has drawn up a report of the state of crime in Edinburgh during the past year. The number of persons apprehended for housebreaking is 157; for assaults and robberies, 13; for uttering false or counterfeit coin, 15; for falsehood, fraud, and wilful imposition, 77; for forgery, and uttering forged documents, 8; for shop-liftings, 20; for pocket-picking, 43; for simple thefts, 3246; for disorderly, and assaults, 3834; for begging and vagrant cases, 441. Total number of persons apprehended, 7750. There is a decrease in crime generally, especially house-breakings, in reference to which it appears that there has been a constant decrease during the last five years, and that the number by night, during the last half year, is little more than one-third of those effected in the corresponding period of the year 1842. There is also a considerable decrease in the number of assaults and breaches of the peace, and begging and vagrant cases. The total value of property stolen, by means of housebreaking, is £409, of which £151 was recovered. Of the number of persons apprehended for theft, 882 were convicted in police courts, 533 were remitted to higher courts, and 494 were discharged from want of proof. Of the 533 remitted prisoners, 52 were transported, 144 sentenced to imprisonment, 245 dealt with summarily, and 92 remain for trial. There is a considerable increase in the amount of drunkenness—5803 persons were found drunk on the streets, and taken to the police-office for protection only, and 1772 were in a state of intoxication when they committed other offences, so that there are 7575 cases of drunkenness during the last year, being an increase of 1318 on that of the preceding year, and 3350 on that of 1842.

SELF-DENIAL.—At a meeting on Friday, for the relief of the destitute poor in Scotland, Mr. J. P. Edwards a commercial traveller, stated that at Macclesfield, the other day, he thought of dining at an hotel. Reflecting on the destitute, he turned aside, and made a dinner on three-pennyworth of bread and cheese, giving 2s. 3d., the estimated difference, to the Irish poor. For the same purpose he had latterly travelled in third-class carriages, and totally abstained from intoxicating drink. —Liverpool Mercury. An example most worthy of imitation. [Ed. N. T. C.]

There are ninety-nine places of religious worship in Boston, says Burritt's Christian Citizen, and nearly 500 rum mills.

OPERATIONS OF THE SCOTTISH TEMPERANCE LEAGUE.

GLASGOW.—The committee appointed to procure the abolition of the practice of giving refreshments at funerals, in terms of a declaration subscribed by a large number of the ministers of the gospel in this city, sent a deputation to lay the matter before the magistrates and town council. The following extract from the records of the council has been received by the convener of the deputation:—"The magistrates and council having considered the subject, unanimously and cordially approve of the recommendation, and resolve accordingly."

The measure having thus obtained the concurrence of the ministers and magistrates of the city, the former brought it before their congregations, by reading the declaration and enforcing the adoption of the proposed change.

The following is a copy of the document, with the names attached:—

We, the undersigned ministers of the gospel, of various denominations, in the city of Glasgow, believing that the custom of giving refreshments to those who attend at funerals causes not only unnecessary expense, but injurious sacrifice of means to many bereaved families;—as also believing that the time occupied by the serving and partaking of refreshments might be more profitably spent in devotional and other suitable exercises;—hereby state our desire that the present custom be discontinued amongst the members and adherents of our several congregations, and by the public generally, and our conviction that the discontinuance of the custom will be felt to be a great public good.

William Symington, D.D.
 George Jeffrey
 Alex. Wilson
 John W. Borland
 William Lindsay, D.D.
 Chas. F. R. Smith
 John Edwards
 George Rose
 James Stuart
 James Paterson
 David Russell
 James Macbeth
 Alex. S. Paterson
 Walter McGilvray
 Robert Bremner
 J. S. Taylor
 A. Nisbet
 James Barr, D.D.
 Peter Napier
 Archd. Watson
 Stewart Bates, D.D.
 Peter Currie
 Robert Houston
 Wm. H. Cornforth
 David King, LL.D.
 James Taylor
 John G. Lorimer
 Hamilton M. MacGill
 William Scott
 Gavin Struthers, D.D.
 William Burgess
 Archd. McDougall
 David Mitchell
 Walter Duncan
 David Brown
 Fergus Ferguson
 John Smyth, D.D.
 Nathaniel Paterson, D.D.
 John Forbes, D.D.
 Michael Willis, D.D.

James Meiklem
 William Arnot
 Robert Ross
 Robert Pollock
 Peter Duncan
 Geo. S. Ingram
 John Graham
 William Black, D.D.
 James Boyd
 William Anderson
 Robert Jamieson
 William Brash
 John Simpson
 Samuel Miller
 Robert Buchanan, D.D.
 James Craik, D.D.
 John Clark
 Hugh McDougall
 John Eadie, LL.D.
 A. O. Beattie
 Nor. McLeod, D.D.
 James Taylor, D.D.
 James Mackinlay
 David Runciman
 John McFarlane, LL.D.
 William Kidston, D.D.
 Ralph Wardlaw, D.D.
 John Noble
 John Robson, D.D.
 John Patterson
 Matthew Murray
 Alex. Denovan
 John Allen
 David Menzies
 Thomas Brown, D.D.
 Alex. Duncan
 Alex. N. Somerville
 Chas. B. Gribble
 Jon R. Anderson
 Alex. Macleod

National Temperance Society.

OFFICE 11, TOKENHOUSE YARD.

VICE-PRESIDENTS.

The EARL of ARUNDEL and SURREY, M.P.
Sir Wilfrid Lawson, Bart.

R. D. Alexander, Esq.	Rev. Theobald Mathew.
Thomas Beaumont, Esq.	W. J. Morgan, A.M., M.D.
Samuel Bowly, Esq.	Richard Peek, Esq.
Rev. J. Brewster, D.D.	Rev. P. Penson, M.A.
J. S. Buckingham, Esq.	Rev. W. W. Robinson, M.A.
Robert Charleton, Esq.	Rev. J. Sherman.
Rev. R. Clowes, M.A.	Rev. C. Stovel.
Isaac Collins, Esq.	Rev. T. Spencer, A. M.
Joseph Eaton, Esq.	Rev. W. H. Turner, M.A.
S. C. Hall, Esq., B.L.F.S.A.	Edward Thomas, Esq.
Lawrence Heyworth, Esq.	Robert Warner, Esq.
William Janson, Jun., Esq.	Edward Webb, Esq.
Ven. Archdeacon Jeffreys.	Rev. J. Wilson.
G. S. Kenrick, Esq.

TREASURER.

G. W. Alexander, Esq., 40, Lombard Street.

EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE.

George W. Atwood.	Richard Hicks.
Richard Barrett.	C. H. Lovell, M.D.
Jabez Burns, D.D.	John Meredith.
William Cabell.	Richard Potter.
William Cash.	W. W. Robinson.
John Cassell.	R. B. Scutt.
Charles Gilpin.

SUPERINTENDENT OF MISSION.

John Meredith.

SECRETARY.

Thomas Beggs.

NATIONAL TEMPERANCE SOCIETY.

The Committee feel anxious that every effort should be made in this season of privation and distress to bring out prominently the food question. They have adopted a petition, which has been presented to the House of Commons by Mr. Brotherton, a copy of which has been sent to about 500 different societies and 100 influential individuals, with an urgent request that they would promote a similar petition in their neighbourhood. In addition to this, they have adopted an address to the influential classes in this country, which is now being sent by post to members of parliament, magistrates, ministers, and others. It is given in the second article in this number. Parties transmitting 10s. to pay for postage, may have 100 of these addressed to different individuals, and thus assist the Committee and greatly serve the cause. Many whose other claims prevent them from rendering assistance to our present fund, may adopt this means of diffusing information at a most important time, and on a subject of surpassing interest.

The following is the list of Subscriptions up to the present date—

George W. Alexander, Esq., for the years 1847-8-9	£100
Joseph Sturge, Esq.	100
Joseph Eaton, Esq.	100
J. D. Bassett, Esq.	100
J. J. Gurney, Esq., for the years 1847-8	100
Edward Thomas, Esq.	100
Mrs. H. Grant	100
Luke James Hansard, Esq.	100
A Friend, per Richard Barrett	100
A. A., for the years 1847-8-9	100
A. B.	50
William Cash, Esq.	50
William Janson, Esq., Jun.	50
James Charlton, Esq.	50

Frederick Schwann, Esq., Huddersfield	£50
R. D. Alexander, Esq.	45
W. D. Sims, Esq.	30
Robert Charlton, Esq.	25
Richard Barrett, Esq., Sen.	25
Rev. P. Penson, Durham	15
Mr. John Cassell	10
George W. Atwood, Esq.	10
Thomas Catchpool, Esq.	5
Mr. F. J. Thompson	5
Mr. Charles Gilpin	5
W. C. Walters, Esq.	5
Richard Hicks, Esq.	5
B. Wilson, Esq.	5
Richard Place, Esq.	5
Jacob Post, Esq.	5
Mr. Richard Barrett, Jun.	5

SUBSCRIPTIONS RECEIVED.

Edward Smith, Esq., Sheffield	50
R. J. Shafto, Esq.	10
William Dent, Esq.	10
W. Wilson, Esq., Torquay	5
P. Whitehead, Esq.	5
Miss K. Bell	5
H. Camps, Esq., Cheltenham	5
G. Foster, Esq.	5
Mr. John Locke	10s.

The above will shew that by the liberality of many old tried friends of the cause, the sum of £1500 is now made up. This however is much below the sum really required for the great and important objects the Committee have in view; they feel therefore that efforts must still be made to obtain an increasing number of subscribers.

SUBSCRIPTIONS.

£.	s.	d.	£.	s.	d.
Alexander, R.D.	5	5	0	Goad, S.	1	1	0
Batchelor, Dr.	1	1	0	Goad, H.	1	1	0
Binns, Thomas	1	1	0	Glover, J., En-
Biggs, Mrs. S.	1	1	0	field	0	10	6
Bevan, Paul	1	1	0	Groom, R.	1	0	0
Brewin, W. H.	1	0	0	Harris, Edward	1	0	0
Bowly, S.	5	0	0	Howard, Mrs. E.	1	1	0
Bacon, I. P.	1	1	0	Horn, Miss	0	10	0
Bowly, C.	5	5	0	Hill, A., Totten-
Barry, M.	1	1	0	ham	0	10	0
Camps, H.	1	0	0	Janson, Wm., sen.	1	1	0
Compton, Joseph	1	1	0	Janson, W., jun.	5	5	0
Cole, H.	1	1	0	Kenrick, G. S.	5	0	0
Everett, Ann	1	1	0	Marsh, J.	1	0	0
Forster, R.	1	1	0	Phillips, Mrs.	1	1	0
Frith, Jane	0	10	0	Potter, Richard	1	1	0
Frith, F., Liver-				Poole Society	1	1	0 pool	1	1	0	Ranyard	0	10	0
				Taylor, W. H.	1	1	0

THE NATIONAL TEMPERANCE CHRONICLE AND RECORDER.

We have received several letters of approbation respecting the Chronicle, which are extremely gratifying. One correspondent this month suggests an effort to raise a gratuitous distribution fund. Engaged in raising a fund for special efforts, we are reluctant to do more than to give notice that we shall be most happy to apply any sums sent us to extend the circulation of the Chronicle. To our subscribers we beg to intimate that many of their subscriptions are in arrear; and as the sum of 2s., which covers the expense of a stamped copy for the year, is too small to justify personal applications to each, they will please observe that the last number for which payment has been received, will in future be enclosed in a coloured wrapper.

NATIONAL TEMPERANCE SOCIETY.

The committee have felt it to be their duty to call the attention of the legislature in this season of calamity to the waste of food in the manufacture of intoxicating drinks. The following is the petition presented to the House of Commons in their behalf, by Mr. Brotherton, the estimable member for Salford, who participates in the prayer of the petition on the 12th February.

The committee are anxious that this should be supported by petitions from as many temperance societies and public bodies as possible. Such an effort, calling the attention of government, and through them the country, to an evil of such great magnitude as the destruction of seven millions of quarters of grain in the manufacture of a pernicious drink, whilst large bodies of the people are famishing, cannot but materially aid the temperance cause by creating inquiry and reflection on the subject, and may possibly sooner or later lead to greater results.

This petition was hastily got up, and only signed by the chairman, but it is desirable that the general petitions should be signed as numerous as possible.

To the Honourable the HOUSE OF COMMONS in Parliament assembled.

The Petition of the Committee of the NATIONAL TEMPERANCE SOCIETY,

SHEWETH—

That your Petitioners have deeply lamented the present scarcity of food, and having had opportunities for several years past of observing the condition of the people, more particularly as it is affected by the prevailing custom of taking intoxicating drinks as a common beverage, resulting in the wide-spread injury and demoralization of large masses of the population; beg to call the attention of your honourable house, in this season of calamity, to that intemperance, which, by testimonies of the highest judicial authorities, and all experience, is proved to be the prolific parent of crime, pauperism, and immorality.

And that, in addition to these evils, laying heavy pecuniary burdens upon the community, it is proved, that to supply the demand for intoxicating liquors, which a large number of the first medical and scientific men of the day have pronounced to be quite unnecessary for men in health, above seven millions of quarters of grain are annually consumed in the breweries and distilleries of the United Kingdom, and that enormous quantity is thus lost to the people as food.

That your Petitioners regard such an appropriation of the fruits of the earth, a grievous waste of the bounties of Divine Providence, and extremely mischievous in its consequences at all times; but when famine is desolating the Sister Country, when hundreds are dying of starvation, and when the price of food is raised to all, and presses heavily upon the industrious classes of the empire, they feel that legislative interference is absolutely necessary; and they can no longer forbear to urge upon your honourable house the propriety of immediately arresting this fearful waste, by stopping the manufacture of intoxicating drinks.

That your petitioners have, hitherto, confined their efforts to bringing before the people the consideration of those remedies for this great evil which lay within the scope of voluntary exertion. They, however, conceive that it is the duty of the legislature to remove, as far as practicable, the causes of our national intemperance; and they respectfully submit, that the measure to which they invite the attention of your honourable house, would not only be directly beneficial in saving the food consumed, and mitigating the present calamity, but would be a great practical experiment in proof of the allegation made by your Petitioners, and the promoters and friends of the temperance cause in general, that in proportion as the facilities for drinking are withdrawn, are the people improved in circumstances and elevated in morals.

Signed on behalf of the Committee,

WILLIAM CASH, Chairman.

TEMPERANCE LITERATURE.

We are glad to find that the Prize Essays command a circulation that surpasses our most sanguine expectations. It must be highly gratifying to the spirited proprietor to find his labours so well appreciated, as it is to us to find that specific subjects, having a collateral bearing on the temperance question, receive such unequivocal marks of public approbation.

Mr. Alexander is adding to his valuable collection of juvenile tracts. Mr. Russon of Bristol has published three envelopes, well worthy of encouragement. This mode of distributing information is a most important one. At very little more than the price of ordinary envelopes, these may be obtained; and teetotalers have an opportunity of placing some prominent facts before the friends with whom they are in correspondence. Mr. Gilpin has published a very beautiful envelope, containing the New Medical Certificate, with a selection of the most distinguished names appended to that document.

IMPORTANT!

All the barley now used for malting and distilling would make wholesome and nutritious food; and if it were applied to its legitimate use, to feed and not intoxicate, there would be plenty and cheapness. The barley to be used as food is first passed through a mill to remove the husk; in this state it is called Scotch barley, and may be purchased at the grocers for 2½d. to 3d. per pound. It can be used the same as peas for soup, or as rice for making laked or boiled puddings; and in this way the barley is more palatable to an Englishman than if made into bread. To make a thick soup or stew, with a marrow-bone, or a little meat and vegetables, the Scotch barley is excellent.—Manchester Times.

PROVIDING AGAINST A RAINY DAY.

One example will show how small a saving in early life will keep a man independent of the workhouse in his old age. Suppose he save but one shilling a-week from the time he is twenty years old till he is forty, and put it every year in the Savings' Bank, it will, at compound interest, amount to £72. 12s. 5½d. Suppose for the next twenty years he does not add one penny to it, it will, without his help, have more than doubled itself, and entitle him, at sixty, to demand upwards of £150; or, if he prefer it, a Government annuity of £15 a-year, or 10d. per day paid quarterly at the Savings' Bank; in other words, a little over a shilling a-week laid by in youth will entitle a man to a shilling a-day in old age.

TOO BAD.—There has been an increase of at least £20,000 Excise revenue in Limerick, upon the consumption of spirits alone in the past year.—Limerick Chronicle.

Foreign Intelligence.

WARREN COUNTY.

SYRACUSE.—At a large meeting of the citizens of Syracuse, on the subject of a city charter, the faithful and ever watchful champion of temperance, Capt. Oliver Teal, offered the following resolutions:—

Resolved, That whether the annexation of Salina takes place or not, the inhabitants of the village of Syracuse will hold a day of public rejoicing, thanksgiving and praise to Almighty God, as soon as that most debasing and degrading custom of furnishing wine at our social parties shall have taken its departure from our beautiful village, no more to spread its withering and deleterious influence throughout our community.

This resolution was seconded by Wm. B. Kirk, and not only passed unanimously, but by acclamation, which made Market Hall ring with approbation. The meeting was very large—numbering near 500.

GENEVA.—A spirited meeting at this place recently adopted, unanimously, the following resolution—a noble expression of public sentiment:—

Resolved, That the law, giving to the people of the several towns, the opportunity of expressing their sentiments upon the subject of granting or withholding license to sell strong drink or spirituous liquors, by their votes, is in strict accordance with republican principles, and if honestly and faithfully executed, will be productive of great and lasting benefit to the people. It is, therefore, in the opinion of this meeting, the solemn duty of those in authority who are entrusted with the execution of such law, faithfully to enforce the same; and we hereby pledge ourselves to support those who shall in good faith attempt to enforce the execution thereof.

DELAWARE.

We are pleased to see that the Governor of this State, watching the progress of public sentiment, has taken such notice in his Message, as becomes the subject of the License question. His Excellency says:—

“The proposition to refer to the people for their decision, the question of licensing the sale of intoxicating drinks, is a matter upon which you will be probably called upon to act. That the indiscriminate sale and improper use of strong drink are attended with evil consequences, no one will pretend to deny. It is upon this fact that our existing license laws are based. Many of the States of the Union have referred it to the people to decide whether the traffic shall be continued in their limits; and such a course, which leaves this whole subject to the people, by placing the decision of the question upon a day different from all other elections, separating temperance from politics, to be decided in true republican spirit, on its own merits, it is thought could give no just ground of complaint to any individual. I hope you will give the matter that consideration which its importance demands, and take such action upon it as in your wisdom you may think proper.”

Letter from Wilmington.

Jan. 20th, 1847.

To the Cor. Sec. A. T. U.:

DEAR SIR,—I take the liberty of asking you to forward me, if you have it, a copy of the Law in force in New York, referring the license question to the people. If you have the Vermont or any other Laws of the same character, will you forward them? And if you think of any improvements, which can be suggested, you will do me a favor by suggesting them in a letter to me. Our legal men are not with us on this question, and we can get nothing from them. The mass of the people are, however, right, and have made such a demonstration this fall at the ballot-box, as to induce the confident expectation that we shall get the Law in Delaware.

Yours sincerely, M. J. RHEES.

Home Intelligence.

LEEDS.

On Tuesday evening last, the fourth monthly meeting of this society was held in the Music Hall, under the presidency of the Mayor (Geo. Goodman, Esq.), who in opening the meeting, expressed his deep conviction of the moral and social advantages which would accrue to the society by the general adoption of the temperance principle. Although not a pledged teetotaler, he had ever been a man of temperate habits, from a conviction of the manifold evils springing from habitual intoxication. The experience which he had gained as a magistrate taught him that nearly all the crime which so disfigured their social system, owed its birth to habits of intemperance, which, like the letting in of water, might be of little moment in its commencement, but, when once begun, no man should say where its end would be. For these reasons, added to the fact that nearly all the domestic misery, and much of the poverty and destitution of this country were to be traced to drunkenness, he could not but heartily desire, as a well-wisher of his countrymen, to see the temperance cause become universal. The Mayor, whose observations were loudly applauded, was followed by Mr. Samuel Clayton, a working-man. The Rev. H. Gwyther, vicar of Yardley, near Birmingham, addressed the meeting at considerable length; he confidently looked forward to his worship's convictions of the advantages of temperance, so frankly made, in a short time leading him to sign the pledge as an inducement to others to follow the example of so worthy a gentleman. (Loud cheers followed this prognostication.) Other speakers followed, including Mr. F. Hopwood of York. The attendance was numerous.

DEMONSTRATION MEETING,

ALDERSGATE STREET CHAPEL.

On Friday evening the 5th inst., a meeting was convened at the above chapel, under the auspices of the Demonstration Committee, J. Duulop, Esq., presided.

Dr. Gourley, of Madeley; Mr. Beggs, and Mr. Thomas Hudson addressed the meeting.

HITCHIN WORKING MAN'S TEMPERANCE DEMONSTRATION.

On New Year's Day the friends of total abstinence held their annual tea meeting in the Town Hall. At 5 o'clock, upwards of 260 partook of tea and plum-cake. At half-past 6 o'clock the erection of the platform was completed; in a short time it was taken possession of by 20 working men. It was a lovely sight—cheerful, healthy, and happy-looking men they were. Mr. Frelove of Amptill, was called to the chair. It would be utterly impossible to convey anything like the feelings of the speakers, or the kindly spirit of the audience. Suffice it to say, they were highly pleased with each other. The meeting was addressed by 20 speakers of various trades; sawyers, gardeners, millers, smiths, shoe-makers, bricklayers, butchers, labourers, and tailors. Believing this meeting has done a great deal of good, I have sent this short report, hoping it may stimulate other societies to hold similar meetings.

I remain yours respectfully,
THOMAS WILSON.

WEST MALLING, KENT.

On Tuesday, the 26th ult., a public tea-meeting was held in the Assembly Rooms of the above place, after which a public meeting was held, Mr. Baldwin of Maidstone, in the chair, who after a few pleasing remarks introduced Mr. Beggs, of the National Temperance Society, who had been engaged for the occasion, and who, exposed the great delusion which working-men labour under—that of not being able to perform their labour without strong drink, and strongly urged upon those who had not adopted the principle, to do so. I have great pleasure in stating that thirty responded to the call by signing the pledge, determining for the future to study their own and not the publican's interest.

R. A.

TOTAL ABSTINENCE SOIREE OF REFORMED PRESBYTERIAN CHURCHES.

The Temperance Reformation is at length beginning to receive that place amongst the benevolent movements of the Christian church, which its importance demands. All honour to the members of the Reformed Presbyterian Churches in this city, who have taken the lead in the formation of separate congregational plans of effort. Their example should greatly stimulate and encourage those who belong to other denominations.

On the evening of Thursday-week, the members of the Total Abstinence Society, in connexion with the Reformed Presbyterian Churches in this city, and their friends, held a soiree in the Assembly Rooms, Ingram Street, which was well attended. The Rev. Dr. Bates presided. On the platform, beside the chairman, were the Rev. Mr. Anderson, Loanhead; Rev. Mr. Martin, Strathmiglo; Rev. Mr. Clark, East Campbell Street, and Messrs. John Brown, Thomas Bain, James Turner, Thrushgrove, James Ewing, Wm. Richmond, John Proudfoot, James Daly, and Neil M'Neil, Edinburgh. A blessing having been asked, the company partook of tea, coffee, &c., provided by Mr. Whyte, the purveyor, whose arrangements seemed to give entire satisfaction. The repast over, all united in singing a portion of the 103rd psalm. Dr. Bates delivered a short appropriate introductory address, in which he apologised for the unavoidable absence of the Rev. Mr. Gilmour, Greenock, and the Rev. Mr. Winning, Eaglesham, two devotedly attached friends of the cause of temperance. Eloquent addresses were afterwards delivered by the Rev. Messrs. Clark, Martin, Anderson, and M'Neil, and the following resolutions submitted to the meeting:—

"That the evils arising everywhere throughout the land, from abounding intemperance, after all that has been done to avert its progress are still immensely great, and unspeakably to be deplored; and that the habitual and customary use of intoxicating drinks by all classes, and especially by the great body of professing christians, appears to present an insuperable barrier to the suppression of this sin."

"That to waste the enormous sums in the purchase of these pernicious luxuries at the present crisis, and to consume the grain employed in the production of them, which is so urgently required by famishing millions, is at once inconsistent with humanity, and with the tenor of the gospel."

"That as the sin of drunkenness itself, and the vices that accompany and spring from it, constitute a mighty part of our national guilt, the calamity which now presses upon this land, contains a loud call to repentance, and that a strenuous and united effort be made to arrest and remove this stupendous evil."

The audience, having joined in singing a portion of another psalm, separated about eleven o'clock, highly gratified with the whole proceedings.—Glasgow Times.

TUNBRIDGE WELLS.

The friends of true sobriety in this town have recently received an impetus in their labours, the holding of their Christmas festival, on the 28th ultimo, in the Corn Exchange. Nearly 200 persons sat down to the repast. After the removal of the china, the juvenile portion of the audience were amused, by the exhibition of a magic lantern, engaged expressly for them; and at seven o'clock, Benjamin Rotch, Esq., barrister-at-law, took the chair, amid the general plaudits of the meeting. The learned gentleman delivered a brilliant and heart-stirring speech, of considerable length, in which he referred to his experience as a magistrate, &c. The Committee feel deeply indebted to this gentleman, not only for his timely assistance, as president of the meeting, but his visit, in other respects, was particularly opportune.

It may, however, give some idea of the ardent desire manifested here by the teetotalers, to have their hands upheld by persons of rank and piety, that the mention made by the chairman, of the accession of his brother-in-law (who is a devoted temperance man), to the living of Southborough, was received with loud acclamation. Mr. Thomas Whitaker was subsequently introduced, and ably finished what had been so ably begun, in a speech of great point and humour, which riveted the attention of about 400 auditors, who evinced, by their countenances, that they were content to "wait a little longer." Among the sources of encouragement, we find our funds have been increased; and we have received the signatures of five persons of one family to the abstinence pledge, who were never before at a temperance festival. These are cheering results.

January 21st, 1847.

HOMERSFIELD.

With feelings of pleasure I thus avail myself of the opportunity of informing you, that on Monday, February 1st, 1847, was the day appointed for commemorating the fifth anniversary of the Chrystal Brook Tent, held at St. Margarets, South Elm, in the county of Suffolk, when the members and friends of temperance met at half past seven in the morning, in the Primitive Methodist Chapel, All-saints, and held a prayer meeting, when many of the friends engaged in prayer most fervently for Divine assistance, in enabling them to carry out their united efforts, in forwarding that noble Society, which has universally been the means of doing so much good in our country. From thence they repaired to the house of Mr. R. Clipperfield, I. O. R., Rumburgh, where they partook of a breakfast prepared for them, and then proceeded again to the chapel in procession, singing temperance hymns as they passed through the village, which had a tendency of cheering and animating the hearts of those who heard them.

When they arrived at the chapel, Mr. W. Sapcoat, P. M. minister, I. O. R., ascended the pulpit, and after singing, Mr. Oldring, Wesleyan local preacher, engaged in prayer, and Mr. Sapcoat preached from Luke x. 31—33. The subject of the discourse was very appropriate to the meeting, and gave general satisfaction. After the service they proceeded to Mr. Morriss's, St. Margarets, where they partook of a dinner provided for them. After the entertainment they adopted a plan, and obtained twenty-six persons as local advocates, for the purpose of spreading the principles of teetotalism in the surrounding neighbourhood.

A public tea was provided at half-past six, after which a meeting was held, when twelve working men addressed the company, giving in their experience, showing the many advantages they had derived from becoming abstainers, and particularly endeavoured to urge upon the minds of the people then present, the necessity of persons habituating themselves to the use of intoxicating drinks, to abandon the system altogether, and at once to come forward and join their Society, assuring them at the same time, that by so doing, it would have a tendency ultimately to promote their present comfort, and be the means, in the hands of God, of leading them to Jesus Christ, the sinner's friend.

At the close of the meeting, some signatures were obtained.

I am very happy to state that the Tent is in a very flourishing condition, and I trust that no interruption will be permitted to enter, so as to disturb that peace and comfort which now prevail.

SAMUEL BROCK, Secretary.

CHATHAM.

SIR,—It affords me much pleasure in being able to report that the temperance reformation continues steadily progressing here: since the anniversary in December last, a working men's demonstration has been held, which was very numerously attended, and the many testimonies there given by men, who perform the most laborious work not only as well, but even better without the aid of intoxicating drinks than with them, appears to have made a deep impression on the labouring part of the community, and many little drop men appear to be ashamed of their old excuses, of not being able to perform their work without a pint of beer.

During the month of January, a series of meetings were held at Chatham, Brompton, New Brompton, and Upper Rainham, in all of which places, our highly-esteemed friend, Mr. Thomas Whitaker, delivered lectures to large and attentive audiences; upwards of thirty signatures were obtained, several from persons of influence, whilst many others have commenced trying the principle, and the truth of the importance and utility of total abstinence from all intoxicating drinks, has obtained a faster hold than ever on the conviction and judgment of the inhabitants of these towns, particularly of the religious portion of them. As a proof of this, I may mention a circumstance that occurred on the 1st ult., at the anniversary meeting of the City and Town Missionary Society, at Ebenezer Chapel: the gentleman who seconded the appointment of the committee, observed that he felt great pleasure in performing the duty which had devolved on him, more particularly as the gentlemen composing that committee, appeared to be sensible of the vast importance of teetotalism, by their having appointed teetotalers for their missionaries; this was as it should be, for who so well qualified for visiting the abodes of poverty, wretchedness and vice, as those men, who went with the glorious gospel of the grace of God, which is the great antidote for all the sin and misery with which mankind is afflicted; but as teetotalers, they could apply that gospel practically, by urging on the poor inebriate to abstain from those drinks which were ruining his prospects for time and eternity, destroying both body and soul; and what appeared to be of infinite importance, they themselves set the example by practising what they preached. Time has been, when a speaker thus venturing to introduce teetotalism into such a meeting would have been at once put down; but the remarks were received with approbation, and the deputation from London bore testimony to the value of teetotal missionaries, (although not a teetotaler himself,) stating that he knew one such, who had been the instrument, in the hands of God, of reclaiming and converting 200 drunkards.

The Rev. T. Rix observed, that the statistics which had been given that evening, shewed the spiritual destitution of the towns was truly appalling. Vice and infidelity were prevailing to an alarming extent, and it behoved the churches and the ministers thereof to search into the causes. He believed that intemperance would be found the great master evil, bringing almost every other in its train. In fact, Sir, we had an excellent teetotal meeting; and we hope soon, with the aid of several teetotal ministers, to bring this subject more directly under the notice of the various churches throughout the town.

ROBERT DRAKE, Secretary.

THE ENGLISH CLERGY.

Rev. George Webber, formerly of this city, who attended, as a delegate, the World's Convention, thus closes a letter, which appeared in the columns of the Herald and Journal.

"It is the custom of the country, among all denominations, for the minister, on leaving the pulpit, to retire to the vestry and take a glass of wine. This hospitality was tendered to me on the above occasion, and recommended with considerable earnestness, as a 'necessary refreshment after the fatigue of preaching.' I, however, of course, declined, and took a glass of water in its stead. The practice of wine and porter drinking is nearly as common in England now, as was the practice of drinking wine, rum, and brandy in this country, twenty-five years ago; the clergy, as well as others, using them, not only on the Sabbath, but on all other days, regarding them as among those 'creatures of God which are not to be refused.' As regards this whole matter, Old England is at least twenty years behind New England. The same arguments are urged to sustain the practice, and the same objections used against the temperance reform. In judging, however, of the moral and religious character of the churches and people in regard to the above practice, we must not be too severe, but should apply the same rules, and exercise the same charity, that we do in judging of ourselves at the time we did the same things.

Though the temperance reform has made little progress among the people generally, yet it has many warm friends and supporters, and is on the increase. The people seem willing to be instructed, but there is wanting in the English character that zeal and energy which is so necessary to carry forward such a work with any considerable success. It has been observed that 'A Yankee would set the world on fire, while an Englishman would be fighting his match;' a remark not without import. True, the English like an eloquent speech as well as anybody, and will respond with good hearty cheers, sufficient both in kind and quantity, but when this is done, the matter will probably rest till another speech brings out another cheering, when, unless more than usually successful, it will again go to rest to await the effect of another speech. There is needed, at the present time, one hundred good temperance lecturers, of blemished character, to travel and lecture in every part of the kingdom. I think they would be well received, and I doubt not would do immense good, not to England only, but to our own country also. So intimate are the relations between the two countries and so great the facilities of intercourse, and especially so prone are we to adopt the customs and practices of England, that there is little ground of hope for the full triumph of the cause here, until it triumphs there also. While wine drinking is practised in high life in England, it will be also in this country; and while practised in high life, it will be also in low life. I propose then, that we send over one hundred discreet, able, zealous temperance missionaries, without delay.

TO WORKING MEN AND WOMEN.

The following address has been published in the form of a hand-bill, and circulated in Bridgwater, by the Temperance Society.

"Times are hard and likely to be harder; nothing should be wasted. Don't spend even a penny in drink; you can make a much better use of your money, and your own families want all you can earn.

"For a quart of beer you pay 5d.; the barley to make this did not cost 1½d., and there is not so much nourishment in the 5d. quart of beer as there is in a penny loaf. Go to the bakers, the butchers, or the grocers, where you can get something to make you comfortable at home, but don't go to the public-house, don't drink at all, never take the first glass and then you will not want the second. There are many persons in this town who have been teetotalers, 2, 5, and 10 years; there are thousands in England, and millions in the world. All can be teetotalers if they wish it and will it. Men and women, all can be teetotalers; and if you were, there would not be so much poverty and misery, trade would be better, your children could be sent to school, and the path of sobriety might lead on to virtue and religion. All can be teetotalers, and let the women set the example; they and their families will be the better off for it.

"But now more than ever you should be careful: the potato crop has failed; there is a scarcity of provisions, and good use should be made of all it has pleased God to give us. It is shameful and wrong to destroy good grain by malting and distilling. The barley used up in this way would make, if prepared, wholesome food as puddings or broth, for millions of persons; but now it is all wasted, and made into a liquor which makes men drunk, and causes more misery than any other thing on the face of the earth. O! it is a sin thus to misuse the good creatures of God, and mockery to pray to him for plenty whilst we do so.

"Think of these things; remember that every pint of beer you take makes food dearer; and don't grumble about hard times whilst you spend your money at the public-house.

"Sixpence a day spent in drink for a year would buy 312 quatern loves at 7d. a quatern, or saved it would amount to £9. 2s. 6d. and would buy

	£.	s.	d.
A man's fustian coat	0	16	0
Good pair trousers	0	9	0
Waistcoat 6s., hat 5s.	0	11	0
Strong pair boots	0	10	0
Man's Smock	0	6	0
Woman's clothes	1	0	0
Children's clothes	1	0	0
Pair blankets	0	12	0
Pair sheets	0	4	0
Table and chairs	1	0	0
Bedstead, &c.	1	10	0
For children's schooling	0	14	0
Sundries	0	10	6

£9 2 6

"N.B. Barley prepared for food is called Scotch Barley."

Theodore Hook was surprised one evening in his arm-chair two or three hours after dinner, with very unequivocal signs of what had been his principal companion, when he thus apologized—"When one is alone the bottle does come round so often."

DRUNKENNESS IN THE ANGLO-INDIAN ARMY.

It is not generally known, that intemperance in the soldier is the cause of additional expense to the public. At an average, 1800 European soldiers die annually in India; and each man, by the time he reaches that country, costs Government a sum of £40, if not more. Now, admitting that 800 out of this number are killed by drink, estimating the loss at £30 per man—allowing £10 for intermediate service—we have a sum of £240,000; which, I am certain, is far under the actual amount, as regards the Anglo-Indian army alone. Very probably the sum of £40,000 would not cover the loss sustained in this way in the entire army of Great Britain. But the death of so many men, and the consequent public expense, are not the only evils resulting from intemperance. It is the cause of very many men committing crimes, who would otherwise have had a clear defaulters' sheet during their service. Five-sevenths of the courts-martial in India are assembled to try delinquents for habitual drunkenness, drunkenness on duty, or crimes committed while under the influence of liquor.—Camp and Barrack-Room, or the British Army as it is.

A FEW SOCIAL FACTS.—A course of lectures by the Rev. P. P. Carpenter, has just been concluded at the Unitarian chapel, in Warrington. In the closing address, some interesting facts were brought forward. It was stated that in Warrington there are 12 places of worship, and as many schools open every Sunday, for religious instruction; and 83 public houses and 14 beer-shops also open on the same day, for the purposes of intoxication; and that three-fourths of the adult population attend no social worship at all. There are 47 private and 8 public schools, in which daily instruction is given to 2885 scholars. About as many children are taught on the Sunday; and all that is raised by the inhabitants of Warrington annually, to educate the poor, is 333l.; while there are nearly 1000 children growing up in ignorance, and nearly two-thirds of the people married are unable to write their own names! The whole town raises 3,200l. per annum for all its religious, benevolent, and literary institutions, including schools, missions, bible and tract societies, dispensary, mechanics' institution, library, temperance and peace societies, and ladies' charity; and spends annually 68,000l. in intoxicating drinks. Yet taxation is complained of, although all the rates in the town do not amount to 97,000l. per annum. It was also stated that there were, at least, 1,500 drunkards in the town; that in one street alone, there were more than 40 drunken women, and yet only 101 persons were taken up for disorderly conduct and drunkenness, and of these 89 were discharged. 1460l. is spent in the detection, punishment, and attempted prevention of crime, and only 330l. in education!—Daily News, February 15th, 1847.

Literary Notices.

Original Music composed for the British League of Juvenile Abstainers.—Houlston and Stoneman, London; Lofts, Edinburgh.

This tract contains eight songs set to music, and is very neatly got up. We are no judge of the music, which professes to be original; but the poetry, though by no means of a high order, some of it very far from a respectable mediocrity, is full of good sentiment and so far valuable. The effort deserves encouragement. We cannot but think better poetry might be obtained—and even children might have their tastes improved by good composition.

The Scriptural Claims of Teetotalism addressed to British Christians. By NEWMAN HALL, B. A. Suow, London.

This work has been published at the request of the Hull Teetotalers—being the substance of two sermons preached in that town. It is dispassionately but earnestly written, and is worthy of the attention of every Christian. The profits are to be devoted to the Funds of the Hull Temperance Mission. This is another consideration, added to its own intrinsic merits, to invite a large sale.

The Truth Tester, Temperance Advocate, and Isle of Man's Healthian Journal, Feb. 1847.

The last six numbers of this periodical have reached us. They contain many excellent articles on Total Abstinence, Diet, Education, Sanitary Improvements, &c. With some of its views on the subject of diet we are not quite prepared to go, but have no reluctance in expressing our unqualified approbation of the work as a whole. It is ably conducted and calculated to be of great service to the cause of Temperance, using that word in its most comprehensive sense.

Idolatry of Britain. London: W. BRITAIN, Paternoster Row.

This is one of the earliest and best works published on the temperance subject in this country; and Mr. Cassell has done great service by giving us an edition so amazingly cheap, and so exceedingly neat. A reprint of Nott's Lectures, which have obtained so extensive a circulation in America, in the same style and equally cheap, is conferring an invaluable good upon the temperance cause.

Irish Improvidence, encouraged by English bounty, &c., &c. By an ex-member of the British Parliament.

This tract is calmly and lucidly written. The various topics of Irish distress and its remedies to which the writer introduces us, are not within our province, but they are worthy of most studious attention. Our readers will be gratified to find, that whilst many who are talking largely about the wrongs of Ireland and proposing great cures, but studiously avoiding one of the radical evils lying at the very root of her social and domestic miseries, the conversion of grain into whiskey, this writer has taken up that subject—we quote his words:—

“The second step should be to prohibit the use of grain or other food for distillation, and the manufacture of ardent spirits therefrom. Next to the absurdity of Cork and Limerick exporting cargoes of Irish grain for sale, and at the same time receiving cargoes of American grain to be given away at the cost of the English people, may be ranked the folly—if it may not more properly be called by some worse name—of seeing hundreds dying daily for want of food, and at the same time permitting the conversion of as much grain as would feed the whole of those dying of starvation, and many more, into a fiery liquid, which it is well-known, even to the distillers themselves, never saved a single life or improved a single character, never prevented a single crime or elevated the character of a single family by its use; but, on the contrary, has caused more premature deaths, created more demoralization, engendered more crime, and produced more misery than any single article ever manufactured by man since the creation of the world.

“To allow, therefore, the conversion of that very food, for the want of which thousands are actually perishing, into such a destroying liquid as this, and that in the very country in which these starving people are said to be dying faster than inquests can be held upon their bodies, or graves excavated to receive them—does appear to me such a violation of all our moral duties, as to be palpable even to the humblest understanding. But when to this is added, the consideration that Irish distillers are growing rich by this conversion of wholesome food to destroying poison, and that the English public are called upon to supply the deficiency of food occasioned by the abstraction of several millions of quarters of grain from the common stock of Ireland, already declared to be so scanty—the injustice of permitting such a state of things to continue a moment longer, cries aloud for its immediate suppression.”

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

G. HALLIDAY.—We cannot find room for the circular sent us, and regard its publication as exceedingly ill-timed, both on account of the food question, which is of paramount importance, and the medical certificate which is now in successful progress. We have no space to spare in taking up debateable points, particularly when so many plain and practical questions invite our attention.

H. M.—The case to which he calls our attention is one of many that the history of literary men could furnish. A publication of its mournful particulars could only wound the feelings of surviving friends, without rendering them any assistance.

Our other correspondents must bear with us; we do our best to accommodate all, but have only a limited space.

S. R. BRAUNTON.—A communication on this subject must be corroborated by real name and address.

Advertisements.

TEMPERANCE

PROVIDENT INSTITUTION,
39, MOORGATE STREET, LONDON.

Enrolled under Act of Parliament, 31st December, 1840.

DIRECTORS.

R. D. Alexander, Esq.	C. H. Lovell, Esq., M.D.
Rev. W. R. Baker.	J. T. Mitchell, Esq.
Richard Barrett, Esq.	J. Talbot Tyler, Esq.
Samuel Bowly, Esq.	Richard Walkden, Esq.
Robert Charleton, Esq.	Robert Warner, Esq.
H. F. Cotterell, Esq.	John Wason, Esq.
John Eliot, Esq.	Edward Webb, Esq.

SECRETARY.

Theodore Compton, Esq.

BANKERS.

Messrs. Barclay, Bevan & Co.

THE SIXTH ANNUAL REPORT may now be had gratis on application.

This is the ONLY OFFICE in which Teetotalers can assure without having to pay for the losses occasioned by MODERATE drinking, as well as by intemperance.

The DEATHS in six years have been LESS THAN HALF the number in other offices.

ALL THE PROFITS belong to the Members. There are no other Shareholders to absorb the surplus funds.

ANY SUMS may be assured, from £10 upwards, and any sums paid in from time to time, at the Member's convenience, and a proportionate Assurance will be granted.

NOMINEES may be appointed to receive the benefits. FREE OF DUTY, and all taxes and expenses, and without the trouble, delay, and cost of proving a will.

TEETOTALERS are strongly recommended to join at once, before the first bonus is apportioned.

Every particular, with the rules, scales of payment, &c., may be had by writing to the Secretary, and of all the local agents.

	PAGES
17. Farmer Woodman's Speech, 41 thousand	4
18. The Beer Barrel Examined, 28 thousand	8
19. Teetotal Recipes, 38 thousand	4
20. Speech of J. J. Gurney, 30 thousand	4
21. Pity the Poor Drunkard, 49 thousand	2
22. The Fool's Pence, 25 thousand	8
23. Why am I a Teetotaler? 26 thousand	2
24. Dost thou smoke, Bill? 34 thousand	4
25. William the Laudanum Drinker, 30 thousand	4
26. The Ox Discourse	4
27. Letter to the Clergy, by a Brother Clergyman, 21 thousand	20
28. Common Sense, by a member of the University of Cambridge, 20 thousand	2
29. Ralph the Soldier	4
30. Testimony of Eminent Physicians, 30 thousand	4
31. The Working Man, 35 thousand	20
32. Is I not happy? by Hugh Stowell, 30 thousand	4
33. David the Shoemaker, 49 thousand	4
34. The Drunken Couple, 48 thousand	2
35. Confessions of a drunkard, 29 thousand	2
36. Master Tailor, 20 thousand	4
37. The Fatal Gift, 36 thousand	2
38. Poor Sandy	4
39. Use & abuse, by Archdeacon Jeffreys, 34 thousand	2
40. The Schoolmaster	4
41. Water is Best, by J. J. Gurney, 37 thousand	8
42. Cobbett's Advice	4
43. Take a Public House	4
44. A Sailor's Yarn	4
45. Moderate Drinking Calmly Considered	12
46. The Pledge	4
47. John Jarvis, or the Pledge Signed	12
48. The Fifteen Friends	4
49. Sunday School Teachers, 22 thousand	12
50. Sunday School Children, 40 thousand	12
51. Money better than Beer, 37 thousand	4
52. Little Mary; or a Daughter's Love	8
53. Philosophy of the Temperance Movement, by R. T. Trall, M.D.	20
54. Love to Man, or an Appeal to the Pious	20
55. The Young Woman's Tract	12
56. The Young Man's Tract	16
57. Dr. Campbell's Testimony, 18 thousand	8
58. Why Sign the Pledge? 40 thousand	2
59. The Poor Man's House Repaired	4
60. The Mother's Tract	8
61. The High Price of Food	4
62. Ladies' Tract Societies	8
63. The Praise of Water, 25 thousand	2
64. Important Calculation, 30 thousand	2
65. The Farm Servant, 25 thousand	2
66. Teetotalism Declining, 15 thousand	8
67. The Reformed Drunkard, and the best means of Reforming the Drunkard, 20 thousand	8
68. The Recruit of the British Legion	8
69. No. 1 of Temperance Anecdotes	12
70. No. 2 ditto	12
71. No. 3 ditto	12
72. No. 4 ditto	12
73. Luke Husler, or "I did not like to say No."	8
74. The Drunkard's Wife	8
75. The Unexplored Island	4
76. Ancient Wines; by R. D. Alexander	8
77. Influence of Example, 15 thousand	2

ASSORTED PACKETS.

No. 1, containing Tracts No. 1 to 31 inclusive.
 " 2, " " " 32 to 55 "
 " 3, " " " 56 and upwards.
Each Sixpence.

Twenty-four Sixpenny Packets, of either Juvenile Temperance Books or Tracts, will be delivered in London for Half-a-guinea, or 50 Packets for a Guinea, being sent by a Post-office Order to Richard Dykes Alexander, Ipswich.

SAMPLES WILL BE FORWARDED POSTAGE PAID, in return FOR 40 PENNY STAMPS, SENT TO THE EDITOR OF THE TEMPERANCE TRACTS, IPSWICH.

London: Simpkin and Marshall.

LONDON TEMPERANCE TRACTS,

UNDER THE SANCTION OF THE

National Temperance Society.

The above Tracts comprise a variety of 150 different sorts, and embrace every point of the principle of Total Abstinence. Upwards of have already been circulated. 2 pp. 8d.; 4 pp. 1s. 4d.; 8 pp. 2s. 8d. per 100., or in packets, assorted, 6d. each.

THREE MILLION

For the convenience of LOAN CIRCULATION, they are assorted into 60 sets, containing 16 pp. in each, and stitched into a strong wrapper, with a suitable address upon each, price 8s. per 100. Liberal allowance for large quantities. Lists may be obtained of the Publishers gratis.

HOULSTON & STONEMAN, 65, Paternoster Row.

Just Published.

THE WORLD'S

TEMPERANCE CONVENTION.

THE REPORT OF THE

PROCEEDINGS OF THE CONVENTION,

WITH AN INTRODUCTION,

By ELIHU BURRITT.

And a selection of the most valuable papers sent into the Business Committee.

The Committee, in order to invite a large sale, have decided upon publishing the volume at cost price.

Sewed in wrapper, 1s. Bound in cloth, 1s. 6d.

Considerable allowance will be made to Individuals and Societies wishing to distribute gratuitously.

C. GILPIN, Bishopsgate Street Without; HOULSTON AND STONEMAN, Paternoster Row.

WANTED,

A SERVANT OF ALL WORK, a Teetotaler, where another Servant is kept. She must be able to Bake, Cook, Wash, and Iron. One from the country would be preferred.

Apply at Mrs. MEREDITH'S, 3, Durham Place, Lambeth Road.

* * The NATIONAL TEMPERANCE CHRONICLE and TEMPERANCE RECORDER is published on the first day of each month, at HOULSTON & STONEMAN, the Depot of the National Temperance Society, 65, Paternoster-row, and will be sent post-free for one year on receipt of 2s. 6d. postage labels. Annual Subscriptions received at the Society's office, 11, Tokenhouse Yard, London, and subscriptions and donations for the general purposes of the Society, by the Treasurer, G. W. ALEXANDER, 40, Lombard Street; by any Member of the Committee, and at the office as above.

London: Printed by RICHARD BARRETT of 3, Regent-terrace City-road, in the Parish of St. Luke, in the County of Middlesex, Printer; at his Printing Office, No. 13, Mark-lane, in the Parish of Alhallow's Staining, in the City of London; and published by JOHN STONEMAN, of 24, Brooksbury Street, in the Parish of Islington, in the County of Middlesex, at HOULSTON and STONEMAN'S, No. 65, Paternoster-row, in the Parish of St. Michael-le-Querne, in the City of London. Publishers.—Monday, March 1st, 1847.

THE NATIONAL TEMPERANCE CHRONICLE AND TEMPERANCE RECORDER.

It is good neither to eat flesh, nor to drink wine, nor anything whereby thy brother stumbleth, or is offended, or is made weak.—ROM. XIV. 21

No. 16, JOINT SERIES.]

APRIL, 1847.

[PRICE 1d., STAMPED 2d.]

CONTENTS.

	PAGE		PAGE
The Medical Question.....	49	Intemperance in Glasgow—Temperance Cause—The Fast
The Claims of Temperance on the Educated	50	—Stimulation and Nutrition—Temperance Provident
Canteens in Barracks—"There's a Good Time Coming" ..	51	Institution—A Drunkard's Wife—This is the Way the
Temperance Principle at Sea—The Wreck of a Man.....	52	Money Goes—Poetry, King Gin—Letter to the Editor—
HOME INTELLIGENCE—		Grumblers	55-59
Special Meeting in the Hall of Commerce—Houghton,		EDITORIAL REMARKS—
Hunts—Glasgow Commercial Abstinence Society—		Subscriptions—The National Temperance Society ..	60
Bolton—St. Marylebone—Leighton Buzzard—		Letter from J. Dunlop, Esq.—Medical Testimony	61
Sheerness	53-55	List of Signatures to the Medical Testimony	62-69
FOREIGN INTELLIGENCE—		To Correspondents—Advertisements	70-72
Letter from Coimbatore, East Indies	53

THE MEDICAL QUESTION.

There are various matters both of inquiry and of operation in the Temperance Movement which are merely of a local or temporary nature. The very important department of Anti-Usage must be admitted to be limited in its extent to the British islands, as the connexion of liquor with business and courtesy is very trivial in other countries. But the Medical question is one which is confined to no latitude or longitude, it is universal in its application, and spreads over the world in its relations.

This phrase does not comprehend merely the erudite and abstracted opinion which learned physicians and physiologists excoigitate in reference to alcohol; but, moreover, the wide-reaching and effective judgment which the crowded multitudes of our land form of it. As far as the history of this matter goes, some seventy or eighty years ago, our medical men became over-weeningly attached to alcohol as a medium for the administration of drugs; and they proceeded from one step of favour to another, till the prescription of alcoholic liquors of various kinds became universal in numerous complaints; and worse than that, till these poisons became the authorized daily diet of our people. It was the support and countenance of the medical world which largely tended to produce the destructive effects which we deplore, and are now endeavouring to cure; and it must be, in part at least, in the salutary revulsion of sentiment now happily arising among the guardians of the public health, that we must look for a remedy.

There are few classes who have so much influence with English men and women as the doctors, even in general matters, but their sway in the department of diet is prodigious. Of how much importance, therefore, would a universal movement be among Teetotalers, that should help to forward the incipient change of opinion among the faculty, as to alcohol, which has of late begun to cheer the friends of Temperance in their difficult, resisted, and uphill journey.

There are various late events which may have helped to open the eyes of Physiologists to the detrimental effects of even the sparing use of alcohol. The experience of our seamen in their late expeditions to the North and South Poles. The knowledge gained from the practice of the American Whale Fishers, and mercantile navy in general. The consideration of the methods of training of those engaged for pugilistic combats. But above all, the enormous amount of facts observable in the advance of Teetotalism in this and other countries—have all put the Medical Faculty in possession of a mass of materials to enable them to form a sounder judgment than their predecessors upon this subject. We rejoice to say that in the present number of the Chronicle, a highly important document will be exhibited on this topic. We refer to the Medical testimonies that have been obtained by Mr. Dunlop. We need not invite the attention of our readers to the attractive subject. We know that many of our best friends are anxiously waiting till this paper shall be exhibited. But while congratulating them on the success that has attended this effort, we take leave to say, that much yet remains to be done. The subscription papers are still open in all parts of the United Kingdom, nor is it the intention that they shall be soon shut. The movement is only just begun. It must not stop until, under Providence, a general accession has been obtained to the terms of the Temperance testimony, and till a vast change has thereby been caused upon the opinion and practice of every man and woman in England, who still uses daily alcoholic poison.

The movement undoubtedly, in its present stage, does not directly affect the question, whether, alcohol may be given as stimulative medicine. But it is evident that a total alteration of practice upon this point, will inevitably ensue from the prosecution of this auspicious enterprise. We cannot enlarge now upon this topic, but shall conclude with a single observation.

Truly skilful and conscientious physicians in prescribing medicine, are anxious to define carefully both the quality and strength of the drug they mean to dispense: the number of grains or drops are solicitously counted, the power of the ingredients are cautiously ascertained. But in heedlessly ordering alcoholic diet, it is evident, that often no attention is paid to the difference of strength, which in wine, may range from 10 to 25 per cent of alcohol: and as to quantity, this is not seldom left to the taste and inclination of the ill-treated patient.

THE CLAIMS OF TEMPERANCE ON THE EDUCATED.

Educated mind cannot exist without wielding great influence. The power to move, or restrain—to excite the most intense joy, or cause the keenest anguish—to render the life-journey of its possessor, and those around him, so peaceful and happy, that it shall seem as if ever luminous with the sunlight of an angel's smile, or on the other hand, to draw over it the gloom of worse than Stygian darkness—this power, and more than this, all lie within the possible compass of educated mind.

But, it may be said that this remark applies to the influence of all mind. Doubtless it does; for it is not in reference to the kind, but the degree of influence that we would award the superiority to the educated mind. Education is to the untrained mind, what the mechanical powers are to man's physical strength. These enable him to act with an almost incalculable degree of power when his unaided strength would be utterly inadequate. In some instances, too, they may tend towards giving a new direction, as well as an increase of power to physical strength. So, too, with mental training. A mind that could scarcely comprehend the simplest analogies, may be so trained as clearly to understand the most complex phenomena of science, or employ itself with the speculative problems of man's condition and destiny in the unending cycles of eternity.

Now, we would ask, is all this increase of power given to educated mind without anything like a commensurate responsibility? Our state is taxed for every educated mind it contains: and not merely for the schooling and sustentation of that mind while in the process of training, but of many other minds whom disease has paralyzed, or who have been cut off by the hand of death, or bound in the fetters of hopeless insanity. The expense of all who fail, is to be added to the account of those who are successful, just as the merchant arrives at his real gains only by subtracting all his losses from his profits.

No one can fail to see, from this illustration, how strong are the claims which the state has on every educated mind. We may say that it has provided the means of education for every such mind. And why has she done so? Was it not because she hoped to advance the best interests of humanity? And what has the state a right to expect from minds thus favoured? It is not that those she has thus elevated to their high places, will be circumspect themselves, and true to the great trust reposed in them? And what return has she received? Although many of her sons have demonstrated again and again, that intemperance is a deadly curse—that the moderate use, even, of intoxicating liquors is pernicious, and although examples from all classes of the community have been fearfully multiplied, making "assurance doubly sure," that "wine is a mocker, and strong drink raging," yet, how many educated minds still withhold their influence from this great work? Why is it so? Do they want still more evidence to convince them of the evils of intemperance? Ask any well educated and unprejudiced man if such is the fact, and he will feel himself insulted by the question. And well he may. You might as well ask him if the sun has any thing to do with light. But we state no new fact, when we assert that educated mind has done but little, compared with what was its duty, in this cause.

Look at the reluctance with which many of our educated men consented to abandon the tempting cup. It was their duty to have been the first in this cause. To them more clearly than to the rest of the world is it given to understand the vast superiority of reason over mere animal appetite and passions. And yet, how many minds of the highest order have refused to follow the guidance of reason and conscience, and been shipwrecked on the quicksands of unbridled appetite: Look at Byron, "with his large capacious soul." The richest stores of learning were spread out before him, and all nature seemed ready to serve her gifted son. Was not the world right in expecting much from one so richly endowed, and did he not owe to his race the influence, at least, of a spotless example? But the plains of Missolonghi need not again repeat their tale—it is known to all. Nor need we draw out from our own literary annals, the dark history of "Laeon's" author. Let the cloud that now conceals it remain unbroken. Let Scotia's bard, too, the immortal Burns, rest in his grave, and the ill-fated Savage remain undisturbed.

All these, and thousands of others—the gifted—the cultivated, and the refined, have gone down to the drunkard's grave. They were honoured by the world, and the world expected much at their hands, but they basely bartered their glorious privileges for a drunkard's degradation. Indeed, we sometimes almost fear, that in the cause of temperance, the aphorism of the Roman poet remains true. But we hope not. We trust that there is still left to educated mind that recuperative power which shall yet bring all its energies into the service of suffering humanity. We hope that by precept, but much more, by example, it will perform its appropriate part in admonishing the wavering—in succouring the weak, and in raising up the fallen.—Canada Temperance Advocate.

CANTEENS IN BARRACKS.

A most important motion was made in the House of Commons, by Colonel Lindsay, on March 6th;—"That an humble address be presented to her Majesty, praying that she will be graciously pleased to direct inquiry to be made into the effect that the present canteen system has upon the army; and whether it would not be advantageous to discipline and to the moral improvement of her Majesty's troops, to prevent the sale of spirituous liquors in canteens within the precincts or proximity of barracks." In the course of his speech, he observed, "that young recruits, with money in their pockets, were early seduced by the older soldiers, whose funds were long ago exhausted, into the canteen, and that which at first was but a chance visit became a habit. It was his (Colonel Lindsay's) object to forbid the sale of spirits in these places, and thus to remove the temptation. He could point to instances in which men under the influence of spirits had knocked down their superiors, and that in circumstances which could not have occurred had beer only been sold in the canteens, and had it been necessary to go out of the barracks to procure spirits. He had known the case of a man who, disgusted with the discipline to which he was subjected, went to the canteen, got drunk, and afterwards struck the non-commissioned officer by whom he was drilled, for which, of course, he was sent to prison: this occurred in Canada, not in England. It might be said, that the same things occurred among the operatives of this country: but it should be recollected that if a civilian did knock down a policeman when drunk, it involved no more than punishment by fine; but it was different in the army, and the house ought to recollect the frightful consequences that were entailed on the soldier when he was guilty of drunkenness and insubordination. It appeared from a return which he had in his hand, that the principle crimes committed in the army were drunkenness and insubordination, and that the latter seldom happened without being caused by the former. It appeared, also, that the greatest number of men guilty of insubordination were placed in barracks; and that the acts of insubordination chiefly took place on parade, or at the evening roll-call; and what was a very extraordinary thing was, that the regiments which came from the East or West Indies, or from the Cape of Good Hope and other places, were more notorious for drunkenness and more violent than those at home, and that among them the number of capital punishments was greater than in other regiments. It was notorious that in the West Indies the soldiers had been known to add cayenne pepper to the spirits which they drank, because they were not strong enough. (Hear, hear.) He quoted Sir George Arthur. That officer said,—"We encourage a soldier to drink a small quantity of spirits, and we punish him for drinking a large quantity, though we know that a small quantity disarms him of caution as to the danger, and that the daily habit creates a physical necessity which the utmost fortitude cannot successfully struggle against. (Hear, hear.) A medical officer of great experience and authority, Dr. Ferguson, late Inspector-General of Military Hospitals, who had served both at home and abroad, in a work published by him some years ago, said—"A ration of spirits, as an article of daily diet, ever engenders a craving for more, so imperious and irresistible, there is no crime the soldier would not commit, no abomination he would not practise, for its gratification. Punishment, when put in competion, has then no terrors, and the fear of death is set at nought." Dr. Ferguson went on:—"The army canteens have ever been institutions of drunkenness; and it is difficult to believe how an abuse so monstrous, and a nuisance so palpable, could have been tolerated so long and to such an extent." Sir H. Goulburn stated, that the whole subject was under the consideration of government.

"THERE'S A GOOD TIME COMING."

(From the Fountain.)

Yes,—so the song says, and so the Bible says, and so every body expects. This is what we are all looking for, and what the friends of humanity are labouring to bring about—some one way, and some another, but all striving for the same great object. The good time is coming! We may be obliged to "let patience have its perfect work," but it will come, and for it we are willing to "wait a little longer."

The "good time coming," will be the reign of love. Man shall love his brother man, and none for "sordid gold" be found to injure God's own image—to mar the workmanship of God.

In the "good time coming," man's own right-hand or foot shall not offend, and none for present pleasure put forever from them life and happiness everlasting.

In the "good time coming," light shall fill the earth, and knowledge be increased. None shall sin or suffer by reason of ignorance—ignorance either of moral obligation, or physical laws.

"Length of days" and "long life" shall not be a weariness, in the "good time coming." The freshness of youth shall the old man possess, and the flight of time be marked by the blessings which it leaves behind. The store of happiness shall be always on the increase.

In the "good time coming," Mammon, the great idol in the temple of man's heart, shall not find worshippers, willing to imbrue their hands in the blood of their fellow-men, or to offer up living sacrifices, to gain its promised blessings.

Falsely called Pleasure, whose giddy votaries now spend their fleeting lives, that should be given to labour for the perishing, in a continued round of folly, rioting and drunkenness,—shall find no devotees in the "good time coming." No time will then be found to waste in revelry.

Ambition shall not lead forth to devastating war and bloodshed, or to the sacrifice of others' rights, legions of restless spirits or aspiring demagogues in the "good time coming."

But ere this "good time" comes, a change in the reigning principle of man must be effected. SELFISHNESS must be hurled from its throne, and pure BENEVOLENCE instated in its place. Those then who would hasten this glorious time, must "DENY THEMSELVES." No matter how great the enjoyment derived from a particular indulgence, if it is contrary to the welfare of any human being, we must give it up! We must "TAKE UP OUR CROSS." It may be a "cross," a hardship to us, to speak to friends and neighbours in the language of reproof—it may raise their enmity against us,—but when duty calls us to it, we must not flinch! We must "FOLLOW CHRIST," in his visits of love and mercy to the perishing. He went about doing good, and we must do it too!

Brethren! the work is before us, and it must be done, if we would ever see "the good time coming."

TEMPERANCE PRINCIPLE AT SEA.

In the last number of the Chronicle appeared a very excellent article from the Inquirer on this subject. We give this month the letter which we promised—and recommend it to the serious perusal of those who have an influence over seamen. The concluding paragraph is especially worthy of attention. It suggests the principle upon which all reforms must be based to be efficacious. Let the degraded masses of our country be taught to feel that a disinterested desire to do them good is the motive of the moral reformer, and half the work is accomplished.—

TO THE EDITOR OF THE INQUIRER.

SIR,—I read with much pleasure, in the INQUIRER of the 23rd January, some remarks upon a paragraph that has been going the round of the papers, attributing to Temperance, the scurvy, and other disasters which befel the barque Columbus, on her voyage; and, at the same time, that I wish to express my accordance with the views of the writer of those remarks, in his praiseworthy endeavour to expose a fallacy so likely to be injurious to the advance of Temperance among seamen, I cannot refrain from offering a few observations, drawn from personal experience, on the subject, which, I trust, may tend to throw some light upon, and place in its real position, the principle of Temperance at sea, about which, not much is at present really understood.

Some years ago, the practice of serving out grog to sailors at sea, was, it is well known, general on board vessels of every description; in fact, until very lately, one that did not do so was esteemed a rarity. However, the movement, once begun, it did not long remain confined to single instances, but very soon the cause was espoused, more particularly in America, by a vast body of ship-owners, who, standing forth to the world as the champions of Temperance, agreed, with wonderful unanimity, and much self-laudation, to erase spirits instantaneously and totally from the list of stores with which it was necessary to supply their vessels. Ungrateful as the plain truth may appear to those who advocated by their public acts, a principle utterly disregarded in private conduct, it is nevertheless, unfortunately, of too frequent occurrence for us to entertain a doubt of the fact, that when the support of a principle of social reform is also a pecuniary saving, it is adopted with greater eagerness, and advocated with far more zeal, than when, on the contrary, it looks to an outlay of those very means for its existence and progress, which, on the other hand, it helped to increase.

With the exception of some few bright examples, shining out from the mercenary mass by which they are surrounded and partially obscured, like gleams of sun-light bursting through dark clouds, this has been the way in which the Temperance at sea principle has been acted upon. Now, I am not one of those who cavil at good, because the purest and noblest motives have not been instrumental in bringing it about, if the good be really and truly a good to the parties most interested, and not merely a mis-named pretext to swell the triumph of a party; but with what kind of feelings, I ask, can the sailor be expected to view this deprivation of what, besides his tobacco, is the only luxury, that can be so called, within his reach, when he sees and feels with bitterness the motive that prompted it, and finds only in rare instances, "few and far between," some substitute offered to him? What his feelings are, and their reaction, when released from the discipline and confinement of ship-board, the dissipation and wretchedness of many hundreds show too plainly, and justify a comment on the example set by the private conduct of those advocating Temperance in the vessels they employ.

I do not think spirits to be any more necessary on board ship, than ashore; but I do think that some regard should be paid—when advocating a principle of reform that deprives the sailor of what he has been taught to consider as one of, I may say the greatest of, his comforts—to the justice, to the necessity, of supplying him, in the place of the spirits which he has been used to receive in cold and wet weather, or upon emergencies, with chocolate, or coffee, or even tea. There are not many persons, I dare say, who will be inclined to doubt the improvement in the sailor's physical condition alone such a change would be likely to produce; and the need there is of it is sufficiently evident, I trust, without any descriptive details of the cold and wet, the long and dreary watch, with soaking rain or ever-drenching spray, the hard and bitter lessons that a sailor's life soon teaches.—I hope I have said enough to convince your readers that the best method to advance the cause of Temperance among sailors, at sea and a-shore, is, to convince them, by substantial proof, that it is not merely a mercenary movement, and that it has more at heart the improvement of their physical and moral condition, than the money-bags of their employers. I am, Sir, your obedient servant,

A FOREMAST HAND.

THE WRECK OF A MAN.

We once saw in a short ramble, an old, decrepit, worn-out piece of humanity—the very wreck of what was once a stalwart, perhaps a high-souled man. He had seen sixty winters. Silver coloured locks hung down from his feeble shaking head—his voice trembled and his knees shook—and his eye, dimmed with age, and blood-shot with dissipation, had sunk back in its sockets. He was old, and weak, and cheerless.

The old man sat down by the way-side, and told us his story—not the less interesting, because it was the story of hundreds of others. He had been a labouring man from his youth. Day after day and year after year, he had toiled on—struggled with adversity, and hoped for success. For many years the world went well with him. He had enough—not much to spare—but enough to make his home and the home of his family comfortable and happy. A few reverses came—such as fall to the lot of most of us—but the energies of his soul rose above them; he struggled, triumphed, and was independent. So he stood at fifty years of age.

Now came a change. From boyhood he had drunk the slow poison, alcohol; now he found himself its slave. Friends warned him of his danger, but it was too late. Not too late, could he have seen himself, his true position, and had known the safety of total abstinence. But the wily enemy did not wake him till the chains were rivetted. Then he struggled, and fell back,—and struggled and fell back again. He was a drunkard.

A volume would not now tell of the sufferings of the fallen man. Friends deserted him. His family was broken up. His wife dead. And the old man left alone. Many a time, when he was a man, he had cheered the heart of the forsaken—but none came to cheer his heart, or bind up his wounds. No man remembered that he was once a good citizen, a kind husband, and an indulgent father; that he had been kind to the unfortunate, and had administered to the afflicted. He was intemperate; and this covered his past virtues with the pall of blackness. Day after day, he delved alone in the low grounds of life, without hope.

And here he was when we saw him; away down in the depth of wretchedness. What could we do for him? What, but speak a kindly word, and write his brief story as a warning to the thoughtless.

Home Intelligence.

SPECIAL MEETING IN THE HALL OF COMMERCE.

A special meeting was held in the Hall of Commerce, on the evening of Monday, March 22nd, convened by the Committee of the National Temperance Society, for the purpose of directing public attention to the great waste of wholesome and nutritious grain in the manufacture of various strong drinks, while thousands are dying of starvation.

G. W. ALEXANDER, Esq., Treasurer of the National Temperance Society took the chair. He opened the meeting by remarking that he was a friend to the temperance principle—its adherent both in theory and practice. He had been so for many years, and his conviction was daily deepening in its favour. He would remind the audience of the immense cost of the drinking system. At least fifty million pounds sterling were expended annually in this country in intoxicating liquors, and bearing in mind this fact, it was no wonder that foreigners should almost invariably remark on the intemperance and degradation of our people. By far the greater part of this sum was spent by the working classes, and this was unquestionably the cause of a great portion of the vice, immorality, and crime which was so prominent a characteristic of our country. It was lamentable that so very few, comparatively, had lent their aid to the temperance movement, but he was not discouraged; he believed in the omnipotence of truth. America could boast that a great number of her ministers were adherents of temperance, and he trusted that the day was approaching when more of that class in this country would lend their aid to this good cause. It had the highest claims upon their attention, especially at the present time. He did not hesitate to express his belief that it was a sin to destroy wholesome grain in the manufacture of intoxicating liquor; but the act was of a dread character at the present moment. It was this particular view of the question they were to consider, and he trusted that good would result from the meeting; that meetings of a similar character would be held in all parts of the country.

Mr. HUDSON, in moving the first resolution remarked, that a variety of speculations had been indulged respecting the failure of the crops in Europe. The British Association for the Promotion of Science, at its last annual gathering, had canvassed the subject, but whether the disease affecting the potatoe was the result of electrical agency, or otherwise, was not determined. One thing was but too certain, that failures had taken place to an extent unprecedented in the history of Ireland; and he felt bound to add, that these frequent calamities would inevitably fall, as in part they had already done, on England, Hull, Liverpool, and other seaports were suffering, and had complained to the legislature of the influx of Irish paupers. It was time to ask what effect the introduction of 11,000 paupers in one town alone would have on taxation, and the labour of the English market. If one thousand out of the eleven thousand so introduced, were both able and willing to work, the sudden introduction of so many additional hands would have the tendency of depreciating the value of the workman's labour. Such men with whom they deeply sympathized, driven more from necessity than choice to accept reduced wages, outbid the English labourer; he felt, therefore, that at a time when provisions were high at home, and industry not too well paid to their own mechanics and citizens, that some concern ought to be evinced for distress on this side the Irish channel. No parties could be more anxious than they were to alleviate distress, but they proposed to do it most effectually by withholding the corn from the manufactures of fermented and spirituous drinks. Agricultural chemists had been most solicitous to extirpate a small but very noxious insect, known by the name of the wire-worm. Farmers had long been perplexed, that sixty thousand acres of grain should be destroyed every year by this destructive worm; but the people of this country seemed wholly regardless of the ravages of the spirit-worm, by which so much golden grain was annually destroyed. It had unfortunately happened, that there were those who readily "strained at a gnat," to whom little sacrifices were great virtues. Some had proposed to forego fasting in every form; but he happened to know a family of great distinction who, while the members of that family were thus scrupulous in not withdrawing flour from the market by such indulgence, at the same time the spring brewing was not to be superseded, though the cost would probably amount to two hundred pounds. It was of this shortsighted benevolence they felt ashamed. After quoting the authority of Professor Playfair, in proof that the potatoe was not an article, from its lack-of-flesh-giving principle, on which the Irish nation and the Highlands of Scotland ought to depend for three-quarters of the year,—Mr. HUDSON made brief reference to the statements of Dr. McLeod, and to facts that had been laid before the public in reference to Ireland, and concluded by asking the audience to vote for the resolution; but while he did so, he conjured the meeting to be consistent with itself, not to hold up their hands for the motion, and in retirement raise the glass to their lips. It was from these considerations, he cordially pressed that resolution—

"That this meeting deplores and deprecates the application of human food of any kind for the production of intoxicating beverages, as a sinful waste of the bounties of Providence, more especially at the present time, when thousands are actually dying of want; and regard those who drink the liquors so produced, as responsible for the consequences resulting from this waste."

Mr. JOHN MEREDITH in seconding the Resolution of which he quite approved, regretted that they were deprived of the attendance of some speakers, who had engaged to be present.

The Resolution was carried unanimously.

Mr. BEGGS, Secretary of the National Temperance Society, rose to move the Second Resolution. He said, that it had been stated in the House of Commons, by Mr. O'Connell, that up to the 9th of February last, no less than 5000 adults, and 10,000 children had died of starvation. The evil had continued with very great severity up to the present time; and the natural consequences of famine had followed. Those who did not absolutely die from hunger, were cut off by fever and pestilence. The poor people were flying from Ireland, landing in our sea-ports—competing with our own labourers for subsistence, and spreading abroad the seeds of disease. This want and misery did not arise from a positive deficiency of food; and though he had read of many famines in the history of the world, he could not find one that might be fairly attributed to Providence, designing that the people should want food. But men had in every instance with which he was acquainted, thwarted the beneficent arrangements of the Creator. If people neglected to sow, they must not expect to reap. If they threw away or trampled down the fruits of the earth, they must not expect that miracles would be worked to supply the deficiency thus created. If they throw their food into the brewers vat, or into the distillers worm, and thus created scarcity, they had to bear the punishment in diminished supply, and increased price, which was now felt heavily, not only in the starvation which was desolating the sister country, but it was producing the most lamentable results in our own land, and amongst our own population. It was a grave and momentous question for the working classes. If bread was scarce and dear, they had to suffer. While famine was stalking abroad in Ireland, what were we doing as a nation. While such present misery and gloomy prospects for the future are before us, we find on the authority of the Economist, of the 24th October, "that the total quantity of barley used for distilling and brewing in 1845, was 8,748,000 quarters. Thus we have 8,748,000 quarters of barley consumed annually, for making beer and spirits. Now, it is calculated, that one quarter of wheat is sufficient to support one person a year, and making allowance for the difference of weight between wheat and barley, the above quantity may be considered equivalent to the support of between six and seven millions of persons." He believed, that we were called upon under such dire calamities to abridge our luxuries and necessities, if required; but this was not necessary, let the grain used in the manufacture of strong drink, be given to its legitimate use, and there was enough and to spare. We were not called upon to surrender any rational indulgence or enjoyment, but only to give up that which was pernicious and hurtful—as was fully confirmed by the medical certificate which he held in his hand, and which had been signed by above 1000 medical men, many of them of the first eminence. He moved the Second Resolution, "That while this meeting hails as a public boon, every measure having a tendency to diminish existing distress, they cannot but regard the abandonment of intoxicating liquors by the community as one of the most efficient and eligible, inasmuch as it gives to the people the food they require, while at the same time it removes the fruitful source of those numerous evils which have so unfitted the population to grapple with their wants, and regard it as their sacred duty to give their influence and example towards the attainment of this end."

Mr. William Spriggs, in the absence of Mr. Buckingham, who had been expected, briefly seconded the resolution.

A Mr. Campbell suggested an alteration in the wording of the Resolution, which after some explanation from the mover, was agreed to.

A vote of thanks was given to the chairman, and the meeting, which was very numerous and respectable, separated.

HOUGHTON, HUNTS.

A tea-meeting was held in this village on the 19th ult., in the Sunday School Room, to which about eighty persons sat down. After tea, the chair was taken by F. L. Ekins, Esq. He opened the meeting by showing the great benefit of abstinence from all intoxicating drinks. He then called upon several working men, whose testimony was given to the great satisfaction of all present.

Our thanks are due to the Rev. F. Hercourt, independent minister, for his exertions, as well as to others who assist in this noble cause, which is making great progress here.

At the close of the meeting, and since, we have obtained twenty-one signatures, of which many are working men, who had been trying the system before.

JOHN HUNTER.

GLASGOW COMMERCIAL ABSTINENCE SOCIETY.

SECOND ANNUAL BANQUET.

On Wednesday evening the second annual banquet of this society was held in the Assembly Rooms, Ingram Street—John M'Gavin, Esq., President of the society, in the chair. The rooms were tastefully fitted up for the occasion, and presented a most elegant appearance. The place was crowded, there not being fewer than five hundred merchants, commercial men, shopkeepers, &c., with their wives and daughters present, all of whom seemed to take a deep and lively interest in the whole proceedings. Judge Marshall having asked a blessing, the company partook of tea, coffee, &c., of which there was an abundant and excellent supply.

After tea, the Chairman, who was received with applause, after referring to the origin of the society, which was instituted in February, 1846, stated that at their first banquet the members numbered 170, since which time there had been enrolled 239 new members, making in all 409 on the roll since the commencement of the society's operations. He regretted to have to state that from the above number there had to be deducted 25 who had either lapsed or resigned, leaving the society now 384 strong—(Cheers) This was good success, when it was considered that the society was confined more especially to one class.

Powerful and argumentative addresses were afterwards delivered by Judge Marshall of Nova Scotia, Mr. Robert Reid of Glasgow, Mr. Henry Clapp of Massachusetts, Mr. E. Anderson, Mr. W. S. Brown, and Mr. M'Kenna.

BOLTON.

A public meeting was held in the Temperance Hall, on Wednesday evening last. Robert Knowles, Esq., president of the Bolton Temperance Society, was called to the chair, resolutions were passed and a petition adopted to the House of Commons, to stop the manufacture of intoxicating drinks. Mr. WILLIAM SCOTT, of Manchester, spoke at length on the present scarcity of food and stagnation of trade. He alluded to the proposition of government to borrow 8,000,000*l.* to make up the revenue, and asked whether it was not time that the great waste of the bounties of Providence, effected in the manufacture of intoxicating liquors should be stopped? Mr. RAPIER went at considerable length into statistical accounts, to shew the great amount of money spent in intoxicating drinks, and the great benefits which might be derived from its use in other respects, namely, the establishing and supporting of educational and other institutions, sending missionaries abroad, &c. He alluded to the saying that "more grain went through the kiln than through the mill," and illustrated the subject by referring to the number of parties engaged in 1841 in the manufacture of intoxicating drinks in Great Britain, which was 90,870, while the number of bakers, corn-dealers, &c., at that period, was only 71,000. Messrs John Hiton, John Cunliffe, Carling, Orrell, and Baron, also addressed the meeting, which was numerous and respectable.—Bolton Chronicle.

Mr. AINSWORTH presented a petition signed by the members of Temperance Societies of the Borough of Bolton, calling the attention of the House to the fact, that 7,000,000 of quarters of grain were annually consumed in breweries and distilleries in this country, and praying, that steps be taken at the present crisis to prevent such a waste of the fruits of the earth.—Times, March 17th.

FATALITY AMONGST PUBLICANS.—At the Town Hall, in this city, on Wednesday last, no less than eight applications for transfers of licenses, by widows whose husbands have died since the last licensing day, were laid before the magistrates.—Carlisle Journal.

ST. MARYLEBONE.

Two crowded and highly interesting meetings were held in Enon Chapel, New Church Street, Marylebone, on the evening of March 24th, the day appointed for the National Fast. The first meeting, commencing at about a quarter to seven o'clock, was attended by females only. Miss Gwennap, a zealous friend of the cause, presided, and opened the proceedings with a suitable address. The other speakers were Mrs. Dalgarno, (who, with her husband, Captain Dalgarno, has several times circumnavigated the globe); Mrs. Curry, of Walworth, and Mrs. C. L. Balfour.

The general meeting, which began at half-past eight, was designed to have more especial reference to the waste of grain in the manufacture of intoxicating drinks. The greatest attention was given by the large and respectable audience to the arguments used in illustration of the subject, by the chairman, Rev. Dr. Burns, and by Messrs. W. Stevenson, of the London University; Mr. Mann, Wesleyan Local Preacher; Mr. Ashdown, and Mr. James Balfour.

Dr. Sewall's celebrated Colossal Stomach Plates were afterwards exhibited, and appeared to create a powerful impression upon the minds of those present.

A considerable number of signatures were taken at the conclusion of both meetings.

LEIGHTON BUZZARD.

J. R. Gutteridge has been labouring two months, in this neighbourhood, as temperance missionary; he has been sustained by the kindness of J. D. Basset, Esq., and Hannah Grant. In this place, there are 32 public-houses, seven malt-houses, and one common brewery—to a population of 4000. The labours of the missionary have been confined chiefly to visiting the people at their own dwellings. He has made nearly one thousand visits, besides holding meetings, and obtained 100 signatures. He found in Leighton Buzzard, 296 adults and 333 juveniles who could not read, 16 families without Bibles, 343 persons not attending Divine worship, and about 126 drunkards. His labours seem to have given great satisfaction to those who have employed him, and to have had beneficial results upon those among whom they have been conducted.

SHEERNESS.

On Monday the 8th, a part of the crew of the brig Ann, of Shields, addressed a meeting in this town, on the benefit of Total Abstinence to Working-Men. The arguments adduced by these hardy sons of the deep, went to show that teetotal sailors were superior in health—contrary to the reports that they were more subject to scurvy than those who take grog. The appearance of these men was clean, healthy, and robust. We hope that our Merchant and Naval Service will before long boast of more teetotal sailors.

G. STUBBINGS.

PROGRESS OF TEMPERANCE IN THE ISLE OF MAN.—Mr. Dalton, of Sheffield, the talented temperance lecturer, has been the means of obtaining a considerable number of signatures to the pledge, within the last week or two. Numerous meetings have been held in Douglas and neighbourhood, and nearly 200 new names have been enrolled as members of the society. Mr. Dalton's stay among us will continue for some weeks longer, and, we hope with continued success.—Isle of Man Times.

Foreign Intelligence.

(To the Editor of the National Temperance Chronicle and Temperance Recorder.)

DEAR SIR,—I desire to return you my best thanks for the publications and tracts you so very kindly sent me, which I safely received a few days ago.

Our Total Abstinence Society prospers, I am happy to say, and we hope we shall yet have the pleasure of seeing many more join us; we at present number 117 members, including those at the out-stations of this Mission, composed principally of Christians, and some heathen.

I am very happy the cause prospers so in England, and I hope, with the Lord's blessing upon your endeavours, many more will yet join you.

I am sorry to say that drunkenness is on the increase among the higher classes of the Hindoos, both at this place and surrounding villages.

We continue to hold our monthly meetings as usual, which generally prove very interesting; we have generally some very good addresses from the members.

Please to pray for us that the Lord's blessing may rest on our endeavours, and that all may ultimately prove to the glory of God, the honour of our dear Redeemer, and the means of good to many souls.

With best respects to the Committee, and many thanks for the great kindness they have shown me.

I remain, my dear Sir,

Your's very sincerely, and greatly obliged,

CHARLES JAMES ADDIS,

Secretary to the Coimbatour Total Abstinence Society.

(Son of the Rev. W. B. ADDIS, L.M.S.'s Missionary Coimbatour.)

Coimbatour, Madras Presidency, East Indies, Jan. 6th, 1847.

INTEMPERANCE IN GLASGOW.

In the last edition of The Progress of the Nation, by G. R. Porter, Esq., the following passage occurs:—

"The reform (of drunken habits) has not yet made any deep impression upon the working-people of Scotland. Mr. Alison, the Sheriff of Lanarkshire, in his evidence given before the committee on combinations of workmen, so recently as 1838, speaking of the habit of intemperance in Scotland, said—'I know opium is used to a certain extent, but I think whisky supersedes everything. In short, I may mention one fact to the committee which will illustrate the extent to which the use of whisky is carried; in London, the proportion of public-houses to other houses is as one to fifty-six; in Glasgow it is one to ten; every tenth house in Glasgow is a spirit-shop. I should say, as far as my statistical researches have gone, that the proportion of whisky drunk in Glasgow, is twice or thrice as much as in any similar population upon the face of the globe.' Being asked whether the proportion of spirit-shops mentioned was greater than it was fifteen or twenty years ago. Mr. Alison stated that it was considerably increasing; that in 1824, every FOURTEENTH house was a public-house, and that the proportions since, and at different times ascertained, have been one in twelve, one in eleven, and (as already stated) in 1838, one in ten."

"Papa, the temperance men say they put logwood in port wine. Is that what dyes your nose so red?" Nonsense, my son, go to bed."

TEMPERANCE CAUSE.

Looking back over the last twelve years, how much has been accomplished! Then the favourites of fashion, the spoiled children of fortune, and "the wise world" alike of religion, letters, and trade, looked upon teetotalism as an outbirth of a wild "fanaticism," or as the short-lived offspring of a transient enthusiasm. How changed are all these views! It has now written its true lineage in its success, and vindicated, by its literature and its labours, its claims to philosophy and truth.

Propositions then advanced with hesitation, are now as settled and secure as the axioms of geometry; doctrines enunciated as theories, amid doubt and difficulty, have been established on the broad basis of experience, and confirmed by the best inductions of science; foolish customs, and fatal fashions, strong as the castes of India, are dissolving before the light and heat of truth; once streaming fountains of vice, want, and wretchedness, are now checked or dried up; at last, from bench and bar, from pulpit and press, from parliament and platform, from every association of freedom and intelligence, and from every combination of charity, the confession comes, that this principle is powerful for good—and while the voice of other lands, telling its triumphs, falls upon the ear like the music of many waters, the Temperance Organization, with all its apparatus of lecture halls, libraries, and literature, its sanatory and scientific teachings, is assuming its proper position among the noblest institutions of our fatherland, destined, we believe, to suffer neither decline nor decay, until the happy period arrives, when it shall have finished its great work of education, and the vice which it aims to prevent and destroy, shall exist only in the pages of history.—British League.

THE FAST.

The following letter is taken from the TIMES of February 27th, 1847.

(To the Editor of the Times.)

SIR.—Permit me to draw your attention, and, through your columns, that of the Clergy of the United Kingdom, to the notice of Mr. Plumptre, in the House of Commons yesterday, "That he will move that a humble address be presented to her Majesty, to cause a day to be appointed for a national fast and humiliation, in consideration of the awful and destructive famine in Ireland."

That scourges have been inflicted by Providence upon the human race history give us too many instances; but in approaching with prayer the Almighty, to mitigate his wrath, we should duly examine ourselves, whether the infliction of which we complain is not with us, and with us alone.

To be in a state of famine is to be without all means of sustaining life; and can we, the people of the United Kingdom, say such is the case at the present moment, so long as millions of quarters of oats are supplied to the horses of the military, and to those used for pleasure, and millions of quarters of barley are converted into gin; both affording substantial and nutritious food for man?

Would that humane and scientific gastronomer, M. Soyer, turn his attention from the offal of celery and turnips, as sustaining condiments for man, to oats and barley, and give a receipt for converting them into the staff of life—firmity and puddings, he would do an act acceptable to humanity, and secure to himself laurels not to be gained in the kitchen of the Reform Club.

Ten pounds of oats per day is the usual allowance for a military horse, and more for one kept for pleasure, and the same weight of barley, washed and distilled for gin, is, as gin, but a moderate allowance daily for each of the tens of thousands of gin drinkers.

Whilst oats and barley are thus consumed, there can be no plea to the Almighty to avert the scourge of famine from amongst a united Christian people; and I will not seek to approach the Throne of Mercy, on which sitteth the Author and Giver of all good, whose ways are those of love, with a lie in my mouth; but I will rather humbly entreat Him to strengthen our hearts unto wisdom, that we may not turn away those good things which he has vouchsafed to bestow upon us for our need, and use them for pomp and our destruction.

I am, Sir, your obedient servant,
Feb. 26th. HOWARD.

STIMULATION AND NUTRITION.

The distinction, although incaleculably important, is not sufficiently recognised betwixt stimulation and nutrition; between repairing the expenditure of the fuel by a supply of substantial matter, and urging unseasonably, or to an inordinate degree, the violence of the heat and the brilliancy of the flame.

The strongest liquors are the most weakening. In proportion to the power which the draught itself possesses, is that which it ultimately deducts from the person into whose stomach it is habitually received. In a state of ordinary health, and in many cases of disease, a generous diet may be safely and even advantageously recommended. But in diet, the generous ought to be distinguished from the stimulating, which latter is almost exclusively, but, on account of its evil operation upon the frame, very improperly called good living. The indigent wretch, whose scanty fare is barely sufficient to supply the materials of existence, and the no less wretched debauchee, whose luxurious indulgence daily accelerates the period of its destruction, may both be said, with equal propriety, to live hard. Hilarity is not health, more especially when it has been roused by artificial means. The fire of intemperance often illuminates, at the very time that it is consuming, its victim. It is not until after the blaze of an electric corrosion, that its depredations are exposed.

Stimuli sometimes produce a kind of artificial genius, as well as vivacity. They lift a man's intellectual faculties, as well as his feelings of enjoyment, above their ordinary level. And if, by the same means, they could be kept for any length of time, in that state of exaltation, it might constitute something like a specious apology for having had recourse to them. But unfortunately, the excitement of the system can in no instance be urged above its accustomed and natural pitch, without this being succeeded by a correspondent degree of depression. Like the fabulous stone of Sisyphus, it invariably begins to fall as soon as it has reached the summit, and the rapidity of its subsequent descent is almost invariably in proportion to the degree of its previous elevation. Genius, in this manner forcibly raised, may be compared to those fire-works which, after having made a brilliant figure in the sky for a very short time, fall to the ground, and expose a miserable fragment, as the only relic of their preceding splendour.—From Essays on Hypochondriases, by John Reid, M.D. published in 1821.

TEMPERANCE PROVIDENT INSTITUTION.

The Sixth Annual Report of this Institution is now published.

The accounts show an increase of no less than thirty per cent, both in the Renewal Premiums, and in those of New Members.

The number of policies issued to the present date, is 2354, being an increase of 491 since last report.

The claims by death during the financial year, have been only three, amounting to the small sum of 140*l.*; three other claims have since been reported amounting to 400*l.*; but the total is still under that of last year.

So great a difference in the rate of mortality between this and all other offices, during a space of six years, is a strong testimony to the superiority of teetotal lives. The value of such a testimony in favour of abstinence, can hardly be overrated: it was acknowledged by the recent "World's Convention," and entitles this institution to the cordial support of all the friends of temperance and of science.

Though the public generally may not at present admit the superior longevity of teetotalers, the Directors think it must be plain to every one capable of taking a candid view of the subject, that an office which is entirely exempt from all losses by intemperance, and by what is called free living, must stand upon a much more favourable basis, than offices subject to such risks.

Extraordinary as has been the success of this Institution, and triumphantly as it has overcome the many difficulties it has had to contend with, its prosperity must still depend upon the prudence and unremitting care of its management, and the zealous co-operation of the members. Each individual has his own circle of acquaintance, and should exert himself to induce every healthy teetotaler to assure. The Institution includes a large number of the leading friends of the cause in all parts of England and Scotland, and of all ranks of life, from the wealthy banker and merchant, to the mechanic and labourer. Let each exert his influence in his own sphere, not only by personal canvass, but by recommending the Institution at public meetings and through the press; there can then be no doubt, that the Temperance Provident Institution will as far surpass other offices in the number of lives assured, as it falls short of them in the number of claims by death.

Signed on behalf of the Directors.

ROBERT WARNER, Chairman.

THEODORE COMPTON, Secretary.

London, 1st January, 1847.

A DRUNKARD'S WIFE.

The following communication, over the signature of "Anna, the wife of a Drunkard," appears in the last number of the Lowell Niagara.—Fountain.

"Who can tell the sorrow and misery, the poverty and distress which rum has caused? Let the wives and mothers of the drunkard speak—they can tell; let them speak in tones that shall be heard by every rum-seller throughout the nation. The time has arrived when every female should be up and at work in the temperance cause. Intemperance is making fearful strides in our city at the present time. Sisters, let us go forth to the battle—let us try to save the young and rising generation from the alms-house, and the drunkard's grave.

"It has often been said that the widow's lot is the most lonely and trying that falls to the female sex. I cannot agree with the above sentiment.—Of all the wretched persons on this earth, there are none so wretched as the wife of the drunkard. She is uncared for—unprovided for; and he who should be her protector, spends his earnings in the grog shop, and returns home cross and fretful, with a red nose, bloated eyes, and a frown for every one; his family are in rags and want, his debts are unpaid, except his grog bills, which he pays punctually.

"The writer of this has been the wife of a drunkard fifteen years, and has often known the time when her husband could not get a loaf of bread, but never saw the time when he could not get rum."

THIS IS THE WAY THE MONEY GOES.

In the year 1843, eight million one thousand four hundred and forty-nine pounds, one shilling, and fourpence, was spent by the people of England in tobacco! a tolerably round sum to "end in smoke." If the weed had been worked into pigtail, rather more than half an inch thick, it would have formed a line 99,470 miles long—long enough to go nearly five times around the world!

Poetry.

KING GIN.

BY EDWARD YOUL.

I.

A PALACE, and a king within;—
Hail, potent monarch! Hail, King Gin!

Open stands his palace door;
Ready access have the poor;
He is praised, through all the town,
By torn coat and ragged gown;
Weazen face, and shrivelled limb,
Each can hob and nob with him;
He extends a cordial hand
To the meanest in the land.

Sad heart in sinking bosom,—
Beauty blighted in thy blossom,—
Poverty, with thy gaunt stride,
And Theft running by thy side,—
Ignorance, untaught by any,— Hunger, with thy only penny,—
Come, in any garments suited,—
Come, though you should come barefooted,
Come in squalor,—come in sin,—
Doors are open;—enter in.

Come from the heat; come from the cold;
Young men, come; and come, the old;
Bring your wives, in all their charms;
Bring the babe that's held in arms;
Bring your sisters; bring your brothers;
Bring your fathers; bring your mothers;
Bring your daughter in her beauty;
Bring the son you've reared to duty;
Bring your friend; and bring your neighbour;
Bring the workman from his labour;
Bring the stranger from the street;
Bring the very next you meet.

II.

A palace, and a crowd within:—
Wilt hob and nob with this King Gin?

So—you see He is a King—
For he does the royal thing:—
He maintains his regal station,
By the process of taxation.
Who this palace enters in,
May learn this lesson from King Gin:—

Kings are not ashamed to tax
Shoeless feet and shirtless backs.

There, the artisan in tatters
Stands beside his well-dressed betters,—
But he wore, in former years,
Coat and hat as good as theirs ;
Ere three summers, they will be Habited as ill as he—
Sunk as deep in misery.
Yonder is a desperate woman,—
Hardly can you call her human ;
Once she was a maiden fair,
And she had rich golden hair ;
Once her mother rocked her sweetly ;
Now she's lost, ay, lost completely.

The Magdalen asks for the poisonous drop,
Madly pledging her only hope ;
She had yet a stake—but the taste of gin
Deepens disgrace, and strengthens sin ;
The brand on her brow will be deepened to-morrow ;
She will know less shame, and feel less sorrow ?
She will fall—Oh, God, how deep !
Ere they thrust her aside to her harlot sleep.
Frenzy, with the staring hair,
Stands at the elbow of Despair,
And a step behind is Care.

Boys approach, and girls and children—
O, their presence is bewildering—
Boys, that should be taught on stools,
And the girls in daily schools,
Dragging the streets and lanes together
In the dry and sloppy weather,
Pausing not, but plunging in,
Like grown drunkards, to drink gin.

Ah, she is not ten years old,
But her face is very bold ;
She was born a drunkard's daughter,
And a father's hands have brought her
To this haunt of Death and Sin ;—
And she leads her infant brother ;
And she curses like her mother ;
And she takes her glass of gin ?
God ! she bids the infant sip ;
And the babe smiles with wet lip.

A palace, and a King within !
On his throne behold King Gin !
Open stands his palace door ;—
Ready access have the poor ;
But—alas ! together dwell
With him, Sin, and Death, and Hell.

From Howitt's Journal.

To the Editor of the NATIONAL TEMPERANCE
CHRONICLE.

RECEIPTS FOR MAKING VARIOUS ARTICLES OF FOOD OF INDIAN MEAL.

Common Journey, or Johnny Cake.—Into one quart of meal, stir one pint of boiling water, with salt ; spread it on a board an inch thick, and bake it before the fire, or otherwise on an iron over the fire.

Superior Johnny Cake.—Take one pint of cream, half a pint of meal, two eggs, two table-spoonfuls of wheat flour, half a tea-spoonful of carbonate of soda, and salt to suit the taste. Bake in a hot oven.

An excellent Johnny Cake.—Take one quart of milk, three eggs, one tea-spoonful of carbonate of soda, one tea cup of wheat flour and Indian meal sufficient to make a batter of the consistency of pancakes. Bake quick, in pans previously buttered, and eat it warm with butter or milk.

Indian Cake.—One pint of sour milk, one tea-spoonful of carbonate of soda, one table-spoonful of sugar, one table-spoonful of butter, one egg, salt, and stiff enough to pour.

Batter Cakes, No. 1.—Prepare a thick batter, by wetting sifted meal with cold water, and then stirring it into that which is boiling, salt, and when it is lukewarm, add yeast, when risen, bake in thin cakes over the fire.

No. 2.—Take some milk, correct its acidity with carbonate of soda, add salt and meal to make a thick batter, and cook as before.

No. 3.—Stir a quart of boiling water into the same quantity of meal, add a little salt and two eggs well-beaten ; cook as before.

Corn Muffins.—Take one quart of butter milk, three or four eggs well beaten, a small quantity of flour ; mix them together, and then make it quite thick with corn meal ; add a table-spoonful of melted butter, and salt to suit the taste ; butter the pan in which it is baked.

Corn and Flour Bread.—Prepare a thin batter, by wetting sifted meal in cold water, and then stirring it into that which is boiling, salt, and when it is lukewarm, add yeast, and as much flour as there is corn meal ; bake in deep dishes in an oven when risen.

Corn Bread.—To one quart of sifted meal, add one tea-cup of cream, three eggs, one tea-spoonful of carbonate of soda dissolved in water, butter-milk to make it quite soft, stir it well, and bake it in a bake-kettle or oven.

Hasty Pudding.—Put in three pints of water and a table-spoonful of salt, and when it begins to boil, stir in meal until it is thick enough for the table. Add, if you choose, sour apple, chopped. Cook twenty or thirty minutes. Eaten with milk, butter or treacle.

Fried Hasty Pudding.—Cut cold pudding into smooth slices, and fry brown in a little butter or pork fat.

Hasty Pudding Bread.—Prepare hasty pudding as before ; when lukewarm, add yeast, and after rising, bake in a deep dish in a hot oven.

Corn Meal Pudding.—Scald four quarts of milk, stir into it one quart of sifted meal, one cup of molasses, a table-spoonful of salt, a little spice of any kind you like ; bake it three or four hours in a pretty hot oven.

Baked Pudding.—To two quarts of milk, add one quart of meal, a little salt, and a cup of sugar. Prepared by heating the milk over the fire, stirring it occasionally to prevent its burning ; when it scarcely boils, remove it, put in the salt and sugar, and scatter in the meal, stirring rapidly to prevent its collecting into lumps ; put in the nutmeg, and turn into a deep pan. Bake immediately, or otherwise as may be convenient, in a hot oven, three hours. When it has baked an hour or more, pour over the pudding one gill or one half-pint of milk, this will soften the crust and form a delicious whey.

Boiled Pudding.—Into two quarts of meal, stir three pints of boiling water, some salt and a gill of molasses or treacle, spice or not, as you choose,—tie up in a strong cloth or pudding bag, put into boiling water, and cook over a steady fire for three hours.

Superior Boiled Pudding.—To one quart of Indian corn, add three pints of hot milk, half a pint of hot milk, half a pint of molasses or treacle, a dessert spoonful of salt, an ounce or more of beef suit stued fine. Stir the materials well together, tie them in a cloth, allowing room for the pudding to swell one-eighth larger, and boil it six or eight hours—the longer it boils the better. It may be made without suet.

Indian Dumpling.—Into one quart of meal, stir one pint of boiling water with salt. Wet the hands in cold water, and make them into smooth balls, two or three inches in diameter. Immerse in boiling water, and cook over a steady fire twenty or thirty minutes.

If you choose, put a few berries, a peach, or part of an apple, in the centre of each dumpling.

Superior Dumpling.—To one pint of sour milk with carbonate of soda, add one quart of meal and a large spoonful of flour, roll out with flour and put in apple, and cook as before.

Homony.—This article is considered a great delicacy throughout the Southern States, and is seen on almost every breakfast table. It is prepared thus:—the corn must be ground not quite into meal. Let the broken grains be about the size of a pin's head. Then sift the flour from it through a fine hair sieve. Next, shake the grains in the sieve, so as to make the hulls of bran rise to the top, when it can be removed by the hand. The grains must then be washed in several waters, and the light articles, which rise to the surface, poured off with the water through the fingers, so as to prevent the escape of the grains. Have a pot or boiler ready on the fire with water in it, add the grains at the rate of one pint to two pints of water. Boil it briskly about twenty minutes, taking off the scum and occasionally stirring it. When the homony has thoroughly soaked up the water, take the boiler off the fire, cover it, and place it near, or on a less heated part of the fire, and allow it to soak there about ten minutes. It may be eaten with milk, butter, treacle or sugar. The flour or meal sifted out can be used to make bread or cakes.

Buck Wheat Cakes.—This cheap article of food is considered a luxury throughout most of the American States, from the 1st of October to the 1st of April. During this period, it is found almost everywhere at breakfast, on the most frugal and the most sumptuous tables. When eaten warm, with butter, sugar, or molasses, or treacle, it possesses a flavour that cannot be equalled by any other girdle cake whatever. The buck wheat flour, put up in small casks in Philadelphia, is the best that can be procured in America.

Receipt.—Mix the flour with cold water; put in a cup of yeast and a little salt; set it in a warm place overnight. If it should be sour in the morning put in a little carbonate of soda; fry them the same as any girdle cakes. Leave enough of the butter to leaven the next mess. To be eaten with butter, molasses, or sugar.

A CONSTANT READER.

5th March, 1847.

A NICE CALCULATION.—A man was brought up on Friday, charged with being drunk and disorderly in the streets. He appeared scarcely to have recovered from the effects of his potations, and in reply to the charge, said, "Well, it is nine years since I was here before, and it will be eleven years before I come again."—Liverpool Mercury.

INTEMPERANCE.—The Free Church presbytery of Greenock have appointed a committee to write and circulate six tracts against intemperance: 1st. On the expense of ardent spirits. 2nd. On their injury to health. 3rd. Compare their own and the Scripture Drinking Customs. 4th. On the Drinking Usages of Scotland. 5th. On their moral effects. 6th. An address to ministers and elders on the subject.

GRUMBLERS.

What a host of grumblers there are in the community. Go where you will, and you will find a class of persons perpetually grumbling about something. Nothing goes right with them. Some farmers are always grumbling about the weather. It is either too hot or too cold, too wet or too dry.—The potato crop will be short or the corn will be "thin," or something is going wrong the whole season—but notwithstanding all this, seed time and harvest fail not every year. There are some men who grumble continually in their families.—Their wives never do anything right; their children are always in trouble; there is no peace in their houses, and if such men can find nothing to grumble at, why, they will grumble at nothing.—They can't live without finding fault with some thing or some body. They grumble their way through the world, and die grumbling. There are some men who are always grumbling about their minister. The poor man's sermons are either too doctrinal or too practical; he has too much animation, or not enough; he visits all the time or not at all, and the grumbler can never be satisfied. If the angel Gabriel should descend from heaven and preach with an angel's tongue, there would still be some to grumble. Whatever may be done in community for the welfare of the citizens, there will be some to grumble; in fact, they could not live without grumbling. They must do it, it is their nature.

We find these grumblers in the temperance ranks. They do nothing except to look on and grumble. They complain of this man and that man engaged in the cause, and this and that method of operation. "Such a man is an injury to the cause," say they, "The cause would get along better without him." If we use legal action, they say, "why don't you use moral suasion," and if we use moral suasion, they say, "why don't you prosecute the rum-seller?" "Why don't you have more lectures?" "What do you want to have so many lectures for. It's no use to keep talking all the time." Why don't you do this and why don't you do that; never satisfied with anything. If we should change our plans, they would be no better satisfied. No change we could make would please them; no, if we should conform to their own ideas, they would grumble on then. The best course for teetotalers to pursue, is to take no notice of this class of persons. They will not be satisfied or pleased with anything; therefore "let them slide."—Dev Drop.

TEETOTALISM IN IRELAND.—Extract of a letter from Theobald Mathew, to R. D. Alexander, Esq., dated 25th January, 1847:—"It will delight you to be assured that the sacred cause is progressing gloriously. In the midst of sufferings, even unto death, the pledge is faithfully observed, and we now, thanks be to God, number more in the ranks of teetotalism than at any other period. The Temperance Society is being tested like gold in the furnace by these calamitous times, and is coming out purified. Drunkenness will never again, with the Divine assistance, become the national sin of Ireland."—Suffolk Chronicle.

THE TWO PHYSICIANS.—Whitaker, in his History of Leeds, tells us of two contemporary physicians, Dr. W. Gibson and Dr. Hulme. He says of the first, "He abandoned himself" to brandy, "with as clear and calm a foresight of its consequences, as if he had been studying the case of a patient." He died in the prime of life, at thirty-nine. His friend, Dr. Hulme, an abstemious water-drinker, lived to ninety-two.

1847
MARCH 5

National Temperance Society.

OFFICE 11, TOKENHOUSE YARD.

VICE-PRESIDENTS.

The EARL of ARUNDEL and SURREY, M.P.
Sir Wilfrid Lawson, Bart.

R. D. Alexander, Esq.	Rev. Theobald Mathew.
Thomas Beaumont, Esq.	W. J. Morgan, A.M., M.D.
Samuel Bowly, Esq.	Richard Peek, Esq.
J. S. Buckingham, Esq.	Rev. P. Penson, M.A.
Robert Charleton, Esq.	Rev. W. W. Robinson, M.A.
Rev. R. Clowes, M.A.	Rev. J. Sherman.
Isaac Collins, Esq.	Rev. C. Stovel.
Joseph Eaton, Esq.	Rev. T. Spencer, A. M.
S. C. Hall, Esq., B.L.F.S.A.	Rev. W. H. Turner, M.A.
Lawrence Heyworth, Esq.	Edward Thomas, Esq.
William Janson, Jun., Esq.	Robert Warner, Esq.
Ven. Archdeacon Jeffreys.	Edward Webb, Esq.
G. S. Kenrick, Esq.	Rev. J. Wilson.

TREASURER.

G. W. Alexander, Esq., 40, Lombard Street.

EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE.

George W. Atwood	Richard Hicks.
Richard Barrett.	C. H. Lovell, M.D.
Jabez Burns, D.D.	John Meredith.
William Cabell	Richard Potter.
William Cash	W. W. Robinson.
John Cassell	T. B. Scutt.
Charles Gilpin

SUPERINTENDENT OF MISSION.

John Meredith.

SECRETARY.

Thomas Beggs.

ANNUAL MEETING.

THE ANNUAL MEETING of the Society will be held in EXETER HALL, on Thursday, May 20th, at Six o'Clock in the Afternoon.

THE FUND FOR 1847-8-9.

Although the Committee have realized the sum for which they engaged, before any portion of it was called in, they feel that in itself it will be very inadequate for the completion of the great and important purposes they have in view. They cannot, therefore, relax in their efforts until the entire sum proposed, £5000, is raised, and hope that their friends throughout the country will aid them in its attainment.

SUBSCRIPTIONS.

Cash, Samuel . . . £3 3 0	Meredith, J. . . . £1 1 0
Foster, Josiah . . . 1 0 0	Money, Wigram . . 0 10 0
Hingston, J. . . . 0 10 0	Peek, R., Kings-
Holmes, W., Alton 1 1 0	bridge 1 1 0
Hodge, J., Drury	Sturges, Rebecca . 1 1 0
Lane 1 1 0	Turner, Rev. W. H. 2 2 0
Loomes, J., St.	Wheeler, F. . . . 0 10 0
John's Street . . 0 10 0

SPECIAL FUND.

Rowntree, W., Esq. £2 0 0	Hitchin Society . . £2 0 0
Evans and Clarke,	Senex 5 0 0
Messrs. 0 10 0
Chappell, H., Esq. 5 0 0	DONATION.
Hicks, R., Esq.,	A Friend, per J.
Surgeon 5 0 0	Balfour 0 5 0

NATIONAL TEMPERANCE SOCIETY.

address on scarcity has had a very extension among the influential classes, and, as been productive of much thought on The Committee have been enabled, proposed in the last Chronicle, to send th, Bridgwater, Bristol, Cirencester, Dover, Sticklepath, Wellingborough, and Leighton Buzzard. The address has been reprinted in several newspapers. They are still sending out considerable quantities. Several petitions have also been presented to the House of Commons, and others are in progress in various parts of the country, similar in prayer to the one adopted by the Committee.

The Committee have placed in the hands of competent writers a series of subjects for suitable addresses, "On the Importance of Total Abstinence in Relation to the Rising Generation." In this they are carrying out the recommendations of the late World's Convention, and next month they hope to be able to announce full particulars, as to time of publication, subjects, price, &c., &c.

In addition to this, they have appointed a missionary, whose exclusive attention will be paid, for a length of time, to the schools of the metropolis.

They have felt it to be their duty to carry out, as far as practicable, the resolution of the Convention respecting seamen; and as the first step seemed to be, to obtain correct information as to the actual moral condition of the men engaged in our merchant service, they have appointed a missionary to labour exclusively for three months in the London Docks, who, in addition to missionary labours, will procure the desirable information, and afterwards this will be employed in the manner most likely to be useful in the promotion of Temperance principles among that neglected body of men. A schedule containing the necessary points of inquiry will be ready in a few days, and it is intended to be sent to every seaport in the kingdom where suitable correspondents can be obtained.

They have placed in the hands of a highly-esteemed, experienced, and devoted foreign missionary, the drawing up an address on the "Evil of Exporting Intoxicating Drinks amongst the Heathen" It is intended to set forth—

The influence of this practice on those sailing in ships carrying missionaries.

The influence on the aborigines, and on the heathen in general.

The influence on Christian societies abroad.

The necessity of missionary boards securing Temperance co-operation.

This is carrying out another of the resolutions of the Convention. In relation to the drinking usages, on which a specific resolution was adopted by the Convention, they have procured the assistance of two writers conversant with the subject, who are engaged in drawing up addresses to employers and to the employed "On the Drinking Usages of Workshops, and those particularly affecting Workmen."

The Statistical Committee have also prepared a schedule and circular, which will shortly be published, suggesting those points of inquiry to local societies which seem most likely to return accurate information as to the causes, extent, and evils of our national intemperance, and the present position of the Temperance movement.

In the present number of the Chronicle will be found the medical certificate which has so long engaged the attention of Mr. John Dunlop, with the whole of the signatures already appended to the document. In rendering their assistance to that gentleman, they felt that it was a most important movement, and one likely to tend greatly to the promotion of Temperance principles throughout the world; and they have much satisfaction in being able to present it to the public in its present stage of progress. The following communication has been received from Mr. Dunlop:—

5, Stanhope Street, March 24th, 1847.

MY DEAR SIR,—I am happy now to be enabled to forward to you the Medical Temperance Testimony, signed by a considerable number of the principal authorities throughout the kingdom. The subscriptions are being still continued in all directions; but it is time now to report progress (so to speak) and let our friends know what has been done, but without prejudice to further exertions.

In taking advantage of the Chronicle of the National Temperance Society, to make my interim report, I think it right to thank my friends of the Committee, for the support they have given to my exertions; particularly in so kindly and handsomely confirming the setting aside part of the Convention Fund for this object, as suggested to them by the late Convention Committee.

I trust, and, indeed, have no doubt, my friends in the National Committee will still continue their good offices in this department.

I am, Dear Sir, your faithful servant,

JOHN DUNLOP.

To Mr. Thomas Beggs, Sec. &c. &c.

MEDICAL TESTIMONY.

TO THE TEMPERANCE COMMITTEES.

London, 5, Stanhope Street, Gloucester Gate, Regent's Park.

GENTLEMEN,—I HAVE been occupied for a considerable time in efforts to bring the claims of Temperance before the great body of Medical practitioners in the empire; in endeavouring to draw the attention of that highly influential class to the facts which can happily now be adduced to a great amount, in favour of the practice of Total Abstinence; and in trying to procure their repeated consideration of the medical question, in connexion with the frightful condition of our population in regard to national intemperance.

Whether final success shall follow these measures, and whether we shall obtain the universal concurrence of the British Medical Faculties to our cause, instead of their present apathy or hostility, will considerably depend upon the assistance which the general friends of Temperance may be pleased to afford to the present Medical movement.

The Leaders of the Medical Profession in London, have granted to my request the document annexed, which I trust you will find in the meantime very satisfactory. Besides these Metropolitan Physicians and Surgeons, nearly 1000 eminent practitioners in every part of Great Britain have concurred in and signed this document, and some in the metropolis of Ireland. But though thus much has been gained, the greater part of this important measure is yet to be accomplished.

In England, Scotland, and Wales, there are about 20,000 medical practitioners; and the concurrence of a large portion of these ought to be obtained before we can expect to change the unscientific principles and hazardous dogmata on the use of alcoholic liquors, that too much regulate and characterize the practice of the bulk of our medical world.

It is to be hoped that the opinion of the heads of the Profession set forth as above, may weigh strongly with others. But the friends of Temperance will require to bestir themselves every where for this purpose. If medical practice and opinion, as to the ordinary use and daily employment of alcoholic liquors, were thoroughly changed, it would have a most important effect on the Temperance cause.

As has been already stated in the late World's Temperance Convention—"The general ignorance of our inhabitants upon this question; their obstinate adherence to the opinion that the daily use of a certain quantity of alcoholic liquor is necessary to health and strength, has always proved a chief obstacle to the advancement of our principles. It is probable that the flat denial contained in the above certificate, of such dangerous views, will work well among the population. But it is not the undegreed and unlicensed public only, which is in a state of pernicious ignorance on these weighty topics. The great numerical majority of medical Practitioners throughout the land are equally uninformed. And it is hoped that the weight of Metropolitan and University authority, exhibited in the above testimony, will have large effect in inducing a general medical change of view on the subject of alcohol."

You are therefore earnestly requested to procure as many medical signatures as possible to the Certificate hereto annexed, and transmit the same to me in London, as early as possible.

After a sufficient number of subscriptions have been obtained, it is my intention to urge on the friends of Temperance, that the Certificate and its signatures may be extensively and repeatedly pressed on public attention, by means of advertisements in the public prints and literary periodicals.

I beg again to quote from the Report of the World's Temperance Convention. "As the enemies of the cause have, at the present period, ceased to give positive contradiction and to offer direct hostility to our principles; and endeavour to procure equivalent results by striving to have our claims and pretensions as much as possible passed unnoticed; and use all efforts to produce a general apathy, try to prevent persons from reading our publications and attending our meetings; it will be necessary to force the new medical views upon the public by means of very extensive and reiterated advertisements in the newspapers; by which method thousands who have no opportunity of knowing what may be stated in our favour, may be reached and influenced."

You are requested, therefore, to have the goodness to take strenuous measures to have the Certificate additionally signed, as extensively as possible, by medical gentlemen in the towns, villages, and country districts in your neighbourhood.

I have the honour to be, GENTLEMEN,

Your most obedient Servant,

JOHN DUNLOP.

THE following important MEDICAL TESTIMONY, has recently been obtained from the undersigned authorities:—

We, the undersigned, are of opinion,

I.—That a very large portion of human misery, including poverty, disease, and crime, is induced by the use of alcoholic or fermented liquors, as beverages.

II.—That the most perfect health is compatible with Total Abstinence from all such intoxicating beverages, whether in the form of ardent spirits, or as wine, beer, ale, porter, cider, &c., &c.

III.—That persons accustomed to such drinks, may, with perfect safety, discontinue them entirely, either at once, or gradually, after a short time.

IV.—That Total and Universal Abstinence from alcoholic liquors and intoxicating beverages of all sorts, would greatly contribute to the health, the prosperity, the morality, and the happiness of the human race.

LONDON.

Abercrombie, J., M.D.
 Addison T., M.D., Senior Physician Guy's Hospital.
 Aldis, Sir Charles, M.R.C.S.
 Ancell, H., M.R.C.S.
 Arnott, Neil, M.D., Physician to the Queen, and Author of Elements of Physics.
 Archer, William, M.R.C.S., Surgeon to Ottoman Embassy.
 Arnott, J. Moncrieff, F.R.S., F.R.C.S.
 Ashwell Samuel, M.D.,
 Ashburner, J., M.D.
 Babington, B. G., M.D.
 Bacot, John, F.R.C.S.
 Balbirnie, J., M.A., M.D.
 Ballard, T., M.R.C.S.
 Baly, Wm., M.D.
 Barker, Edgar, M.R.C.S.
 Barnwell, W., M.R.S.C.
 Barnwell, W. H., M.R.C.S.
 Bennett, J. R., M.D.
 Betson George, M.R.C.S.,
 Billing, A., M.D.
 Bird, F., M.D., Lecturer.
 Black, P., M.D.
 Bostock, John, M.D., F.R.S., F.L.S.
 Bowman, W., F.R.C.S.
 Brett, W., M.R.C.S.
 Bright, Richard, M.D., F.R.S., Physician to the Queen.
 Bristowe, J. S., M.R.C.S.
 Broackes, W., M.R.C.S.
 Brodie, Sir B. C., Bart, F.R.S., Sergeant Surgeon to the Queen, Surgeon to Prince Albert.
 Bruce, Alexander, M.R.C.S.
 Budd, G., M.D.
 Bull, T., M.D.
 Burnett, Sir W., M.D., F.R.S., Physician General to the Navy.
 Burnie, W., M.D.
 Burrows, George, M.D.
 Caldwell, H. S., M.D.
 Campbell, J. S., M.D.
 Canton, Alfred, M.R.C.S.
 Chalmers, Wm., M.D., Croydon.

Chambers, W. F., M.D., F.R.S., Physician to the Queen and Queen Dowager.
 Chapman, John, M.R.C.S.
 Chappell, I. C., M.R.C.S.
 Clarke, F., M.R.C.S.
 Clarke, J. A., M.B.
 Clark, Sir James, Bart., M.D., F.R.S., Physician in Ordinary to Her Majesty and Prince Albert.
 Conquest, J. T., M.D.
 Copland, James, M.D., F.R.S., Author of the Dictionary of Practical Medicine.
 Cort, H. H., Surgeon.
 Darling, George, M.D.
 Daubeny, H., M.D.
 Davies, Henry, M.D., M.R.C.S.
 Dickson, S., M.D.
 Dudgeon, R. E., M.D.
 Dunlap, James, M.D., M.R.C.P.
 Dunstford, H., M.D., M.R.C.S.
 Dutton, Douglas, M.R.C.S.
 Edwards, R. C., M.D.
 Elliot, Robert, Surgeon.
 Encone, John, Surgeon.
 Engall, T., M.R.C.S.
 Eyre, Sir James, M.D., M.R.C.S.
 Fagg, E., M.R.C.S.
 Fairhead, James, Surgeon.
 Farre, A., M.D.
 Ferrier, James C., M.D., Brixton.
 Ferguson, William, F.R.C.S., Professor.
 Ferguson, Robert, M.D., Physician Accoucheur to the Queen.
 Fitz Maurice, G. L., F.R.C.S.
 Flower, J. S., M.R.C.S.
 Forbes, John, M.D., F.R.S., Physician to the Queen's Household, Prince Albert, and Duke of Cambridge.
 Gay, F., F.R.C.S.
 Girdwood, G. F., M.D.
 Goddard, L. M., M.R.C.S.
 Goolden, R. H., M.D.
 Grainger, R. D., F.R.S., Lecturer.
 Grant, N., M.D.
 Graves, W. H., M.R.C.S.
 Gray, John, M.D.

Gregory, George, M.D.
 Guthrie, C. G., M.R.C.S.
 Guy, W. Augustus, M.B., Cantab. Professor.
 Guy, H., Surgeon.
 Hall, Marshall, M.D., F.R.S., &c.
 Hammond, G. T., M.R.C.S.
 Hancorne, R., M.R.C.S.
 Hands, D., M.R.C.S.
 Hardinge, H., M.R.C.S.
 Hare, Samuel, M.R.C.S.
 Hawkins, C. H., F.R.C.S.
 Hawkins, F. M.D.
 Hicks, F. E., M.R.C.S.
 Hicks, R., Surgeon.
 Hills, R., M.R.C.S., M.D.
 Hoffman, A. W., Professor.
 Holt, Henry Frederick, Surgeon.
 Hue, C., M.D., Senior Physician to Bartholomew Hospital.
 Hume, Joseph, M.P., and M.D.
 Hunt, H., M.D.
 Jay, Edward, M.R.C.S.
 Johnston, John, M.D.
 Johnstone, F. G., M.R.C.S.
 Judd, W. H., F.R.C.S., Surgeon to Prince Albert.
 Key, C. Aston, F.R.C.S., F.R.S., Surgeon in Ordinary to Prince Albert.
 Kiernan, Fran., F.R.C.S., F.R.S.
 King, T. K., M.R.C.S.
 Lane, S., M.R.C.S.
 Latham, P.M., M.D., Physician to the Queen.
 Lattey, A. H. H., M.R.C.S.
 Langmore, W. B., M.R.C.S.
 Leeson, J., M.R.C.S.
 Liddell, J., M.D., Greenwich Hospital.
 Little, W. J., M.D.
 Love, James, Surgeon.
 Lovell, C. H., M.D.
 Macgregor, J. J., M.D.
 Maclure, William, Surgeon.
 Malcolm, George, Surgeon.
 Mantell, G. A., LL.D., F.R.S., F.R.C.S.
 Martin, J. R., F.R.S., F.R.C.S.
 Massol, J., M.D.
 McGrigor, Sir James, Bart., M.D., F.R.S., LL.D., Director General Army Med. Department.
 McKenzie, F. W., M.D., M.R.C.S.
 McManus, David, M.D.
 Merriman, S. W. J., M.D.
 Merriman, Samuel, M.D.
 Mitchell, J. T., M.R.C.S.
 Moat, W. C., M.R.C.S.
 Monroe, E. T., M.D.
 Moore, Thomas, M.R.C.S.
 Morrison, James, M.R.C.S.
 Normansell, W., Surgeon.
 North, John, M.R.C.S.
 Norton, M., M.R.C.S.
 Oxley, W., M.D.
 Palmer, T., M.B.
 Paris, J. A., M.D., F.R.S., Pres. Royal Coll. Physicians.
 Park, J. R., M.D., F.L.S.
 Parker, H., M.B.
 Parker, F. H., Surgeon.
 Peacock, T. B., M.D.
 Pereira, Jonathan, M.D., F.R.S., M.R.C.S., Lecturer.
 Pettigrew, T. J., F.R.S., F.R.C.S.
 Pitman, H., M.D.
 Preston, W. J., M.R.C.S.
 Pretty, G. W., M.R.C.S.
 Prout, W., M.D., F.R.S., (Bridgwater Treatise).
 Rees, H., M.R.C.S.
 Ridge, Joseph, M.D.
 Richard, T. A., M.R.C.S.

Robins, W., Surgeon.
 Roget, P. M., M.D., F.R.S., (Bridgwater Treatise).
 Roupell, G. L., M.D.
 Rowden, H. M., M.R.C.S.
 Royle, J. F., Professor, M.D., F.R.S.
 Savage, Henry, M.D., F.R.C.S.
 Scanlan, Edward, M.R.C.S.
 Scatliff, John Parr, M.R.C.S.
 Seldard, John, Surgeon.
 Silvester, Thomas H., M.D., Clapham.
 Shaw, Alexander, F.R.C.S.
 Simpson, William, M.R.C.S.
 Smith, W. B., Surgeon.
 Smith, Andrew, M.D., Deputy Inspector of Army Hospitals.
 Snow, J., M.D.
 Southey, H. H., M.D.
 Tapson, A. T., M.B.
 Tatum, Thomas, F.R.S.
 Thomson, W., M.D., M.R.C.S.
 Thomas, Henry, M.R.C.S.
 Thompson, Theophilus, M.D.
 Toynebee, Joseph, F.R.C.S., F.R.S.
 Ure, Andrew, M.D., F.R.S.
 Ure, Alexander, F.R.C.S.
 Wade, R. G., Surgeon.
 Walker, J. Ewart, M.D.
 Walker, John, M.D.
 Watson, Thomas, M.D.
 Watson, G. H., M.R.C.S.
 Webster, George, M.R.C.S.
 White George, Surgeon.
 Williams, C. J. B., M.D., Professor.
 Wilks, G. A. T., M.D.
 Willson, Erasmus, F.R.C.S., F.R.S.
 Yearsley, James, M.R.C.S.

ASHTON-UNDER-LYNE.

Booth, Henry, M.R.C.S.
 Brewster, Robert Gray, M.R.C.S.
 Buchanan, Stanley, M.R.C.S.
 Campbell, John, M.D.
 Cluley, William, M.R.C.S.
 Cooke, Frederick, M.R.C.S.
 Galt, J., M.R.C.S.
 Hunt, Joseph, Surgeon.
 Hyde, Robert, M.R.C.S.
 Lees, S. D., M.D., F.R.C.P., M.R.C.S.L.
 Moore, Nathaniel, M.R.C.S.
 Schofield, Joseph, M.R.C.S.
 Woollam, George, M.D.

BIRMINGHAM.

Davies, J. B., M.D.
 Evans, G.F., M.D.
 Heeley, Alfred, Surgeon.
 Melson, J. B., A.M., M.D., Cantab.
 Palmer, S., M.D.
 Palmer, S. F., M.R.C.S.
 Percy, John, M.D.
 Wright, S., M.D.

BROADSTAIRS.

Potter, Samuel, Surgeon.
 Walter, C. J., ditto.

BURY.

Bott, Thomas, M.R.C.S.
 Boutflower, John Johnson, Surgeon.
 Chadwick, John, M.D.
 Fletcher, Matthew, M.R.C.S.
 Gibson, J. Y., M.R.C.S.
 Goodlad, J., Surgeon.
 Hinxman, Henry James, M.D.
 Lord, James, M.R.C.S.
 Niblott, Robert, M.R.C.S.
 Parks, John, M.R.C.S.

Parks, James, M.R.C.S.
 Rayner, William, M.R.C.S.
 Wardleworth, Thomas H., Surgeon.
 Wood, J. Yorke, M.R.C.S.

CORNWALL.

Bennett, W. P., M.R.C.S., Sandwith.
 Bradford, A., Surgeon, St. Colomb.
 Bullmore, F. C., ditto, Falmouth.
 Carruthers, J. A., Surgeon, Padstow.
 Fox, Joseph, Surgeon, Falmouth.
 Gaved, Arthur, M.R.C.S., St. Mabyns.
 Harnley, Joseph, Surgeon, Bodmin.
 Henwood, M.D., Helston.
 Illingworth, A., Surgeon, R.N., Fowey.
 Jewell, Samuel, Surgeon, Tregony.
 Jewell, D. M., Surgeon, Penryn.
 Kingston, Richard, Surgeon, Liskeard.
 Kingston, Andrew, M.R.C.S., Liskeard.
 Lanyon, Richard, M.R.C.S., Camborne.
 Lanyon, Richard, Surgeon, Lostwithiel.
 Lanyon, Edward, M.R.C.S., Camborne.
 Martyn, T. D., M.R.C.S., St. Colomb.
 Michell, W., M.D., Bodmin.
 Moorman, William, Jun., M.R.C.S., St. Colomb.
 Montgomery, James, M.D., Penzance.
 Mudge, Henry, Surgeon, Bodmin.
 Nation, Thomas, M.D., M.R.C.S., R.N.
 Robinson, F. J., M.R.C.S., Bodmin.
 Tickell, T. S., Surgeon, Wadsbridge.
 Trenery, G. W., Surgeon, Penryn.
 Trevan, Frederick, M.R.C.S., Port Isaac.
 Trevan, Matthew, Surgeon, Padstow.
 Vincent, P., Surgeon, Camborne.
 Ward, John, M.R.C.S., Bodmin.
 West, Thomas, M.R.C.S., Bodmin.
 White, E. S., M.R.C.S., Fowey.
 Wise, Richard, M.D., M.R.C.S., Penryn.

DUBLIN.

Adams, Robert, M.D.
 Aldridge, John, M.D., M.R.I.A.
 Carmichael, R., M.R.I.A., Surgeon.
 Carte, Alex, M.A., M.B., T.C.D.
 Curran, J. O., M.B., T.C.D., M.R.I.A., Professor.
 Hamilton, John, Surgeon, M.R.I.A.
 Hill, John, Surgeon, F.R.C.S., A.M., M.B.
 Marsh, H., M.D., Physician to the Queen.
 McDonnell, J., Surgeon.
 Mc Kewn, Thomas, M.D.
 Murray, James, M.D.
 Smigley, Josiah, Surgeon, A.B., F.R.C.S.I.
 Wilde, W. R., Surgeon, M.R.I.A.
 Wilmot, S., M.D., Professor.

EDINBURGH.

Alison, W. P., M.D., Professor, and Physician to the Queen.
 Anderson, A., M.D.
 Begbie, J., M.D.
 Burn, John, M.D.
 Combe, Andrew, M.D., Physician in ordinary to the Queen.
 Davidson, J. H., M.D.
 Fairbairn, P., M.D.
 Gillespie, A., M.D.
 Gray, William A., M.D.
 Henderson, William, M.D., Professor.
 Hunter, Adam, M.D.
 Keith, J., M.D., F.R.C.P.E.
 Keith, George, M.D.
 Laurie, James, M.D.
 Menzies, William, M.D.
 Middleton, John, M.D.
 Mitchell, Edward, Surgeon.
 McLeod, William, F.R.C.P.

Pow, James, Surgeon.
 Purdie, William, M.D.
 Spittal, Robert, M.D., F.R.C.P.
 Stewart, John, M.D.
 Syms, James, M.D.
 Tait, William, M.D.
 Taylor, J., M.D.
 Wood, Andrew, M.D., F.R.C.S.E.

ENFIELD.

Holt, A., M.D., F.R.C.S.
 Holt, W. H., M.D., F.R.C.S.
 Jameson, John, M.D.
 Miller, John, M.D., F.R.C.S.
 Tate, Robert, Surgeon.
 Taylor, W. G., M.R.C.S.

GALASHIELS.

Hutton, John, Surgeon.
 M'Dougall, George, Surgeon
 Weir, J. B., Surgeon.

GLASGOW.

Adams, A. M., M.D., Professor.
 Aitken, John, M.D.
 Anderson, A. D., M.D., F.R.C.S.,
 Brown, William, M.D.
 Brown, Archibald, M.D.
 Buchanan, M. S., M.D., Professor.
 Corbett, Robert T., M.D.
 Couper, John, M.D., Professor.
 Cunningham, Thomas, Surgeon.
 Dickson, J. R., M.D.
 Douglas, Charles, M.D.
 Fisher, Alexander, M.D.
 Gibson, David, M.D.
 Hall, Alfred, M.D., M.R.C.S.E.
 Houlds, Matthew, Surgeon.
 Inglis, Thomas, M.D.
 Jeffrey, James, Jun., M.D.
 Kerr, James, M.D.
 Kerr, William, Surgeon.
 Laurie, James Adair, M.D., Surgeon.
 Macfarlane, John, M.D.
 Macdonald, William, M.A., M.D.
 Maclaverty, Alexander, M.D.
 Marshall, Thomas, M.D.
 McDonnell, R. W., M.D.
 McKenzie, William, M.D., Surgeon Oculist to Her Majesty.

McKim, John, M.D.
 McMillan, Neil, M.D.
 Menzies, A. M., M.D.
 Miller, George, Surgeon.
 Moffatt, William, ditto.
 Paterson, Wm., M.D., M.R.C.S.
 Paterson, Thomas, M.D., M.R.C.S.
 Paterson, William, M.D., M.R.C.S.
 Perry, Robert, M.D.
 Pringle, William S., M.D.
 Reid, Andrew, M.D.
 Scott, G. M., M.D.
 Simpson, A., M.D.
 Stewart, P., M.D.
 Taylor, John, M.D., Professor.
 Thomson, Francis H., M.D.
 Thomson, Robert Dundas, M.D.
 Wilson, Andrew, M.D.
 Young, William, M.D.
 Young, A. K., M.D.

GUERNSEY.

Collenette, B., M.R.C.S.
 Corbin, M. A., M.R.C.S.
 De Lisle, D. B., M.D., M.R.C.S.
 Hoskins, S. Elliott, M.D., F.R.S.
 Lukes, F. Le, M.D., M.R.C.S.

Manger, John, Surgeon.
 Manger, Martin, M.R.C.S.
 Mansell, T. L., M. D.
 Ozanne, Joseph, M.R.C.S.
 Roberts, John, M.R.C.S.
 Scott, Francis, M. D.
 Tranter, P., M.R.C.S.

HAWICK.

Blyth, John, M.D.
 Douglas, John, Surgeon.
 Grant, J., M.D.
 Graham, Walter, M.D.

HEYWOOD.

Leach, Jesse, M.R.C.S.
 Taylor, James, M.R.C.S.

HITCHIN.

Hawkins, Frederic, M.D.
 Perks, Watson, Surgeon.
 Philson, William, M.D.
 Shillitoe, R. R., Surgeon.

HUDDERSFIELD.

Booth, Samuel, Surgeon.
 Hume, Joseph, M.D., M.P.
 Thomas, Wrigley, M.R.C.S.

JEDBURGH.

Affleck, John, M.D.
 Falla, James, Surgeon.
 Hilson, G., M.D.
 Hope, Adam, M.R.S.C.
 Thomson, Robert, Surgeon.

KIRKALDY.

Creelman, J. A., Surgeon.
 Hardy, S. W., M. D.
 Reid, Alexander, ditto.
 Smith, A. F., ditto.
 Storrer, James, ditto.
 Young, James, M. D.

LANGHOLM.

Jardine, D., Surgeon.
 Maxwell, William, Surgeon.
 Simpson, J., Surgeon.

LEAMINGTON.

Boulton, D'Arcy, Surgeon.
 Hamilton, William, M.D.
 Hanson, Newton, M.D.
 Homer, Henry, M.D.
 Horniblow, Richard, M.D.
 Jephson, Henry, M.D.
 Jones, R., Surgeon.
 Middleton, Amos, M.D.
 Middleton, William, Surgeon.
 Starr, T. H., M.D.
 Watson, W., Surgeon.

LEEDS.

Alderson, J., Sep.
 Almond, W.
 Atkinson, John, M.R.C.S.
 Atkinson, Robert,
 Bearpark, George E., M.R.C.S.
 Bell, Richard P.
 Bell, John,
 Blackitt, F.
 Booth, Thomas
 Braithwaite, William, Lecturer.
 Brooke, C.
 Brooke, C., junior.
 Capeland, T., M. D.
 Cass, W. R., F.R.C.S.
 Chorley, Henry, M.R.C.S.
 Clayton, William.
 Close, James.

Craven, Robert, M. D., M.R.C.S.
 Davison, John.
 Dobson, Thomas, M.R.C.S.
 Driffield, T.
 Foster, Edwin, M. D.
 Gisburn, I. H.
 Hall, Frederick.
 Halley, Alexander, M.D., M.R.C.S.—E.
 Hay, R. C., M.R.C.S.
 Hay, William, M.R.C.S.
 Heald, Samuel.
 Horton, Richard George, M.R.C.S.
 Irvine, F. W., M. D., M.R.C.S.E.
 Jackson, Matthew, M.R.C.S.G.
 Land, Thomas, M.R.C.S.
 Loe, Charles.
 Macfarlane, John, M.R.C.S.E.
 Marsden, Thomas Lowen, M.R.C.S.
 Millner, William,
 Morley, George, M.R.C.S.
 Pawson, Richard Dalby, M.R.C.S.
 Pullan, Richard,
 Radcliffe, Samuel, M.R.C.S.
 Ronayne, Charles K., M. D.
 Sayar, Thomas Foster, M.R.C.S.
 Scholefield, C. W.
 Sharpe, F., M.R.C.S.
 Smith, G. Pyemont, M. D., Lecturer.
 Smith, Samuel, F.R.C.S.
 Spence, J., Surgeon.
 Taylor, Joseph Mackenzie, M.R.C.S.
 Taylor W. Stead, M.R.C.S.
 Teale, Joseph, M.R.C.S.
 Teale, T. P., F.R.C.S.
 White, Jonathan, M.R.C.S.
 Wilson, George, M.R.C.S.

LEICESTER.

Arnold, W. W., M. D.
 Buck, John, Surgeon.
 Cooper, Alfred, ditto.
 Deakins, W., ditto.
 Denton, Joseph, ditto.
 Derington, William, ditto.
 Freer, J. B., M. D.
 Handley, J. F., Surgeon.
 Hanson, Sydney, M. D.
 Harding, Henry, Surgeon.
 Highton, Thomas, ditto.
 Nedham, John, ditto.
 Noble, J. W., M. B., Cantab.
 Paget, Thomas, Surgeon, F.R.C.S.
 Prosser, H. F., Surgeon.
 Shaw, George, M. D., F.R.C.P.
 Spencer, J. H., Surgeon.
 Stallard, W., ditto.
 Trull, John, ditto.

LEWES.

Barker, Thomas, M.D.
 Moon, Henry, M.D., M.R.C.S.

LIMERICK.

Bouchier, Thomas, M. D.
 Brodie, Michael, M. D.
 Carroll, John, M.D.
 Gabbett, R. M., M. D.
 Geary, William J., M. D.
 Gore, W. R., M. D.
 Griffin, William, M. D.
 Griffin, Daniel, M. D.
 Kane, T., M. D.
 Kidd, Charles, M. D.
 Lloyd, Edward, M.R.C.S.
 McCarthy, Thomas, M. D.

O'Flaherty, Denis, M.D.
 O'Shaughnessy, James, M.R.C.S.
 Sayers, James, M.D.
 Vereker, Amos, M.D.
 Worrall, Joseph, M.D.

LIVERPOOL.

Ackerly, R. Y., M.R.C.S.
 Archer, F., Surgeon.
 Arden, S., ditto.
 Arnold, James, ditto.
 Arnott, Archibald, ditto.
 Ashcroft, T. A., M.D.
 Ashcroft, John, Surgeon.
 Atcherley, John, ditto.
 Baylis, C. O., M.D., M.R.C.S.
 Batty, Edward, Surgeon.
 Barrow, J. B., Surgeon.
 Balman, Thomas, M.R.C.S.
 Banner, J. M., F.R.C.S.
 Beresford, Surgeon.
 Bickersteth, R., Surgeon.
 Blackburn, T., ditto.
 Blower, Benjamin, ditto.
 Bowman, Jonathan, M.D., M.R.C.S.
 Bruce, James, M.D.
 Burgess, R., Surgeon.
 Burgess, W., ditto.
 Brandreth, J. P., M.D.
 Brandreth, T., Surgeon.
 Bromilow, S., M.R.C.S.
 Bradley, E., M.R.C.S.
 Bridges, G., Surgeon.
 Bradshaw, Thomas, ditto.
 Burrows, John, M.R.C.S.
 Callon, W. T., M.R.C.S.
 Cameron, John, M.D.
 Carron, T., M.D.
 Carson, James, M.B.
 Caspersorn, E., M.D., M.R.C.S.E. Birkenhead.
 Cattell, T. W., Surgeon.
 Chalmers, D., Surgeon.
 Chapman, M. J., M.D.
 Chesebrough, John, M.R.C.S., Everton.
 Clanton, S. S., M.D.
 Clark, G. S. S., M.D.
 Craig, James, Surgeon.
 Cripps, Frederick, M.R.C.S.
 Craig, John, Surgeon.
 Cocks, W. L., Surgeon.
 Cohen, Douglas, M.D.
 Collins, James, M.D.
 Cooper, James, Surgeon.
 Cooper, John, ditto.
 Davis, J. R., M.R.C.S.
 Deane, G. S., Surgeon.
 Deane, Samuel, M.D.
 Dowling, J. E., M.B., M.R.C.S.
 Drawbridge, J. H., M.R.C.S.
 Drew, H. P. L., M.R.C.S.
 Durkan, Eugene B., M.R.C.S.
 Easton, G. F., M.D., M.R.C.S.E.
 Eden, Thomas, M.R.C.S.
 Emett, Henry, M.R.C.S.
 Falloon, Edward, Surgeon, M.R.C.S.
 Fenton, John, M.R.C.S.
 Formby, Richard, M.D.
 Foulkes, J. C., M.R.C.S.
 France, William, Surgeon.
 Garthside, James, ditto.
 Gee, Robert, M.D.
 Gill, George, Surgeon.
 Gilmour, James, ditto.
 Gorst, R. E., Surgeon, Rockferry.
 Greatrex, C. B., Surgeon.
 Green, John, M.D., Newton.

Halliday, J., Surgeon.
 Hamilton, R., ditto.
 Hannah, William, ditto.
 Hannay, A., M.D.
 Harbord, H. G., M.R.C.S.
 Harris, J. P., Surgeon.
 Hawthorn, G. S., M.D.
 Hicks, J., Surgeon.
 Hickson, Robert, M.D.
 Hodson, T. L., M.R.C.S.
 Hodgson, Samuel, Surgeon.
 Honner, F. W., M.R.C.S.E.
 Hooke, A., Surgeon.
 Horrocks, W. H., Surgeon.
 Hughes, J., M.R.C.S.
 Hughes, John, Surgeon.
 Hughes, John, M.D.
 Hulme, Henry, Surgeon.
 Hutchinson, T. J., F.R.C.S.E.
 Hyams, Leopold, Surgeon.
 Ingham, Joseph, Surgeon.
 Inman, W. B., ditto.
 Jeffrey, A. C., ditto.
 Jeffreys, Thomas, M.D.
 Jennette, Matthew, Surgeon, Birkenhead.
 Johnson, James, M.R.C.S.
 Johnston, J., M.R.C.S.
 Jones, Ellis, Surgeon.
 Jones, J. J., ditto.
 Jorie, Charles, ditto.
 Kay, Richard, Surgeon.
 Kelly, James, M.D.
 Kenyon, James, M.R.C.S.
 Kilburn, W. D., Surgeon.
 Kingston, R., ditto.
 Latham, John, Surgeon, Wavertree.
 Lax, James, F.R.C.S.E.
 Leigh, P., M.R.C.S.
 Lewis, Thomas, M.B., M.R.C.S.
 Long, James, F.R.C.S.
 Lyddon, J. S., Surgeon, Birkenhead.
 Lister, Charles, M.R.C.S.
 Lodge, T. R., M.D.
 McCarron, W., M.R.C.S.
 MacCheane, W., Surgeon.
 MacCulloch, Samuel, ditto, M.R.C.S.
 MacGeorge, S. J., ditto.
 MacNicol, David H., M.D., M.R.C.S.
 Macrorie, David, M.D., M.R.C.S.
 Marshall, John, M.R.C.S.
 Marshall, Buchanan, M.D.
 Marshall, James, Surgeon.
 Marsh, Robert, ditto.
 Martin, Charles, M.D., M.R.C.S.
 Moore, John, Surgeon.
 Nicholson, B., M.D., M.R.C.S.
 Nicol, John, M.D.
 Norris, Thomas, M.R.C.S.
 Nottage, J. B., M.R.C.S.
 Orpen, C. E. H., M.D., F.R.C.S., Birkenhead.
 Owen, H., M.R.C.S.E.
 Parke, Edward, M.R.C.S.
 Parkinson, Thomas, Surgeon.
 Parsons, W. D., M.R.C.S.
 Pearson, J. A., M.R.C.S.
 Peart, John, Surgeon.
 Pennington, Thomas, Surgeon.
 Percy, G. F. G., Surgeon.
 Petrie, James, M.D.
 Pilling, William, Surgeon.
 Pitcairn, Thomas, M.R.C.S.E.
 Poole, John, Surgeon.
 Radcliffe, H. H., M.R.C.S.
 Rawlins, Francis, M.D.
 Reynolds, William, M.D., Allerton.

Ricketts Charles, M.R.C.S.
 Ritchie, Robert, M.R.C.S.
 Robertson, Archibald, M.D.
 Robertson, J. A., M.R.C.S.
 Roche, John, M.D.
 Rowland, William, M.R.C.S.
 Rufford, C.D., M.R.C.S.
 Scholfield, H. D., M.B.
 Scott, R. W., M.D.
 Sibbald, R., M.R.C.S.
 Sinclair, John, M.D.
 Smith, Jerome, Surgeon.
 Smith, William, Surgeon.
 Sorley, Henry, M.D.
 Steele, A. B., M.R.C.S.
 Stephens, Alfred, M.R.C.S.E.
 Stevenson, William, Surgeon, Birkenhead.
 Stubbs, H., Surgeon.
 Shaw, Henry, M.R.C.S.
 Stokes, A., Surgeon.
 Sumner, R., Surgeon, Formley.
 Sutherland John, M.D.
 Swinden, Edward, M.R.C.S.
 Taylor, R. H., M.D.
 Taylor, H. S., Surgeon.
 Taylor, John, ditto.
 Taylor, William, M.D., M.R.C.S.
 Taylor, J. O., M.R.C.S.
 Townson, B., M.R.C.S.
 Trench, William, M.D.
 Turner, William, M.R.C.S.
 Vale, J. T., M.R.C.S.
 Vose, James, M.D.
 Walton, H. C., M.R.C.S.
 Wathing, J. W. H., M.R.C.S., Wavertree.
 Watson, G. C., M.D.
 Wilkie, George, M.D.
 Wright, John, M.R.C.S.

LOUGHBOROUGH.

Davis, D., Surgeon.
 Eddones, J. H., ditto.
 Hardwen, Arthur, M.B., M.R.C.S.

LOWESTOFT.

Brame, S. S., M.R.C.S.
 Jeffery, E., M.R.C.S.
 Worthington, W. C., F.R.C.S.

MANCHESTER.

Aikenhead, John, M.D.
 Alexander, G., M.D.
 Allen, Richard, M.R.C.S.
 Barnes, John, M.R.C.S.
 Beaver, Watson William, M.R.C.S.
 Bell, Charles W., M.D.
 Bent, James, Surgeon.
 Bevan, William, M.R.C.S.
 Birks, Edward Billett, Surgeon.
 Birks, George Vause, M.R.C.S.
 Blackmore, Edward, Surgeon.
 Booth, Benjamin W., M.R.C.S.
 Boutflower, John, F.R.C.S.
 Braid, James, M.R.C.S., Edin.
 Brown, James, M.R.C.S.
 Browne, Henry, M.B.
 Campbell, D. B., Surgeon.
 Carew, J. D., Surgeon.
 Cassels, Robert, M.D., M.R.C.P.
 Clay, Charles, M.D., M.R.C.P., M.R.C.S.
 Close, A. W., M.R.C.S.
 Cooper, Charles, Surgeon.
 Crompton, Samuel, M.R.C.S.
 Dunn, P. G., ditto.
 Eager, James, A.M., M.D.
 Edge, Peter Hulme, M.R.C.S.

Fletcher, John Shepherd, M.R.C.S.
 Furnival, William, M.R.C.S.
 Gardom, George, M.R.C.S.
 Golland, Walker, Surgeon.
 Goodman, John, M.R.C.S.
 Hardy, Frederick, M.D., M.R.C.P.
 Hatton, John, M.R.C.S.
 Heath, A., M.R.C.S.
 Heywood, Thomas, M.R.C.S.
 Holt, William, Surgeon.
 Howard, John, ditto.
 Howard, Richard B., M.D.
 Jepson, William, M.D.
 Larmath, Mark Oliver, Surgeon.
 Lomas, John, M.D., M.R.C.S.
 Mellar, Thomas, M.R.C.S.
 Nathan, L. H., M.R.C.S.
 Noble, Daniel, M.R.C.S.
 Plant, George, M.R.C.S.
 Richmond, Thomas G., Surgeon.
 Rix, Charles James, L.S.A.L.
 Roberts, Benjamin, M.R.C.S.
 Rowley, Edmund Butler, M.R.C.S.
 Satterthwaite, M., M.D.
 Slack, Thomas, M.R.C.S.
 Spence, John, M.R.C.S.
 Turner, Thomas, F.R.C.S.
 Wainwright, John Wells, M.D., M.R.C.S.
 Walker, Robert, M.D.
 Walmsley, Edward, M.R.C.S.
 Watson, Edward, M.R.C.S.
 Watts, Thomas H., M.D., M.R.C.P.
 White, William, M.D.
 Whitehead, R. Trafford, M.R.C.S.
 Wilkinson, J., M.D.
 Wilkinson, Thomas J., Surgeon.
 Wilson, William James, F.R.C.S.
 Winn, William, Surgeon.
 Windsor, John, F.R.C.S., F.L.S.
 Wood, J. B., M.D., M.R.C.S.

MARGATE.

Chambers, Frederick, M.D.
 Dennison, R. B., M.D.
 Hunter, George Yeates, Surgeon.
 Neame, John, ditto.
 Price, David, ditto.
 Waddington, Joshua, ditto.

NEWCASTLE-ON-TYNE.

Bates, J. N., M.D.
 Bulman, Darnell, M.D.
 Cargill, John, M.D.
 Charlton, Edward, M.D.
 Fife, Sir John, F.R.C.S.
 White, D. B., M.D.

NOTTINGHAM.

Attenburrow, H. C., F.R.C.S.
 Burrows, J. A., M.R.C.S.
 Caunt, I., M.R.C.S.
 Darby, Augustus, Surgeon.
 Davison, Robert, Surgeon.
 Eddison, Booth, F.R.C.S.
 Gill, William, M.D.
 Higginbottom, John, F.R.C.S.
 Higginbottom, Marshall Hall, M.R.C.S.
 Higginbottom, John, junior, M.R.C.S.
 Hutchinson, R., M.D.
 Lightfoot, Thomas, M.D.
 Marsh, John C. L., M.R.C.S.
 Massey, I., M.D.
 Purves, John C., M.D.
 Small, William, Surgeon.
 Stanger, G. E., Surgeon.
 Stiff, William P., M.B.

Taylor, Henry, M.D.
 Thompson, Joseph, Surgeon, M.R.C.S.
 Thompson, J. N., M.R.C.S.
 Truman, Becket, M.R.C.S.
 Watts, W., Surgeon.
 Watts, W., M.D.
 White, G. M., F.R.C.S.
 Wilson, Thomas, M.R.C.S.
 Wolstenholme, T., Surgeon.
 Worth, Thomas, M.R.C.S.
 Wright, William, F.R.C.S.
 Wright, Thomas, M.R.C.S. and M.D.
 Wright, John, M.R.C.S.
 Yates, Walter, Surgeon.

OLDHAM.

Dunkerley, Enoch, M.R.C.S.
 Fawsitt, Thomas, M.R.C.S.
 Fletcher, James, M.R.C.S.
 Hudson, George, L.L.A.
 Morley, James, C.H.
 Murray, James, M.D.
 Wilkinson, John H., M.R.C.S.

ORMSKIRK.

Ashton, T. M., M.R.C.S.
 Lax, William, M.R.C.S.
 Marsden, R. M., M.R.C.S.
 McMaster, P., M.R.C.S.

PAISLEY.

Banks, James, Surgeon.

RAMSGATE.

Ayres, Alfred C., Surgeon.
 Ayres, James, ditto.
 Barry, James Joseph, ditto.
 Beamish, F. P., M.D.
 Canham, Joseph, M.D.
 Courtney, A., Surgeon.
 Daniel, James S., Surgeon.
 Doyle, Michael John, M.B.
 Goodwin, John Medmer, Surgeon.
 Plenderleath, David, M.D.
 Snowden, G. S., Surgeon.
 Thompson, John B., ditto.
 Webster, James, ditto.

ROCHFORD.

Grabham, John, M.R.C.S.
 Hodge Richard, E.R.C.S.

ROCHDALE.

Barker, R. W., M.R.C.S.
 Bower, Robert, M.R.C.S.
 Buckley, N., M.D., F.L.S.
 Bucley, John, Surgeon.
 Butterworth, Benjamin, ditto.
 Collingwood, Thomas, M.R.C.S.
 Coventry, Alexander, Surgeon.
 Crowther, R., ditto.
 Dunlop, Walter, ditto.
 Lawton, James, M.R.C.S.
 Lamb, William Bingley, M.R.C.S.
 Morris, George, M.R.C.S.
 Wood, A., F.R.C.S.
 Wood, J. E., M.R.C.S.

SHEFFIELD.

Askham, William, Surgeon.
 Axe, William, M.D.
 Boulbee, Henry, F.R.C.S., F.L.S.
 Booth, W. H., M.R.C.S.
 Carr, John, Surgeon.
 Gillot, E. D. L., M.R.C.S.
 Gleadall, James, M.R.C.S.
 Holland, G. C., M.D.
 Jackson, William, F.R.C.S.

Le Tall, Benjamin, Surgeon, Handsworth.
 Machin, James, M.D.
 Martin, E., M.R.C.S.
 Parker, Samuel, Surgeon.
 Pearson, N., ditto.
 Ray, James, ditto.
 Roper, Robert, ditto.
 Shaw, John, Surgeon, Attercliffe.
 Sykes, John, M.R.C.S., Lecturer.
 Walker, James, M.R.C.S.
 Wilkinson, William, M.R.C.S.
 Wilson, K., M.D., M.R.C.S.
 Wood, Hugh, Surgeon.
 Wright, J. F., ditto.

STAINES.

Curtis, Frederick, Surgeon.
 Robinson, Frederic, ditto.
 Simmonds, John, M.D.
 Simpson, John N., Surgeon.

STALEY BRIDGE.

Cosgrave, J., M.D.
 Thompson, M.D., M.R.C.S.

TODMORDEN.

Cockcroft, D. M., M.R.C.S.
 Foster, Richard William, M.R.C.S.
 Hardman, James, Surgeon.
 Heyworth, Heyworth, ditto.
 Mitchell, W. G., ditto.
 Scholfield, Samuel, L.A.C.
 Sutcliffe, Charles, M.R.C.S.
 Taylor, James, M.R.C.S.

WALSALL.

Adams, G. T., Surgeon.
 Burton, John, M.D.
 Edwards, F. A., Surgeon.
 Fletcher, A. A., ditto.
 Palmer, F. P., ditto.
 Whymper, G. H., ditto.

WARRINGTON.

Davies, John, M.D.
 Hardy, G. W., M.R.C.S.
 Kendrick, James, M.D.
 Morley, William, M.R.C.S.
 Robson, John, Surgeon.
 Sharp, John, M.R.C.S.
 Steel, E., M.R.C.S.

WATERFORD.

Caret, J., F.R.C.S.
 Carroll, William, M.D.
 Elliott, John, A.M., M.B.
 Mackay, Thomas L., M.D.
 Mackesy, J. P., A.M., M.B.

WHITBY.

Clark, Samuel, M.D.
 Dowson, John, M.D., M.R.C.S.
 Merryweather, George, M.D.
 Ripley, John, L.R.C.S.
 Ripley, Richard, Surgeon.
 Ripley, Robert, M.R.C.S.
 Wilson, John, L.R.C.S.

WORCESTER.

Budd, H. W., Surgeon.
 Carden, H. D., F.R.C.S.
 Cole, Herbert, Surgeon.
 Hill, Hilary, M.R.C.S.
 Noel, D. C., M.R.C.S.
 Orwin, James, M.R.C.S.
 Shepherd, B., Surgeon.
 Sheppard, E., M.R.C.S.
 Stephenson, Thomas, M.R.C.S.

Walsh, T. H., F.R.C.S.
Wilson, J. W., F.R.C.S., Gloucester.

YORK.

Abbey, Thomas, Surgeon.
Allen, J., ditto.
Allen, James, M.R.C.S.
Barker, T. H., M.R.C.S.
Clark, George, M.R.C.S.
Coates, William, Surgeon.
Dolman, I. T., Surgeon.
Firth, Nathaniel, Surgeon.
Hopps, John, F.R.C.S.E.
Hope, W. Vane, Surgeon.
Labron, Edward, M.R.C.S.
Mann, W. D., Surgeon.
Marshall, William, Surgeon.
Matterson, William, M.R.C.S.
Matterson, William, Jun., Lecturer.
Moore, Oswald A., Surgeon, M.R.C.S.
Procter, William, M.R.C.S.
Puthill, Robert, M.R.C.S.
Scawin, William, junior, Surgeon.
Short, William, ditto.
Swineward, Frederick, ditto.
Thomas, Richard, ditto.
Walker, T. K., ditto.
Turley, E. A., M.R.C.S.

OTHER PLACES.

Linton, Alexander, M.R.C.S., R.N., Aberdeen.
Urquhart, Robert, Surgeon, Mintlaw, ditto.
Smith, George, Surgeon, New Deer, Aberdeenshire.
Barker, John, Surgeon, Aldborough.
Hare, H. W., Surgeon, Aldridge.
Reid, John, M.D., Professor St. Andrews, Scotland.
Taylor, Joseph, Surgeon, Appleby.
Hely, J. J., M.R.C.S., Ashby-de-la-Zouch.
Ingle, W. N., Surgeon, ditto.
Grindrod, R. B., L.L.D., Author of "Bacchus."
Duke, R. B., Surgeon, Arundel.
Hills, George, M.R.C.S., ditto.
Whitfield, Henry, Ashford, Kent.
Stewart, William, M.D., Bacup.
Worrall, J. H., M.R.C.S., ditto.
Pasley, W. H., M.R.C.S., Banwell.
Beaumont, Thomas, Surgeon, Bradford, Yorkshire.
Fletcher, M., Surgeon, Brightlingsea.
Sendamore, Edward, M.D., Canterbury.
McCarogher, Joseph, M.D., Chichester.
Garthside, M., Chorley.
McIllner, E., ditto, Claybrook.
Garstang, J., M.R.C.S., Clitheroe.
Earnshaw, M., Surgeon, ditto.
Honey, W. B., Surgeon, Coleford.
Coton, Richard, Surgeon, Collontou.
Jefferies, R. R., M.D., M.R.C.S., Dalkeith.
Fothergill, John, M.R.C.S., Darlington.
Young, John, Surgeon, Denholm.
Chaldecot, William, M.R.C.S., Dorking.
Hart, William, M.R.C.S., ditto.
Webster, George, M.D., Dulwich.
Aikman, George, Surgeon, East Linton.
Newman, George, M.R.C.S., Glastonbury.
Wilson, J. W., F.R.C.S., Gloucester.
Bentley, Joseph, Surgeon, Grantham.
Shillitoe, Richard, M.D., Hertford.
Morley, J. W., Newcastle.
Paterson, T. W., Surgeon, Istock.
Pearse, William, Surgeon, Launceston.
Stevenson, A. T., ditto, Lilliesleaf.
Barker, John, M.R.C.S.L., Littleborough.
Brown, W. N., M.D., Melrose.
Willow, J. W., M.R.C.S., Melton Mowbray.
Charles, Thomas, M.R.C.S., Menai Bridge.
Beresford, J. W., Surgeon, Narborough.

Hudson, E. D., Surgeon, Narborough.
Salter, Thomas, F.R.C.S., F.L.S., Poole.
Lacy, Edward, Surgeon, ditto.
Martin, Thomas, ditto, Reigate.
Skertchley, John, ditto, Rothley.
Chadwick, N. F., M.R.C.S., Royton.
Kershaw, W., M.R.C.S., ditto.
Wilkinson, Henry, ditto, Rotherham.
Anderson, Thomas, ditto, Selkirk.
Whitaker, J., M.R.C.S., Shaw.
Gale, Frederic, M.R.C.S., South Petherton.
Heginbotham, Henry, M.R.C.S., Stockport.
Brooke, John, Surgeon, ditto.
Delamotte, H. D. C., Surgeon, Swanage.
Willcox, Charles, M.R.C.S., ditto.
Slenan, Richard, M.R.C.S., Tavistock.
Brown, John, Surgeon, Waltham Abbey.
Williams, William, M.R.C.S., Wareham.
Bennett, L. M., M.R.C.S., Winterton.
Lambe, William, M.D., Weobley.
Collett, Henry, James, Surgeon, Worthing.
Lambe, L. W., M.D., ditto.
Taylor, J. E., M.R.C.S., Whitworth.
Prynn, E. M., M.R.C.S.
Hynd, L. R., M.D.
Campbell, James, L.R.C.S.E., R.N.

Subscriptions to the foregoing Document is still in progress in all quarters of the United Kingdom.

Miscellaneous.

TO MOTHERS.—One word as to nursing mothers. We once heard one of the most scientific medical men in London state in public, that it was his opinion, as well as that of the principal obstetrics of London, that the mother who drank alcoholic beverages whilst nursing her child, conveyed the alcohol at once to the brain of that child, and thus not only did present injury, but caused a lasting nervous sensitiveness. He added that, the irritable babe thus sent into sleep by the mother may be sometimes said to be intoxicated by the beverage taken by its parent. Oh, shocking thought! Many a mother in the bloom of health and loveliness has been prompted by friends and relatives—the doctors too aiding and abetting—to take porter and ale for nourishment whilst nursing her children—to take of that ale and porter which we have here shown does not contain more than a penny's-worth of nutriment in a whole gallon, and a poor penny's-worth it is. She has acquired the habit of taking stimulants; she has lost her personal beauty—becomes gross in appearance—unsound in constitution; consequently she has given unwholesome food to her babes, and she has become a source of grief and disquietude in her family. Oh, the number of female inebriates that are created by this means, none but medical men, who know the secrets of domestic families, can tell. It ought to be borne in mind also that Delavan, the great American temperance reformer, remarked, when at Exeter Hall, that he knew of ten thousand reformed male drunkards, but he did not know of one female reformed drunkard. Happily in England we know of some cases. It is a fallacy to give these beverages as nourishment. Take out the alcohol by evaporating the spirit—then let the nursing mother drink them—she will not repeat the draught—and mark that by so doing no part of the nourishment will be extracted. She will, we warrant it, soon be glad to exchange them for those things which contain plenty of nourishment, such as Scotch and pearl barley puddings made with plenty of milk—milk gruel—beef tea—mutton broth—and half a dozen other good things we could name. The real fact is, that ale and porter are given as stimulants in these cases—that they have their correspondent states of exhaustion; and great is the wear and tear of the machinery of the body in these cases. This stimulation and its collapse, so oft repeated, racks the beautiful machine, and gives premature age. The stimulating effects are mistaken for the nutritious properties. These malt liquors only force an increased secretion of milk, as the cow-keeper by the use of distiller's wash increases the product from his cows—adding to quantity whilst he reduces the quality, and by this means wears out the poor beast prematurely. The nursing mother who cannot find a supply of milk for her babe, without having recourse to alcoholic beverages, ought seriously to pause before she attempts to bring it up entirely from her own resources. May we not trace the convulsive fits so common to infants, to the indirect effect of intoxicating beverages, taken by their mothers, on the tender nervous system of their nurslings? In the language of the author of Anti-Bacchus, we would say: "the infant that hangs at his mother's breast, pines day and night under the pangs of dyspepsia, while the nutritious stream that nature has provided for his sustenance, poisoned with the alcohol that his mother drinks, feeds the disease, and condemns him to a life of suffering." Surely the Almighty parent of the universe never designed us to bring up our tender infants on intoxicating drinks!—Richard Dykes, F.L.S.

EXPENSIVENESS OF "STRONG DRINK."—The documents emanating from the late World's Temperance Convention afford a valuable insight to the waste of wealth occasioned by the use of intoxicating drinks. From the statistical papers, Appendix E, we find that in the town of Dundee, with a population of 70,000 persons, there are no less than 625 places applied to the sale of intoxicating drinks; and in the neighbourhood, with a population of 400,000, the drinking places amount to 5,055. In Glasgow, from May, 1845, to May, 1846, 1,200,000*l.* have been lavished upon strong drink. In Edinburgh, having a population of 169,450, the drinking places number 1,057; and the annual expenditure thereon is estimated at 339,144; the average quantity consumed by each individual, amounts to five gallons. In Norwich, a population of 70,000, support 625 drinking houses. In the counties of Monmouth and Glamorgan, a population of 87,154, support 549 drinking places. Methyrtidvil spends annually in these drinks 70,000*l.* Rhymney, 25,000*l.*; and Tredegar, 25,000*l.* In Newport, Monmouthshire, there are 241 drinking places to a population of 17,500; and at Bristol, the average annual expenditure of every inhabitant, man, woman, and child, in intoxicating drinks, amounts to 2*l.* In Oldham, 60,513 people support 250 drinking houses. Bury spends annually in the same way 13,547*l.* These items are enough to show how fearfully the resources of the British people are misapplied. And if any one would ask why are multitudes irreligious, immoral, ignorant, diseased, and poverty-stricken, let such statistics as these be a sufficient explanation. We have wealth enough, properly applied, to overcome an immensity of evil.

THE SCOURGE OF THE INDIAN.—The Council of the Creek Nation, at its last session, passed an act prohibiting the sale of liquor within the nation, and punishing the offence. A glorious example for many of our States, and one which would seem to show that upon this subject, the Indians are more enlightened than their white brethren. What a dreadful scourge has the white man's fire water been to them, and oh! how many witnesses will there be against him at the Judgment Bar of God.—Canada Temperance Advocate.

A WORD OF RESPECT FOR THE TEETOTALERS.—In a leading article on Mr. Bouverie's motion for a Committee of Inquiry on the Refusal of Sites for the Free Church of Scotland, makes the following remarks:—"The Teetotalers will come in under either head. They have public halls, festivals, and services. Some gentlemen look on them with an indulgent and even favourable eye; others, with suspicion and disgust. Are they to be denied a site for a hall or a chapel? Why? It is a matter of conscience. They consider their cause a new dispensation. Their numbers, their zeal, their industry, and the good they have done, entitle them to a share in the public protection."—Times.

TEMPERANCE AND INTEMPERANCE.—Hindoo and Christian.—When, six years ago, the 13th was cautioned at Cabul, Lieut.-Col. Dennie "called upon the men to consider the mortality which for a long time had afflicted the regiment, and to reflect upon the undoubted truth that, of nearly 100 men who had perished within the past year, the remote, if not immediate, cause of their disease and death, with few exceptions, had been liquor." He also said—"As soldiers, you must all know that the drunkards of the corps, whether in quarters or in the field, are always the most worthless. They can neither stand heat, nor cold, nor fatigue, and the more sober have their duties to perform. Observe the health and efficiency of the native regiments in garrison, with the condition of the followers of both corps, together more than four times the number of the 13th; these Indians, born in a tropical climate, never before saw nor felt snow nor ice; whereas the British soldier may here be said to be at home, with every advantage on his side, and yet they are healthy, and you are weak and sickly. Ask yourselves the cause of so wonderful a difference, and you must be conscious the only answer is that the Indians are temperate and you are an intemperate people."

TEMPERANCE ANECDOTE.—In Lewis and Clark's Travels among the Indians, is the following anecdote of the native good sense and virtue of the tribe of Ricaras. At the time it occurred, the value of the example was not practically appreciated by the civilized Americans, but in this day of temperance organization and practice, it will be felt. "We are gratified," say the travellers, "at discovering that these Ricaras made use of no spirituous liquors of any kind; the example of the traders who bring it to them, so far from tempting, having in fact disgusted them. Supposing that it was as agreeable to them as to the other Indians, we at first offered them whiskey; but they refused it with this sensible remark, 'that they were surprised that their fathers should present to them a liquor which would make them fools.'" On another occasion they observed to M. Tabean, "that no man could be a friend who tried to lead them into such follies."

TEMPERANCE IN FOREIGN NAVIES.—An extract from a letter in a late London paper, gives the glad intelligence that the Temperance Society is having great influence over the sailors of the navy of Sweden and Norway. Out of the 444 men forming the crews of the Norwegian frigate Freca, and the Swedish sloop Nordsternen, which have just left Christiania for the Mediterranean, 302, that is more than two-thirds of them, have desired to receive rations of tea and coffee, instead of brandy.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

Several Communications must stand over for want of room.

We cannot promise attention to any intelligence reaching us after the 15th.

Contributions addressed to the Editor of the National Temperance Chronicle, are respectfully invited.

Advertisements.

IPSWICH

JUVENILE TEMPERANCE BOOKS.

A Series in 32mo., with coloured covers, and illustrated with handsome woodcuts, in sixpenny packets, of glazed coloured paper. A sample will be sent, post free, for 18 pence.

	PAGES
1. The History of Teetotalism	20
2. Scriptural Teetotalism	20
3. Teetotalism of Ancient History	20
4. Teetotalism of Modern History	20
5. The cost of Intemperance	20
6. Self-denial	20
7. Early Habits	20
8. The Force of Example	20
9. A Letter to Sunday School Children	20
10. H. Hawkins, the Drunkard's Daughter	20
11. Christian Courtesy and Benevolence	20
12. The Young Chemist's Inquiry	20
13. Little Henry and the Teetotal Festival	20
14. The Young Reasoner's Objections to Teetotalism	20
15. The Fear of Ridicule	20
16. The Teetotalism of Travellers	20
17. Temptation Resisted	12
18. What Little Boys can do for Teetotalism	12
19. Little Mary	16
20. Lucy Grey and her Pet Pigeon	8
21. What Little Girls can do for Teetotalism	12
22. Poor Little Willie	12
23. The Sixpenny Glass of Wine	12
24. The Town Meeting; License or no License	12

ASSORTED PACKETS.—No. 1, 1 to 16—No. 2, 17 to 24, inclusive.

IPSWICH TEMPERANCE TRACTS.

Those Tracts marked with an * have PICTURES and are on better paper, 148 pages, in a sixpenny packet. The others have 168 pages to the packet.

1. The Doctor Scrutinized, or for what purpose do Physicians prescribe Alcoholic Beverages, by R. D. Alexander, F.L.S., 122 thousand	8
2. Striking Facts, 84 thousand	2
3. Maker and Vender, 44 thousand	2
4. Our Creed, 47 thousand	2
5. Adulterated Beer, 34 thousand	4
6. Adulterated Wine, 40 thousand	4
7. The Malster, 37 thousand	4
8. Go Feel what I have Felt, 53 thousand	2
9. Facts are Stubborn Things, 48 thousand	2
10. The Spirit Dealer, 35 thousand	2
11. Christian Teetotalism, 70 thousand	2
12. The Trade, 33 thousand	4
13. Alcohol, 33 thousand	4
14. The Town of Ipswich, 33 thousand	4
15. Song of the Water Drinker, 37 thousand	2
16. Stimulation not Strength, 30 thousand	3
17. Farmer Woodman's Speech, 41 thousand	4

	PAGES
18. The Beer Barrel Examined, 28 thousand	8
19. Teetotal Recipes, 38 thousand	4
20. Speech of J. J. Gurney, 30 thousand	4
21. Pity the Poor Drunkard 49 thousand	2
22. The Fool's Pence, 25 thousand	8
23. Why am I a Teetotaler? 26 thousand	2
24. Dost thou smoke, Bill? 34 thousand	4
25. William the Laudanum Drinker, 30 thousand	4
26. The Ox Discourse	4
27. Letter to the Clergy, by a Brother Clergyman, 21 thousand	20
28. Common Sense, by a member of the University of Cambridge, 20 thousand	2
29. Ralph the Soldier	4
30. Testimony of Eminent Physicians, 30 thousand	4
31. The Working Man, 35 thousand	20
32. Is I not happy? by Hugh Stowell, 30 thousand	4
33. David the Shoemaker, 49 thousand	4
34. The Drunken Couple, 48 thousand	2
35. Confessions of a drunkard, 29 thousand	2
36. Master Tailor, 20 thousand	4
37. The Fatal Gift, 36 thousand	2
38. Poor Sandy	4
39. Use & abuse, by Archdeacon Jeffreys, 34 thousand	2
40. The Schoolmaster	4
41. Water is Best, by J. J. Gurney, 37 thousand	8
42. Cobbett's Advice	4
43. Take a Public House	4
44. A Sailor's Yarn	4
45. Moderate Drinking Calmly Considered	12
46. The Pledge	4
47* John Jarvis, or the Pledge Signed	12
48* The Fifteen Friends	4
49. Sunday School Teachers, 22 thousand	12
50. Sunday School Children, 40 thousand	12
51. Money better than Beer, 37 thousand	4
52* Little Mary; or a Daughter's Love	8
53. Philosophy of the Temperance Movement, by R. T. Trall, M.D.	20
54. Love to Man, or an Appeal to the Pious	20
55. The Young Woman's Tract	12
56. The Young Man's Tract	16
57. Dr. Campbell's Testimony, 18 thousand	8
58. Why Sign the Pledge? 40 thousand	2
59. The Poor Man's House Repaired	4
60. The Mother's Tract	8
61. The High Price of Food	4
62. Ladies' Tract Societies	8
63. The Praise of Water, 25 thousand	2
64. Important Calculation, 30 thousand	2
65. The Farm Servant, 25 thousand	2
66. Teetotalism Declining, 15 thousand	8
67. The Reformed Drunkard, and the best means of Reforming the Drunkard, 20 thousand	8
68. The Recruit of the British Legion	8
69. No. 1 of Temperance Anecdotes	12
70. No. 2 ditto	12
71. No. 3 ditto	12
72. No. 4 ditto	12
73. Luke Husler, or "I did not like to say No."	8
74. The Drunkard's Wife	8
75. The Unexplored Island	4
76. Ancient Wines; by R. D. Alexander	8
77. Influence of Example, 15 thousand	2

ASSORTED PACKETS—No. 1, containing 1 to 31.—No. 2, 32 to 55.—No. 3, 56, and upwards.

Fifty Packets of either Juvenile Temperance Books or Tracts will be delivered in London for a Guinea, sent by Post Office Order, to Richard Dykes Alexander, Ipswich.

London: Simpkin and Marshall.

TEMPERANCE

PROVIDENT INSTITUTION,
39, MOORGATE STREET, LONDON.

Enrolled under Act of Parliament, 31st December, 1840.

DIRECTORS.

R. D. Alexander, Esq.	C. H. Lovell, Esq., M.D.
Rev. W. R. Baker.	J. T. Mitchell, Esq.
Richard Parrett, Jun., Esq.	J. Talbot Tyler, Esq.
Samuel Bowly, Esq.	Richard Walkden, Esq.
Robert Charleton, Esq.	Robert Warner, Esq.
H. F. Cotterell, Esq.	John Wason, Esq.
John Eliot, Esq.	Edward Webb, Esq.

SECRETARY.

Theodore Compton, Esq.

BANKERS.

Messrs. Barclay, Bevan & Co.

THE SIXTH ANNUAL REPORT may now be had gratis on application.

This is the ONLY OFFICE in which Teetotalers can assure without having to pay for the losses occasioned by MODERATE drinking, as well as by intemperance.

The DEATHS in six years have been LESS THAN HALF the number in other offices.

ALL THE PROFITS belong to the Members. There are no other Shareholders to absorb the surplus funds.

ANY SUMS may be assured, from £10 upwards, and any sums paid in from time to time, at the Member's convenience, and a proportionate Assurance will be granted.

NOMINEES may be appointed to receive the benefits, FREE OF DUTY, and all taxes and expenses, and without the trouble, delay, and cost of proving a will.

TEETOTALERS are strongly recommended to join at once, before the first bonus is apportioned.

Every particular, with the rules, scales of payment, &c., may be had by writing to the Secretary, and of all the local agents.

WOMAN'S DUTIES AND WOMAN'S INFLUENCE.

April 15th, will be published, Price ONE PENNY, No. 4, of

THE TEETOTAL ESSAYIST,

OR

MONTHLY TEMPERANCE STANDARD;

Containing,—“THE WORN-OUT THIMBLE; a Story of Woman's Duty and Woman's Influence, in connexion with the Temperance Reformation,”—written expressly for this work, by Mrs. S. C. HALL; with other interesting and important articles.

No. 5, of the Essayist, to be published May 15th, will contain an Essay “ON THE IMPORTANCE OF THE TEMPERANCE REFORMATION IN CONNEXION WITH THE MAINTENANCE AND SPREAD OF CHRISTIANITY;”—for which the Premium of Ten Pounds has been awarded to the Rev. F. W. WHEELER, Missionary, St. Andrews, Jamaica; the Adjudicators being the Rev. John Campbell, D. D., London; the Rev. W. H. Turner, A. M., Vicar of Banwell; and the Rev. W. Morton, of Ramsgate.

Single copies of the Essayist, will be sent regularly, post free, to every Subscriber of One Shilling per annum in advance. Societies will be supplied at 6s. per 100, which will be sent to them free, either in parcels, or in single copies directed to persons whose names may be furnished.—Orders for ENGLAND to be sent to Mr. JOHN CASSELL, 14 and 15, Budge Row, London, with the amount in Post-Office Orders, or Postage Stamps.

* * * The NATIONAL TEMPERANCE CHRONICLE and TEMPERANCE RECORDER is published on the first day of each month, at HOULSTON & STONEMAN, the Depôt of the National Temperance Society, 65, Paternoster-row, and will be sent post-free for one year on receipt of 2s. 6d. postage labels. Annual Subscriptions received at the Society's office, 11, Tokenhouse Yard, London, and subscriptions and donations for the general purposes of the Society, by the Treasurer, G. W. ALEXANDER, 40, Lombard Street; by any Member of the Committee, and at the office as above.

LONDON TEMPERANCE TRACTS,

UNDER THE SANCTION OF THE

National Temperance Society.

The above Tracts comprise a variety of 150 different sorts, and embrace every point of the principle of Total Abstinence. Upwards of

THREE MILLION

have already been circulated. 2 pp. 8d.; 4 pp. 1s. 4d.; 8 pp. 2s. 8d. per 100., or in packets, assorted, 6d. each.

For the convenience of LOAN CIRCULATION, they are assorted into 60 sets, containing 16 pp. in each, and stitched into a strong wrapper, with a suitable address upon each, price 8s. per 100. Liberal allowance for large quantities. Lists may be obtained of the Publishers gratis.

HOULSTON & STONEMAN, 65, Paternoster Row.

Just Published.

THE WORLD'S

TEMPERANCE CONVENTION.

THE REPORT OF THE

PROCEEDINGS OF THE CONVENTION,
WITH AN INTRODUCTION,

By ELIHU BURRITT.

And a selection of the most valuable papers sent into the Business Committee.

The Committee, in order to invite a large sale, have decided upon publishing the volume at cost price.

Sewed in wrapper, 1s. Bound in cloth, 1s. 6d.

Considerable allowance will be made to Individuals and Societies wishing to distribute gratuitously.

C. GILPIN, Bishopsgate Street Without; HOULSTON AND STONEMAN, Paternoster Row.

PUBLISHED WEEKLY,

(In time for Country Parcels.)

The People's Temperance Journal.

It is the intention of the Conductors of this Publication to make it the Mirror of Passing Events, bearing directly or indirectly on the interests of the Temperance cause, and thoroughly independent of any sect or party in the movement. They will endeavour to gather round them the able talent from every part of the kingdom, and thus give their readers a bird's-eye view of all that is passing of interest to the Temperance Reformer. The advantages of a public organ of this description commend themselves to every friend of Temperance, and the conductors of the

PEOPLE'S TEMPERANCE JOURNAL, are hopeful that they will be extensively appreciated.

Order the People's Temperance Journal, published by W. Brittain, 11, Paternoster Row; J. H. Woody, 19, Aldermanbury Postern; and MAY BE HAD THROUGH ALL BOOKSELLERS.

London: Printed by RICHARD BARRETT of 3, Regent-terrace City-road, in the Parish of St. Luke, in the County of Middlesex, Printer; at his Printing Office, No. 13, Mark-lane, in the Parish of Allhallows Staining, in the City of London; and published by JOHN STONEMAN, of 24, Brooksbury Street, in the Parish of Islington, in the County of Middlesex, at HOULSTON and STONEMAN'S, No. 65, Paternoster-row, in the Parish of St. Michael-le-Querne, in the City of London, Publishers.—Thursday, April 1st, 1847.

THE
NATIONAL TEMPERANCE CHRONICLE
 AND
TEMPERANCE RECORDER.

It is good neither to eat flesh, nor to drink wine, nor anything whereby thy brother stumbleth, or is offended, or is made weak.—ROM. XIV. 21

No. 17, JOINT SERIES.]

MAY, 1847.

[PRICE 1d., STAMPED 2d.]

CONTENTS.

	PAGE		PAGE
Beer Shops	73	EDITORIAL REMARKS—
Alcohol in Consumption.....	74	The National Temperance Society—Subscriptions—
Address to the Friends and Promoters of the Temperance		Medical Certificate	80
Reformation throughout Great Britain and Ireland	75	FOREIGN INTELLIGENCE—
To the Influential Classes	76	Sandwich Islands—Mexico	82
Profligate Pauperism	77	HOME INTELLIGENCE—
Temperance a means of Elevating the Working Classes ..	78	Dunmow, Essex — Dorking — Lowestoft — Preston—
Canteens	78	Leeds—Cirencester—Brill—Merthyr Tydvil—Sheerness 82-84
The Free Church on Intemperance.....	79	Scottish Temperance League.....	85
Keeping open of Beer-shops	79	MISCELLANEOUS—
Spirit Ration in the Navy.....	79	A Hint to Wives—Temperance Bazaar—Strong Drink and Strong Ideas—Poetry, The Famine in Scotland 85-86
		Literary Notices	86
		Advertisements	87-88

BEER SHOPS.

In another part of this Chronicle will be found an Extract from the Parliamentary Report, by which it will be seen that Mr. Muntz, one of the Members for Birmingham, made a motion, for leave to bring in a Bill to “enable retail brewers in the midland counties to keep open their houses till 12 o'clock at night, the same as the metropolitan retail brewers.”

It is a remarkable fact, that no Session of Parliament is allowed to pass over without some measure of legislation to regulate a traffic so obviously opposed to the true interests of the community. The eve of a general election, we think an appropriate time to call the attention of our readers, not only to the demoralizing nature of the trade, but to the influence those engaged in it have upon the institutions of the country, and in controlling the legislature. It is of comparatively little use petitioning the House of Commons upon any subject, unless we have the power of making our opinions felt. Unhappily, those who are engaged in the traffic in strong drinks, have a power of influencing the legislature, which the friends of morality and good order do not possess.

It is known that the National Temperance Society adopted a petition to the House of Commons, on the subject of the grain used in breweries and distilleries. This was followed by petitions from other places, and members were applied to, to make some specific motion on the subject. The answer was candid, but significant of the influence to which we have referred: that no member of that house could undertake to introduce such a motion, without endangering his seat. A general election was near, and no one, who sought to be returned, could brave the opposition of the manufacturers and venders of strong drink. The same answer was given to gentlemen who were anxious to promote an inquiry into the effect of the license laws upon the public health and morality; and those who have wished to promote legislation for the suppression of the Sunday Traffic, have confined their appeals very much to the House of Lords, considering the other branch of the legislature as too much shackled to have freedom of action. We could refer to individual cases. We know one town, with its 1300 houses licensed for the sale of intoxicating poisons, where it is boasted that the publicans could elect whom they chose, and we need not call public attention to the wholesale demoralization which has gone on at our elections, mainly through the agency of strong drink. If it be true that one interest in the empire exercises so powerful and potent an influence over its political as well as social character, it is time that the friends of temperance should make an inquiry into its extent. Certain it is, that our moral efforts will be ineffectual in stemming the monster vice of intemperance, unless aided by practical measures. And as many of these will be of a legislative character, the members of Temperance Societies ought to be awakened to the duty of urging upon their representatives, at the time when the voice of the constituency is particularly audible, during the canvass and at the hustings, the claims of the temperance movement. There is no other cause occupying the attention of the public mind—of half the importance to the national good. And whilst great questions are in debate as to Education and Sanitary Reform, it is incumbent upon us to shew the obstacles that prevent the spread of education, as well as the application of every plan of improvement. Why, then, should an opportunity be neglected of pressing home upon those engaged in discussing measures of such great moment, the claims of a cause, the success of which is so intimately blended with the advance of civilisation, and the spread of religion.

At this time, when our records of crime, disease and mortality, speak so loudly the effects of our drinking system—when, in addition to this, a nation's food is proved to have been turned into poison—while that nation is suffering all the horrors of famine—no occasion of reading a lesson to the higher classes on the subject ought to be lost. The time is coming when that lesson may be read with advantage, and we hope it will not be lost.

ALCOHOL IN CONSUMPTION.

We understand there are some highly respectable physicians in this city, who entertain the opinion, and regulate their practice by the doctrine, that alcohol is a remedial agent in, and preventive of, that common and fatal disease, consumption. The importance of knowing the truth, and the whole truth, on this subject, will be appreciated by all. If this doctrine is true, we have but a choice of evils. If it is not true, we then have the privilege of choosing all the good, and avoiding all the evil. If it is true, we are prepared to advocate the practice it indicates, though at the dreadful cost of engendering the fearful appetite for alcoholic stimulus, and the certain infliction of innumerable miseries on society. We are not at liberty to act against truth, whatever may be the consequences. We have an abiding confidence in truth in all things. We believe there is no truth in nature or in science but harmonizes with every other truth, and conduces to the "greatest good of the greatest number." But, is it true? Does not its admission at once involve an absurdity—nature at war with herself? Does it not confound the agent of destruction and death with the laws of life and health, and place them in the relation of cause and effect? If the theory we are considering is but a fallacy, it ought to be exposed. We propose, therefore, very briefly to examine this whole subject, and we do so for the special purpose of inviting the attention of the medical profession of this city to our positions and arguments, offering any one of them the use of our columns, to correct or controvert aught we advance which they conceive to be unsound. While we are anxious to elicit "the whole truth," we would fain present "nothing but the truth."

We take the broad ground that alcohol is not, in any proper sense, a remedy for consumption when the disease exists, nor a preventive where the predisposition exists. Let us not be misunderstood. We say in any proper sense: its use may indeed be a preventive, on the principle that hanging a man in a season of famine would prevent death by starvation. But those agents whose effects, immediate or remote, are worse than the original disease, we do not consider remedial in any proper sense.

Of the various "strong points" urged in favour of alcohol in consumption we have only space to select the strongest. If we can demolish these, the others may perhaps fall of their own inherent weakness. They are:—1. Very few drunkards or drinking persons die of consumption. 2. Post-mortem examinations in the cases of drunkards and drinking men, generally evince a comparatively sound condition of the lungs.

We reply: Consumption is rarely, we believe, never, a disease of the lungs idiopathically; it is always a general or constitutional disease, a disease of the whole body. It is, too, a disease of artificial society, the disease of civilization, as alcohol is, most unfortunately, the remedy of civilization.

In the lower orders of animals, consumption is almost unknown; entirely so in their natural state. Among those tribes and nations of the human race whose habits are plain, simple, and natural, consumption is seldom or never heard of. This disease, the odium alike of civilized life and the medical philosophy of the day, is always preceded by general derangement of health. In a majority of cases the liver is seriously disordered long before any symptoms of disease in the lungs are manifest. A dyspeptic condition of the stomach is so common a precursor of diseased lungs, that authors recognize a very common form of disease extending from the digestive organs to the lungs, which is called "dyspeptic consumption." In other cases, the whole glandular system is obstructed for a long time before disease breaks out in the lungs. The skin, too, is perhaps as often as any other structure in the body, at fault, disordered in its functions a long time before consumption takes place in the lungs. In all these states of body the nervous system is, of course, debilitated, and its influence partially suppressed. It is through this influence that all functions and actions of the body takes place; hence, whatever produces a salutary impression on the whole nervous system, will tend to prevent or cure consumption or any other constitutional disease, by improving the general bodily vigour and functional integrity—and vice versa.

Now then, wherever there is a strong tendency to, or the actual existence of, that disease of the lungs called consumption, there is a primary disease of the whole system, more especially involving the digestive organs and nervous system. Applying remedies to the lungs, without reference to the general condition, will never cure, and as all experience can testify, never has cured. The whole system must be invigorated, and the primary malady—the cause—must be treated.

In looking to alcohol as a remedy in such cases, the first inquiry should be: "How does this agent affect the stomach, liver, glandular and nervous systems, and the functions of the skin?" The answer comes to us from all human experience, and from the whole body of the medical profession as one man—as a poison! Its peculiar and most fatal influence is exerted, say medical authorities unanimously, on the nervous system; and although exhausted nervous energy, loss of vitality, cannot be seen in post-mortem researches, it is sufficiently manifest in the living subject, by the deprivation of every sense, the disorder of every function, and the rapid progress towards death and dissolution invariably attendant on its use.

But it is said, few drunkards die of diseased lungs. Granted. It is no wonder that few die so; the wonder is that any do. Consumption being a primary constitutional disease, and alcohol a primary constitutional poison, it is not to be wondered at that drunkards die from a general destruction of the whole vital organism, instead of a local concentration of diseased action upon the lungs. We are even ready to admit that the use of alcohol may absolutely prevent the general disease from tending to the lungs, as readily as it might do were alcohol not employed. But it is only on the principle of saving one organ at the expense of all the rest. Death is no less certain nor longer protracted.

It is important to comprehend, clearly, the principle of transfer of morbid action—curing or relieving one disease by inducing or aggravating another. Persons in the incipient stages of consumption are sometimes recommended to reside in a district subject to the fever and ague miasm. The theory is, that this miasm tends peculiarly to produce disease in the liver and abdominal organs, which disease, on the principle of counter-irritation, may check the tendency to local disease in the lungs, by diverting the morbid action to another point still more diseased. On this principle, too, persons have been advised by medical professors, to use alcoholic beverages upon removing to a country subject to fever malaria. In this case the theory is, that the alcohol, by producing its own powerful irritation and morbid action, will occupy the system so as to prevent the access of another disease. Of course all such expedients must be temporary, or the remedy will be infinitely worse than the disease. Again, many patients labouring under that form of diseased lungs which constitutes actual consumption, have been sent by their medical advisers to warmer latitudes, sometimes to places where diseases of the liver and abdominal viscera were extremely prevalent. Here the theory is, that by subjecting the abdominal organs to influences tending to induce or aggravate disease in them, the viscera of the chest may be relieved by a transfer of irritation. In some cases benefit is obtained in this way for the lungs; and in many cases where the primary disorder of the digestive organs has been more serious, the experiment has rapidly hastened the death of the sufferer.

It is evident to all reflecting minds, that there is no sound philosophy in these theories. They are not based upon, nor do they contemplate any conformity with the laws of life and health. They are mere expedients for the time, to lessen, remove, or transfer the symptoms, without regarding any renovation of the constitution. They are like the modern surgical operation of taking a patch of skin from the forehead to make a new nose, when this very useful and ornamental part has been lost by accident or disease.

We are not aware of any grounds except those we have intimated, on which the use of alcoholic beverages in consumption is based. That alcohol—an acknowledged poison—can be a remedy per se, is a flat contradiction. It can only prove remedial by changing the diseased locality to some extent, or relieve local disease in the lungs by aggravating general disease throughout the body. And if our main position is correct, that consumption is a constitutional disease, all immediate relief secured by this agent is at the fearful expense of an ultimate aggravation of every morbid condition of the body. And that such is the very fact, we appeal to the records of the medical profession. Was this disease ever cured by this means? If not, is it not time to suspect there is deception somewhere? Why should medical men hold on to a mere hypothesis, with the tenacity of life, against the universal experience of the profession for three thousand years?

JEST IN EARNEST.

“What do you think of whisky, Dr. Johnson?” hiccupped Boswell, after emptying a sixth tumbler of toddy. “Sir,” said the Doctor, “it penetrates my very soul like the still-small voice of conscience; and doubtless the worm of the still is the worm that never dies.”

ADDRESS TO THE FRIENDS AND PROMOTERS OF THE TEMPERANCE REFORMATION THROUGHOUT GREAT BRITAIN AND IRELAND.

FRIENDS AND FELLOW LABOURERS—

The Executive Committee of the American Temperance Union, in behalf of the friends of temperance and humanity throughout the United States, feel constrained to address you at the present moment, on a subject, which, in the providence of the Ruler of nations, is awakening the sympathies and calling forth the philanthropic energies of the humane, to a degree almost unparalleled in the history of man.

From one portion of your country, a country to which we look, not merely with filial reverence, but as the seat of learning, and arts, and commerce, and law, and religion,—the bulwark of all that is great and good,—there comes to us a cry of distress; and, God be praised, we are able to meet it. We have bread enough, and to spare. We are thankful that we can, at least in part, supply the wants of suffering Ireland; and more thankful that there has been a heart in our countrymen to send of their abundance, that her starving poor may live. But while we do what it is our duty to do, and only in feeble measure, we are anxious that a great lesson should be learned from this visitation of Providence; and that our own country and yours should profit by it in a manner and degree, for the security and happiness of all coming generations.

Without the temperance reformation in America, we might have been unable, at the present moment, to have afforded the relief now wafted in our ships to your shores. But a few years since, and we numbered FORTY THOUSAND distilleries, which were annually converting into intoxicating liquors an untold amount of bread stuffs. With a population of only twelve millions, we consumed from year to year seventy-two million gallons of distilled spirits, and from five to six million gallons of strong beer. The passion for these drinks was increasing. The conversion of our superabundant bread stuffs into stimulating and popular beverages, was thought to be not only lawful, but a happy relief for the country, especially at the west, luxuriant in crops, without a market. But the degradation of 500,000 drunkards, the cry of suffering families, the increase of crime, the crowded almshouses, the premature and sad deaths, the destruction of bright intellects, the prostration of the church and the minister at the altar, alarmed the nation, and the cry went up, CANNOT THE PLAGUE BE STAYED? The temperance reform commenced and spread over the land. With a mighty increase of population, our 40,000 distilleries have been reduced to less than ten; numerous breweries have been abandoned; our drinking-usages have been broken up; and we have become a comparatively sober and redeemed people. Had there been no reform, and had the work of converting the bounties of providence into maddening poisons progressed for the last twenty years as in the preceding twenty, no heart can conceive, no tongue tell, what would have been the present condition of America. To a cry of help from famishing Ireland, we might first have been deaf from sottishness and wickedness; and, second, without the means of relief, even if disposed to aid. Thanks to our great Deliverer for what our eyes witness and our hands can give. But while we send our gifts, we want Britain and Ireland to know the source of our ability. We want Britain and Ireland to understand, that what has saved us, can save them from present and greater distresses. We shall not say, it is not right that we should help you, while you take your own bread stuffs and convert them into maddening drinks, increasing your poor and famishing by hundreds of thousands. We will see none perish with hunger, no, not in India or Siberia, if we can send them the staff of life. But it is our hope and prayer that your enlightened and noble nation may now see, as they have never before seen, the wickedness of this awful waste and destructive process. From your governmental returns, it appears that the quantity of grain used in the manufacture of every description of intoxicating drinks, from July 1st 1844 to July 1st 1845, amounted to FIFTY-EIGHT MILLION BUSHELS; since which time the reported increase has been great, causing the consumption to amount, in the last year to SIXTY-TWO MILLION. One of your public lecturers, we perceive, lately stated, that, next to wheat, barley is the most nutritious grain of any grown in England; that at least seven million quarters of barley are consumed in the process of malting and brewing; a quantity that would cost fourteen million pounds sterling; and that would supply SEVEN MILLIONS of people with bread for one year. And in a late address of the Rev. Theobald Mathew, in Ireland, we find him stating, that bread stuffs enough are devoured in the distilleries, at the present moment, to give every man, woman, and child, in Ireland, a single meal every day.

FRIENDS OF MANKIND! FRIENDS OF THE GOD OF NATURE! can we hold our peace and be guiltless? We know you are faithful. We rejoice in America to learn that you are lifting up your voices against this abomination. We write not to instruct or admonish, but to bid you onward; to urge you to raise your note of remonstrance in every city, town, and village, of your noble land; to cause your voice to be heard in the parliament of your country and at the throne. You are the men that might, at the present moment, be England and Ireland's deliverers. You can present a relief more prompt and permanent than all that can come from the most profound of your statesmen, or the most benevolent of your philanthropists. Spread the principles of total abstinence from the intoxicating cup; persuade the people of Great Britain and Ireland to abandon distilling and brewing, and to satisfy themselves with wholesome, nourishing food and the pure water from the fountain, and they will have BREAD ENOUGH AND TO SPARE. Six hundred thousand drunkards will no longer burden your soil, and be seen falling, generation after generation, into drunkards' graves. Your prisons and almshouses will be comparatively tenantless; the poor will rise to comfort and happiness; education will flourish; the Sabbath be honoured, religion and sound morals will prosper, and the time be hastened when "the tabernacle of God shall be with men, and God will dwell with them, and they shall be his people, and God himself shall be with them, and be their God, and God shall wipe away all tears from their eyes."

BRETHREN AND FRIENDS, we have spoken freely, for in this land of plenty, in this land, blessed with the temperance reformation, we feel deeply for the land of our fathers' sepulchres. We see the horrid demon intemperance devouring the bread of her children, and gaunt famine following in its train. The remedy is with you. Be of good courage and play the man, for your people and for the cities of our God. Never before have you had such a plea. The cry of millions, suffering the pangs of hunger, will go with you to the throne; and public indignation and public law, the law of England, and England's Queen, will banish the distilleries and the brew-houses, and let you live.

With the most kindly salutations,
Your fellow-labourers in the cause of humanity and of God,

(Signed)

ANSON G. PHELPS, Chairman.
RICHARD H. MCCURDY.
THOMAS DE WIT, D.D.
THOMAS DENNY,
EDMUND HYATT,
WILLIAM E. DODGE,
STEPHEN H. TYNG, D.D.
HIRAM BARNEY,
REV. EDMUND L. JAMES, D.D.
JASPER CORNING.

Attest, JOHN MARSH, Secretary.

New York, April 1st, 1847.

TO THE INFLUENTIAL CLASSES.

"Injudicious as may have been the course taken, in some instances, by the more strenuous friends of temperance, a much greater mistake has been committed by those who, when they might have contributed largely to the spread of principle, which would secure the moral regeneration of society, have from any motive withheld their countenance and declined labouring side by side with those who had dedicated themselves to this noble enterprise. From any motive, I say,—unless it were a conscientious disapproval of the designs which we should hesitate to impute to any one. If their tastes are offended by some of the forms of expression or action which have been adopted by others, that is as poor a reason for standing aloof, as would be given by one who, seeing others engaged in saving men in imminent peril of life, should refuse to assist them because they did not use just such methods or just such language as he might prefer. If they indulge a feeling of superiority which leads them to look on the work which these philanthropists have undertaken as hardly fit for their hands, why then shame on their contemptible arrogance, as anti-christian as it is anti-republican in its character. If they apprehend a decrease of their wealth, from a diminution of the sources whence it is drawn, then it is time to speak to them frankly and kindly. Addressing them in this spirit, I would "reason with them of righteousness, temperance, and a judgment to come." I would say to them, "Friends, you mistake your interest as much as your duty. Money is not the end for which you should live, nor the means on which you should rely for your happiness in this world. A clear conscience is the best possession here, and the justification of such a hope for the future as the mines of Mexico and Peru could not give you. You cannot keep a clear conscience while you willingly amass property at the expense of others' characters. If your pecuniary gains are secured by their moral losses, you are carrying on a business which you have no right to carry on a moment longer. Close your counting-rooms, if against the entry of so much profit on your books your own knowledge of what you are doing must compel you to admit might be written down—so much virtue destroyed, so much misery produced, so much ruin caused. Turn the key in the doors of the houses or the shops which you have leased for bad uses, and let them remain unoccupied till they fall to the ground, rather than become, through them, no matter how indirectly, the authors of sin and all its consequences. Do you reply, that if you take this course you will become poor men? Be poor, then, but be honest men, dealing uprightly with your neighbour and with the community. It is not honest dealing, to take from another, in exchange for what you give him, not only the money which he agrees to pay you, but the integrity of soul, the fair reputation, and the moral influence which he has no right to part with. Oh, ye traders and ye capitalists! ye men who sell, or who suffer to be sold where you might prevent it, that which, under the circumstances in which it is sold, you know must produce an unspeakable amount of evil. Think, think of what you owe to yourselves! I approach you with no disposition to irritate or humble you. From sincere love I would set this matter before you in the light in which it ought to be viewed. You do not mean to injure the community; and yet what terrible wounds you inflict on its order, its peace, and its moral sentiment. You do not mean to harm yourselves; and yet what injustice you do to your own higher nature, to those feelings of generosity and compassion which you are smothering, those convictions of right which you are resisting and beclouding. You do not mean to lay up for yourselves a fearful retribution; yet how will you meet that judgment which a righteous God will pass on those to whom he has committed opportunities of usefulness which they have turned into occasions of most disastrous action on their fellow-men? Oh, consider your ways! "Deal courageously" with this matter, and doubt not "the Lord will be with the good."

—Dr. Gannet's Discourse on Temperance.

PROFLIGATE PAUPERISM.

According to the best authorities there are in our own city not fewer than ten thousand paupers. Estimating the population of Glasgow roughly at 300,000, we have the astounding proportion of one pauper to every thirty of the inhabitants. The tax for the relief of the poor amounts this year to £48,000, double the amount of last year's assessment. This year Glasgow is afflicted with pauperism to an alarming extent, and Glasgow applies nearly fifty thousand pounds to alleviate, if not to remove, the disease. And how does the remedy operate? Does it tend to remove the disease? Does it in the meantime alleviate the malady, and is a larger dose all that is necessary to effect a cure? Our deliberate conviction is, that money-giving has no tendency to remove the disease—that although the sums at present distributed were doubled or trebled, the malady itself would be as virulent as ever. So much for assertion,—now for proof.

Mr. Maclure, a member of the Glasgow Parochial Board, at a special meeting yesterday week, after complaining of deceptions practised by paupers, proceeds to submit some instructive facts. He says—

"In order to prevent paupers making a bad use of their money, meal has been given to them instead of money. But this is not a preventative. The meal is sold and turned into money at a great loss."

And again—

"Paupers also pawn their monthly pay tickets. An inspector found lately five tickets in a pawnshop, two of them for 9s. each, and three for 12s. each; in all 54s., on which the paupers had got 9s. These tickets are presented for payment at the hospital by the representative of the pawnbrokers, who receive the money. It is impossible for the officers of this establishment to do otherwise, for the paupers cannot all appear personally for their money, and their tickets are generally presented by persons in their family."

Strange, indeed, that starving paupers should sell their meal for money! It is not likely, therefore, that the money they pawn their tickets for is spent in meal. What, then, is done with the money—with the money given to prevent human beings from perishing of hunger? Let the gentleman already quoted supply the answer:—

"A spirit dealer in High Street says, he draws £10. more on the pay days of the Glasgow Hospital than any other days of the week. Another spirit-dealer informed me that they come and drink what they receive. I asked him how he knew they were paupers! He said they made no secret of it—he heard them talking about what they got, and how long they had to wait for it. They go in hundreds from the long closes of the High Street. An inspector informs me that he observed lately a lame pauper, who, not two hours after he had received his money (eight shillings), was carried to the Police Office drunk, on a barrow. Another inspector informs me that he visited a pauper, nearly eighty years of age, on the same day on which she received her pay, and found her drunk—not able to rise from her chair—singing 'the world is bound to maintain me,' &c., to some other paupers who joined in her revels. On the same day he saw another pauper lying drunk on the streets. He frequently finds paupers drunk on their beds after their pay, and they live in a starving condition until next pay comes round, and infest the streets by begging."

The plain inference from all this is, that it is impossible, by mere money, to remove, or even to alleviate, the wretchedness of those paupers who drink intoxicating liquors. Their case is utterly hopeless so long as they use strong drink. To give them more money may accelerate their progress to the drunkard's grave, but cannot possibly arrest it. More money may rivet more firmly the fetters of intemperance, but cannot break them. But money must be given. The community must pay for the support of paupers. New taxes must be levied, and larger assessments made, to meet the wants of the rapidly-increasing pauper class. And if the object is merely to prevent the victims of wretchedness and disease from perishing suddenly of literal starvation—if the aim is merely to protect them from the sudden stab of hunger—and if no attempt is to be made to save them from the prolonged and equally fatal tortures of intemperance, then mere money may serve the purpose. But if the object is really to remove or alleviate the horrors of profligate pauperism, far other plans must be adopted. What these other plans are it is not our present purpose to explain. Our object is to set forth prominently the fact, that it is impossible to reclaim the profligate poor, or even to alleviate their miseries, so long as they are users of alcoholic liquors. To anticipate that, by merely giving them money, we shall in every respect improve or reform them, is a gross delusion. We might as reasonably expect to convert a garden over-run with noxious weeds into an orchard of fruit-bearing trees, by merely increasing the fertility of the soil.—Glasgow Times.

TEMPERANCE A MEANS OF ELEVATING THE WORKING CLASSES.

I have lately had the privilege of being present at a teetotal wedding. Both the parties belonged to the working classes. There was no silly parade of dress, nor any intoxicating liquors. Both of them belonged to a club established on those financial principles that will secure its perpetuity. Both had saved a little money, and made provision for themselves to live without labour after they arrive at the age of sixty or sixty-five. The young man had bought a freehold cottage, and neatly fitted it up and furnished it; and here they were going to dwell. Now, these young people had neither of them large wages—many a drinking youth has double their income, and might, from his earnings, make much better provision for himself than they have done, were he not the slave of liquor. One youth confessed to me that his drinking cost six shillings a-week. He was a blacksmith. Others spend ten, and some twenty shillings; and, with this extravagance they cannot promise themselves physical comfort, and never, so long as they are thus enslaved, will they rise one degree above pauperism. The happy couple I have mentioned, would have had no furniture, no cottage, and no cottage-comforts on the day of their wedding, but for teetotalism. — From an article on this subject in the April Number of the Scottish Temperance Review, a very excellent Number.

CANTEENS.

The Times, and other newspapers, have exposed the evils of the Canteen system, and have nobly stood up for the general elevation of the military character; and members of the Imperial Parliament have discussed the measures submitted to the House; but none of these have ventured to recommend the total removal of all intoxicating drinks from Canteens, having contented themselves with stigmatizing the "sale of spirits," although it is well-known that large numbers get drunk on beer, and very few, indeed, are so reckless as to drink nothing but spirits. Men, frequently resort to spirits when they have rendered themselves stupid and fool-hardy through beer, but here, where spirits are high priced, men do not generally resort to them for the purposes of intoxication, or as they term it, "spending their money," so if the authorities wish to eradicate intemperance from the ranks of the army, they must entirely discontinue the use of intoxicating liquors in Canteens, and study to make the soldiers' home more comfortable. Nothing can be more disagreeable than a barrack-room as now constructed, for there is scarcely room for men to move when all the bedsteads are down, there is no cupboard for the decently putting away the portion of his mess unconsumed, no utensils for cooking any little thing in the room, for where frying-pans used to exist, they are now discontinued, and, as a consequence, the soldier flies to the Canteen or public-house, to enjoy himself at greater ease than he can by possibility do in the barrack-room, and thus intemperance is fostered.

Many influential officers have denounced Canteens, in strong terms, as may be seen by their reports in the Appendix to the Report on Military Punishments, a few of which I will quote for the information of those who cannot refer thereto, and the experience of every soldier goes with us against them, as it is the greatest imposition that can exist, everything being dearer there than elsewhere, and the extra duty entailed on the sober by them, is alone enough to make them anxious to see them done away with.

Lt.-Col. M'Dougall, 79th Foot, says,—“A Canteen in barracks is a constantly existing temptation, into which Canteen, any soldier can run in undress, while he cannot pass the barrack-gate without being dressed, and none but habitual drunkards will do this for liquor merely.” Lt.-Col. Bunbury, says,—“It is little better than a mockery of justice to throw temptation in the way of an illiterate soldier, and then expect to find him sober and obedient.” Major Brooks, says,—“The efforts of a commanding officer must be vain, while there is a licensed runshop in the barracks, inviting the soldier to spend the balance of his daily pay; and as the Canteen-keeper pays a high rent, it is his interest to encourage the consumption of spirits.” Lt.-Col. M'Gregor, says,—“The Canteen, on its present footing, is injurious to the morals and comforts of the soldier. The great object seems to be to extract as much rent as possible from the Canteen-keeper, who seeks, in self-defence, to give every possible premium to drinking, and he is left not only without a competition in the sale of liquors within the barracks, which is perfectly right, but he has also an exclusive monopoly for the sale of every article whatever. The consequence is, the soldier is either obliged to go to the Canteen, where he is plied with all temptations to drink, or to take the trouble to dress himself, and to go a distance every time he wishes to purchase the most trifling article of comfort or necessity.”

The drinking customs of the army, (which are almost compulsory, as many have found to their prejudice, who have been induced to object thereto) have done much harm, and are more numerous than many would imagine; and many a non-commissioned officer has had to date his ruin to the convivial customs of the Canteen or Sergeants' Mess, from the mistaken idea, that there, that Esprit de Corps is best maintained, which most soldiers feel ambitious to uphold;—and where a "Free and Easy" has been allowed among them, much mischief has followed, from the circumstance, that those attending, have been up singing, drinking, and smoking nearly the whole night, often till morning; then, next day felt they must go on the spree, and then, at night, have been reported as "drunk coming into barracks," &c., whereas, had there been no such temptation, they would not have thought of drinking, and consequently would have avoided the disgrace. This is by no means a fancied case. Footings, also, go far to foster intemperance among them, and although this custom may not be universal, it does exist, and in a corps with which the writer is acquainted, every serjeant on attaining to the payment of a company, or any staff appointment, has to pay a sovereign, sometimes more, and this is allowed to accumulate till there are several, when a supper, sometimes a ball, takes place, and much drinking is the result; and, besides that, it operates injuriously on those who cannot participate therein, as it causes invidious remarks to arise, and, what is worse for discipline, the men think they are in honour bound to go and do likewise, and thus intemperance is kept up. Now, with these and other inducements, it is no wonder if men fall away, or feel no inclination for mental pursuits of an upward tendency, and the consequence is, a bad name attaches to the service, and will do, so long as such things exist. What we want, is, the entire abolition of intoxicating liquors from Canteens, greater comforts for the men in barracks, the suppression of everything leading to vice and intemperance, and the encouragement of temperance principles by every legitimate means.

THE FREE CHURCH ON INTEMPERANCE.

At the meeting of the Free Synod of Glasgow and Ayr this week, Dr. Macfarlan of Renfrew brought forward an overture to the General Assembly on intemperance. A petition was also presented from Laurieston on the same subject.

Dr. Macfarlan said that his overture was exceedingly general in its terms. It was evident that intemperance existed to a very great extent, and that some measures ought to be taken for its remedy. The memorial from Laurieston left them to say what these measures should be. He would not occupy the Synod by going into the extent of the evils of intemperance, as he was addressing men who were more accustomed than him to meet scenes of intemperance in their parochial visitations. He recollected some years ago, when he visited his parish in this city, that, in some districts, every third, fourth, or fifth family might be regarded as intemperate. He did not mean to say that they were all absolute drunkards, but there were many of them given to tipling, which was immoral, and destructive to society. Taking the excise returns for the year 1841, the year in which the census was taken, and comparing these returns with the population, we are warranted to infer that more than two gallons and a half of ardent spirits were used by every man, woman, and child in Scotland. He went on to contend that the crime of intemperance was the chief cause of the evils of society, and took occasion to show that Scotland consumed more ardent spirits than England, Ireland, or any other country in Europe, and that it required a strong effort to be made to root out the drinking system from the customs of social intercourse, with which in this country it is so interwoven. He sat down by moving the adoption of the overture. Mr. Hutchison of Johnstone, begged most cordially to second the motion. He remarked that the Presbytery of Paisley, with which he was connected, was at present publishing a series of tracts on intemperance, from which he found, that within the bounds of that Presbytery alone, no less a sum than £115,000 per annum was expended on ardent spirits. After a short discussion, the overture was unanimously agreed to. On the motion of Dr. Paterson, the memorial from Laurieston was received, and the Synod agreed to memorialize the magistrates within their bounds, on the subject of licensing public-houses.

KEEPING OPEN OF BEER-SHOPS.

Mr. MUNTZ, in pursuance of notice, moved for leave to bring in a Bill "to enable retail brewers in the midland counties to keep open their houses till 12 o'clock at night, the same as the metropolitan retail brewers." The hon. gentleman said it was felt as a matter of grievance by the retail brewers in the country that they should be obliged to close their houses at 11 o'clock at night, whilst the licensed victuallers were allowed to remain open till 12. With respect to the existence of beer-houses, his own opinion had always been that it was wrong to allow brewers to retail beer; but, the law having sanctioned their doing so, he saw no good reason why there should be any distinction made, as between them and licensed victuallers, with regard to the hours during which they kept their houses open.

The question having been put,

Sir G. GREY said, entertaining, as he did, a strong objection to the proposition of the hon. member, it was hardly worth while to observe the courtesy usual in such cases, by allowing the Bill to be introduced. The 3rd and 4th Victoria, chap. 61, fixed three periods at which beer-shops should be closed. (Hear, hear.) He called them beer-shops; for, let the hon. member designate them as he might, that was what these retail brewers' shops really were. (Hear, hear.) From what he had heard with respect to the manner in which those shops were conducted in Manchester, Birmingham, and other large places, he believed they were under the management of very respectable persons, but beer-shops they nevertheless were, and constituted a class of houses very distinct from those occupied by licensed victuallers. (Hear, hear.) By the statute he had quoted all such houses within the city of London and Westminster and the district around which were within the supervision of the metropolitan police were allowed to keep open till 12 o'clock; in other large places, containing a certain amount of population, they were allowed to keep open till 11 o'clock; while in country places and thinly populated districts they were only allowed to keep open till 10 o'clock. Now, the proposition of the hon. gentleman was, that all the beer-shops throughout the country should be allowed to keep open till 12 o'clock. He (Sir G. Grey) did not see any reason for this, or any good ground why the present regulation should be disturbed. The distinction as to the hours between the metropolitan and country districts was obviously founded upon the fact that the beer-houses within the metropolitan district and of large towns would be under better supervision by means of the police than in country places; this, in his opinion, was a very sound distinction, and he must therefore oppose the introduction of the Bill.

Mr. MUNTZ felt obliged to the right hon. gentleman for the candour with which he had acted; but he deemed it his duty to divide the House on his motion.

For the motion	4
Against it	77
Majority	73

Leave, therefore, was refused.

SPIRIT RATION IN THE NAVY.

We regret that another effort has failed to abolish altogether the spirit ration in the navy. Mr. Rockwell, of Connecticut, from the Naval Committee, introduced into Congress a resolution to that effect, substituting an ad valorem in money, and supported it by an able argument. The spirit of the House, as well as of nearly the whole country, seemed to be in favour of it; but it was defeated by the pertinacity of Mr. Stanton, who would append an amendment "that no officer should be permitted to use, or keep on board a United States vessel, spirituous liquors of any description." The sum of six cents, however, was voted as a bonus to those who relinquish their ration, which will have a great effect in procuring its abandonment, where suitable temperance efforts are made. But the continuance of the ration at all, is a disgrace to the nation. Men drink, are insolent, then whipped; murder, and they are hanged; and every day the drum beats to the whiskey tub. We must persevere until we gain our point.

Through the failure of the Speaker to do his duty, the brandy room has been continued in the basement of the Capitol; though it is said that there has been much less drinking and fewer drunken men in Congress this season than the last.

Eloquent addresses are frequently delivered in temperance meetings in Washington, by Members of Congress. A magnificent temperance hall was dedicated on the 22nd, ult.—Temperance Telegraph.

National Temperance Society.

OFFICE 11, TOKENHOUSE YARD.

VICE-PRESIDENTS.

The EARL of ARUNDEL and SURREY, M.P.
Sir Wilfrid Lawson, Bart.

R. D. Alexander, Esq.	Rev. Theobald Mathew.
Thomas Beaumont, Esq.	W. J. Morgan, A.M., M.D.
Samuel Bowly, Esq.	Richard Peek, Esq.
J. S. Buckingham, Esq.	Rev. P. Penson, M.A.
Robert Charleton, Esq.	Rev. W. W. Robinson, M.A.
Rev. R. Clowes, M.A.	Rev. J. Sherman.
Isaac Collins, Esq.	Rev. C. Stovel.
Joseph Eaton, Esq.	Rev. T. Spencer, A. M.
S. C. Hall, Esq., B.L.F.S.A.	Rev. W. H. Turner, M.A.
Lawrence Heyworth, Esq.	Edward Thomas, Esq.
William Janson, Jun., Esq.	Robert Warner, Esq.
Ven. Archdeacon Jeffreys.	Edward Webb, Esq.
G. S. Kenrick, Esq.	Rev. J. Wilson.

TREASURER.

G. W. Alexander, Esq., 40, Lombard Street.

EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE.

George W. Atwood	Richard Hicks.
Richard Barrett.	C. H. Lovell, M.D.
Jabez Burns, D.D.	John Meredith.
William Cabell	Richard Potter.
William Cash	W. W. Robinson.
John Cassell	T. B. Scutt.
Charles Gilpin

SUPERINTENDENT OF MISSION.

John Meredith.

SECRETARY.

Thomas Beggs.

THE ANNUAL MEETING

OF THE

NATIONAL TEMPERANCE SOCIETY,

WILL BE HELD IN

EXETER HALL,

On Thursday, May the 20th,

AT SIX O'CLOCK IN THE AFTERNOON.

JOSEPH STURGE, Esq., IN THE CHAIR.

THE ANNUAL MEMBERS MEETING

Will be held at the Society's Office, 11 Tokenhouse Yard, on Wednesday the 19th May, at two o'clock in the day.

SUBSCRIPTIONS.

£ s.	£ s
Berkhampstead Soc. 1 1	Pinching, R. L.,
Eaton, J., Esq., Bristol 10 0	Esq., Walthamstow 1 1
Howells, T., Esq. . . . 1 1	A Teetotaler 1 1
Do. (Mission) 1 1	Warner, J., Esq.,
Friend, per Dr. Ellis 5 0 0	Hoddesdon 5 0

SPECIAL FUND.

£ s. d.	£ s. d.
Alexander, R. D.,	Janson, W., Jun.,
Esq., Ipswich 15 0 0	Esq., Tottenham 33 6 8
Bassett, J. D., Esq.	Penson, Rev., P.,
Leighton Buzz. 35 0 0	Durham 5 0 0
Catchpool, T., Esq. 5 0 0	Sims, D., Esq. 10 0 0
Carpenter, Rev.	Sturge, J., Esq.,
P. P. 1 0 0	Birmingham 33 6 8
Charleton, J., Esq.,	Walters, W. C., Esq. 5 0 0
Bristol 17 0 0	Wedgwood, Miss,
Charleton, R., Esq.,	Down 33 6 8
Bristol 8 0 0	Wilson, B., Esq.,
Eaton, J., Esq., 40 0 0	Mirfield 5 0 0
Grant, Mrs., Leighton Buzzard 100 0 0

MEDICAL CERTIFICATE.

We have received the Report of the South India Temperance Union for 1846, from which we make the following extracts. "With a hope of, in some degree surmounting this deeply laid obstacle, your Committee have recently circulated to all the medical gentlemen of the Presidency, and through their friends to several in other parts of the country, a Certificate which has been signed during the past year by thirty-seven of the first medical authorities of Britain, and to their highest satisfaction have obtained the willing signatures of a goodly number of them."

The Indian authorities are,—

Ramsay Sladen, Physician General, Madras.
 Claud Currie, Surgeon General, Madras.
 David Boyd, Inspector General of Hospitals, Madras.
 George Pearce, M.D., Surgeon and Secretary, Medical Board, Madras.
 Robert Cole, Surgeon, S.E. District of Madras, &c.
 John Richmond, Surgeon, N. W. District of Madras, &c.
 George Harding, Surgeon, Madras General Hospital, Superintendent Medical School, and Professor of the Theory and Practice of Medicine.
 W. G. Davidson, Surgeon, Black Town District, Madras.
 W. B. Thompson, Superintendent, Eye Infirmary, Madras.
 James Sanderson, Port and Marine Surgeon, Madras.
 Thomas L. Bell, Assistant Surgeon, Madras.
 Thomas Stack, M.D. Ditto, H. M. 84th Regiment, Madras.
 F. W. Innes, M.D. ditto, ditto.
 D. S. Young, F.R.C.S., Superintending Surgeon, Presidency Division, Madras.
 John Hichens, Assistant Surgeon, 27th Regiment, N. I., Madras.
 Wm. Tweddell, Garrison Surgeon, Chunar.
 Alex. Duncan, M.D., Surgeon, 5th Battalion Arty.
 Wm. Watson, Superintending Surgeon, Benares Division.
 J. M. Brande, M. D., Surgeon, 21st Regiment, N.I.
 D. Brotter, M. D., Civil Surgeon, Benares.
 M. F. Anderson, Assistant Surgeon, Madura.
 John Doig, Staff Surgeon, Belgaum.
 J. Morrice, M. D., Surgeon, 2nd Bengal European Regiment, Mooliana.
 F. Anderson, M.D., Assistant Surgeon, Horse Artillery, Mooliana.
 A. Colquhoun, Surgeon, 3rd Cavalry.
 G. E. Brown, M.D., Surgeon, Artillery.

In returning the Certificate, R. Sladen, Esq., Physician General, thus speaks of his personal experience.

"I have much pleasure in affixing my signature to the testimonial, which may have some weight, as I speak from practical experience.

"I have always been most temperate, and have enjoyed an uncommon share of health; but I find that I can go through bodily and mental exercise much better, when I abstain altogether from alcoholic or fermented liquors."

John Doig, Esq., Staff Surgeon, Belgaum, adds his own opinion in the following unequivocal language.

"There is not one word advanced in it, in favour of teetotalism, that I do not most cordially concur in, and most conscientiously believe to be true."

ADDITIONAL NAMES.

BRISTOL.

J. B. Estlin, F.R.S., F.R.C.S.
James F. Bernard, Surgeon.
H. H. Fox, M.D.
W. J. Goodeve, M.R.C.S.
H. Clarke, F.R.C.S.

PERSHORE, WORCESTERSHIRE.

F. Davis, M.R.C.S.
G. Niven, Surgeon.
John Claridge, do.
J. G. Rusher, M.R.C.S.
B. Pratt, Surgeon.
W. Francis, M.R.C.S.

MANCHESTER, (additional.)

P. Royle, M.R.C.S.
John McDowall, Surgeon.
S. M. Hallsworth, M.R.C.S.
James Taylor, M.R.C.S.
J. G. Harrison, M.D., M.R.C.S.
W. Lewis, Surgeon.
J. Potter, M.D., M.R.C.P.
R. M. Man, M.R.C.S.
M. A. E. Wilkinson, M.D.

DONCASTER.

George Hoekie, M.R.C.S.
Robert Storrs, M.R.C.S.
George Dunn, Surgeon.
Thomas Woodcock Hall, M.R.C.S.
Thomas Clarke.
C. D. Fenton, M.D.

GREAT MALVERN.

James Wilson, M.D.
J. M. Gully, M.D.
W. C. West, M.R.C.S.
Mervin Coats, Surgeon.
William Addison, M.D.

MALVERN LINKS.

Thomas Lysaght, M.D.
Edmund Waddens, Surgeon.

LEIGH, WORCESTERSHIRE.

J. Freeman, Surgeon.
W. B. Carpenter, M.D., F.R.S., Professor, Stains.
John Winston, M.D.
George Chapman, M.R.C.S., L.A.C., Lingfield.
John Jones, M.R.C.S., L.A.C., Fletching.
Henry Rogers, M.R.C.S., &c., East Grinstead.
John Sloane, L.A.C., &c., Forest-Row.
John Whyte, M.R.C.S., L.A.C., East Grinstead.
William Wallis, L.A.C., &c., Hartfield.
Edward John Whittle, General Practitioner, Lamberhurst, Sussex.
George Grant, M.D., Richmond, Surrey.
William Chaldecott, M.R.C.S., Dorking.
William Hart, M.R.C.S., ditto.
Thomas Napper, M.R.C.S., ditto.

TEMPERANCE LITERATURE.

In another place we have noticed the Prize Essay published by the British Association, on Legislative Interference with the Sunday Traffic. From the Bristol Press, we notice that Mr. Buckingham's "Appeal to the British Nation on the Greatest Reform yet remaining to be accomplished," is reprinted in a neat tract of 16 pages, and in a size and shape well adapted for general circulation, of which it is well worthy. There is also a reprint of the Address on Scarcity of the National Temperance Society, as one of the series of the Bristol Tracts. Mr. Alexander is still persevering with his Tracts for Juveniles, forming a very useful and highly valuable series. The Prize Essays are going on with vigour, and commanding a great circulation. In the other departments of the press, we are glad to recognise a friendly disposition to the Temperance Movement, and we believe that the day is not far distant, when it will take its proper place among the great social reforms of the day.

We were shewn a few weeks ago the first printing-machine for China. It was constructed for a Missionary Society, who intend to use it in printing Chinese tracts. There were interesting associations connected with the machine and its double cylinders. It was to be the unconscious author of a great revolution, and the precursor of changes and of liberty to one-third of the human race. While the Chinese Emperor was shrouded in mysterious and awful dignity from his subjects, and wrought for the benefit of priests and mandarins; a few mechanics in a low-roofed workshop many thousand miles removed from Pekin in a barbarous land, were constructing a rival to his throne or a rival to all of his power that is truly mischievous. The machine was an interesting, and it was also a sad sight; for on every side around its birth place, and at every corner rise gorgeous gin palaces where the needy and the desperate—the heathen of London—pay away their money and their souls for the excitement of an hour; and those who send machines and missionaries to China have scarcely yet discovered the need for similar exertions at home. Their foreign missions have had their uses and their triumphs; but they would have been immeasurably more effective, if they had been preceded or accompanied by home missions. The man who can put down the drinking usages of Wapping, and employ means for changing the habits and thoughts and principles of its people is a very effective missionary to China; for as matters are, our naval and military specimens of Christianity do more to confirm the heathen in Bhudism, Brahminism, or any other conceivable degeneracy of belief than an army of missionaries or many printing-machines can undo.—(From an article on GOVERNMENT EDUCATION in Tait's Magazine for April.)

In St Just, with a population of 8000, there are 2600 pledged teetotallers, including 3 ministers, 24 local preachers, 220 Sabbath-school teachers, and 40 reclaimed drunkards, 25 of whom have joined Christian churches.

RHUBARB v. RUM.—JALAP v. GIN.—The late Dr. Abernethy was once consulted by a gentleman whose habits had greatly impaired his digestive powers. After receiving advice, the patient said, "But, sir, what spirits will you recommend me to drink?" Dr. Abernethy, in disgust, replied, "Why, sir, you may take tincture of rhubarb, that is a spirit; or you may take tincture of jalap, that is a spirit; and they have this advantage over other spirits, you may take them into your body yourself, but they will take themselves out of your body as fast as they can."

Foreign Intelligence.

SANDWICH ISLANDS.

The temperance societies of Hamakua embrace all the churches and all the schools. The pledge precludes the use of tobacco as well as intoxicating liquors. Mr. Lyons found that few comparatively had violated their engagement, and most of these renewed their pledge. The different societies had their annual celebration in January. One of these celebrations, held last March, amid the beautiful scenery of Waipio, is described below.

The whole valley seemed full of life. The four schools, and multitudes of adults, assembled at the appointed place, midway between the extremes, and, forming a procession, marched to the shore. Waving banners, fantastic dresses, imitations of caps and plumes, and the rough music of rude Hawaiian drums, gave the procession a military aspect. Performing several evolutions along the shore, amid the deafening roar of the dashing surf, the processions formed into several columns, opening in the centre, and facing each other. Hymns, songs, and portions of Scripture were repeated in concert; after which the two choirs of singers, one belonged to the valley, and the other from abroad, united in singing an appropriate hymn. Prayer followed, and then all proceeded to a spacious yard, and sat down beneath an overspreading awning to the temperance banquet. This being ended, a meeting was held, the exercises of which consisted of singing, addresses,—one by a blind man,—and a dialogue between a farmer and a schoolmaster. At the close, the contribution towards the missionary's support was brought forward, and exhibited before the whole assembly. This consisted of a purse of money, containing fifteen dollars, and four large rolls of kapa cloth, a bridle, &c., the whole amounting to about sixty dollars. It was contributed by the church members and some forty or fifty children, and was their first effort to aid in supporting their own missionary. Prayer closed the exercises of the day.—Missionary Herald.

MEXICO.

TEMPERANCE AT MATAMOROS.

A correspondent of the New-Orleans Commercial Times, under the date of August 16, says:—

"This day is an era in the cause of temperance at Matamoros and along the line of the Rio Grande, so far as it is in the possession of our troops. About two weeks past, General Taylor issued an order forbidding the entrance of any ardent spirits into the river, on board of any vessel or steamer, and the sale of it by any person, after the 15th. This morning, the shops and coffee-houses presented a dry appearance. In several, I noticed all the decanters, which yesterday were full of brandy, whisky, gin, &c., empty, and placed in a row on the most conspicuous shelf, with small bits of black crape, or other black stuff, tied round the necks or stoppers, looking like dead bodies, mourning for departed spirits. The order is right and proper in itself, and it is to be regretted it was not issued sooner; it might have prevented many of the disorders and outrages that have taken place in this city. It is said, the commander at this post will rigidly enforce the order, and punish every infraction of it."—N. Y. EVAN.

WORTHY OF IMITATION.—Caernarvon contains above 200 reclaimed drunkards, of whom 120 have become regular attendants at divine worship. In the county, about 2000 members have been added to the churches. All the ministers (save one) are teetotalers.

Home Intelligence.

DUNMOW, ESSEX.

The anxiously anticipated controversy arising out of the late lectures lately delivered by Dr. Grindrod, was announced to take place on Tuesday evening, the 20th instant, at seven o'clock. Some time before the appointed hour, a highly respectable company had assembled in the British School Rooms, and the committee, chairman, and the several gentlemen, friends of the antagonistic parties, were true to their time. The medical gentleman, Mr. Cock, M.R.C.S., assistant to Joseph Grice, Esq., Surgeon, Dunmow, who had agreed to argue the subject with Dr. Grindrod, was also punctual at the place of meeting with a non-medical friend; and on taking his position on the platform was welcomed by the Doctor in the most friendly manner, the amicable recognition being warmly cheered by the company. Dr. Grindrod proposed, that in accordance with the printed announcement, Mr. W. J. Clayton should take the chair.

In opening the business, Mr. C. said, he could assure them, with the utmost sincerity, it would have been much more congenial to his feelings to have attended simply as a spectator and listener, but having been urgently requested by both parties to take the chair, he had done so. It would be recollected that at Dr. G.'s last lecture, a discussion arose, from which this meeting emanated, a challenge was given and accepted, and a committee was formed to carry out the arrangements, the minutes of whose meetings he held in his hand. It had been decided that each gentleman should speak half an hour at a time; and he trusted each would conform thereto. In the mean time he would mention, that if any person attempted to disturb the meeting, he would at once call the party to order, and, if necessary, call upon the company to support the chair. He was very sure that so goodly a number had not assembled merely in the hope of seeing one party triumph over another, but to elicit the truth.

Dr. Grindrod then fully reverted to his lectures at Dunmow, and more particularly to the last, from which arose the grounds of discussion, namely, the disuse, in the main of alcoholic beverages. He had not proceeded far, when Mr. Coventry, Surgeon, of Hatfield Broad Oak, entered the room, and sat by Mr. Cock; although previously unknown to each other, Dr. G. having been introduced to him, directly offered him the friendly hand of recognition, which was as cordially accepted. The Doctor then proceeded to vindicate his former assertion, that the use of all alcoholic beverages in the ordinary condition of man, is more or less, in all forms, prejudicial, and productive of functional disturbance, or organic disease. His further objections were divided into six further heads, all of which he handed to his opponents in writing. He then read a strongly worded document, condemnatory of the utility of alcohol, and its destructive effects on mankind, which was signed by upwards of 1000 medical men of the highest grade, including Drs. Paris, Barton, Sir B. Brodie, &c. The Doctor concluded his half-hour's address, and sat down amidst the most marked applause. Mr. Cock then spoke his full time, contending to the contrary. He differed with Dr. G. as to the statistics he had dwelt upon, and considered them often exceedingly fallacious; he considered that the use of the beverages named, when taken under direction and at proper times, tended to promote the proper functions of the body. It was here decided by the chairman, who had been appealed to, as to the order to be followed, that Dr. G. should reply; but subsequently it was conceded that Mr. Coventry should. He went chemically into the subject, and endeavoured to prove that Mr. Cock was right; he was not, however, he said, violently attached to either party, but rather a sack of both sides. Dr. Grindrod replied to both in a speech of an hour, and brought forward arguments and facts in support of his views, and then Mr. Cock recommenced, which was replied to by Dr. G. Suffice it to say, the argument was far from finished at eleven o'clock, when it was concluded to adjourn to the following evening at seven o'clock. These proceedings were most amicably conducted, the best personal feeling appearing to prevail among all parties.

21st. The meeting assembled at the appointed time, and after lasting until past eleven o'clock, the following resolution was unanimously carried, viz. :—

"That in the opinion of this meeting Dr. Grindrod has demonstrated by the light of science, and by a mass of evidence, medical and otherwise, of the most incontrovertible character, the truthfulness of the proposition on which he based the principle of total abstinence at the commencement of the discussion."

DORKING.

On the 23rd of last month we were favoured by a lecture from the Rev. Dr. Burns of London. Mr. Way, the Wesleyan minister, presided on the occasion: the attendance was good. Dr. Burns urged on the serious mind the importance of reflecting at the present crisis, whether the public were justified in upholding a system which annually destroys eight million quarters of the best grain in the land, in the manufacture of a drink which is the greatest curse to society; but which grain, if beneficially used, would maintain six or seven millions of persons. He went at great length into statistical accounts, showing the amount of money spent in intoxicating drinks, and the benefit which might be derived from its employment in other respects, viz., the establishing and supporting of educational and other institutions, sending missionaries abroad, &c., &c. At the close a few signed the pledge. Although our society does not gain as many members as we could wish, yet we have cause to rejoice, that the principle is taking deep root, though but slowly, in the minds of the people. At the annual licensing day in February last, although there were several fresh applications for spirit licenses, the magistrates refused to grant them.

W. C. ISAAC.

LOWESTOFT.

On Monday evening, 5th April, a public meeting was held at the British School-room. Mr. Johnson occupied the chair. He opened the proceedings with a very suitable address. Mr. J. C. Booth of Bradford delivered a very excellent lecture, to the satisfaction of all present.

On Tuesday evening, April 6th, we had the pleasure of hearing the same lecturer in the Infant School-room, the use of which was kindly granted by the Rev. F. Cunningham, our much esteemed Vicar; and on Friday evening, April 9th, Mr. Booth delivered his third and last lecture in the Town Hall, to a crowded assembly; it proved, like his two preceding lectures, of a heart-stirring nature.

At the close of the third meeting, we had the pleasure of taking thirty signatures.

Our Temperance cause in Lowestoft has been steadily progressing for some months past.

PRESTON.

On Tuesday evening, March 23rd, a meeting was held in the Temperance Hall, for the purpose of petitioning Parliament to prohibit the manufacture of intoxicating liquors, which was well attended. The Rev. R. Slate, Independent Minister, was called to the chair, who, in a short but excellent address, opened the business of the meeting. Mr. James Frankland moved the following resolution: "That this meeting deeply deplores the present scarcity and high price of food in this country, and sympathizes with the inhabitants of Ireland and the Highlands of Scotland, in the intense sufferings to which they are subjected in consequence of their inability to procure food; and this meeting also regards the annual consumption of 7,000,000 quarters of grain in the distilleries and breweries of the United Kingdom, not only as a grievous waste of the bounties of Divine Providence, and extremely mischievous in its consequences at all times, but when viewed in connexion with the pecuniary burdens entailed upon the people of this country, by the use of intoxicating drinks, equally opposed to all sound principles of political economy;" which was seconded by Mr. G. Cartwright, and carried unanimously. Mr. D. D. Hughes of Manchester, after an eloquent speech proposed the second resolution as follows:—"That it is important that there should at all times be a cheap and an abundant supply of the first necessaries of life, and as intoxicating drinks have been pronounced by a large majority of the highest medical and scientific authorities of the day, as quite unnecessary for man, a fact attested by the experience of millions of persons, in all countries and in every condition of life, this meeting conceives it to be the duty of the legislature to stop the manufacture of intoxicating drinks, as well for the purpose of mitigating the present calamity, as for removing the cause of our national intemperance with all its awful consequences." Mr. Swindlehurst seconded the resolution, which was carried; and a petition to the House of Commons, embodying the preceding resolutions, was unanimously adopted.

On the evening of Good Friday, a meeting of the teachers, scholars and congregation of Grimshaw Street, Independent Sabbath-School and Chapel, was held in the Upper School-Room, belonging to that place of worship; when a Sabbath-School and Congregational Total Abstinence Society was formed under very favourable circumstances. The Rev. R. Slate, the minister, who has been a practical abstainer for many years, is the President of the newly formed society.

LEEDS.

In compliance with a requisition to the Mayor, (George Goodman, Esq.,) a public meeting was held at the Court House, on Monday evening last, for the purpose of considering the propriety of petitioning Parliament to prohibit the destruction of grain in breweries and distilleries in this country.

The Mayor took the chair, and explained the object of the meeting; and afterwards stated that he had been present at a long meeting of the Town Council that day, for the purpose of deciding upon the propriety of Government educating the people. Some of their philanthropists contended that education would remove most of the crime and misery of this country, whilst the promoters of the present meeting contended that teetotalism would tend to remove, more than anything else, the crime and misery of this great land. He believed they were both very excellent things; and as for total abstinence, he most conscientiously believed that it would be the means of removing the great mass of vice, crime, and misery, now existing among the mass of the people of this country. Holding that conviction, then, he entertained a strong desire that the principles of total abstinence might go on increasing, and conquering the vices of intemperance and its consequent evils (loud applause).

The Rev. Mr. MILNES delivered an excellent address, which was well received by the audience, and concluded by moving the first resolution, to the effect that it was most cruel and suicidal to destroy, as was now done, ten millions of quarters of barley in the concoction of malt, while famine was stalking abroad in Ireland, Scotland, and even in some parts of England (loud applause).

Mr. LEONARD SEDGWICK seconded the resolution, which was carried with acclamation.

Dr. LEES moved the next resolution as follows:—"That this meeting regards the present crisis as one which imperatively calls upon the legislature of an enlightened and christian land, at once to prohibit the conversion of food into a drink which as proved by the highest scientific authorities, and the experience of millions, is altogether unnecessary; and therefore respectfully calls upon the legislature to interpose its authority for stopping the wholesale destruction of grain in breweries and distilleries, so that the price of food to a famishing, as well as to a partially employed population, may be greatly reduced by the consequent increased supply, whereby also national pauperism and crime will become diminished by the check given to our prevalent intemperance."

Mr. JARVIS CLARKE seconded the resolution, which was carried with loud applause.

Mr. JOHN SPENCER moved that petitions to Parliament, founded upon the resolutions, should be signed by the Mayor on behalf of the meeting, and forwarded for presentation; that to the Lords to the Bishop of Norwich and Earl Stanhope; that to the Commons to Mr. Brotherton; and that Earl Arundel and Surrey in the Lords, and the borough members in the Commons, be requested to support the prayer of the petitions; which was agreed to.

CIRENCESTER.

On Good Friday, the anniversary was held here, Henry Alexander in the chair, who first called on the Secretary to read the report of the society, giving an account of a small but steady increase in numbers—of the continued and praiseworthy exertions of the ladies in the cause, who supply about 111 families, where there are teetotal children, with loan tracts, monthly—of the members' continued interest and increased belief in the truth of our principles, urging them strongly on the most serious and prayerful consideration of the people—condemning the drinking customs of this country, and giving their belief, that intemperance may be called the Juggernaut of England, beneath whose car human life and human happiness are recklessly cast, a monster evil, overspreading our land like some huge Upas tree, poisoning the very life-blood of society, robbing man of his true dignity and excellence, and preventing the blessed religion of the Gospel exercising its benign influence upon his soul. That these evils are to be done away with by the dissemination of light among the people, and endeavouring to impress upon their consciences a deep and abiding conviction of the immorality of these popular customs which tend powerfully to continue among the labouring millions of our country moral degradation and crime. The chairman then introduced our tried friend, Josiah Hunt, who delivered a most straightforward and manly address, full of sound argument in favour of total abstinence. Our best thanks are due to him, especially for his close and cogent reasoning with the respectable moderate drinkers.

On Saturday, Passmore Edwards gave two lectures, one to juveniles, and one to adults; and on Sunday, had a most interesting meeting with the Sunday-school children and their friends.

BRILL.

On Good Friday last, an excellent lecture was given in the Independent Chapel at this place, by Mr. Robert Gamble of Berkhamstead, on the Temperance principle. The chair was taken by the minister of the place, Rev. James Howell. The attendance was good. In the afternoon, a number of the friends of the society took tea together at the Old Manor House, which is now a Teetotal mansion. Meetings in aid of the Temperance movement have been held with good effect every month, in the above Chapel, during the whole of the winter season.

MERTHYR TYDVIL.

The anniversary of this society was celebrated on Easter Monday, when about six hundred brethren and friends sat down to tea at the Tabernacle Chapel, which was kindly lent for the occasion by its respected minister. After partaking of a good cup of tea, the friends adjourned to the Welsh Calvinistic Methodist Chapel, Pontmorlas, where a large and respectable meeting was held. After singing and prayer, Mr. Thomas Watkins of Dowlais, presided, and in a brief but an appropriate address, introduced the business of the evening, and was ably followed by the Rev. Mr. Griffiths of Brecon, and Messrs. R. Lewis and M. Edward; and a feeling of intense interest in the principles and the progress of the society, was created and sustained. A few signatures were obtained at the close of the meeting. The cause has suffered an almost irreparable injury in this town from the want of a permanent and well-organized agency; and to meet this emergency, the society has been enrolled an auxiliary of the Central Temperance Association.

SHEERNESS.

Mr. T. A. Smith of London, delivered a course of three lectures, in this place, on the evenings of March 22nd, 23rd, and 24th,—On the Philosophy of Drinking. On Alcohol, as the essential part of Ale, Spirits, Wine, &c. And, On Fermentation. Several instructive and interesting experiments were performed.

G. STEBBINGS.

On Monday, 12th April, a very interesting lecture on the subject of "Physiology simplified in its relation to Temperance," was delivered at the Star of Temperance Hall, King Street, Seven Dals, by W. F. Preshaw, Esq., of Jersey, Surgeon, which was still further simplified by several mechanical diagrams, exhibiting the muscular action of the eye, the action of the epiglottis, heart, &c., and which was deservedly cheered throughout. Mr Hatherly, occupied the chair, and a vote of thanks was unanimously given for the intelligent exposition of a somewhat difficult subject.

SCOTTISH TEMPERANCE LEAGUE.

The second anniversary of this Association has been celebrated at Edinburgh during the present week.

A public meeting for considering the relation of the Temperance movement, to the various means now in operation, for promoting the social elevation of the people, was held in Broughton Street Chapel, on Wednesday evening. Rev. William Reid, President of the League, occupied the chair. The meeting having been opened with prayer, Mr. Robert Reid of Glasgow moved the following resolution;—"That total abstinence from intoxicating liquors would have done more to prevent scarcity of food, and alleviate distress, than any measure, or than all other measures combined; because it would have saved from artificial destruction a larger quantity of food than was destroyed by natural causes." The Hon. Judge Marshall seconded the resolution, which was carried by acclamation. Mr. A. H. MacLean of Glasgow, then submitted the following resolution:—"That total abstinence must necessarily form a part, and a most important part, in all such benevolent enterprises, as would either prevent the increase, eradicate the existence, or in any way alleviate the horrors of pauperism." Mr. MacLean, in a very able speech, showed that pauperism has more than doubled during the last few years, and that that increase is mainly owing to the intemperate habits of the people. The resolution was seconded by Mr. George Johnstone, and unanimously adopted.

Mr. ROBERT LOWREY of Aberdeen, moved, "That total abstinence from intoxicating liquors is the best precursor, the most successful ally, and the surest preserver of Sanatory Reform."

The motion was seconded by Mr. WILLIAM LOGAN of Rochdale, and also adopted.

Rev. JOHN KIRK moved, "That total abstinence from intoxicating liquors, by compelling the entire cessation of the enormous strong drink traffic, would turn a great amount of labour and capital into healthful channels—would cut the unnatural cord that connects the prosperity of a class with the degradation of the community—would free the Christian Church from a crippling alliance—and the world from a matchless curse."

The resolution was seconded by Mr. GEORGE M'WHIRTER, and unanimously agreed to.

Thanks having been voted to the Chairman, the meeting, which was numerous and respectable, broke up about a quarter past ten o'clock.

Miscellaneous.

A HINT TO WIVES.

It needs no guilt to break a husband's heart; the absence of content, the mutterings of spleen, the untidy dress, the cheerless home, the forbidding scowl, and deserted hearth—these, and other nameless neglects, without a crime among them, have harrowed to the quick the heart's core of many a man, have planted there, beyond the reach of cure, the germ of dark despair. Oh! may woman, before that sight arrives, dwell on the recollections of her youth, and, cherishing the dear idea of that tuneful time, awake and keep alive the promise she then so kindly gave. And though she may be the injured, not the injuring one—the forgotten, not the forgetful wife—a happy allusion to the hour of peaceful love, a kindly welcome to a comfortable home, a smile of love to banish hostile words, a kiss of peace to pardon all the past, and the hardest heart that ever locked itself within the breast of selfish man will soften to her charms, and bid her live, as she had hoped, her years in matchless bliss—loved, loving, and content—the soother of the sorrowing hour—the source of comfort, and the spring of joy.—Chambers' Journal.

There is a deep meaning in this passage. Many a woman who sits by her lonely hearth, and has seen, one by one, the comforts of her home disappear, while her husband is dissipating his means at the tavern, might look back and find the first cause in her own fretful and peevish temper. How bitter must be the reflection of a wife, who finds in her own conduct the cause of a husband's estrangement.

THE TEMPERANCE BAZAAR.

The first of a series of bazaars, to be held in various parts of the kingdom, in furtherance of a Temperance Church, Parsonage, Schools, and College, in some locality not yet fixed upon, took place in Newcastle on Monday, Tuesday, and Wednesday, in the Victoria Hall, Grey-street. All persons connected with the institution—incumbent, professors, teachers, and others—will be total abstainers; and it is hoped that by such an agency, strength and stability will be given to the Temperance Reformation, and a boon conferred on the nation at large. The Rev. W. Wight, B. A., of Newcastle, is the secretary of the project, and one of the trustees. The attendance at the bazaar was numerous, and the receipts amounted to £250, (exclusive of donations). The ladies who had charge of the stalls were—

- | | |
|--------------------------|---------------------------|
| Mrs. Clayton Walters. | Misses Pearson and Hall. |
| Mrs. Lewis Paige. | Mrs. W. C. Marshall. |
| Mrs. Pattison. | Mrs. Porter. |
| Mrs. Hindhaugh. | Misses Potts & Richardson |
| Mrs. Vickers, Gateshead. | Miss Storey. |
| Mrs. John Benson. | Mrs. Harrison. |

One bazaar so much resembles another, that it is hardly necessary that we should attempt a description of this week's elegant exhibition of fancy-work, &c. We were accused of visiting the hall simply for the purpose of picking up a joke; but if such were our intention, we had our reward—for the laugh went against us. The prospectus expects the ladies to "ask every one to subscribe at least for a brick" in the proposed buildings. He was a lucky man, however, who ran the gauntlet of this bazaar, and escaped the fair sirens without subscribing for at least a thousand! Let us hope that the victims will have reason to look back upon their disbursements as a profitable investment.—Gateshead Observer.

STRONG DRINK AND STRONG IDEAS.

An anti-teetotaler was saying, very pleasantly, that he thought, from the general experience of mankind, that a little wine was good—that men could not be strong and robust without it. The teetotaler sat quite at his ease, thinking all the time that only one old arrow from his quiver would answer. Samson, said he, was rather a tough old fellow without wine! But it must be imagined how he was taken aback with: Oh, I suppose the reason of that was, that he would have been perfectly outrageous, had he taken wine; he might have pulled the world down over their heads!

Poetry.

THE FAMINE IN SCOTLAND.

BY MRS. L. H. SIGOURNEY.

(From the New York Observer)

THERE'S weeping mid the lonely sea,
 Where the rude Hebrides lie,
 And where the misty Highlands point
 Their foreheads to the sky.

The oats were blighted on the stalk,
 The corn before its bloom,
 And many a hand that held the plough
 Is pulseless in the tomb.

There is no playing in the streets,
 The haggard children rove—
 Like mournful phantoms, mute and slow,
 Uncheer'd by hope or love.

No dog upon his master fawns,—
 No sheep the hillocks throng,—
 Not even the play-mate kitten sports
 The sad-eyed babes among.

No more the cock his clarion sounds,
 Nor brooding wing is spread,
 There is no food in barn or stall,
 And all are with the dead.

From the young maiden's hollow cheek
 The ruddy blush is gone—
 The peasant like a statue stands
 And hardens into stone.

The shuttle sleepeth in the loom,
 The crook upon the walls,
 And from the languid mother's hand
 The long-used distaff falls.

She hears her children ask for bread,
 And what can she bestow?
 She sees their uncomplaining sire
 A mournful shadow grow.

Oh Scotia!—Sister!—if thy woes
 Awake no pitying care,
 If long at banquet-board we sit
 Nor heed thy deep despair;

While thou art pining unto death
 Amid thy heather brown,
 Will not the Giver of our joys
 Upon our luxury frown?

And blast the blossom of our pride,
 And ban the rusted gold,
 And turn the morsel into gall
 That we from thee withheld?

The following placard was lately posted in Paisley:—

“For the benefit of the employed and unemployed.—Rise on the price of whisky and fall on the price of coffee.—A gill of whisky is now selling at 5d., and a cup of coffee and a roll selling at 1d. About 300 houses within the parliamentary boundary sell whisky at 5d. a gill; and only one house, at the bottom of St. Mirren's-street, sells hot coffee and a roll for 1d.—I speak as unto wise men, judge ye what I say.”

A NOVEL KIND OF INTOXICATION.—A man was on Monday last charged at the police court, Liverpool, with being drunk on the street. In his defence, he said, he was not drunk, but merely under the influence of excitement, occasioned by sitting in a warm room. So powerful was the effect produced by the warm room, that it caused him to fall down in the street. This unphilosophical theory did not appear to satisfy the magistrate, and the usual fine was inflicted.

DESTRUCTION OF GRAIN BY BREWING AND DISTILLATION.—A public meeting of the citizens of Edinburgh, friendly to the temperance reformation, was held in South College Street Church, on Wednesday evening, for the purpose of protesting against the destruction of grain, by brewing and distillation, in the present scarcity of food in Ireland and Scotland. Mr. George Johnston, president of the Edinburgh Total Abstinence Society, was called to the chair. A series of resolutions were submitted to the meeting, condemning the conduct of the Government in sanctioning, and of the people in encouraging the annual destruction of 6,000,000 quarters of grain in the production of a pernicious liquid; and calling upon all to abandon the use of intoxicating liquors, and wash their hands of so gross an abuse of God's bounties. The resolutions were supported in a very able manner by the Rev. Dr. Ritchie, Rev. William Reid, Rev. James Edwards, Judge Marshall, Henry Clapp, Esq., Robert Reid, Esq., and other speakers.—Scottish Herald.

LITERARY NOTICES.

Prize Essay on the Importance and Necessity of petitioning Parliament to prohibit the Sale of Intoxicating Liquors on Sundays.

We feel much indebted to the British Association for the Promotion of Temperance for this publication. We have before spoken, in terms of approbation, of their having offered a prize for the best Essay on this subject. Our feeling was, that besides a great indifference on the drinking system, there was a great amount of indecision, and even absolute ignorance, as to the proper province of Government in relation to our present licensing system—and this would prevent any systematic or successful effort being made to break down the traffic by legislation. To diffuse information—and open up discussion—the first step towards a desirable end—and we were pleased to find that the Association had determined to devote their energies, for a time, to cultivating a sentiment that might hereafter be concentrated on some practical measure.

The Prize Essay is now published, and is well calculated to subserve the end in view. It is calmly and lucidly written, and presents the subject in a fair and candid light. The friends of Temperance will do well to assist in giving it an extensive circulation. We cannot affirm that we agree with all that is said, or with all the deductions made; but on that account we have the greater pleasure in recommending it to general perusal, and expressing our cordial thanks for this well-timed contribution to our Temperance literature. It is published in a cheap form.

Temperance Songs, by W. C. BENNETT. pp. 16.
 C. GILPIN.

This neat little book contains a number of songs on Temperance. The sentiment is healthy and good, and the verses have considerable merit. One of the songs will be known from its having appeared originally in the People's Journal—and since, in many of our Temperance publications. It was set to music and song by Mr. H. Phillips in his musical entertainments, “Oh! don't go in to-night, John.” We recommend them to our readers.

IPSWICH JUVENILE TEMPERANCE BOOKS.

In 32mo., illustrated with handsome woodcuts, in sixpenny packets, of glazed coloured paper.

	PAGES		PAGES
1. The History of Teetotalism	20	17. Temptation Resisted	12
2. Scriptural Teetotalism	20	18. What Little Boys can do for Teetotalism	12
3. Teetotalism of Ancient History	20	19. Little Mary	16
4. Teetotalism of Modern History	20	20. Lucy Grey and her Pet Pigeon	8
5. The cost of Intemperance	20	21. What Little Girls can do for Teetotalism	12
6. Self-denial	20	22. Poor Little Willie	12
7. Early Habits	20	23. The Sixpenny Glass of Wine	12
8. The Force of Example	20	24. The Town Meeting; License or no License... ..	12
9. A Letter to Sunday School Children	20	25. The Unexplored Island	12
10. H. Hawkins, the Drunkard's Daughter	20	26. Is I not happy	12
11. Christian Courtesy and Benevolence	20	27. The Apprentice Lad	20
12. The Young Chemist's Inquiry	20	28. The Power of Custom	20
13. Little Henry and the Teetotal Festival	20	29. The Guide to Glendalough	12
14. The Young Reasoner's Objections to Teetotalism	20	30. Bridget Lartum	12
15. The Fear of Ridicule	20	ASSORTED PACKETS.—No. 1, 1 to 16—No. 2, 17 to 24, inclusive.
16. The Teetotalism of Travellers	20

IPSWICH TEMPERANCE TRACTS.

Those Tracts marked with an * have PICTURES and are on better paper, 150 pages, in a sixpenny packet. The others have 168 pages to the packet.

	PAGES		PAGES
1. The Doctor Scrutinized, or for what purpose do Physicians prescribe Alcoholic Beverages, by R. D. Alexander, F.L.S., 122 thousand... ..	8	44 A Sailor's Yarn	4
2. Striking Facts, 84 thousand	2	45 Moderate Drinking Calmly Considered	12
3. Maker and Vender, 44 thousand	2	46 The Pledge	4
4. Our Creed, 52 thousand	2	47* John Jarvis, or the Pledge Signed	12
5. Adulterated Beer, 34 thousand	4	48* The Fifteen Friends	4
6. Adulterated Wine, 40 thousand	4	49 Sunday School Teachers, 22 thousand	12
7. The Maltster, 37 thousand	4	50 Sunday School Children, 40 thousand	12
8. Go Feel what I have Felt, 53 thousand	2	51 Money better than Beer, 37 thousand	4
9. Facts are Stubborn Things, 53 thousand	2	52* Little Mary; or a Daughter's Love	8
10. The Spirit Dealer, 35 thousand	2	53 Philosophy of Temperance by R. T. Trall, M.D. 20	20
11. Christian Teetotalism, 70 thousand	2	54 Love to Man, or an Appeal to the Pious	20
12. The Trade, 33 thousand	4	55 The Young Woman's Tract	12
13. Alcohol, 33 thousand	4	56 The Young Man's Tract	16
14. The Town of Ipswich, 33 thousand	4	57 Dr. Campbell's Testimony, 18 thousand	8
15. Song of the Water Drinker, 37 thousand	2	58 Why Sign the Pledge? 40 thousand	2
16. Stimulation not Strength, 30 thousand	8	59 The Poor Man's House Repaired	4
17. Farmer Woodman's Speech, 41 thousand	4	60 The Mother's Tract	8
18. The Beer Barrel Examined, 33 thousand	8	61 The High Price of Food	4
19. Teetotal Recipes, 38 thousand	4	62 Ladies' Tract Societies	8
20. Speech of J. J. Gurney, 30 thousand	4	63 The Praise of Water, 25 thousand	2
21. Pity the Poor Drunkard 49 thousand	2	64 Important Calculation, 30 thousand	2
22. The Fool's Pence, 25 thousand	8	65 The Farm Servant, 25 thousand	2
23. Why am I a Teetotaler? 26 thousand	2	66 Teetotalism Declining, 15 thousand	8
24. Dost thou smoke, Bill? 34 thousand	4	67 The Reformed Drunkard, 20 thousand	8
25. William the Laudanum Drinker, 30 thousand	4	68 The Recruit of the British Legion	8
26. The Ox Discourse	4	69 No. 1 of Temperance Anecdotes	12
27. Letter to the Clergy, by a Brother Clergyman, 21 thousand	20	70 No. 2 ditto	12
28 Common Sense, 20 thousand	2	71 No. 3 ditto	12
29 Ralph the Soldier	4	72 No. 4 ditto	12
30 Testimony of Eminent Physicians, 30 thousand	4	73 Luke Husler, or "I did not like to say No."	8
31 The Working Man, 35 thousand	20	74 The Drunkard's Wife	8
32 Is I not happy? by Hugh Stowell, 30 thousand	4	75 The Unexplored Island	4
33 David the Shoemaker, 49 thousand	4	76 Ancient Wines; by R. D. Alexander	8
34 The Drunken Couple, 48 thousand	2	77 Influence of Example, 15 thousand	2
35 Confessions of a drunkard, 29 thousand	2	TRACTS NOW IN THE PRESS.
36 Master Tailor, 20 thousand	4	78 The Victim of Excitement.
37 The Fatal Gift, 36 thousand	2	79 My Medical Adviser does not approve of Teetotalism.
38 Poor Sandy	4	ASSORTED PACKETS.—No. 1, containing 1 to 31.—No. 2, 32 to 55.—No. 3, 56, and upwards.
39 Use & abuse, by Archdeacon Jeffreys, 34 thousand	2	Fifty Packets of Juvenile Temperance Books or Tracts delivered in London for a Guinea, sent by P. O. Order, to Richard Dykes Alexander, Ipswich. Samples of both post free, for five shillings.
40 The Schoolmaster	4
41 Water is Best, by J. J. Gurney, 37 thousand	8
42 Cobbett's Advice	4
43 Take a Public House	4

London: Simpkin and Marshall.

TEMPERANCE
PROVIDENT INSTITUTION,
 39, MOORGATE STREET, LONDON.

Enrolled under Act of Parliament, 31st December, 1840.

DIRECTORS.

R. D. Alexander, Esq.	C. H. Lovell, Esq., M.D.
Rev. W. R. Baker.	J. T. Mitchell, Esq.
Richard Barrett, Jun., Esq.	J. Talbot Tyler, Esq.
Samuel Bowly, Esq.	Richard Walkden, Esq.
Robert Charleton, Esq.	Robert Warner, Esq.
H. F. Cotterell, Esq.	John Wason, Esq.
John Eliot, Esq.	Edward Webb, Esq.

SECRETARY.

Theodore Compton, Esq.

BANKERS.

Messrs. Barclay, Bevan & Co.

THE SIXTH ANNUAL REPORT may now be had gratis on application.

This is the ONLY OFFICE in which Teetotalers can assure without having to pay for the losses occasioned by MODERATE drinking, as well as by intemperance.

The DEATHS in six years have been LESS THAN HALF the number in other offices.

ALL THE PROFITS belong to the Members. There are no other Shareholders to absorb the surplus funds.

ANY SUMS may be assured, from £10 upwards, and any sums paid in from time to time, at the Member's convenience, and a proportionate Assurance will be granted.

NOMINEES may be appointed to receive the benefits, FREE OF DUTY, and all taxes and expenses, and without the trouble, delay, and cost of proving a will.

TEETOTALERS are strongly recommended to join at once, before the first bonus is apportioned.

Every particular, with the rules, scales of payment, &c., may be had by writing to the Secretary, and of all the local agents.

Will be published early in May,

THREE LECTURES,

ON THE MORAL ELEVATION OF THE PEOPLE,

By THOMAS BEGGS.

"We have read these Lectures with a peculiar pleasure. Their morality is so sound, their feeling is so genuine, and their eloquence—the eloquence of a sad knowledge and a generous zeal—is so pure and penetrating.—Hovitt's Journal.

Price, One Shilling.

C. GILPIN, Bishopsgate Street, Without.

Just Published, Price One Penny each, or 7s. per 100.

THE PEOPLE'S EDITION.

An Appeal to the British Nation on the Greatest Reform yet remaining to be accomplished.

By J. S. BUCKINGHAM, Esq.

(Re-published by permission of the Author.)

London: Houlston and Stoneman. Bristol: M. Mathews, 9, Narrow Wine Street.

* * The NATIONAL TEMPERANCE CHRONICLE and TEMPERANCE RECORDER is published on the first day of each month, at HOULSTON & STONEMAN, the Depot of the National Temperance Society, 65, Paternoster-row, and will be sent post-free for one year on receipt of 2s. 6d. postage labels. Annual Subscriptions received at the Society's office, 11, Tokenhouse Yard, London, and subscriptions and donations for the general purposes of the Society, by the Treasurer, G. W. ALEXANDER, 40, Lombard Street; by any Member of the Committee, and at the office as above.

LONDON TEMPERANCE TRACTS,

UNDER THE SANCTION OF THE

National Temperance Society.

The above Tracts comprise a variety of 150 different sorts, and embrace every point of the principle of Total Abstinence. Upwards of

THREE MILLION

have already been circulated. 2 pp. 8d.; 4 pp. 1s. 4d.; 8 pp. 2s. 8d. per 100., or in packets, assorted, 6d. each.

For the convenience of LOAN CIRCULATION, they are assorted into 60 sets, containing 16 pp. in each, and stitched into a strong wrapper, with a suitable address upon each, price 8s. per 100. Liberal allowance for large quantities. Lists may be obtained of the Publishers gratis.

HOULSTON & STONEMAN, 65, Paternoster Row.

Just Published.

THE WORLD'S

TEMPERANCE CONVENTION.

THE REPORT OF THE

PROCEEDINGS OF THE CONVENTION,

WITH AN INTRODUCTION,

By ELIHU BURRITT.

And a selection of the most valuable papers sent into the Business Committee.

The Committee, in order to invite a large sale, have decided upon publishing the volume at cost price.

Sewed in wrapper, 1s. Bound in cloth, 1s. 6d.

Considerable allowance will be made to Individuals and Societies wishing to distribute gratuitously.

C. GILPIN, Bishopsgate Street Without; HOULSTON AND STONEMAN, Paternoster Row.

WANTED.

A MAN SERVANT competent to undertake in-door's work, and to drive—he will not be required to attend to the carriage and horse.

Apply at 10, Trump Street, Cheapside.

HYDROPATHY.

UMBERSLADE HALL, HOCKLEY HEATH, WARWICKSHIRE.—Dr. Johnson, author of "Life, Health, and Disease," "Results of Hydropathy," &c., has removed from Stanstead, Bury, to Umberslade Hall, a much larger and more commodious house, twelve miles from Leamington, and ten from Birmingham. The domestic economy and arrangements are under the management of two members of the Society of Friends. Prospectus of Terms on application by post.

London: Printed by RICHARD BARRETT of 3, Regent-terrace City-road, in the Parish of St. Luke, in the County of Middlesex, Printer; at his Printing Office, No. 13, Mark-lane, in the Parish of Alhallowes Staining, in the City of London; and published by JOHN STONEMAN, of 24, Brooksbys Street, in the Parish of Islington, in the County of Middlesex, at HOULSTON and STONEMAN'S, No. 65, Paternoster-row, in the Parish of St. Michael-le-Querne, in the City of London, Publishers.—Saturday, May 1st, 1847.

THE
NATIONAL TEMPERANCE CHRONICLE
 AND
TEMPERANCE RECORDER.

It is good neither to eat flesh, nor to drink wine, nor anything whereby thy brother stumbleth, or is offended, or is made weak.—ROM. XIV. 21

No. 18, JOINT SERIES.]

JUNE, 1847.

[PRICE 1d., STAMPED 2d.]

CONTENTS.

	PAGE		PAGE
Sunday Trading	89	The Annual Meeting (continued)	96-102
The Annual Meeting	90-95	Correspondents—Advertisements—Cheap and excellent
Subscriptions	96	Bread	102-104

SUNDAY TRADING.

A Bill has been brought into the House of Commons by Sir W. Somerville, and Sir George Grey, "for consolidating in one Act certain provisions contained in Acts for regulating the POLICE or TOWNS," and was ordered to be printed on the 26th April. In this Bill the following clause is introduced:—"No person other than a coffee-house keeper, or licensed victualler, shall open or keep open his house or shop, between the hours of twelve on Saturday night, and twelve o'clock on Sunday night, for the sale of any article of his trade; nor shall any licensed victualler open his house for the sale of wine, spirits, beer, or other fermented or distilled liquors, or permit the same to be sold, after twelve o'clock on the Saturday night, until twelve in the afternoon on the Sunday, under a penalty not exceeding five pounds for each offence." By this clause, beer-houses it appears will be closed during the whole of Sunday, and licensed victuallers closed from twelve on Saturday night until twelve on Sunday. The Morning Advertiser comments with great severity, on this "one of the most odious signs of this hypocritical age." And says, that "Masters employing their hundreds of workmen are often unable to pay them their wages until midnight, or too late for the market on Saturday;" and talks about the injustice of closing shops on the Sunday, dooming "thousands of poor families to pass twenty-four hours without food." That masters are often guilty of this flagrant impropriety and cruelty to their workmen, we are aware; and that Acts of Parliament will not effectually reform the evil, we verily believe. But there is nothing new in this provision. Statutes already in existence make it penal for the butcher, the grocer, and baker, to sell their goods on the Sunday. It is often evaded or openly set at nought by those who find it more profitable to pay the penalty incurred by an infraction of the law, than to obey its mandate. In London thousands of shops are open, but this is in defiance of a known law, and every one is liable; although the law is partially a dead letter, because unsupported by public opinion. Under the present state of things, there may appear a necessity why shops should remain open on the Sunday—but whence the necessity? and we are discussing it apart from all religious considerations. It appears by the authority already quoted, that shops must be open to sell to those who do not get their wages before midnight on Saturday. Thus one evil is to be maintained to meet another. We do not now inquire whether the Sabbath is of Divine institution. It is enough for us that the physical necessities of our being require a periodical rest from the toils and cares of business. It becomes, therefore, a matter of enlightened policy, and cannot be infringed without serious mischief to the bodies and minds of men. Why should the workman be obliged by the thoughtlessness, caprice or negligence of an employer, to devote part of his day of rest to the purchase of articles to supply his daily wants. Is it not far more rational to war against a practice so injurious and inconvenient to the poor man, and so unnecessary also, as payment of wages at too late an hour for market; than to found upon its existence a plea for another evil.

But we apprehend that the strong objection that our contemporary feels to this clause is, that the beer-shop keeper is placed upon the same footing as the man who sells cheese or bread; and that the licensed victualler will be compelled to pay some respect to a day that the religion of our country declares to be holy. For years, law and public opinion have insisted upon an observance of this day on the part of some trades and professions. A poor man in many of our provincial towns, could not purchase an ounce of tea or a pound of beef steaks, but he could obtain any quantity of beer or spirits. The news-room would be rigidly closed, but the public-house would stand invitingly open. Museums, exhibitions of science and art, and lecture halls, must be closed, but the large room at the Red Lion, or the Black Bear, must have its organ and its choir of singers, its reader of the public press, or its Sunday evening lecture or discussion. We do not seek an argument in divine command or ordination, but we say that if there is any reason why the tavern or public-house should be open on the Sunday, there is a stronger reason why the vender of articles of comfort or utility should be open too. And it is an absurdity, as well as an injustice, to place one under obligations which are not binding on the other.

By the 46th clause in the same bill, "Every person licensed to deal in excisable liquors, who supplies any sort of distilled liquor to any boy or girl, apparently under the age of 16 years, shall be liable to a penalty of 20s. for the first offence, and upon conviction of a second to a fine of 40s., and upon a conviction of a third offence to a penalty of not more than £5." This clause is made the subject of very weighty objections, and a few extreme, if not impossible, cases are supposed. The real objection being, that the legislature presumes to interfere with the traffic in intoxicating drinks. We are no further satisfied with the measure introduced than that it indicates a willingness on the part of government to surround that traffic with such limitations—as may lessen its mischiefs and seductions. It shows that we are in a state of progress; and that if the friends of temperance are true to their principles, the day is not far distant when the government will refuse to draw any portion of revenue from a trade so much opposed to the well-being of the nation; trade that besides all its other evils, is converting into poison the food of our starving population, and raising to famine prices the poor man's loaf.

THE ANNUAL MEETING.

The annual meeting of the National Temperance Society was held in the Large Room, Exeter Hall, on Thursday evening, May 20th. As on former occasions, the hall was filled with a highly respectable audience, who appeared to take a deep interest in the proceedings; while we observed on the platform a large number of the early and most devoted friends of the temperance cause. At a few minutes past six o'clock, JOSEPH STURGE, Esq., the Chairman, and the Committee of the National Society, entered the hall, and were received with general applause.

The CHAIRMAN on rising was loudly cheered. He said:—I have no claim whatever to preside on the present occasion, except that of being an old teetotaler; I believe, as near as I can calculate, this is my twentieth year.—(Cheers.) I have tried the practice of teetotalism in various climates, by sea and by land, and I have made many inquiries and observations; and the result of the whole is, that in no case whatever, are alcoholic drinks in my opinion necessary to keep a person in health; and I think, that in all cases, other medicines, at least as good, can be found for the sick. I believe we must not calculate the good done by this Society merely by what we see in its associated capacity.—(Hear, hear.) I believe every consistent teetotaler produces a powerful influence by his individual example:—(hear, hear.)—for my own part, I can safely say, of that circle in which I move, that among those who are not pledged teetotalers, there is not one-tenth of the alcoholic liquor drank which there was fifteen years ago; and I attribute this mainly to the effect produced by the example of teetotalers. I have had one or two beautiful instances of this kind mentioned to me. An elderly friend of mine was quite prejudiced against teetotalism fourteen years ago, but since then he has become a zealous teetotaler, and he told me himself, that sixty-two of his junior relatives have become total abstainers also. Another instance was related to me when attending a meeting in Lancashire, not connected with this Society; and the gentleman who told it me, said, that four years before, he attended a meeting, and was much struck with some circumstances mentioned. When he went home, his daughter wished him to take his usual glass of ale before he went to bed. He replied he would try to do without it: and from that time he had avoided all alcoholic drinks. He had a family of seven grown-up children: two of his sons had given way to intoxication, and the third he was getting uneasy about; but the effect of his example, without any formal admonitions, was such, that he said, his whole family had become consistent teetotalers, and only a short time before he mentioned the circumstance, his wife had asked him why he did not sell the brewing utensils.—(Cheers.) I think there are circumstances in which we are placed at present, which make a very strong call upon those who have not adopted our practice, to consider what may be their duty. I believe that had the petition adopted by the National Temperance Society been acted upon by the Government, at the time it was presented—I suppose now nearly four months ago—there would have been as much food saved as would nearly have met the deficiency which is now likely to be severely felt between this time and harvest. I am one of those who do not like legislative interference wherever it can be avoided; but when the question is, whether food shall be used for the injury of the public, or in preventing people from starving, I think we should not hesitate about it. But whatever difference of opinion there may be upon this point, we shall all agree, I think, that there is something for us to do in our individual practice: and I do trust, that even those who are not prepared under ordinary circumstances to abstain from intoxicating drinks, will seriously consider, that for every draught they take of these pernicious liquors, they may be depriving, and are depriving, some poor person of a meal. This I think is a very serious consideration; and I hope the benevolent part of the public who have not adopted the teetotal pledge, will consider themselves bound, during at least this season of scarcity, to act upon it. Great as the distress in Ireland has been, I am persuaded it would have been still greater, but for the adoption of temperance principles to a great extent in that country. I received a letter the other day from our friend Theobald Mathew, in which he alluded to this subject. With your leave, I will read a short extract from it. He says,—“The sacred cause of temperance continues its onward course.

The vast sums of money expended on the public works, have partially increased the consumption of intoxicating drinks among a certain class of operatives; but our members have been faithful to the pledge. The unholy hope, that the famishing poor would rush to intemperance to drown their sorrows, has been disappointed. They bow with humble resignation to the dispensation of Divine Providence, and endure without repining, the direst of all calamities—death by starvation! I have attended multitudes in the darkest hour of suffering, and never have I yet heard a murmur escape their lips. 'It is the Lord, let it be done according to His will,' is their only exclamation. On last 17th of March—the festival of St. Patrick, our national saint's day, which has heretofore been devoted in Ireland to bacchanalian orgies,—not a drunkard was seen in our afflicted country." As I know we are abundantly supplied with speakers much more able to address you than I am, I will not take advantage of my position, as occupying the chair, by troubling you with any additional remarks, farther than to say, that it is my earnest hope that our friends throughout the country will devote more of their attention in this great question, to the rising generation;—(cries of "hear")—for, I believe, that if those who come after us are properly educated upon it, they will extend its blessings not only through England, but through the world. Particular attention, also, should be given to the teachers of our Sunday-schools, who exert so powerful an influence upon their youthful charge.—(Cheers.)

Mr. BEGGS, Secretary of the National Society, read the Report of the Committee.

G. W. ALEXANDER, Esq. (Treasurer) presented the cash account, which stated the total receipts for the last year (including the balance in hand at the beginning of the year) to be £2,973. 11s. 9d., and the expenditure £2,629. 11s. 5½d. The balance in the hands of the Treasurer and Secretary was £344. 0s. 3¾d.; but nearly the whole of this amount was required to meet the existing liabilities.

BENJAMIN ROTCH, Esq., said: I will take the liberty of reading the resolution committed to my care:—

"That this meeting deeply deploras the extent of juvenile ignorance and depravity in this country, and as it has been shown by the clearest evidence that it is to be attributed, in a great measure, to the drinking habits of the people, and that it is a vast obstruction to the efforts of christianity at home and abroad, this meeting most earnestly calls upon all classes of the community, by the adoption of temperance principles, to aid the society in the subversion of evils so aggravated and multiplied."

Really, Sir, this is a resolution, which ought to invite every good man, every good christian, to give his earnest attention to it. There is, perhaps, no one class of men who can be more forcibly struck with the dreadful amount of juvenile depravity and delinquency that prevails, than the persons holding the situation that I do myself—I mean the magistracy of this great metropolitan county. We are upwards of 600 in number. The commission of the Peace for the county of Middlesex, includes all the élite of the nobility of England; and yet when I look at the newspapers, and at every public meeting connected with education, and when I see the observations that are daily poured forth to the public on the subject of juvenile depravity, and when I see how little it seems to excite the sympathies of mankind—when I see a child who could not look over the rail of this platform, standing in mockery, I may say, before a Bar of Justice—judges and jury trying a poor child for stealing a play-thing from a toy-shop; I am astonished that 600 magistrates, including Peers of the Realm and Members of Parliament, do not think fit to call the attention of Government to the matter, and in a way which should demand respectful consideration—(loud cheers); but leave it to an humble and obscure individual like myself, who has no power save his own personal exertions; and who, nothing to his disgrace be it said, has done it at great cost. It needs not an old memory to trace in the events of history those circumstances which point out, that from time immemorial, drunkenness has been the channel through which all vice has flown.—(Cries of "hear.") And it crowds upon my mind at this moment, while speaking of juvenile depravity as connected with juvenile drunkenness, that there is recorded on the table of history a tale, which, did I venture to go into it, would draw tears from every eye; but at this moment suffice it to glance at it, that your sympathies may be enlisted in the subject. Have you forgotten that that unfortunate child, for he was but a child, who was born Dauphin of France, Louis Caput as he was called, but who was in fact Louis XVII., was made drunk by his vile keeper, and in that state induced to sign the document which caused his mother (Marie Antoinette) to be beheaded! Drunkenness and crime have been united hand in hand ever since drunkenness has cursed this world.—(Loud cheers.) And, my friends, if you applaud that sentiment, will you leave this meeting,—one of you,—without making a firm resolve, and calling upon Him who alone can make us keep resolves to strengthen you in it, that you will go forth,—every one of you,—as missionaries within the sphere of your own influences, and teach others the happiness of belonging to a society which is endeavouring, by God's assistance, to work out so great a reformation.—(Cheers.) There, perhaps, never was a cause which had to contend with so formidable an adversary as the cause of temperance; and what is that adversary? It is that cash account of the Government which it is alleged it cannot afford to lose, although purchased by the degradation of the people; and, after giving the best consideration to the subject I can, I feel that that is a fortress it is of no use for us directly to attack. But, I am happy to know, that the minds of Englishmen, when properly addressed, are so strong and so powerful; and that, from public assemblies such as this over which, Sir, you preside, there can be sent out by that invaluable instrument the press, the sentiments of thousands of Englishmen, and Englishwomen, and children upon this subject, which will have their influence if other things will not.—(Cheers.) I have beheld with the greatest possible delight the gradual and increasing influence of total abstinence; and though in some few localities scattered wide and far, we may find that the temperance cause has dwindled, yet on the whole, one steady pace of progression has been kept; and to-day this meeting is looked upon out of doors with feelings as totally different to what it would have been ten years ago, as light is from darkness.—(Cheers.) I remember the time, when in general society, medical men would venture,—aye, even boldly,—to take up the cudgels against the temperance cause. They handled them very awkwardly, I confess; and, some how or other, it always happened that the weapon fell harmless upon those who supported the cause, while it did some injury to those who tried to wield it in opposition. But that day has gone by: I never hear of such a thing now; and I believe no one in this meeting has of late years heard a talented physician or surgeon seriously say one word against the total abstinence principle. The public mind has got hold of the truths of temperance—truths immutable in their nature. In the course of my own personal experience, I have met with some very remarkable instances of the force of these truths; and if I could for a moment throw over myself a screen from the charge of egotism, I would venture, with permission of the chair, to state some few facts in illustration of the assertion I have put forward. All of you must know, that every magistrate of this metropolitan county, who does his duty as a magistrate, is necessarily very much connected with the prisons and prisoners of the metropolis. When persons, bowed down by grief and overtaken by sin, are deprived of their liberty and incarcerated in our jails, then is the moment of all others, to open their minds to the truths of temperance. I am often in the habit of addressing very large numbers of prisoners under these circumstances.—(Hear, hear.) Too well schooled in a knowledge of human nature, I never appear before them as a person wishing, as they would think, to inveigle them into becoming teetotalers; but I tell them this—“You are placed before me in a prison that enjoins silence, and, therefore, cannot help hearing every word I say. I don't come here to make you teetotalers, but I come here to tell you the truths of temperance which you have never heard and never known.” And I take this opportunity, Mr. Chairman, of saying, that if the whole world knew the truths of temperance, as well as you, and I, and all here do, I can hardly believe but we should have millions of total abstainers flock to our standards. The subject is not known. Thousands of people shut their ears against it for fear of hearing about it. Not that they do not think it interesting, but they are afraid it may become too interesting to every body about them. The father of a family who indulges in that pernicious “luxury,” as he calls it, is afraid to let his wife and children go to a teetotal meeting, for fear they should hear those undeniable truths, which would make them cast an eye of reflection on the wretched father, who makes his home unhappy that he may gratify a vitiated palate.—(Hear, and cheers.) And it is by making this known to the world—by convincing every child of every family, that that father ought not to do what he does do, that we shall at last oblige that father either to abandon society, or to abandon strong drink. I tell these poor wretched prisoners—and it is a melancholy truth, that out of all prisoners incarcerated in our jails throughout the whole of England, four-fifths come there through drunkenness—(hear, hear);—that I come not to make them teetotalers:—it may require a much more powerful arm than mine to do that;—but that I come to tell them the truths of temperance, which they have never before heard. They are obliged to listen to me; and if it should ever please God in his mercy and wisdom to incline them, when they leave that prison, to turn teetotalers, they will at least know the arguments upon which their change is based, and which it will be necessary for them to use in defending the cause they have adopted. They listen to me; and what is the result? That three-fourths of all those prisoners who are taught these truths, earnestly apply to me to be allowed to take the pledge as a privilege.—(Cheers.) This is rather changing the tables. We have to stand upon our platforms and entreat people to come up and take the pledge. We tell them the books are open, the pens ready, and the ink on the table, and then the number who do sign is very small; but, here mark the difference! These prisoners have heard the truths of temperance, they have got them well by heart, a deep impression has been made upon them, and they become the earnest solicitors to be allowed to take the pledge. And what I say to them is this: “If you can give me some good sound reason, applicable to your own particular situation, for taking the pledge, I will allow you to do so.” One case, and only one, I will now relate, which occurred to me yesterday. A criminal, in the House of Correction at Coldbath Fields, entreated me to allow him to take the pledge. I think he must have asked me three months ago; but there are so many I have to do with, that I give the pledge to none without taking down the minutest details of their history, for I intend to follow them when they go out of prison.—(Cheers.) He told me that this was one reason why he wished to take the pledge—“My mother was a drunkard; she died intoxicated, and the clergyman who came to see her in her last moments, left the room saying, ‘Unfortunately, her drinking habits render her incapable of understanding what I say;’ and she died drunk.” And he told me that this had made an impression upon him he should never forget. “That, Sir, is one reason why I wish to take the pledge;” and another was this: “I am the son of a lamp-lighter. My father, unfortunately, like my mother, was a drunkard. It is the custom among lamp-lighters to pay in the morning, because their duty begins in the afternoon early; therefore, when he got his money in the morning he went and got drunk with it. I, Sir, used to get done in the evening just in time for meeting my father when he set out to light his lamps; and I did this, because I knew he was drunk, to hold the ladder for him. But, a week before I came into this prison, my master detained me an hour later than usual before he paid me, and when I went out to meet my father, I found him a corpse upon the pavement. The ladder had been insecurely placed, and had slipped, and he was killed while in a state of intoxication. And now, Sir, will you let me take the pledge?” Was not that, I ask, a good reason? and do you not think that he was sincere in his request to take the pledge? I am obliged to give a good reason for what I do. I have been called to an account by my brother magistrates for presuming to allow a man in prison to exercise the power of taking the pledge. I find there's no hesitation among these magistrates to allow a man to sign a document of any sort that will do him good in prison, or which is for his own benefit, but they couldn't see how our poor, simple pledge could possibly benefit any man; but I opened my book of history to them;—I read tale after tale from this book,—(loud cheers),—I told them that the accounts were taken from the mouths of the men themselves, and they were able, if they pleased, to call them and examine these very individuals; and the result was, that with one accord they gave me permission to go on taking pledges.—(Cheers.) One word more on the subject more immediately connected with the resolution. The subject of juvenile depravity is one which I have studied much; and I have come to this painful conclusion, that until we can educate our children before they are old enough to be considered as criminals, and not only teach them to read and write, which are very good things, but teach them also industry, and morality of habit and manner, and a horror of the public-house—and until we give to every boy and girl two pair of hands, which is a figurative way of saying, two or three occupations, that if one fails they may turn to another;—we shall never succeed in keeping those poor children out of the Criminal Calendar. What is the present course pursued with them? I am speaking to hundreds and thousands who know the fact, and therefore I fear not to be contradicted. The poor children are turned into the street, that their drunken fathers and mothers may go and “enjoy themselves in the public-house:” and what becomes of them? They either want the common necessaries of life, and steal to put food into their mouths, or they are seduced by the abominable and vile conversation of those who have already fallen by that practice. The child thus induced to go to the public-house, soon learns in the company of the vile associates he meets, his first lesson in crime. He is arrested and now stands at the bar of justice: he is asked—“How say you, guilty or not guilty?” Why, he can’t understand it. What does “How say you” mean? He can scarcely understand the phraseology in which he is addressed. That child is now on the way to ruin. From being frequently placed in such a situation, all the paraphernalia of a criminal court, which ought to strike terror into his heart, loses its effect. He becomes accustomed to it; gets to like it rather than otherwise; and at last prefers to be sent to prison to meet his associates, than to roam in the world at large. There are one hundred thousand of these children growing up felons. When first sent to prison they are whipped; they go a second time to prison and the punishment is increased; and so they continue, until they become full-grown adult felons, and then they are transported out of the kingdom. I want to check this crime in its growth. I want to keep these children as they ought to be kept—in innocence; and the only way to do that, is to educate them and occupy them. I am glad to know that I am uttering this within the hearing of a gentleman, whose name for his sake, I will not mention, but who has liberally offered a very large sum of money for the best Essay on this very subject.—(Cheers.) I do hope he will have an immense number of Essays for him to choose out of. I hope he will be inundated by them, because it will show that the mind of the public is set upon that subject. I am sure, knowing him as I do, that no greater pleasure will he have than in distributing the prizes he has offered; and I do earnestly hope that men of intellect, of talent, and of experience, will write upon this question, and give him the benefit of their views, for I know he is prepared to make a most excellent use of them.—(Hear, hear.) There is one other subject mentioned in this resolution, which I have so often heard commented upon from this platform, that it does not require a word from me, except as being contained in the resolution; I mean, that intemperance is a vast obstruction to the efforts of christianity, both at home and abroad. Nobody who has ever attended missionary meetings; nobody who has ever heard of missionary enterprises or read missionary works, but must know there is no one thing that has withheld the spread of the gospel with such an iron grasp, as the use of intoxicating drinks: and I do earnestly hope, that no one attending this meeting, will ever find himself upon a missionary platform without using some argument, some suasion, to prevent that constant supply of ardent spirits which we find is so frequently dealt out to missionaries abroad.—(Loud cries of “hear.”)

Rev. MICHAEL CASTLEDEN, of Woburn, said,—Ladies and gentlemen, it has been said that teetotalism is going back: does this assembly and do these plaudits prove that? No; so far from going back it is progressing, and will progress, because it is the work of God.—(Cheers.) I regret Mr. Chairman that so few of my brethren in the ministry,—(hear hear;)—in the church and out of the church, are coming forward in so great a cause as this. At our missionary meetings in this spacious hall, we are in the habit of saying, “Come, come, to the help of the Lord—to the help of the Lord against the mighty;” and have we not a mighty enemy that is opposing us in the good work in which we are engaged? And let us be assured, that the more successful we are, the more virulent will be the grand enemy of all that is good and great. In the county in which I have the honour and happiness to reside, so far from teetotalism declining, there is a gentleman on the platform who can unite with me in saying, that it is advancing considerably; and in the town of Woburn, the temperance cause is under the auspices of His Grace the Duke of Bedford, who has kindly given us permission to use the Town Hall whenever we may want it.—(Cheers.) You, Sir, as well as every individual in this assembly, would be delighted to see a company of youths of both sexes who have come forward to sign the pledge, and who continue steadfast to the pledge which they have taken. And not only have the youths so done, but the aged also, and among these, is the individual who has the honour of now addressing you.—(Cheers.) Seventy-eight years have passed over my head.—(Loud cheers.) God be praised, I did not die before this hand signed the pledge!—(Great applause.) Again and again have I wished that I had known teetotalism forty years ago.—(Cheers.) I should have been better in body, though I am not bad now.—(Laughter and cheers.) Some people, Mr. Chairman say, there are many great facts in proof of the excellence of temperance; I say I am one of them. I have found it good for the body, good for the mind, and—what some persons think greater than either of these,—good for the pocket.—(Hear and laughter.) Only think of the money expended—I speak it advisedly—in poisonous drinks!—(Hear, hear.) In the course of a year, what is it to a poor man? what to those in middling circumstances? and what to those of a more exalted rank? It is dreadful to think what an amazing sum of money is wasted upon that which is absolutely injurious to the animal economy.—(Hear, hear.) I want it to be known that alcoholic drinks of every description, instead of doing good, do infinite harm. I say to some people who are opposed to our principle, “Only try it for yourselves; ‘prove all things, hold fast that which is good.’” I once thought that it would be ruinous to my health, if at my years I should leave a more generous mode of life, and take only aqua pura. But I find that the purer water is, the better it is.—(Cheers.) And I have said to some persons who differ with me upon this point, “Why don’t you try and mix the air?” They reply, “We can’t do that; besides we all know that the purer the air is, the better it is adapted to the human constitution.” If then the God of Nature has given us pure air and pure water, surely we ought not to endeavour to spoil that which our heavenly Father has made good.—(Cheers.) I once thought, and acted upon it too, that it would be impossible for me to go through three services on the Sabbath-day, without those stimulants which I was in the habit of, certainly moderately, taking. But since I have abstained from everything that is a stimulant, I have found, that whereas formerly I felt considerable fatigue after the services of the Sabbath-day, I am now enabled to go through them with perfect ease; and in the week days, what I did not expect three or four years ago, I can walk out four miles, and walk in four miles, and enjoy my health and strength, and the comforts with which Providence is pleased to surround me.—(Cheers.) I have said I am a great fact; and true it is, and a blessed fact it is, that I have found total abstinence completely screening me from those inconveniences which I was subject to before I had taken the pledge. Before I became a teetotaler, I used to have a white tongue, an aching head, restless nights, a bad appetite, and worse than all,—the doctor every now and then.—(Laughter.) But total abstinence has cured all these, and the doctor together.—(Cheers.) And now I have touched upon the doctors, I must say, what a noble testimony we have of a thousand doctors telling us that alcoholic drinks are poisons!—(Hear, hear.) There was a time, as the gentleman who preceded me has stated, when they were against us, but now their opinion is recorded in our behalf; and you will please to remember, that among those who have given their testimony in favour of the great cause in which we are engaged, are included some who are in high places—even the medical advisers of royalty itself. As I said at the beginning, so I say at the close of my imperfect speech, the temperance cause is from heaven; it leads to heaven,—let it therefore go forward and prosper!—(Great applause.)

Rev. Dr. BURNS rose to support the resolution. He said: I am sure, Mr. Chairman, that we are perfectly satisfied of the very great importance of endeavouring to indoctrinate the youthful mind with the principles of teetotalism. Surely prevention is vastly better than cure. It is very desirable indeed, to prevail upon prisoners of mature years to sign the pledge; it is very desirable for the aged to sign the pledge; but is it not better to train up children with a thoroughly correct knowledge of the great principles of our society, and thus preserve them from all the fearful and contaminating influences of that vice which is the curse of our country? But, it has struck me, Mr. Chairman, that it is always well for some speaker to make use of these annual occasions with a view of taking a retrospect of the past, a survey of the present, and as far as possible, a reasonable prospect of the future, condition of teetotalism in general.—(Hear, hear.) Now, in reference to a Retrospect of our great cause, allow me to say, that teetotalism has just gone through two apprenticeships. It is just fourteen years old. Fourteen years ago, and teetotalism commenced in a northern town of this country; and I should like to ask the persons who seem to treat it with some degree of contempt or indifference, what other society of any kind, ever progressed during fourteen short, flitting years, as the temperance society has done? Fourteen years ago, and all the teetotalers in the kingdom might have met in the Committee-room of this hall;—where could the teetotalers of England meet today? At that period, a few working men pledged themselves to this principle, and became its zealous advocates; at the present time, nine millions of persons in the world are professedly and practically teetotalers.—(Cheers.) In addition to this, allow me to say, that although no benevolent institution ever progressed more rapidly and more extensively than teetotalism has done during that short period, none ever had greater difficulties to contend with at the commencement of its operations. In making a railroad, valleys have to be filled up, mountains levelled, tunnels formed, and a great deal of hard work effected, before the rails are laid down, and before the steam-carriages can go smoothly and swiftly to their destination; and during the greater portion of these fourteen years, we have had to meet public prejudice and opposition; and perhaps the prejudice against teetotalism was deeper and more universal, than against the establishment of any benevolent institution that was ever formed in this country.—(Hear, hear.) But at the present time, Mr. Chairman, that prejudice is decreasing. It never was at a lower ebb than it is at this day. It is decreasing among the great body of the working classes; it is dying away among the better informed and educated orders of society, and among the aristocracy and nobility of the land; and at the present time, there is not a class of society in the kingdom, in which there cannot be found consistent, firm, devoted, and persevering teetotalers. But not only has teetotalism during the last fourteen years exerted a benign influence on our country, and not only has it gone back improved to North America, and blessed the American continent, but there is not a part of the world where the English language is spoken, or where English influence is exerted, where there are not temperance societies; so that teetotalism has circumnavigated the globe, and blessed all the islands of the earth where English influence is felt. Now, Sir, in taking a Survey of teetotalism at the present period, allow me to say, that it never was so well understood as it is now. I believe few persons can be found any where who do not understand distinctly what teetotalism means. The prejudice against it was never so feeble as now; and the recent lamentable events connected with Ireland and this country,—I mean the destitute and starving condition of so many persons in consequence of the dearth of food,—have palpably taught to the inhabitants of these kingdoms the folly of destroying God's precious grain, while multitudes are dying of famine.—(Cheers.) I believe, too, that teetotalism had never a more effective and telling literature than at the present time—(hear, hear); and in addition to this, does it not stand on the vantage ground with respect to experience? Is there nothing in this society having fourteen years' experience? And does it not, also, stand on the vantage ground in reference to facts? Fourteen, twelve, ten years ago, we had to reason and argue the question—every thing was disputed—every position we took was controverted. But now we could publish an Encyclopedia, composed entirely of facts bearing upon every branch of this great question.—(Cheers.) And from what has been done during the last fourteen years, we may reasonably expect that during the next fourteen, our principles will spread still more extensively—and I hope universally.—(Hear, hear.) But there are some things teetotalism demands, and I just wish to name these very rapidly:—In the first place, I believe teetotalism as well as christianity, demands greater union among its members.—(Cries of "hear.") I regret, Sir, exceedingly, that the object proposed at the World's Convention—a union of teetotalers throughout the world—was not carried into operation. I know that "Union is strength." We want a union of all parties, of men of all colours and nations who will abstain, and give the benefit of their influence and talents to this cause. We wish them to be united in one grand phalanx against the enemy. Another thing which teetotalism requires at the present time, is universal voluntary support. A great deal has been done during the past year for teetotalism, in connexion with the National Temperance Society. A number of benevolent men who, on various occasions, have ever been ready to open their purse and give their hundreds and fifties, have come forward again. I don't despise the hundreds and fifties—(hear, hear)—I am thankful to those gentlemen for the liberality they have displayed; but I had infinitely rather that this money had come from the great mass of the people. I want persons who have been benefited by teetotalism, to ask themselves what it has done for them—what it has done for them physically and pecuniarily—what it has done for them in their minds, and many of them, in their souls; and then, I want them to look at the other side of the account-sheet, and to inquire what they have done for teetotalism? I venture to say, that no man has been a teetotaler for one month without being a great saver; but what has he done for teetotalism in return? Let teetotalers only give back a tithe of the benefits they have received, and I should be satisfied. I am not very much in favour of the old Jewish system of tithes—but I want to see a new system of teetotal tithing.—(Cheers.) I want every teetotaler to feel obligated by principle, by gratitude, by love to the cause, by love to the drunkard, by love to the world—to support teetotalism, and to give to it all that earnest assistance which it so loudly demands from him. And if this were only done, the result would be, that instead of having two or three missionaries in London, we should have twenty, and half-a-dozen other agents who might go through the whole length and breadth of the land disseminating widely the principles of the temperance reformation. If teetotalers would only adopt the course pursued by the Anti Corn-Law League, I am certain, the time would very soon come, when distilleries and breweries, gin-palaces and beer-shops, would be shut up by hundreds in our country.—(Cheers.) Well then, allow me to say, that if teetotalism is to progress, it will require SPECIAL ORGANIZATIONS. In the first place, we want a medical organization. I rejoice, that on this platform there are distinguished medical gentlemen who have taken a noble part in this question; and why may not the medical gentlemen of Britain who are teetotalers, form an organization for diffusing information throughout the world on the medical branch of the subject? Secondly, I want a christian organization. I regret with my respected and reverend brother who preceded me, that there are so few ministers of the Gospel upon this platform, and I deeply regret too, the apathy which prevails in the Christian church on this question. In fact, constituted as a very great portion of the Christian community is at present, we cannot get at them. They will not come to our meetings to hear, they will not read our publications; and if we are ever to teetotalize the church, it will be essential that we have a special Christian Teetotal Organization.—(Cheers.) Christian ministers, Christian deacons, and Christian class-leaders—I suppose, the Society of Friends are almost all teetotalers already—must form a grand temperance Christian union, to carry our principles into the church, and never cease labouring until every minister and every influential man in the church, stands on the right side of the question in reference to strong drink.—(Loud cheers.) From a paper I received from New York about three days ago, I find that such a society has just been established in that country; and if such an organization is required in America, how much greater reason exists that all teetotal members of Christian churches in the United Kingdom should not only work to the utmost among the great body of teetotalers,—but form themselves into Christian bands, and go into the Church of God, with the spirit of persuasion, with the spirit of Christian love, with the spirit of devout prayer, and with the spirit of strong faith, believing that God will bless their efforts in teetotalizing the church; and if we once get the church teetotalized, then we shall be able to bring its influence to bear upon the question throughout the world.—(Loud applause.) Another organization equally important,—and I know the mention of it will meet with a hearty response from the present meeting—is a working-man's organization:—(Cheers)—an organization for putting down the iniquitous drinking-customs of the country, for shattering to pieces the tyranny of the workshop, as connected with the drinking usages of our land, and for uniting working men together in an effort to break the fetters which thus bind them in a most inglorious slavery. Another and last organization—for my bill presents four grand and distinct organizations—is a Literary and Statistical Organization:—an organization of literary men connected with the Temperance Society, who shall prepare statistics, and publish such tracts and pamphlets as may be conveyed with safety and confidence into the learned circles of society, be introduced to the notice of Her Majesty's Government, and be laid with propriety upon the table of the Queen in the palace.—(Cheers.) The first speaker this evening said, he thought we should not do much by assailing the Government, from the fact, that it imagines it has so much at stake in the revenue it derives from the sale of intoxicating drinks. But there are two sides to that question, as my learned friend knows very well. What matters it how much revenue the Government derives from this source, if it spends more than it gets, in keeping a large police establishment, in building prisons, in transporting criminals to Australia; and in employing Jack Ketch in his blood-thirsty avocation?—(Cheers.) Why, Sir, a more palpable manifestation of folly and stupidity never characterised a government,—(vehement cheers.)—than to derive its resources from the crimes and miseries of its people. And now in conclusion, let me say, that these annual gatherings ought at any rate to stir us up; they ought to make our teetotal pulse beat at least 80 or 90. Is it not a delightful and inspiring thing, to look upon the faces of some thousands of teetotalers? If it is a pleasant thing for a man to look upon the face of his friend, and if "as iron sharpeneth iron, so does the countenance of a man his friend;" how much better, how much more cheering it is, to look upon the faces of thousands of persons who are all enlisted in the cold water army.—(Cheers.) I sincerely trust, that having heard the good speeches which were made before I stood up, and the good speeches which will be made when I sit down, we shall all retire from the meeting this evening more deeply pleased, better satisfied, and more strongly, affectionately and zealously confirmed in our attachment to the temperance cause. I know no great question which is agitating, or which can agitate this country, with which teetotalism is not essentially connected. Do we want freedom? And can a nation be free if it is enslaved by strong drink!—(Hear, hear.) Do we want education? It's madness attempting to educate a drunken people.—(Hear, (Continued on page 96.)

National Temperance Society.

OFFICE 11, TOKENHOUSE YARD.

VICE-PRESIDENTS.

The EARL of ARUNDEL and SURREY, M.P.
Sir Wilfrid Lawson, Bart.

- | | |
|------------------------------|---------------------------|
| R. D. Alexander, Esq. | Rev. Theobald Mathew. |
| J. D. Bassett, Esq. | W. J. Morgan, A.M., M.D. |
| Thomas Beaumont, Esq. | Richard Peck, Esq. |
| C. Bowly, Esq. | Rev. P. Penson, M.A. |
| Samuel Bowly, Esq. | Rev. W. Reid. |
| J. S. Buckingham, Esq. | Rev. W. W. Robinson, M.A. |
| Robert Charleton, Esq. | Rev. J. Sherman. |
| Rev. R. Clowes, M.A. | Rev. C. Stovel. |
| Isaac Collins, Esq. | Rev. T. Spencer, A.M. |
| Joseph Eaton, Esq. | Joseph Sturge, Esq. |
| S. C. Hall, Esq., B.L.F.S.A. | Rev. W. H. Turner, M.A. |
| Lawrence Heyworth, Esq. | Edward Thomas, Esq. |
| William Janson, Jun., Esq. | Robert Warner, Esq. |
| Ven. Archdeacon Jeffreys. | Edward Webb, Esq. |
| G. S. Kenrick, Esq. | Rev. J. Wilson. |

TREASURER.

G. W. Alexander, Esq., 40, Lombard Street.

EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE.

- | | |
|-------------------|--------------------|
| George W. Atwood | Richard Hicks. |
| Richard Barrett. | C. H. Lovell, M.D. |
| Jabez Burns, D.D. | John Meredith. |
| William Cabell | Richard Potter. |
| William Cash | W. W. Robinson. |
| John Cassell | T. B. Scutt. |
| Charles Gilpin | |

SUPERINTENDENT OF MISSION.
John Meredith.

SECRETARY.
Thomas Beggs.

SUBSCRIPTIONS.

£. s. d.	£. s. d.
Burder, Rev. J. . . 1 1 0	Marriage, Robert 1 0 0
British College of Health . . . 3 3 0	Miller, George . 1 1 0
Dent, Mr. . . . 1 1 0	Reynolds, Mrs. d. 0 10 0
O. P. Q. . . . 1 0 0	Thomas, George . 5 5 0
Howell, Mr. . . 1 1 0	West, William . 1 1 0
„ (Mission) 1 1 0	Williams, E. . . 1 1 0
	A Box (Mission) 0 5 7½

SPECIAL FUND.

Barrett, R. . . . 8 0 0	Gurney, T. H. . 50 0 0
A Friend (R. B.) 33 0 0	Thompson, F. J. 5 0 0
A Do. . . . 5 0 0

THE ANNUAL MEETING.

(Continued from page 95.)

hear.) Do we want a national improvement in morals? Where shall we begin, but by drying up the great fountain of iniquity arising from the use of intoxicating drinks?—(Loud cheering.) Do we want to banish crime, to shut up prisons, to abolish public executions, and to render the situation so usefully occupied by our worthy magistrates, an entire sinecure? do we want to ameliorate the miserable condition of a large part of our population? do we want to have at all times our granaries crowded with the staff of life, so that in occasional emergencies, the poor may not be driven to such shifts and sufferings as they now are? do we want in one word, that our country and the world should be exalted? Allow me to say, that I know no means so likely, except the preaching of the gospel, to effect this consummation, as the carrying out to the utmost and everywhere, and in the fear of God, with a holy and noble perseverance, the grand principles of true tectotalism.—(Great applause.)

The CHAIRMAN.—Before putting the question, I can hardly forbear mentioning a fact I am acquainted with, although by doing so I shall wound the modesty of our friend who moved the resolution, because I think it is a fact which the world should know, that it may stimulate other magistrates to go and do likewise:—Within the last twelve months, our friend has found places for 150 prisoners who had taken the temperance pledge, and he does not know at the present hour but of one instance in which his confidence has been abused.—(Much cheering.)

[The first resolution was unanimously carried.]

JAMES SILK BUCKINGHAM, Esq., moved the second resolution:—

“That in the opinion of this meeting, it is at all times a sinful waste of the bounties of Divine Providence, to convert wholesome grain into intoxicating beverages, but especially at the present time, when thousands are dying from starvation, and the necessaries of life are raised in price to the population, resulting in wide-spread misery and distress, and they cannot but hold all those who drink these liquors so produced, as responsible in some measure for the melancholy consequences arising from their use.”

Among the events of this period, there was not one which had made on his (Mr. Buckingham's) mind so strong an impression, as the folly, amounting even to fatuity, displayed on the part of the Government and authorities of this kingdom, in shutting a deaf ear to the entreaties which had been made to them upon this subject. From evidence of the most unquestionable nature it appeared, that the supply of provision of almost every kind, but particularly of grain, was less, not merely in England, but through the whole of Europe, than in ordinary years. Under such circumstances as these, it must be admitted to be the paramount duty of all governments, to increase the stock of food: and any government which should remain indifferent to measures for adding to the common stock of food, would be guilty of a great crime; but how much was that criminality increased, when not content with doing scarcely anything to add to the stock of food, it permitted an immense quantity of the most precious of all kinds of food—because the most nutritious and innocent—to be converted into poisonous drinks? Such a thing would make us shudder with horror if it were new to us. What would be the opinion entertained of it by a man living in some interior country of Africa where these drinks never existed, and who should be set down in the midst of England, and told—“This is a kingdom which boasts of standing at the head of the civilized countries of the earth. It has the wisest men in it; it has the largest amount of virtue and wealth,—and the greatest mechanical power; and, nevertheless, while thousands are dying from an insufficiency in the supply of a certain article, that same article is permitted by the government and authorities of the country, to be converted into that which is not merely useless but actually mischievous and destructive?” He (Mr. Buckingham) challenged the whole history of the world to produce any thing so grossly inconsistent—so flagrantly affronting to the common understandings of men as this conduct. Ireland was the object to which all persons directed their attention when the scarcity of food was referred to, and what was doing there? The government was sending out vessels to various parts of the world, and that at the public expense, to procure food and bring it from a distance, while at the same time, if distillation had been prohibited, there would have been grain enough in Ireland to have supplied, to a great extent, the deficiency now existing. And yet he, (the speaker) they (the audience)—and other people were called upon to put their hands in their pockets and pay a portion of the expense of these ten millions, which were partly expended in bringing grain from abroad, while they saw a vast amount of grain burnt as it were before their eyes. It was deemed by the community as a great crime, if a wealthy person hoarded up a large quantity of corn in times of scarcity; and instances had not been wanting, in which the people irritated by the thought that such men should be hoarding up corn to make a high price in the market, in the midst of starving multitudes,—had taken forcible possession of that grain. Such a proceeding, he (Mr. Buckingham) admitted was quite unjustifiable, but it shewed the keen sense of indignation which the people felt when so material an article as food was kept back. But supposing that such an individual, on the common principle that "every man has a right to do what he likes with his own"—instead of hoarding up this grain, were to order—and himself superintend the execution of that order—that it should all be put in some great public square and set fire to, what indignation would be excited from one end of the country to the other against such a man!—yet that would be a comparatively innocent thing compared with the distillation and brewing from corn, which was constantly carried on. In the burning of the grain there would be only one evil, the loss of a certain quantity of food;—but in distillation and brewing, it was not only lost to the community, but, in addition, it was used in making intoxicating drinks; the use of which was the cause of nearly all the crime and vice which this country contained. The more he reflected upon this fact, the more astonished he was at the blindness of the Government. It was difficult to say whether such conduct arose from want of perception, or from a want of feeling. From circumstances mentioned in the public journals, it would seem as though the government was not actually insensible to this heavy calamity. An official notification had been made, that only four of seconds quality was to be used in the Royal Household, and one pound of bread per day was stated to be the allowance of each person resident in the palace. This fact too, was also proclaimed at the Lord Mayor's Banquet given to Her Majesty's Ministers—and was a very striking contrast, he must say, to the amazing waste which that and every other Lord Mayor's Banquet presented; because there could be no doubt, that the meat consumed in making the sauces, &c., then used, would have given one hundred families a good and substantial dinner.—(Loud cries of "hear.")—But if the fact he had just stated was worth any thing—if it was not a mere mockery and parade—how blind must those be who did not perceive, that to save a few pounds of flour, and then to permit millions of quarters of grain to be destroyed, was literally "straining at a gnat and swallowing a camel."—(Cheers.) Now, it could not be said, that no representations had been made on the subject. The petition from the National Society presented to the House of Commons by Mr. Brotherton had been adverted to by the chairman; other petitions had likewise been presented: and only a night or two ago, he saw by the papers, that a question had been asked of the Chancellor of the Exchequer on that subject, and the answer was, that it was rather too late in the present season to interfere. There was only some 200,000 quarters of grain which were not already used for distillation: and the truth was, the Government would not interfere in the matter. It had been alleged, that to interfere with the ordinary course of trade, and with private property was unsound Political Economy;—in other words, it was interference with brewers and distillers' profits that was feared: but he would ask, were brewers and distillers more important than other sections of the community? Was it nothing to the landlords in Ireland, that they could not get their rents paid? Was it nothing to the Liverpool rate-payers that they were doubly and trebly taxed to support paupers? The people were expected to pay for the prisons, and penitentiaries, and hospitals, and other establishments which the drinking system rendered necessary, but they were not allowed to interfere with the profits of brewers and distillers, or prevent them taxing the poor industrious man, and robbing him of one-half of his earnings! He (Mr. Buckingham) could find no words to express his indignation at such a mockery of common sense. At the general election which was now coming on, it was very desirable that every elector should exert his influence within his own sphere, by calling the attention of those candidates who might present themselves for his choice, to this great fact,—that something more was required of a member of parliament than voting away supplies, and hanging upon the tail of the Government; that he was bound to consider himself as selected from the rest of the community, and placed in his high position, not to delay doing anything until his constituents called upon him, but to originate something for the public good, and shew his sympathy for the public welfare. Dr. Burns, had recommended, in his excellent speech, the establishment of certain valuable organizations; but there was one he did not mention—the formation of a Female Organization upon the question.—(Cheers.) No influence, he believed, would be so efficacious in the correction of juvenile depravity as female influence, which, it could not be disputed, was powerfully though silently exercised upon society. The characters of children in early life, were much more moulded by women than by men. Men were occupied with various public duties: but from the influence which women exerted over the rising generation, he thought a female organization would produce the happiest results. Allusion had been made to America; and he could bear his testimony, that the ministers of religion in that country, instead of being behind the rest of society on the temperance question, as unhappily they were in this country, he never met with an instance where a clergyman of any denomination refused, on being applied to, to lend his church for a temperance meeting. On the contrary, they uniformly gave notice from the pulpit of the holding of any such meeting, and urged and entreated their people to attend it. Conceive of such a revolution taking place in England as Westminster Abbey, and the Cathedrals of Canterbury, Lincoln, Lichfield, Durham, and other places being used for such a purpose! And yet how could their large naves, which were filled with the effigies of the crusaders and a variety of old people, whose names were now almost forgotten, be better occupied than by having them devoted to the holding of temperance meetings? When in the United States of America, he had also delivered an address from the seat of the Speaker of the House of Representatives at Washington; his audience almost entirely consisting of the members of the two Houses of Congress, with their immediate friends. What would be thought if an application were made for a similar purpose to the Speaker of our House of Commons! It was only two days ago that a member moved, that as for the last fifty years, the "Derby day" had always been considered a holiday, the House should adjourn; and this proposal had met with a universal assent. He, (Mr. Buckingham), should liked to have moved, and had he been in the House, he would have done so, that as the House would not be wanted on Thursday, owing to the absence of the members at the Epsom races, it should be given to the National Temperance Society to hold a temperance meeting.—(Loud cheers.)

JOHN RUTTER, Esq., of Shaftesbury, said that the subject of the resolution he rose to second, was to consider the best means of economising food under the present distressing circumstances, especially of a part of our empire. The audience were all aware that many remedies, founded upon self-denial, had been proposed; but it had struck him, among others, as extraordinary, that amid the wisdom of the age, and especially of the Legislature, no person had offered to propose that which they as teetotalers thought to be one of the most straightforward remedies which could be presented to the mind of man, viz., that we should no longer destroy the food of man. This, he believed, was the best remedy which could be found for relieving the present, and preventing future, scarcity. He found from a witness against them—Mr. Smith, the great distiller,—that we were in the habit of destroying no less than 8,000,000 quarters of barley every year, by producing from it not only a useless, but an injurious drink, thus taking food from the people, and converting it into that which neither nourished them on the one hand, nor did them good on the other. From the evidence of Mr. Smith it appeared, that two sacks of malt were used for the production of 18 gallons of spirit; that in the manufacture of twenty-five millions and a half gallons of spirits, 2,496,000 sacks of barley were employed; that for brewing, 15,000,000 sacks of barley were destroyed in making 60,000,000 bushels of malt; making, together, 17,496,000 sacks of barley. From enquiries he (Mr. Rutter) had made in his own neighbourhood, he found that a man, his wife, and four children, consumed on an average, two sacks of corn in a year; so that the amount of grain at present destroyed by malting was sufficient to support every man, woman, and child in Ireland, where thousands were starving for the want of that very article. Yet distilling and brewing had been permitted to go on, while not only the Irish were starving, but whilst the labourers, who ought to be the strength of this country, were compelled to banish themselves from the land where they might have obtained a just remuneration for their labour, and supported themselves and families in comfort. He found too, that scarcity was rapidly approaching this quarter of the kingdom, that multitudes of the poor were becoming unemployed, and that the money which had been sent out of the country to purchase bread, had produced a disorganization of our monetary arrangements; and yet not one member of the Government had apparently seen, that all this would be remedied, if food were no longer destroyed and made into intoxicating drinks. Some, indeed, said that the present scarcity was occasioned by a visitation from God. Truly, God's purposes and ways were inscrutable, and could not be fully understood by man; but he was convinced in his own mind, that it was never intended by God, that any nation of human beings should be totally sustained upon potatoes; and he was equally convinced, that if man by his folly had not destroyed the food by which that people could have been sustained, there would have been no scarcity in the land. But this was not the only consideration that pressed upon his mind. If this food were simply destroyed, it would be a great sin; but not only was it destroyed, but it was converted into that which undermined the prosperity, the health, the morals, and the comfort of the people—converted into that which cursed them—and yet our rulers continued to pursue that course! He found from the evidence of Mr. Chadwick, Secretary to the Poor Law Commission, that no less a sum than £26,000,000 was yearly spent in intoxicating liquors, and a large portion of that amount Mr. Chadwick acknowledged came from the working classes. It was to be considered, too, that every shilling of that money was absolutely lost, while it increased our national poverty, immorality and crime; yet, as he said before, our rulers would not be enlightened: they would not acknowledge that they were upholding a system which produced an extravagant expenditure of money on one of the chief sources of immorality and crime, and their only remedy was, that after they had demoralized the parents they should open schools for the children. He had long been convinced that the most prolific schools the government of this country had, were the gin-shops and beer-shops; and until the government could find some means by which the morals of the people should be protected, it was useless in them to endeavour to instruct the rising generation. But they who were total abstainers could take these children into their schools, bring them up under different influences, and instil different principles into their minds, and then they would preserve them from the corruptions of their parents, while, at the same time, they might be restoring many of those parents to that respectability from which they had fallen. He (Mr. Rutter) was convinced that the resolution he had to second, was one of great importance at the present moment. By and by the general feeling of the country would come to be in accordance with the principles it announced; and when a unanimous popular feeling could be brought to bear upon the temperance subject, the government would be convinced that the people were becoming too well informed and too wise, any longer to permit the existence of so great an evil as the waste of wholesome food in the manufacture of an injurious drink. And, in the meantime, it was the duty of all abstainers to protest strongly against the present scarcity being attributed to a visitation from God, when it clearly had its direct origin in the folly and iniquity of man.—(Cheers.)

[The resolution was carried unanimously. The collection was then made.]

MR. HENRY CLAPP of Lynn, Massachusetts, moved the third resolution.

"That this meeting records its approval of the World's Temperance Convention, and the steps taken by the National Temperance Society, with a view to give effect to its resolutions; whilst, at the same time, it expresses its conviction that still more energetic measures require to be put forth; and would, therefore, urge the friends of the cause to follow the noble examples of pecuniary liberality already given, and thus enable the society successfully to prosecute the designs of the Convention. Mr. Clapp said:—In consequence of the very short time which it would be proper for any person to occupy at this stage of the meeting, it will only be possible for me to make a few remarks with regard to the former part of this resolution ; that is, as to the approval it is expected you will give of the World's Temperance Convention. And, I am certain, if there is any person in all this vast and uncounted assembly, who has reason to be grateful for the World's Temperance Convention, and to call upon others to express the same gratitude, it is the person to whom this resolution has been kindly entrusted.—(Hear, hear.) I landed upon your shores in the month of June last. I came here for the express purpose of attending the World's Temperance Convention ; and I regret to say, that I was the only delegate of the Washingtonian Movement of the United States of America. It was my intention at that time, after having participated in the proceedings of the Convention, to return immediately to my own land, and to devote such new energy as I might have gathered in from that meeting, to the promotion of the cause of temperance at home. But having met with hundreds, I might almost say, thousands—of the best advocates and best friends—of the Anti-Sla— : —I was ready to go on to my favourite subject,—(cheers,) of the temperance movement, which is an Anti-Slavery movement ; having met, I say, with these friends of the temperance movement in Great Britain and Ireland, and having exchanged salutations and kindnesses, and having made a great many promises to visit a great many people, which it would take a great many lives to fulfil, I was tempted, now to go in this direction, and then in that,—east and west, north and south : —from London I went to Bristol, Exeter, and over Wales—back again to Bridgewater and Taunton,—back again to London ; then to the North of England,—and then over Ireland and Scotland ; and having travelled some 3000 miles on behalf of this, the Peace, the Anti-Slavery and other kindred Institutions—(Cheers)—surely, I above all others ought to be grateful for the existence of that Convention. And now the time approaches, when I must leave your shores for those of my own country, how gladly shall I go away fresh from this meeting,—which is enough to make any one fresh—to my own country, endeavouring to carry away from here, some portion, at least, of the spirit which animates this vast assembly. I say, I have occasion to be grateful that I ever saw the World's Temperance Convention, embracing as it did the Bowlys, the Eatons, the Sturges, the Charletons—but I can't begin to mention names—and other noble spirits, whom I have seen since then with their armour on, labouring hard in the field ; and I rejoice here to testify, that what they put forth in words and advice in London, they put forth in energy and practice, at their respective homes.—(Cheers.) I have associated with every class of society, and tasted of the hospitality of persons in every rank of the temperance movement,—from the humblest labourer to some of the more distinguished whom I see upon this platform ; I have been in the cottage of the artisan, and in the magnificent palace—I had almost called it—of Hartwell Park, the princely proprietor of which is gracing this meeting with his presence ; and I rejoice to say, that during that time, I never heard a single sentence, I never witnessed a single manifestation, of bad feeling—I will not say towards myself—common courtesy prevented that, but towards my country ; and I am sorry to say, that the feeling which prevails throughout England, Ireland, and Scotland, towards the American people, is a kinder and more catholic feeling than prevails among a portion of my countrymen towards yourselves—(cheers)—on this side of the water. But I rejoice to believe, that through the instrumentality of this World's Temperance Convention, which we are called upon to-night to approve, a kindly feeling is fast springing up and spreading among the better order of people of both countries, the direct tendency of which, is to preserve those peaceful, and amicable, and beneficent relations which fortunately at present exist between the two nations. For my own part, I do most cordially approve of the World's Convention, for during the last six months I have not been in a single city, or town, or hamlet, but where I found somewhat more of impulse, of energy, and enthusiasm in the temperance movement, in consequence of that Convention ; and there is but one feeling, as far as I can learn, among all the friends of the movement,—that the time may not be far distant, when another Convention, having the same great purposes in view, and accomplishing the same brilliant results, will be assembled, either in this the leading metropolis of the Old World, or in one of the more humble metropolises of the New World. When I return to the United States of America, it will be among the most earnest designs I have at heart, to seek to cultivate among the people there, in every rank of life with which I may be favoured to meet, that kind and generous feeling which is infinitely to be preferred above all the national jealousy and national sectarianism which prevail so widely in so many hearts.—(Cheers.) With respect to the present position of the temperance movement, I would say, that if fifteen years ago it was but a mere stripling as it were, and has now arrived at such a noble estate, that it can stand here in London, with the very heart of the universe pouring its blood into its veins, and can arrest the attention of the civilized world, we have, indeed, no occasion to repine ; we have, indeed, no occasion to think that the cause goes slowly on. It does not move slowly. The winds of heaven are swelling its sails ; it is going bravely through the waters ; I hear them dashing against its sides ; and it goes onward swiftly, with all the impulse of a noble and generous influence. The time I am sure is not far distant, when in your country as in my own, there will be not only a few distinguished magistrates ; not only a few learned and venerable clergymen ; not only a few of the vast mass of the labouring portion of the community, engaged in the work, but when, as in my own country, there will be more of those men who have the leading influences of society in their control, labouring in this great enterprise. To be sure, I cannot quite repeat the eulogy which my friend Mr. Buckingham has passed upon the ministers of religion in the United States ; but still I can say, that hundreds and thousands of them are highly friendly to the temperance movement, and that many Governors of States, and members of both houses of legislature in many States, are engaged in upholding, and enthusiastically carrying on, our movement. We have a Congressional society for the National legislature, and societies for State legislatures ; and now today, I hear that a new society has been formed in my country, based technically upon christian principles. I hope that in fact and truth, there is not a temperance society any where in all the world, which is not based upon christian principles—(cheers) ;—for if it be based on any other principles, it can have no certainty of success at all. That the temperance cause is based upon those principles, I believe, and therefore it is that it is entitled to the earnest support of every person in the community. I know this is a great meeting, but it is not too great a meeting for our movement. I know this is a celebrated hall, but it is not too celebrated to be used for promoting our movement. This morning I walked with some friends over the new House of Lords, which has recently been furnished with so much magnificence and splendour; and I felt as I passed over its tessellated floors, and gazed upon its gilded walls, that with all its splendour and magnificence, it faded into utter and entire insignificance, compared with the humblest hall where men are gathered to advance the great interests of the temperance cause.—(Cheers.) In my travels through England, Ireland, and Scotland, I have everywhere met with men loving all that is dear, reverential, and sacred in associations of the past, and I have found them labouring to build up old and dilapidated cathedrals, and to restore towers and castles, abbeys and minsters, which were fading and crumbling away beneath the insidious touch of time. And I will not complain of those who engage in that work through a reverential feeling for the past; but I do rejoice, in the evidence which this meeting gives, that another movement is going on, which, seeing everywhere men and women, made in the image of the Almighty Father, crumbling away beneath the influence of their passions and unholy indulgences, seeks to build them up, and restore them to their original and pristine elegance and beauty.—(Cheers.) And let me add, that one man—aye, the humblest man in all the community,—is of more value than all the cathedrals, and minsters, and houses of lords or ladies that were ever built.—(Loud cheers.)

Rev. JOHN BURDER, of Bristol, in seconding the resolution, said that, as a christian minister he felt the greater readiness to say a few words on the present occasion, because of the unhappy fact, that comparatively so few who were in the christian ministry had seen fit to take a decided part in the temperance movement. He had been for many years engaged in the christian ministry, and he could bear his testimony to the fact, which had already been mentioned, that there was no one thing which interfered so much with the progress of genuine religion, and with the benefits of a good education, as the intemperate habits of the people.—(Hear, hear.) His objection to moderate drinking was, that with regard to millions of people it was the high-way to excessive drinking. There was a vast deal of important truth in that observation of the great Dr. Johnson, with which many in the meeting were no doubt familiar. He was one day dining in company with the celebrated Hannah More, who being on very familiar terms with him, took the liberty, in a playful way, of asking him to take wine with her. He declined. She repeated the invitation,—“Do, Dr., take a little wine?” “No child,” he said, “I can’t take a little,—I won’t; if I take a little, I shall take much; so I shan’t take any at all.” Now, if Dr. Johnson, with all his learning, and all the respect for virtue which his writings plainly showed he entertained, felt that a little wine would make him take much, could they wonder that the same principle should be found to act on the tens of thousands of people who had little or no instruction, and into whose minds no virtuous principles had been instilled? That was the chief reason why he took no strong drink. Not because a little did him much harm, but because he wished to use the little influence he had in his circle of acquaintances and neighbours, in inducing those people to take none, who, if they took any would take much. He was sure, that one of the best methods of promoting the prosperity both of England and America, was by promoting that great and good cause, on behalf of which they were met that evening. It was now more than eleven years since he had joined the temperance cause; and during that period he had always felt happy in bearing his silent or actual testimony against a practice which he thought led thousands in the highway to intemperance. His principle was that when he could do good to others without doing harm to himself, it was not only right for him to do that good, but he was called upon by a regard to his Divine Master to perform it. And after he had proved by eleven years’ experience, in health and sickness, that he could very well do without intoxicating drinks,—(he would not condemn others—he left every one to act as he conscientiously thought he ought to do); he was sure, that for his own part, he should be guilty of sin if he did not abide by the pledge which he had adopted.—(Cheers.)

Mr. STURGE, at this stage of the proceedings, was under the necessity of vacating the chair, but before doing so, he observed,—I think we have cause to thank God and take courage; and I hope all our friends will go home resolved to work in it with double diligence.

On the motion of the Rev. Dr. BURNS, which was carried with acclamation, BENJAMIN ROTCH, Esq., occupied the chair for the remainder of the evening.

THOMAS BEGGS, Secretary of the National Society, then rose and said,—The Committee of the National Temperance Society, have thought this the fittest time for adopting a Memorial to Her Majesty, on the destruction in grain in the manufacture of intoxicating drinks. I hold in my hand a copy of the Memorial, which has been prepared by the Committee, and with the permission of the Chairman I will read it to the meeting:—

TO HER MOST GRACIOUS MAJESTY THE QUEEN.

The Humble Memorial of the NATIONAL TEMPERANCE SOCIETY, assembled at the Great Room in Exeter Hall, the 20th of May, 1847,

MAY IT PLEASE YOUR MAJESTY,

Your Memorialists have seen with the greatest pleasure and satisfaction, an intimation that your Majesty has been pleased to enjoin a strict economy in the use of the necessaries of life in the royal household, during the present calamitous season of famine and distress. We very cordially sympathize with this most humane and gracious injunction, rendered so necessary by the exigencies of the times, and the numerous privations under which thousands of your Majesty’s subjects are at this moment suffering. We would, however, most humbly urge upon your Majesty’s attention a subject, in which your Memorialists have long been deeply interested, and which, on every revision, seems more important, whether viewed in its immediate and obvious relations, as affecting the food of the people, or in its higher considerations, as more intimately associated than any other with the vice and misery which abound in your Majesty’s dominions.

That to which your Memorialists refer, is the annual consumption of eight million quarters of grain, in the manufacture of fermented and spirituous liquors; a quantity, as your Memorialists are prepared to shew, sufficient, if properly employed, to furnish bread for the whole starving population of England, Ireland, and Scotland for twelve months.—They believe that this is a grievous waste of the bounties of Providence at all times, but more especially now, when large masses of the people are suffering from absolute want of food.

As a large number of the most eminent of the medical profession, consulted on this special point, have declared intoxicating beverages to be totally unnecessary for persons in health,—as several of the judges of the land have from all time borne testimony to the fact, that the intemperance consequent upon their use is the great source of the profligacy and crime which comes before them in their judicial capacity—and as your Memorialists have proved by practical experiment on large masses of the people the advantage of total abstinence from these liquors, they cannot forbear urging respectfully but earnestly upon your Majesty's gracious attention this most important subject.

Your Memorialists are fully persuaded, that any diminution in the use of intoxicating beverages would be a great blessing to all classes of your Majesty's subjects, and cannot but be aware that an example so illustrious would ensure respectful attention from all. Your Memorialists therefore encourage the hope, that your Majesty, on a due consideration of the subject, may be induced still further to exert your gracious influence and powerful authority in favour of the cause of temperance, with which your Memorialists are associated, the spread of which they believe to be identified with the best interests of the country, and which will, under the divine blessing, cause the principles of religion, morality, and education to be rapidly extended throughout your Majesty's dominions.

Signed on behalf of the Meeting.

[The reading of the Memorial drew forth several loud and prolonged bursts of applause.]

J. LEE, Esq., LL.D., of Hartwell Park, near Aylesbury, moved the adoption of the memorial. After the important addresses which had been delivered that evening by members of Temperance Societies from both sides of the Atlantic, he would merely state that he rose with great satisfaction to propose that the memorial which had been just read, should be presented to Her Majesty.

J. D. BASSETT, Esq., of Leighton Buzzard, felt very great pleasure in seconding the motion of his worthy friend Dr. Lee. And whilst he deeply regretted that the course now proposed had not been pursued three months ago—(cries of "hear")—it being the most effective means that could have been adopted, he was rejoiced to see the great interest which the present meeting had taken in the matter. He rejoiced too, in believing that the temperance cause was making rapid progress in the minds of the community; (hear, hear.)—in his opinion, it only required to be more fully known to be rightly appreciated.—(Hear, hear.)

The CHAIRMAN put the question, "That the Memorial now read be adopted by the meeting," which was carried unanimously amid enthusiastic cheering.

RICHARD HICKS, Esq., M.R.C.S., moved the fourth resolution:—

"That this meeting hail with the liveliest satisfaction the growing opinion in favour of temperance principles amongst the members of the medical profession, and would urge upon the friends of temperance in general, the importance of employing every means to enlist this influential class in favour of the practice of total abstinence from intoxicating drinks."

The speaker said, he hoped the meeting would hear him patiently for a few minutes, while he pointed out with as much brevity as was consistent with clearness, some of the evils accruing to the human frame from the use of strong drink. It could scarcely be necessary for him, now that the temperance movement had made so great an impression upon the mind of the people, to state, that alcohol, the intoxicating principle in spirits, wine, and all fermented liquors, was a poison, of the same class, and producing on the system the same effects, as opium. When taken in small quantities, it acted as a powerful diffusible stimulant; if in large quantities, it acted as a powerful narcotic. Moreover, it was perfectly incapable of undergoing the process of digestion. It was received into the stomach, was then absorbed by the veins, became mechanically mixed with the blood, and was at last thrown off from the system by the various excretions and secretions, as unchanged as when it was originally received into the mouth. If he were asked for the proof of this, he could refer to Dr. Percy, of Birmingham, who many years ago wrote a very talented Essay, which obtained the gold medal from the Edinburgh University; and in that Essay, he stated that he had made a number of experiments upon animals with spirits; he had, in fact, poisoned them with spirits, and after death, he was enabled to obtain the spirit, as pure as before it had been taken, from the blood, brain, liver, and various other organs of the animals who were made the subject of these experiments. Besides, the spirit could actually be smelt in the ventricles of the brains of persons who had died in a state of intoxication; and a drunkard's very breath would tell those who might stand near him, that the alcohol was passing away as unaltered as when taken into his stomach. From these facts, a very important inference was drawn, viz., the injurious influence which alcohol exerted upon infants at the breast. He had before said, that a great similarity existed between the action of alcohol and that of opium. Now, the other day, he saw in "Lee's Manual for Students," (as we understood,) under the article "opium," this observation— that "opium should never be given to children, if it could be possibly avoided, and that it should never be given to mothers giving suck, without cautioning them not to put their children to the breast for some hours afterward." And why that caution? Because, if a child were placed at its mother's breast who had taken opium a short time before, she would convey the active poisonous principle of opium through her milk to the system of her child, and thereby inflict upon it a most serious injury. He knew there was a habit of a like kind prevailing among females in London, when they wished to send their children to sleep;—they would very often take a large quantity of gin into their system, and when they felt the flow of milk, they put their children to the breast. If, perchance, they should have taken a sufficient quantity of spirit to cause it to prove a narcotic, they would effect their object of sending their children to sleep, but such mothers ought to be told again and again, that such a sleep was not a natural and healthy, but a drunken sleep.—(Cheers.) He had himself often seen children rendered drunk by these means; and he was perfectly convinced, that a large amount of infantile disease arose from the injurious influence of the alcohol conveyed into the system of the children through the medium of their mother's breasts. But, as he had before said, alcohol was a stimulant when taken in small quantities: and as such, it increased the circulation of the blood, excited the brain, produced irritability in all parts of the system; and if there was the additional irritation of teething, or any disorder of the alimentary canal, then to one the children taking it, would be thrown into convulsions. He (Mr. Hicks) had had an immense number of children under his care during the last nine years, and he had found mothers in the habit of taking alcohol into their system under the idea that they were improving the quality and increasing the quantity of their milk by so doing, whereas the contrary was the case. He would give an instance. A little time ago, he was called to attend a lady who had been confined six weeks. Her child for the first three weeks was quite a healthful lively little thing, but after that time, it began to cry and to become excessively uneasy. In consequence of this, a medical man was called, for want of confidence in whom, they called him (Mr. Hicks) in. He saw clearly that the mother's milk must be the source of the child's illness, and to ascertain what was the cause of her milk being disturbed, he asked her what she was in the habit of eating and drinking? She told him that about a fortnight before she called him in, she began to take porter. What time of the day did the child become uneasy? he inquired. "In the afternoon." He then asked when she took the porter, and the reply was, "some at eleven, some at dinner, and some at supper, and the child cries all the night." He then said to the lady "Just take my advice. I am satisfied that your milk is the cause of the child's illness, and the milk is rendered injurious by the alcohol you take: give up the alcohol and the child will get well." The lady had sense enough to follow his advice, and without any medicine the child actually did get well. This was a specimen of the scores and scores of cases which had come under his care within the last nine years. In Sir Benjamin Phillips' work on Scrofula, that writer observed, that some mothers of delicate constitutions, in order to sustain their failing strength had recourse to stimulants; but mark his words!—"But such feeding often deteriorates the milk, and lessens its nutritive principle, and thus the nutrition of the child suffers." Why, this was contrary to public opinion. Mothers took alcohol, because, forsooth, they thought it increased the quantity and improved the quality of their milk: but he had narrowly examined the milk of teetotal mothers, and he pronounced, most decidedly, that their milk was more nutritious and more bland than that of any person who took into her system alcoholic drinks.—(Cheers.) Not only was alcohol the cause of a great deal of infantile disease, but also of a great amount of disease among adults. On the brain, which was the material organ of thought, it inflicted a most serious injury. He (Mr. Hicks) was no materialist; he was far from saying that the brain was the mind; but the brain was the material organ through which the mind acted, just in the same way as the eye was the material organ through which the light was conveyed to the brain, to be apprehended by the mind. If the eye were injured in any of its parts, if those lenses which were transparent became opaque, although the light was darting through the air, we should not be able to see it, because of the imperfect state of the organ through which it ought to be conveyed: so it was equally impossible for the mind, perfectly to act through an imperfectly organised brain; and he was quite satisfied, that there was no source of brain diseases so frequent as the use of intoxicating liquors. With regard to disease of the liver, he could declare positively, that he had never seen a case of diseased liver which was not traceable to spirit or beer drinking. It was well known that spirit drinking was the chief source of that disease of the kidney, called Bright's disease, and also of skin diseases and of insanity; and he (Mr. Hicks) was quite certain, that if temperance principles were universally to obtain, there would not be one-fourth of the diseases which now prevailed. An extensive undertaker and himself had been keeping an account for some considerable time, unknown to each other, of the number of persons between the age of twenty and sixty, whose death had been brought on directly or indirectly through the use of strong drink; and upon comparing notes they found, that four-fifths of those whom he had attended in their last illness, and four-fifths of those whom the undertaker had consigned to the tomb (between the ages before stated,) had been brought into those circumstances by the use of intoxicating liquors. That was a fearful proportion; and he did sincerely and fervently pray, that the time might not be far distant, when every medical man in the world would be a pledged teetotaler.—(Cheers.) He was sure that a very great change had taken place in the medical mind with regard to alcoholic stimulants. He had conversed with a great number of medical men, occupying different positions, and of different attainments in the profession, and he never had met with one who had told him that those drinks were necessary for persons in health. In conclusion, he hoped, that having made people teetotalers, they would never rest satisfied until every one of the trophies of the temperance cause had become trophies of the cross of Christ.—(Cheers.)

Dr. FERRIER would merely, at that late hour, second the resolution, which his esteemed friend, Mr. Hicks, had so ably proposed.

[The resolution was unanimously carried.]

WILLIAM JANSON, Jun., Esq., moved:—

"That the thanks of this meeting be given to Joseph Sturge, Esq., for presiding over this assembly on the present occasion; and for his devotedness to benevolent objects generally, and to this society in particular. Also, that the thanks of the meeting be presented to Benjamin Rotch, Esq., for his kindness in occupying the chair, during the absence of Mr. Sturge."

G. W. ANSTIE, Esq., of Devizes, seconded the resolution.

[The resolution was carried unanimously with loud applause.]

The CHAIRMAN said, I am exceedingly sorry that our excellent friend Mr. Sturge is not here to return thanks for himself; and while I am happy, that any fortuitous circumstances should have placed me for a few moments in the chair, I most entirely disclaim for myself any pretensions to your thanks on that account. For my own part, I feel very much indebted to Mr. Sturge for the able manner in which, up to the period of his withdrawal, he conducted the proceedings of this meeting. It is very difficult, I do assure you, to fill a chair of this kind, surrounded as we are by so many persons whom we are glad to see, and whom we should, if time permitted, be glad to hear. Mr. Sturge has strictly adhered to the arrangements made by the Committee for this occasion, and I shall endeavour to follow his excellent example by declaring the present meeting to be now concluded.

The vast assembly then rapidly dispersed.

NOTICE TO READERS AND CORRESPONDENTS.

The Report of the Anniversary Meeting—which was held on the 20th instant, a period of the month when we usually go to press—has caused some little confusion and delay. As we were anxious to give a full report, a number of communications and important articles have been crowded out. We hope to bring up arrears in our next number.

IPSWICH JUVENILE TEMPERANCE BOOKS.

In 32mo., illustrated with handsome woodcuts, in sixpenny packets, of glazed coloured paper.

	PAGES
1. The History of Teetotalism	20
2. Scriptural Teetotalism	20
3. Teetotalism of Ancient History	20
4. Teetotalism of Modern History	20
5. The cost of Intemperance	20
6. Self-denial	20
7. Early Habits	20
8. The Force of Example	20
9. A Letter to Sunday School Children	20
10. H. Hawkins, the Drunkard's Daughter	20
11. Christian Courtesy and Benevolence	20
12. The Young Chemist's Inquiry	20
13. Little Henry and the Teetotal Festival	20
14. The Young Reasoner's Objections to Teetotalism	20
15. The Fear of Ridicule	20
16. The Teetotalism of Travellers	20
17. Temptation Resisted	12

	PAGES
18. What Little Boys can do for Teetotalism	12
19. Little Mary	16
20. Lucy Grey and her Pet Pigeon	8
21. What Little Girls can do for Teetotalism	12
22. Poor Little Willie	12
23. The Sixpenny Glass of Wine	12
24. The Town Meeting; License or no License	12
25. The Unexplored Island	12
26. Is I not happy	12
27. The Apprentice Lad	20
28. The Power of Custom	20
29. Biographical Gleanings—Examples	20
30. Ditto ditto. —Warnings	20
31. The Guide to Glendalough	12
32. Bridget Lartum	12

ASSORTED PACKETS.—No. 1, 1 to 16—No. 2, 17 to 32, inclusive.

IPSWICH TEMPERANCE TRACTS.

Those Tracts marked with an * have PICTURES and are on better paper, 150 pages, in a sixpenny packet. The others have 168 pages to the packet.

	PAGES
1. The Doctor Scrutinized, or for what purpose do Physicians prescribe Alcoholic Beverages, by R. D. Alexander, F.L.S., 122 thousand	8
2. Striking Facts, 84 thousand	2
3. Maker and Vender, 44 thousand	2
4. Our Creed, 52 thousand	2
5. Adulterated Beer, 34 thousand	4
6. Adulterated Wine, 40 thousand	4
7. The Maltster, 37 thousand	4
8. Go Feel what I have Felt, 53 thousand	2
9. Facts are Stubborn Things, 53 thousand	2
10. The Spirit Dealer, 35 thousand	2
11. Christian Teetotalism, 70 thousand	2
12. The Trade, 33 thousand	4
13. Alcohol, 33 thousand	4
14. The Town of Ipswich, 33 thousand	4
15. Song of the Water Drinker, 37 thousand	2
16. Stimulation not Strength, 30 thousand	8
17. Farmer Woodman's Speech, 41 thousand	4
*18. The Beer Barrel Examined, 33 thousand	8
19. Teetotal Recipes, 38 thousand	4
*20. Speech of J. J. Gurney, 30 thousand	4
21. Pity the Poor Drunkard 49 thousand	2
22. The Fool's Pence, 25 thousand	8
23. Why am I a Teetotaler? 26 thousand	2
24. Dost thou smoke, Bill? 34 thousand	4
25. William the Laudanum Drinker, 30 thousand	4
26. The Ox Discourse	4
27. Letter to the Clergy, by a Brother Clergyman, 21 thousand	20
28. Common Sense, 20 thousand	2
29. Ralph the Soldier	4
30. Testimony of Eminent Physicians, 30 thousand	4
31. The Working Man, 35 thousand	20
32. Is I not happy? by Hugh Stowell, 30 thousand	4
33. David the Shoemaker, 49 thousand	4
34. The Drunken Couple, 48 thousand	2
35. Confessions of a drunkard, 29 thousand	2
36. Master Tailor, 20 thousand	4
37. The Fatal Gift, 36 thousand	2
38. Poor Sandy	4
39. Use & abuse, by Archdeacon Jeffreys, 34 thousand	2
40. The Schoolmaster	4
41. Water is Best, by J. J. Gurney, 37 thousand	8
42. Cobbett's Advice	4
43. Take a Public House	4

	PAGES
44. A Sailor's Yarn	4
45. Moderate Drinking Calmly Considered	12
46. The Pledge	4
*47. John Jarvis, or the Pledge Signed	12
*48. The Fifteen Friends	4
49. Sunday School Teachers, 22 thousand	12
50. Sunday School Children, 40 thousand	12
51. Money better than Beer, 37 thousand	4
*52. Little Mary; or a Daughter's Love	8
53. Philosophy of Temperance by R. T. Trull, M.D. 20	20
54. Love to Man, or an Appeal to the Pious	20
55. The Young Woman's Tract	12
56. The Young Man's Tract	16
57. Dr. Campbell's Testimony, 18 thousand	8
58. Why Sign the Pledge? 40 thousand	2
59. The Poor Man's House Repaired	4
60. The Mother's Tract	8
61. The High Price of Food	4
62. Ladies' Tract Societies	8
63. The Praise of Water, 25 thousand	2
64. Important Calculation, 30 thousand	2
65. The Farm Servant, 25 thousand	2
66. Teetotalism Declining, 15 thousand	8
67. The Reformed Drunkard, 20 thousand	8
68. The Recruit of the British Legion	8
69. No. 1 of Temperance Anecdotes	12
70. No. 2 ditto	12
71. No. 3 ditto	12
72. No. 4 ditto	12
73. Luke Husler, or "I did not like to say No."	8
74. The Drunkard's Wife	8
75. The Unexplored Island	4
76. Ancient Wines; by R. D. Alexander	8
77. Influence of Example, 15 thousand	2
*78. The Victim of Excitement.
*79. My Medical Adviser does not approve of Teetotalism.
*80. The Restoration.

ASSORTED PACKETS—No. 1, containing 1 to 31.—No. 2, 32 to 55.—No. 3, 56, and upwards.

Fifty Packets of Juvenile Temperance Books or Tracts delivered in London for a Guinea, sent by P. O. Order, to Richard Dykes Alexander, Ipswich. Samples of both post free, for five shillings.

London: Simpkin and Marshall.

LONDON TEMPERANCE TRACTS,

UNDER THE SANCTION OF THE

National Temperance Society.

The above Tracts comprise a variety of 150 different sorts, and embrace every point of the principle of Total Abstinence. Upwards of

THREE MILLION

have already been circulated. 2 pp. 8d.; 4 pp. 1s. 4d.; 8 pp. 2s. 8d. per 100., or in packets, assorted, 6d. each.

For the convenience of LOAN CIRCULATION, they are assorted into 60 sets, containing 16 pp. in each, and stitched into a strong wrapper, with a suitable address upon each, price 8s. per 100. Liberal allowance for large quantities. Lists may be obtained of the Publishers gratis.

HOULSTON & STONEMAN, 65, Paternoster Row.

Just published, price One Penny.

THE PHILOSOPHY OF BREAD-MAKING:

Shewing the wasting effects of Yeast, and the advantages arising from the use of Unfermented Bread; with hints on White and Brown Bread; together with Elihu Burritt's collection of Receipts for making a variety of articles of food from Indian Corn Meal. By EDWARD HAZARD MATHEWS.

Houlston and Stoneman, London; M. Mathews, Bristol; and all Booksellers. May be had of the Author, 13, Upper Arcade, Bristol, post free, on receipt of two penny stamps.

Excursion to Sheerness and Back,

On Monday, June 21st, by that powerful packet the COMET; with permission to visit the Flag Ship, and to land at Sherness; for the benefit of the Funds of the FITZROY TEETOTAL ASSOCIATION. To leave Hungerford Bridge Pier at $\frac{1}{2}$ past 8, and call at Southwark Bridge $\frac{1}{2}$ before 9.

Tickets 2s. each, pier dues included. Children under twelve, 1s. 6d. To be had of Messrs. Hill, 10, Long Acre; Miller, Duke Street, Oxford Street; Purvis, Blackfriars Road; Hart, 159, Aldersgate Street; Draper, Titchfield Street, Marylebone. A Meeting will be held on board. Vocal and Instrumental Music. An early application for Tickets is necessary, the number being limited. * Strong drink strictly prohibited.

In the Press, for early Publication,

PRICE 6D.,

THE GREAT MEDICAL DISCUSSION ON TEETOTALISM,

Lately held at Dunmow, Essex, between Dr. GRINDROD and Messrs. COCKS and COVENTRY, Surgeons. The Pamphlet will contain a full report of the two evenings' debate, and will be calculated especially for circulation amongst medical men. The Committees of Societies, and private individuals wishing for a number of copies for distribution, can apply to Dr. Grindrod, Grove Mount, Ventnor, Isle of Wight.

* * * The NATIONAL TEMPERANCE CHRONICLE and TEMPERANCE RECORDER is published on the first day of each month, at HOULSTON & STONEMAN, the Depôt of the National Temperance Society, 65, Paternoster-row, and will be sent post-free for one year on receipt of 2s. 6d. postage labels. Annual Subscriptions received at the Society's office, 11, Tokenhouse Yard, London, and subscriptions and donations for the general purposes of the Society, by the Treasurer, G. W. ALEXANDER, 40, Lombard Street; by any Member of the Committee, and at the office as above.

Just Published, 8vo., Price 1s.

THREE LECTURES

ON THE

MORAL ELEVATION OF THE PEOPLE.

By THOMAS BEGGS.

* * * In this pamphlet, there is of itself a mass of sound information on the condition of the people, which could not have been brought together except by much reading, and more actually mingling with the multitude. The perusal of it has made us rejoice that such men as Mr. Beggs find their proper places in the earth, while it is day with them. We have read these lectures with a peculiar pleasure, their morality is so sound, their feeling is so genuine, and their eloquence—the eloquence of a sad knowledge and a generous zeal is so pure and penetrating. Our space allows us little more than to recommend them to the public, which we do most cordially.—From Howitt's Journal, March 20th, 1847.

C. GILPIN, 5, Bishopsgate Street Without.

CHEAP AND EXCELLENT BREAD.

The following receipt has been forwarded to us by a correspondent who has tried it and found it very successful:—Take one pound and a-half of rice, and boil it gently over a slow fire in three quarts of water about five hours, stirring it, and afterwards beating it up into a smooth paste. Mix this while warm into two gallons (or fourteen pounds) of flour, adding at the same time the usual quantity of yeast. Allow the dough to work a certain time near the fire, after which divide it into loaves, and it will be found when baked, to produce twenty-eight or thirty pounds of excellent white bread, thereby saving half the flour that would otherwise be required. Patna rice at threepence per pound will do.—The Times.

INTERFERENCE OF THE RICH WITH THE POOR MAN'S LOAF.—The Economist of Saturday points out the injurious consequences of the new plan of using "seconds" instead of "firsts" flour. The only difference between "best" bread and "seconds," we find, upon consulting a highly respectable miller, is, that the former is made of flour manufactured from the finest wheat, while the latter is made in precisely the same way from a lower quality of wheat, such as English red wheat, and Russia, Odessa, and other inferior foreign wheats. So that, in fact, the great demand which has been thus thrown upon "seconds" has raised the price of inferior flour, used in ordinary times only by the poorer classes, in a greater proportion than the finest flour, used for the best white bread. So great a demand has existed among the millers for "seconds" of late, that the true relative price of the two qualities has been disturbed; the poor man's loaf has been raised higher in proportion to the best loaf, by the unintentional competition of Her Majesty—and the nobility of Grosvenor Square—with the weaver of Bethnal-green. On last Monday, we find that while "best household flour," as it is termed, was not raised in price, a rise of two shillings a sack took place on "seconds."

London: Printed by RICHARD BARRETT of 8, Regent-terrace, City-road, in the Parish of St. Luke, in the County of Middlesex; Printer: at his Printing Office, No. 13, Mark-lane, in the Parish of Allhallows Staining, in the City of London; and published by JOHN STONEMAN, of 24, Brooksby Street, in the Parish of Islington, in the County of Middlesex, at HOULSTON and STONEMAN'S, No. 65, Paternoster-row, in the Parish of St. Michael-le-Querne, in the City of London. Publishers.—Tuesday, June 1st, 1847.

THE
NATIONAL TEMPERANCE CHRONICLE
 AND
TEMPERANCE RECORDER.

It is good neither to eat flesh, nor to drink wine, nor anything whereby thy brother stumbleth, or is offended, or is made weak.—ROM. XIV. 21

No. 19, JOINT SERIES.]

JULY, 1847.

[PRICE 1d., STAMPED 2d.]

CONTENTS.

	PAGE		PAGE
The forthcoming Elections.....	105	POETRY: Look not on Wine.....	113
Medical Certificate.....	106	HOME INTELLIGENCE. Bristol—Walthamstow—Leeds
The best drink in Hot Weather.....	107	—Kilmarnock—Carlingford—Newcastle—A Temperance Trip.....	114, 115
Merry Makings.....	108	FOREIGN INTELLIGENCE. Sandwich Islands—Africa..	116
Sir John Franklin's Expedition—Important Testimony		Extract from a Speech by the Rev. Mr. Kennedy.....	116
—Temperance and Abstinence Societies.....	109	Extract from the Report of the American Temperance
Temperance among Children.....	110	Union—Temperance and Sanitary Reform.....	117
Conscientious Negro—Unfermented Bread.....	111	Letter from Mr. Dunlop.....	118
National Temperance Society—Subscriptions—Prize		Reviews.....	118
Essay on Juvenile Depravity—The Sunday Traffic....	112	Advertisements.....	110, 120
Wesleyan Methodist Conference—Mr. Cassell's Prize
Essay—Memorial to the Queen.....	113

THE FORTHCOMING ELECTION.

As a general election may shortly be expected, we feel it to be our duty to offer an earnest protest against the system of treating, which prevails to so lamentable an extent on these occasions. It is sanctioned by long usage, and has been defended as one of the established forms of English hospitality; but we believe it is impossible to find any practice more mischievous in its consequences. The evils survive the occasion that gives them birth, and extend beyond the immediate sphere of action, poisoning the very sources of domestic and social virtue. We know that, in one borough, public-houses are already open, and bodies of electors are meeting in them, almost nightly, to discuss matters connected with the canvass at present going on. Drunkenness and riot necessarily ensue, and are only a prelude to what will take place in the majority of cities and boroughs throughout the empire. We therefore conceive it to be the duty of the friends of temperance and social order, to take every available means to prevent this wholesale demoralization.

We object to it, as destroying the responsibility which ought to subsist betwixt the elected and the elector. The former can care little for the interests of men whose suffrages he has to purchase, and the latter cannot reasonably expect that men of high principle, who are animated solely by a wish to serve their country, will seek a position that subjects them to a participation in such corruption. From whatever motive a candidate seeks a seat in parliament, he is not likely to estimate highly those he represents, if he has to pay largely for the honour; and it need not excite surprise, if under such circumstances, he should seek to serve himself, rather than the constituency. Besides, the venality of our elections deters many, whose talents and principles would peculiarly fit them for the discharge of such duties, from undertaking the trust, and thus a double injury is done to the public service.

It is, moreover, a system both cruel and unjust to the poor elector. To him the temptation is most potent, and his poverty is often pleaded to justify his acceptance of the wages of corruption, in the shape of money or strong drink. He is thus taught to value a sacred trust as a marketable commodity, and that estimate will influence his whole conduct, and affect not only his public, but his private duties. Whatever he was before he became the recipient of the bribe, he will be a worse man afterwards. Very often it will be found the first step in a life of intemperance, and it is melancholy to reflect, that the temptation is offered by his superiors in station and education. It is a system admitting of no palliation or excuse. It contaminates alike the giver and the receiver, and vitiates the very fountains from which righteous legislation ought to spring.

The parliament, whose career is now drawing to a close, in its very last session, had to make provision for a people suffering under the horrors of famine. The most indubitable evidence has been afforded to prove that, if the grain sent by Providence for food, had been applied to its legitimate purpose, there would have been enough and to spare. The drinking system thus wastes the food of the people. Waving for a moment, all consideration of the abstract truth of the temperance principle, as a mere question of political economy, it is of the first importance to the interests of this nation. It is impossible that this waste, which is annually consuming the food of above five millions of people, can continue year after year without the danger of a recurrence of the great calamity which has just fallen upon us.

Can it be right, then, in the face of the impressive warning which we have received—in the suffering and death of multitudes of our fellow-creatures—to encourage that drinking system which has been proved, not only to waste this enormous quantity of food, but to be a perpetual source of poverty, disease, and crime. Whatever may be the views of a candidate, political, social, or religious; whatever may be his personal standing or influence, it is extremely doubtful, whether he could, through a long parliamentary career, do an amount of good that would counterbalance the mischief he would effect in one single election, by countenancing practices so pernicious.

Under these circumstances, we deem it desirable that some practical step should be taken. In every constituency, electors will be found who are abstainers from intoxicating drink, who should immediately determine, and make their determination known, to withhold their votes, unless the candidate, of whose general principles they approve, conducts his election without resorting to the debasing practices referred to. The position we recommend is exceedingly simple, and may be thus briefly stated:—We regard the drinking system as the great evil of the day; we cannot, in strict adherence to a declaration we have made to discourage and discountenance all the practices of intemperance, vote for any man who lends his personal influence to corrupt the electors. A firm and consistent stand on this principle, would rally round it a number of men who deplore the prevalence of such immoralities, and would soon break down the system of which we complain. Let the teetotalers be true to their principles, and the profligacy which disgraces our elections will soon cease to be a national reproach.

MEDICAL CERTIFICATE.

In the Chronicle for April, an important document was published, signed by upwards of 1000 medical men, and comprising almost all the most distinguished names in the profession—a document which we have no hesitation in stating, to be the most important testimony ever yet offered to the cause of temperance. In order to display its full value, it would be necessary to abstract from the long array of names, those to whom by their position or opportunities the greatest importance attaches. We are prevented from adopting this course to the extent we could wish, by a feeling of delicacy, no less than by a want of space. But neither of these motives need prevent us from quoting a few of the leading names attached to the document in question. We will first take the names of men holding high official positions in learned medical bodies, placing first and foremost, as we are bound to do, that of Dr. Paris, the President of the College of Physicians, and next in order, those of Sir James McGrigor, Director General of the Army Medical Department, and Sir William Burnett, Physician General to the Navy; the honoured names of Sir James Clark, Dr. Forbes, Dr. Robert Ferguson, Dr. Richard Bright, Dr. Chambers, Dr. Copeland, Dr. Gregory, Dr. Marshall Hall, Dr. Latham, Dr. Watson, Dr. Prout, Dr. Ure, Dr. Roget, Dr. Arnott, Dr. Budd, Dr. C. J. B. Williams, Sir Benjamin Brodie, Mr. Ferguson, Mr. Key, Mr. Arnott, Mr. Bowman, Mr. Guthrie, and, in fact, almost all the leading scientific and practical physicians and surgeons of London; and what is not unimportant to observe, all the fashion as well as all the talent of the profession, come next in order. Proceeding in our task of selection and analysis, we would invite attention to the fact, that the list contains the names of the two standard authors on the medicines employed in the treatment of disease—Dr. Pereira and Dr. Royle; and last, though not least significant, the medical men who have taken a lead in the great sanitary movement, and who have in other ways, distinguished themselves in their profession. To this class, belong the names of Dr. Neil Arnott, Mr. Grainger, Dr. Guy, and Mr. Toynbe. A list comprising such names, must of necessity command attention and respect, and not less certainly, must it provoke a certain amount of opposition. This was to be expected. Accordingly, it is with no feelings of surprise, that we have had our attention called to two letters, addressed to the Editor of the Provincial Medical and Surgical Journal, of June 2nd, written, as we are bound to confess, with some talent, and on the whole, in a gentlemanly spirit, the one anonymous, the other by Dr. A. Robertson of Northampton. We might have contented ourselves with quoting the long array of distinguished names as a triumphant answer to all objectors, and might have shielded ourselves and our cause behind this impregnable defence. But we prefer a more open and chivalrous warfare, and have thrown down our gauntlet of defiance, armed only in the merits of our cause. But whilst we are buckling on our armour, and making ready for the fight, let us once more look to the army of warriors, recruited from the ranks of the medical profession, and consider of what materials they are made. No one who knows any thing of that profession can be ignorant of the caution, we had almost said timidity, with which they give their names and the weight of their authority to any cause; how they keep themselves aloof from all political struggles; how fearful they are of compromising themselves and their profession, by putting forward opinions which will not bear discussion and examination; and what a strong presumption therefore, there is in favour of the inherent truth and soundness of the propositions they have so openly advanced. These considerations give us confidence in our attempt to defend their principles from all assailants. Let us take the four propositions, one by one, in the order in which they stand, and examine them by the light of common sense, and in the face of the objections of Dr. Robertson, and their anonymous opponent.

The first proposition runs thus, "That a very large portion of human misery, including poverty, disease, and crime, is induced by the use of alcoholic or fermented liquors, as beverages." We read this over a good many times, before we could discover any thing in it which the most cautious and even cautious man, in or out of the medical profession, could object to, and we were not a little surprised to find that it was regarded by one of our objectors as "untenable" and "false," and by the other, as requiring the change of the word use to the word abuse. It would appear that both of them would have been satisfied with this substitution, for neither has the hardihood to deny, that the abuse of such liquors does occasion a large amount of poverty, disease, and crime. To do so, they must have given the lie, not to the elite of the medical profession, but to those acute and subtle logicians, the workhouse, the hospital, the gaol, and the gallows. Dr. Robertson thinks that he justifies his somewhat uncourteous charge against those who have set their names to this proposition, by quoting the well-known Latin proverb, which affirms that we cannot argue from the abuse of a thing against its use. We agree with the Doctor to a certain extent, but we believe that even this Latin proverb may not admit of universal application. The highest of all authorities commands us to abstain from all appearance of evil, and St. Paul would abstain entirely from meat, if by eating it he gave offence to his brother. Surely an acute logician might argue, that to abstain from all appearance of evil was foregoing the use of many harmless and innocent things, merely in order to avoid their abuse, and that an abstinence from meat under their circumstances, was a silly sacrifice to an unfounded prejudice. The principle upon which the apostle was willing to refrain from meat, was precisely that on which the advocates of temperance would abstain from fermented liquors. The use of meat was not necessary, and might be given up by a good and earnest man to gain the important end of christian conciliation. So is it with the use of spirituous liquors. They are not necessary, and may therefore be foregone, in order to achieve some important purpose. If the use of a thing be really necessary, and may be kept distinct from its abuse, then we fully agree with Dr. Robertson that it would be idle to insist upon its disuse; but when the use and the abuse of a thing are notoriously separated by a very fine and not easily perceived line of separation, when even the most careful men, not unfrequently find themselves, without any deliberate intention of transgressing, on the wrong side of that fine line, then we say that it signifies very little which word we employ. Use and abuse are, in this case, almost convertible terms: they scarcely imply a difference; and this doubtless was the rational view taken of the subject by the signers of the resolution. They thought, doubtless, that "a little (spirit) is a dangerous thing," and that sipping and deep drinking were much more likely to run into each other in the case of the alcoholic, than in that of the "Pierian spring." For our parts, therefore, we protest most earnestly against the application of the latin proverb quoted by our medical adversary to this very peculiar case; and upon the simple ground, that the use and the abuse of spirituous liquors is, for all practical purposes, inseparable. If the opponents of the temperance movement will show us a single community or nation under the sun, savage or civilized, which has contracted the habit of using strong spirituous liquors in moderation, which has always kept on the safe side of the line, that divides enough from too much, moderation from excess, then we will consent to apply their proverb, and abandon the total abstinence movement for the moderation movement which they advocate. The moderation movement, as applied to the drunkard or the habitual drinker of spirituous liquors, is simply absurd and impracticable. Great sins are not to be overcome by refinements and subtleties. The man whom we would reform must be told to avoid the temptation altogether. He must be made to turn his step another way. He must be upheld by a strong resolution, a promise, a pledge; he must be taken from the hostile camp, and enlisted under the new banner, as a foe to his former friends, an alien from his former habits, a deserter from the old colours under which he fought and suffered. Half measures must fail. Experience will laugh to scorn "wise laws" and "learned instances," and prove practically, what logic cannot do, that use and abuse may be one and the same thing. So much for the first resolution. The second resolution to which our army of physicians and surgeons have set their names, is this, "That the most perfect health is compatible with total abstinence from all such intoxicating beverages, whether in the form of ardent spirits, or as wine, beer, ale, porter, cider," &c. Our available space will not allow us to discuss this and the two remaining propositions in the present number, we are therefore obliged, though somewhat reluctantly, to defer the rest of our reply to a future occasion.

THE BEST DRINK IN HOT WEATHER.

Look at creation on a fine midsummer-day. Grass, corn, shrubs, and trees are green with foliage, and waving in the breeze, how cool and refreshing they look. Animals are reposing in the shade, and though warmer than the sheltering vegetation, appear to be not over-heated; while a gentle moisture covers their skin, and, by evaporation, prevents their temperature from becoming excessive. These are works of nature, but art imitates them at a distance: the porous wine-cooler, in which the butler immerses the decanter of sherry, allows the transudation of the water through its sides, and so reduces the heat of its contents; the grandee has his tent erected to sit under, and while he is there the canvass is sprinkled with water, which, converted into vapour, carries off the heat, and allows of his being refreshed with the coolness.

All these, and a thousand others are examples, or attempted imitations, of the wisdom and the goodness of God, who has so plentifully supplied the earth with water!

The plant, the animal, the earthenware, and the canvass are all obeying the same law: they are receiving water as a fluid, which, joining with the heat, is flying off in the shape of vapour, sometimes visible, (as steam) sometimes invisible, yet always carrying heat with it without fail and without interruption. Are these thy wondrous works, Parent of Good? Yes; they are, and there is a current of water constantly passing through our bodies, moistening, cleansing, refreshing, and purifying every particle of living matter!

We see how it is then: in hot weather the sun is drawing off moisture from our bodies, which, indeed, our bodies cheerfully part with, in order to be protected against heat. We cannot, like plants and trees, draw our moisture from the soil; but God has made a most wonderful provision for watering our frames. He has put in us a reservoir, the stomach, from which go off, to the different parts of the body, pipes to carry water; and there are millions upon millions of them, so many and so fine, that not a particle of our dust, as big as a pin's point, is left without its channel through which to get moisture. Whatever be the nature and constitution of the part, whether it be the hard bone, the soft brain, the bright eye, the opaque skin, the insensible nails, the sensitive nerves, the white tendons, or the red muscles, no matter which, water is driven on to them all, principally by the heart acting as a forcing pump at the centre of motion. There is no fluid in the body naturally but water, and none else need to be put there artificially: 80lbs. out of every 100lbs. of a living man, are water. Blood, bile, stomach juice, or any other liquid found in the body, is water, with some solid matter (as albumen, fibrine, soda, iron, &c.) dissolved or suspended in it!

The drinks called tea, coffee, chocolate, and cocoa, are water, with some solid vegetable matter put into it. Soda-water and ginger-pop are water, with different solid roots and salts put into it. Soups and broths are water, with some animal and vegetable substances suspended in it, and so of the rest; disguise it how you will, you are, or you ought to be, a water-drinker! Even the juice of fruits has no liquid but water; there may be, and in the grape, apple, pear, pine, orange, lemon, and others, there are some rich, nourishing, vegetable substances; but these are for meat—it is the water they contain that affords the drink.

In hot weather, we want more moisture than we can get from fruits, we want water to be constantly going through our system: and God has made it fit for us; there it is, to be had for fetching, clear, cool, pure, fresh, sparkling from the spring! Mark, we say, sparkling: yes, God has mixed with it some fresh air to be carried into our bodies along with it, where fresh air is wanted, as well as fresh water.

Now, don't spoil your water. You will, if you boil it for tea, or coffee, or any such things: boiling drives off the air; and your drink is flat. You will spoil it, if you have it mixed with alcohol, as it is in beer, cider, wine, spirits, or any other intoxicating drink. If alcohol go along with the water, that spirit will vex, and irritate, and heat every atom it touches; and kindle up a fire in your veins, which you will be drinking more and more and more, to quench, as you think, while all the time you are adding fuel, and making the fire burn more fiercely. Remember the weather is hot, and you want to be cooled. There is fire (so to speak), within and without you, animal heat within, and solar heat without, keep the fire within proper limits by means of water: as well might you quench a house on fire with spirituous liquors, as cool the temple of your body with intoxicating beverages.

Do not put sugar into your water in hot weather; forego the use of sugar then, for, mixing with the blood, it will afford fuel (carbon) for burning, and will make you hotter and more thirsty.

Be content to confess yourself such a fool that you cannot mend God Almighty's drink, clear, cold water! The only thing you have to guard against is too much of it: even such an innocent and good drink as water may be misused. Look at your plants, they don't want to be deluged with water. Look at the nobleman's servants; they don't throw the water on his tent by bucketsful. Drink sparingly, not more than a teacupful at a time; though you don't want to increase the fire that is in you in hot weather, you must be careful not to put it all out: if you quench it, you quench the vital spark and die! Gently, softly, kindly, tenderly, regularly moisten your dust, as your thirst and appetite will dictate.

Teetotalers, don't perplex your own minds, and bother your masters (as some do), by inquiring, if we give up our teetotal liquors, what shall we get? Leave all that ignorant selfishness to the beer and cider drinkers. 'Tis well enough for them to be asking for "substitutes;" any sweet or soupy slop is better than the strong drink of the drunkard; but to you I recommend a better thing: Get, friends, get, GET, listen now, GET MONEY. Money will be your best recompense. O, if the labouring classes of this country would only save their money from useless drinks, they would soon acquire, a position and standing, which would make unrighteous rulers tremble, and mammon-loving teachers hide themselves. Thus helping themselves, God would help them; and instead of the wolves wearing the sheeps' clothing, the sheep would wrap themselves and their families in the textures of their own growth. While we are bound with the ignoble fetters of a debilitating lust, we shall have just what we deserve, the iron of necessitous poverty entering into our souls!

H. MUDGE.

MERRY MAKINGS.

It is no uncommon practice with certain weak-minded persons in this country, on particular occasions, to allow merry meetings to workmen; where drunkenness, with all its evils, is a frequent consequence. These sorts of people have much pleasure in having their healths drank by crowds, an delight in the revelry and noise which are occasioned. Surely a better plan would be, to give them a little food to carry home to their families.

There is a dreadful account of a meeting of this kind in Russia, which happened in 1779. "One of the farmers of the brandy duty, who had made an immense fortune by his contract, proposed to give a feast to the inhabitants of the city (Petersburg) in testimony of his gratitude to those who had enriched him. The victuals, the beer, and the brandy which he caused to be served, cost him 20,000 rubles! The populace flocked in crowds to the place, adjoining to the summer-gardens, where he gave this enormous repast; and in spite of the precautions that had been taken, disturbances soon arose among this motley throng of guests. The contentions first began about the places, and the better kind of provisions spread upon the board; from struggles and noise they proceeded to blows. Several persons were killed; others became so intoxicated that they fell asleep in the streets, and perished from the severity of the weather. The number who lost their lives amounted in all to least 500!" What a crime it was for this proud wretch, to bring a multitude together to poison them. Let those who are fond of such treat to the people, think of this example.—Dr. Trotter on Drunkenness.

Among the three thousand foreigners now confined in the almshouses of this city, is a learned German, Dr. Heidelberg, who was once a preacher, then a professor in the Berlin and Halle Universities, an author, a doctor of philosophy, a Rationalist, and now (almost of course) a pauper. He came to this country about two years ago, where he supposed his great learning would find a market. He is a master of the Hebrew, Greek, Latin, French and German languages, a bitter reviler of the Christian religion, and at the same time, object of Christian charity. It is said that he has been brought to his present condition by the united fluence of his infidel principles and the worst species of intemperance.—New York Paper.

SIR JOHN FRANKLIN'S EXPEDITION.

The party of Royal Sappers and Miners, who are to form the "searching" party, to be dispatched on a boat expedition in quest of Sir John Franklin and his party, in case no intelligence of them should reach England before next spring, have embarked, it is stated, on board the Prince Rupert and the Westminster. The detachment consists of one corporal, two lance corporals, and twelve privates; all of whom have been examined by Sir John Richardson, and selected from Woolwich, Chatham, and Sandhurst, out of a large number who volunteered for the expedition. The instructions to the party are, to land at Fort Jack, and proceed to the Company's station on the Mackenzie river, where they are to winter; and in the event of a doubt still hanging over the fate of the Arctic voyagers, they will be joined by Sir John Richardson in the spring of 1848. The men are all to be teetotalers:—that is, no grog or spirits will be served out to them; but they will receive double pay and rations, and have an abundant supply of pemican, or the dried flesh of the buffalo. Winter dresses, prepared from the skin of the moose deer, are also provided for them; and every provision has been made to enable them to meet the rigours of the climate. They are all accustomed to boats,—which they will have in continual use on the Mackenzie; and have been selected from the trades of carpenters, smiths, &c.

The above paragraph is taken from the Athenaeum; and shows that a confidence is reposed in the principles of teetotalism, in high and important quarters.

IMPORTANT TESTIMONY.

In the Report of the Visiting Justices of the House of Correction, Coldbath Fields, for the January Quarter Sessions, 1847, is the following passage:—

"As connected with that topic, the Visiting Justices remind the court, that in a former report, allusion was made to an attempt in which the chaplains co-operated, and which was aided by a liberal donation of tracts from the 'Church of England Temperance Society,' to promote the principles and practice of temperance among prisoners, multitudes of whom were hapless victims to intemperance and excess. And, they thankfully apprise the court, that Mr. Rotch has very kindly dedicated much of his valuable time and eminent talents, to the delivery of addresses on this important matter, to various classes of the prisoners, and, as the Visiting Justices believe, with the happiest effects. From the personal declarations to them by prisoners whose terms of imprisonment have expired, they find that they have been deeply impressed, and from other sources they learn, that many prisoners observe carefully the pledge they had taken,—obtain in consequence of that reformation, favour and employment,—are better enabled to avoid temptation, and to husband their earnings,—and rescued from inevitable ruin, may become useful members of society which they would else have continued to injure and offend."

COINCIDENCE OF DISEASE, DESTITUTION, INTemperance AND CRIME.—"From one locality, between Argyll-street and the river, in the year 1839, 760 cases of fever were carried to the hospital out of 5000 cases which occurred. The returns of our hospitals and jails will show that they are tenanted mainly from these neglected districts, whilst the vast number of whiskey-shops and weepawns sell, in the most striking manner, of the moral as well as physical degradation to which this population is reduced."—Glasgow Times, March 27.

TEMPERANCE AND ABSTINENCE SOCIETIES.

From Bible Temperance, and Present Duty. By the Rev. D. MACFARLAN, D.D., of Renfrew.

Abstinence societies, either more or less stringent, have existed in Scotland since October 1829; in Ireland since August of the same year; and in the United States for several years longer. An experiment touching the interests of society, so widely spread, and extending over so many years, ought to be neither overlooked nor viewed otherwise than with fairness and impartiality. Be our opinion what it may of the principle upon which they proceed, no one can deny that a great change has been effected in large portions of society; and it seems to be generally admitted, that great good has also been done. Observant, as we have been, of the operations of these societies from their very commencement, we are only doing as we have often done, in admitting this very fully. Much good has been done, and with means comparatively scanty, as well as by classes enjoying few special advantages. There are, doubtless, many honoured names sprinkled along the history of their proceedings; but it is due, as regards Scotland, to assign to the working classes collectively the chief place in the labours and success of this scheme. And it were well, if they would learn therefrom their own strength for purposes of social good, and as regards their own interests.

There is one general remark, however, which seem applicable to the scheme as a whole, especially when seen in the light of scripture example. It commits the whole to one simple remedy. Practically, it stands in the way of every other. Advocated as a specific, like most other specifics, it proclaims its own power, by declaring everything else inefficient, and, it may be, worthless and delusive. This is almost an inherent property of every popular movement, at its first outbreaking. Like the mountain torrent, roaring and tumbling from rock to rock, it deafens every ear with the cry of onward, onward. The social mind, as well as the individual mind, is, when first awakened, extravagantly sanguine. It will think of only the one favourite project, and, dreaming rather than reasoning, will believably predict the most marvellous effects. But realities correct dreams, disappointments sadly mangle prospective visions, and the public mind, as well as the mind of an individual, learns from experience, "to think soberly."

Now, it is a matter of divine teaching, as already very apparent, that the stability of a nation's temperance does not depend on any one set of means, but on many. Israel was at all times warned, and even denounced, on account of intemperance, altogether apart from abstinence; and the more that intemperance increased, the threatenings of God became more frequent and more awful; and in this we have an example set us. Then, as intemperance increased, so did a craving after more stimulating and more highly intoxicating liquors; and here also divine Wisdom interfered, pronouncing such liquors unsafe, and actually forbidding their use, as ministering to a corrupt and vicious taste, and leading to habits of intemperance. And we can see no reason why in this, also, we ought not to copy such an example. If the very use of such liquors depends on a vitiated condition of society, and if the ministering to the taste so created, vitiates that condition still more, there is in this alone sufficient reason for discouraging the use. And if, beyond this, the liquors be such as really to serve no other end than to excite and intoxicate, it is difficult to see on what grounds the continued use can be justified, except for medicinal purposes. And coming, last of all, to the matter of abstinence, there seems no good reason for confining it to one simple form. Civil rulers, priests, and ministers of the New Testament, seem all to have been abstainers to a greater or less extent. Certain individuals, raised up in providence for special purposes, were in many cases Nazarites by divine appointment; and provision was made for voluntary vows to a like effect. When corruption of manners greatly increased, some considerable number seem to have been raised up by God, as voluntary Nazarites, from early life; and these appear to have continued so, much to the advantage of public morals, of their own health, of their success in the world, and with the manifest approval of the Most High. Like so many beacon-lights on some dangerous coast, lighted up with more than usual brilliancy as the storms increase and the long winter nights add to the peril, these young men, rising one after another to places of trust and honour, pointed out the way to others, and shed on it the light of their own example. And we can just as little see here, why similar ends might not now be served by similar means.

But if, apart from all Bible example, we only look at our own circumstances, we will be led very much to the same conclusion. These societies serve important ends, as we have already very fully admitted; but the experience of the last eighteen years abundantly shows, that they are of themselves not enough, and that, as regards various large and influential classes, they have been almost altogether ineffective. On the other hand, Churches of themselves are also inadequate. Members of the same church have common sympathies, and these may be dealt with ecclesiastically; but intemperance is to be found chiefly and in its worst forms, among parties who have no proper connexion with any Church, and who would scarcely respect any measure coming from such a quarter. How are these to be reached? Yet these very men have sympathies among themselves; as fellow-workmen, they are often bound together, not only by fellow-feeling, but also by usages which are main sources of intemperance. And why not avail ourselves of such sympathies? If they are so powerful in the extension of evil, why not also employ them in what is good? It were most unwise to leave individuals, in these circumstances, dependent on their own resolutions. Individual effort, though in itself worthy of special commendation, is unfairly matched, when left to struggle against social influence. It is as one against many. But let social influence on the side of temperance, meet social influence on the side of intemperance, and every accession will tend to turn the balance, till intemperance ceases to be a tyrant and acts only as a thief, having no longer power to shame into its ranks, and being itself forced into hidings.

Some may possibly fear, that the encouraging of such societies would prove unfavourable to religion. There is one consideration, already noticed, which ought to remove all such apprehensions. Associations are as those that compose them. An association of irreligious or unprincipled men is itself so; but an association of religious and well-principled men is the reverse; and this, apart from all ministerial or other external control. Only suppose, then, that Churches, as such, were, in everything proper to Churches, to be setting a high scriptural example; it must be very evident to every reflecting mind, that, indirectly and without interference, this would of itself raise the moral and even religious character of voluntary associations. And surely if there be any Church whose experience warrants confidence in the working classes, and especially in the temperate among these, it is the Free Church. Many of us who are ministers, will never forget the reception which we met among our hard-working countrymen, when we went forth to propound to them the injured rights of Christ's kingdom and of the Church of our martyred fathers. At the time when they whom we had helped to raise to their places of power scowled upon us, giving us and the cause for which we were suffering every name but the right one, and while certain classes nearer home busied themselves turning on us the tide of mockery, and persecuting in a small way, as they had the means, the very class out of which these societies are mainly formed bade us welcome. In many cases, individuals risked their situations, and very many contributed generously of their scanty means; and at this very moment, there are of them in our kirk-sessions, our deacons' courts, and our membership, a much greater number than most are aware of. Let such societies, then, increase as they may—let them extend their operations more widely than ever—we ought to bid them welcome, and most sincerely to rejoice in their prosperity; at the very time that we would have our own Church, and every true Church proceeding on her own principles, to forward the same common end. It is admitted on all hands, that Scottish intemperance has, like some virulent disease, infected every part of the body politic. It has infected its laws and regulations; its usages, whether domestic or more generally social; and it has tainted the purity of Churches. Let, then, the friends of temperance, or rather of the well-being of society, meet the evil in every possible way; and let every effort, whether of the magistrate or the minister, or heads of families or of associations, be hailed by the agents of other means; knowing that more hands speed the work, and that every man works best with his own tool.

TEMPERANCE AMONG CHILDREN.

The Atom, published in New York, has some excellent remarks in relation to temperance among children, from which we extract the following:

"A movement is about being made to establish Juvenile Temperance Societies in the Sabbath-schools of New York. It is a glorious movement and one which will doubtless meet the hearty co-operation of every sincere lover of humanity.

Children, as well as men, are fond of association; nay, they are eminently social in their nature. It has been observed by those whose province it is to "teach the young idea how to shoot," that those children whose tuition was acquired in a collective capacity, were much more proficient in their attainments than those whose education was conducted in isolation—debarred from the magic influence of emulation. If this be true with reference to mental culture, may not moral advancement, by a parity of reasoning, be promoted upon the same principle?

Adult associations have done much—nay, all—to advance the temperance cause in this country and if children are to be instructed in the ways of virtue—if they are to be taught to eschew the paths of vice and degradation—to be secured from the soul-enslaving customs of society—the bes means of securing success is to begin with youth ; —“Train up a child in the way he should go, and when he is old, he will not depart from it,” is an asseveration of the wisest of men, and it is an axiom equally applicable to professions or associations, as to moral qualities.

The ancient Spartans trained their children to the practice of stern morality, and they were most eminent for the love of every virtue. They had also their peculiar associations, which their offspring were taught to believe necessary to the happiness of their country. To be a member of some of these associations was deemed to be the highest dignity to which man could attain ; and while they remained entire, Sparta flourished.

So should it be with us. Ere the young mind is contaminated by the vile associations of the world —while yet unshackled by the corruptions of the age—principles of temperance, and an utter detestation of intoxicating liquors, in every form, should be forcibly impressed upon it. The infant mind is more susceptible of bias than we are sometimes willing to believe ; and while we imagine that events are passing unobserved by the youthful throng, it may oftentimes happen that a word, a look, a telling anecdote, will leave an impression upon the mind which all the vicissitudes of after life can not succeed in eradicating. Thus, what is taught in youth, is hid in memory's capacious store-house, and like “bread cast upon the waters,” it will be found “after many days.”

What a blessed thing it would be, if every parent could view this matter in its true light, perceiving the necessity of early instilling into the minds of their children, total abstinence principles. Youth (particularly in this country,) are compelled to labour among men, to whose conversation they will listen with attention, as a means to render labour less irksome ; they will hear the midnight carousal described as a scene of great enjoyment ; they will see practised all the drinking-usages of the trades with which they are connected ; they will be invited to join in such usages ; nay, they will be almost compelled, (for certain arbitrary rules and absurd customs will be referred to, as necessary to be supported,) and thus, unless the mind by early training has been rendered proof against such assaults, many a young man may fall from his virtuous position, and go rapidly down to a dishonoured grave.

CONSCIENTIOUS NEGRO.

In a narrative of some remarkable incidents in the life of Solomon Bayley, who redeemed himself from slavery, published more than twenty years ago, it is stated, “that at one period of his life he had been instructed in the business of a cooper, and for some time had wrought at that trade ; but he felt some scruples in his mind with regard to following an occupation, which he believed had a tendency, though a remote one, to promote the sale and consumption of ardent spirits. He therefore conscientiously forsook the employment, under the persuasion, that the frequent and indiscriminate use of distilled spirituous liquors, had proved as injurious to the moral and religious growth of society, as it was admitted to be subversive of health and the bane of domestic happiness.”

Young Teetotalers ! this negro sets us a noble example ! Let us also avoid all connexion, however remote, with the manufacture or sale of spirits.—Fountain.

UNFERMENTED BREAD.

(From the Times.)

It is a doctrine amongst physicians that more prejudice is caused to health by the articles in common use for human food than from the rich and savoury dishes that are consumed from time to time by the admirers of M. Alexis Soyer. It is the repetition of the dose that kills. The slice of bread well impregnated with alum, which is swallowed morning and evening, does the real harm. What is it that drives half our countrymen from Paris, but the chymical qualities of the water ! When bread and water, the two great staples of human food, are turned into a delusion and a snare, what is to become of the consumer !

Common bread, such as we all purchase for our daily use at the baker's, is but partially fermented. Hence it is that, when swallowed, it acts as a ferment, and communicates a similar action to the food in contact with it. Woe to the unhappy man whose digestive power is not strong enough to control the chymical affinities. He will shortly become liable to headache, acidity, flatulence, and all the other distressing symptoms of dyspepsia—that great set-off against all the blessings of civilized life.

There is another point which deserves notice in connexion with this subject ; that is, the great national waste of human food throughout the kingdom, every year, by our present system of bread-making ; the total loss of wheat, by fermentation and refining, is shown by the author of this pamphlet to be just 25 per cent. Now, 18,000,000 quarters of wheat are made annually into bread in England and Wales ; therefore, 4,500,000 quarters of wheat (equivalent to 3,357,000,000 pounds of bread, or eight ounces per day for every member of the community, old and young) are annually wasted. Taking the quantity thus lost to the nation as a money value (if we estimate wheat at 50s. the quarter), it will amount to £11,250,000 sterling.

INTEMPERANCE AND HONOUR.—A poor fellow who had spent hundreds of dollars at the bar of a certain grocery, being one day out of change, asked the landlord to trust him with a glass of liquor. “No,” was the surly reply, “I never make a practice of doing such things.” The poor fellow turned to a gentleman who was sitting by, and whom he had known in his better days, saying, “Sir, will you lend me a sixpence ?” “Certainly,” was the reply. The landlord with alacrity placed the decanter and glass before him. He took a pretty good horn, and having swallowed it and replaced the glass with evident satisfaction, he turned to the man who had lent him the sixpence, and said—“Here, sir, is the sixpence I owe you ; I make it a point, degraded as I am, always to pay borrowed money, before I pay my grog bill !”

Accustom the body to sobriety and temperance, and it will presently cease to make the importunate demands upon us, which lead to the subversion of these qualities. The well-ordered frame will no longer require any improper stimulants, the palate will lose its taste for the glowing liquor and the luscious dainty, the stomach will positively refuse an inordinate quantity either of food or beverage.—Thoughts on Habit and Discipline, by the late J. J. Gurney. 4th Edition, p. 69.

National Temperance Society.

OFFICE 11, TOKENHOUSE YARD.

VICE-PRESIDENTS.

The EARL of ARUNDEL and SURREY, M.P.
Sir Wilfrid Lawson, Bart.

R. D. Alexander, Esq.	Rev. Theobald Mathew.
J. D. Bassett, Esq.	W. J. Morgan, A.M., M.D.
Thomas Beaumont, Esq.	Richard Peek, Esq.
C. Bowly, Esq.	Rev. P. Penson, M.A.
Samuel Bowly, Esq.	Rev. W. Reid.
J. S. Buckingham, Esq.	Rev. W. W. Robinson, M.A.
Robert Charleton, Esq.	Rev. J. Sherman.
Rev. R. Clowes, M.A.	Rev. C. Stovel.
Isaac Collins, Esq.	Rev. T. Spencer, A. M.
Joseph Eaton, Esq.	Joseph Sturge, Esq.
J. Forbes, M.D., F.R.S., &c.	Rev. W. H. Turner, M.A.
S. C. Hall, Esq., D.L.F.S.A.	Edward Thomas, Esq.
Lawrence Heyworth, Esq.	Robert Warner, Esq.
William Janson, Jun., Esq.	Edward Webb, Esq.
Ven. Archdeacon Jeffreys.	Rev. J. Wilson.
G. S. Kenrick, Esq.

TREASURER.

G. W. Alexander, Esq., 40, Lombard Street.

EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE.

George W. Atwood	Charles Gilpin
Richard Barrett.	Richard Hicks.
Jabez Burns, D.D	C. H. Lovell, M.D.
William Cabell	John Meredith.
William Cash	W. W. Robinson.
John Cassell	T. B. Scutt.

SUPERINTENDENT OF MISSION.

John Meredith.

SECRETARY.

Thomas Beggs.

NATIONAL TEMPERANCE SOCIETY.

The Report of the National Temperance Society will be ready in a few days. Some delay has been caused by getting through the Press a number of valuable statistical tables which will accompany it. The first table shews the number of imperial gallons of British, Colonial, and Foreign spirit, charged duty for consumption in England, Scotland, and Ireland, singly, and together; the rates of duty imposed in each kingdom, and the amount of duty received from January 1801 to January 1846. The third table shews the population of England, Scotland, and Ireland, in four periods of ten years each—(i. e. from 1801 to 1840)—and one period of five years (from 1841 to 1845)—the average annual consumption in each kingdom, and the average annual quantity consumed by each person. The second table shews the estimated cost of each kind of spirit in the three kingdoms, separately and conjointly, with the number of imperial gallons of alcohol contained therein, during the same length of time. The fourth table states the periods during which distillation has been prohibited since the commencement of the present century, in England, Ireland, and Scotland—the amount of sugar then used in distilleries and the rate and amount of duty charged upon spirits thus produced; together with the number of gallons of spirits made in the years affected by the prohibition, and the amount of duty received.

SUBSCRIPTIONS.

	£.	s.	d.
Derham, H. Yatton	1	1	0
Ogden, W. H.	d	5	0
Scutt, T. B.	1	1	0
Spencer, Rev. T.	1	1	0

SPECIAL FUND.

	£.	s.	d.
Schwand, F.	16	13	4

PRIZE ESSAY OF ONE HUNDRED POUNDS.

JUVENILE DEPRAVITY.

An advertisement has appeared in several papers announcing the fact, that a gentleman has offered ONE HUNDRED POUNDS for the best Essay on this subject.

It is proposed that this Essay should investigate the subject of Juvenile Delinquency in its various bearings, showing, by well authenticated facts, that our Juvenile population, brought up in vice and ignorance, are, for the most part, the children of parents whose indulgence in the use of intoxicating drinks has both disinclined and incapacitated them for the exercise of their parental duties. Instances will also be adduced of numbers, even of those educated in our Day and Sunday-schools, who have been ruined—many in early life—by the drinking usages of society. A volume of illustrations of this sad truth may be compiled from our various institutions for the reformation of juvenile offenders.

Although it may not be needful to dwell upon such inquiries as may have a debatable philosophical bearing, the necessity of entire abstinence from all intoxicating beverages, as the only practicable remedy under the circumstances of our country, will be fully but temperately demonstrated.

We have no doubt that this will excite the competition of several writers moving in the higher walks of literature, and produce a volume of immense value. The offer is made by a liberal donor to the National Temperance Society, who has long manifested an anxious interest in the young and rising generation.

THE SUNDAY TRAFFIC

From the leading article in our last number, it will be seen that a bill is now before Parliament, some clauses of which bear on this important subject. The first prohibited the opening of public houses from twelve o'clock on Saturday night until half-past twelve on Sunday. The second prohibited the sale of distilled liquors to be consumed on the premises to all persons under the age of sixteen years. This bill was read a third time on Friday, the 18th June, and is now under the consideration of the Lords. A total prohibition of the Sunday traffic is very desirable; and there is not a single reason for closing public houses in the morning that will not apply with equal force to the afternoon and evening. The encouragement given to youth of both sexes to visit houses of public entertainment, where intoxicating drinks are sold, calls for direct interference; it is a serious and a growing evil, and demands some strong effort to prevent it. Children of a tender age ought to be protected from these snares, but the clause contained in the Government bill will not meet the case. Children, like others, begin their career of drinking with fermented liquors; and it is highly desirable that this should be impressed on the minds of the framers of this bill.

With these views, the Committee of the National Temperance Society appointed a deputation, consisting of Mr. William Cash, Chairman, Mr. Richard Barrett, Mr. John Meredith, Mr. G. W. Atwood, together with the Secretary, to wait upon the Home Secretary, to urge the following points:

1st. That public houses be closed at eleven o'clock on Saturday night instead of twelve, thereby allowing time for the frequenters of them to reach their places of abode, before the Sabbath commences.

2nd. That the sale of fermented as well as distilled liquors be prohibited to all persons under the age of sixteen years.

3rd. That public houses be open on the Sabbath for the accommodation of travellers only.

An appointment was made to receive the deputation at the Home Office, on Saturday the 26th. Just going to press, we are only able to say that the deputation was well received by Sir William Somerville, who manifested great sympathy with the objects of Temperance Societies—but the deputation regret to state that the clauses above referred to are withdrawn from the bill, and that it is only what is technically called a model, and is not obligatory upon any town or district, but is merely passed for the convenience of those who may wish to embody its enactments in local bills.

WESLEYAN METHODIST CONFERENCE.

It will be in the recollection of our readers, that an Address to the Wesleyan Conference was adopted by the World's Temperance Convention, and an answer was received from the Secretary of the Conference, stating "that the memorial had been laid before the Conference, and that the subject to which it referred should receive due attention." We never heard whether any other notice was taken of the document, than its being read in Conference. No intimation whatever appeared in the published minutes of the sittings. As the Annual Conference draws near, it would be well for our teetotal Wesleyan brethren to urge upon the attention of that powerful and influential body the claims of the temperance movement.

MR. CASSELL'S PRIZE ESSAYS.

We have before us the two last of this valuable series, "Christian Duty, or the Importance of the Temperance Reformation in connexion with the maintenance and spread of Christianity," by F. W. Wheeler," and "The Moral Obligation of Total Abstinence," by Evan Jones of Tredegar. They are both well written; and the last in a powerful, convincing, and energetic style, gives an exposition of the christian's duty in relation to the great evil of our country—intemperance—which must carry conviction with it, unless the mind is very strongly imbued with prejudice. We should rejoice to know that a copy of these Essays was placed in the hands of every member of a christian church in the empire, and, in fact, throughout the world. The exertions of Mr. Cassell in this department of our literature deserve every support.

MEMORIAL TO THE QUEEN.

The following letter has been received:—

Whitehall, June 4th, 1847.

SIR,—I am directed by Secretary Sir George Grey, to inform you, that he has not failed to lay before the Queen, the Memorial of the National Temperance Society, which is signed by you, and accompanied your note of the 28th ultimo.

I have the honour to be, Sir,
Your obedient Servant.
JOHN PHILLIPS.

BENJAMIN ROTCH, Esq., Lowlands, Harrow.

Poetry.

LOOK NOT ON WINE.

"Look not upon the wine when it is red, when it giveth its colour in the cup."—Prov. xxii. 31.

Look not on wine; although the cup
Be crimsoned with its ruby stain;
Look not—'tis filled with wormwood up,
And blood, and burning tears of pain:
Its flash is as the red bolt's glow,
Lighting the paths of death and woe.

Look not on wine; Circean spell
Is breathed upon the purple grape,
Changing to phantoms horrible
The God-like mind, the God-like shape,
And dooming with its poisonous breath
The soul to everlasting death.

Look not on wine; its rainbow glow
Reflected is from falling tears;
But ah! it is no peaceful bow
Of promise, in life's storm and fears—
But is a messenger of wrath,
A fiery meteor on life's path.

Look not on wine; Oh, who can tell
The victim of its Moloch shrine;
Or speak the soul-destroying spell
That mantles o'er the clustered vine—
The withered hearts—the glories fled—
The tears—the blood, that it has shed.

Look not on wine! Your ruddy youth,
Oh! barter not, and spotless fame,
And conscious dignity and truth,
For premature old age and shame—
And heaven, and hope, and all that's thine,
For short-lived joys. Look not on wine!

Home Intelligence.

BRISTOL TEMPERANCE FESTIVAL, IN THE ZOOLOGICAL GARDENS.

THE holiday at Whitsuntide is but too frequently, in large towns, marked by much drunkenness and consequent disorder. The gentlemen at the head of the temperance cause in Bristol, feeling that the most effective way to prevent the injurious employment of a festival is to afford the people the means of innocent gratification, have for the last five or six years, engaged on Whit-Tuesday the beautiful Zoological Gardens, within a pleasant walk from our city, and opened them to the public at a very low admission fee, providing in the gardens ample means of refreshment and innocent amusement, and only prohibiting the use of any intoxicating liquors on the premises. The plan has answered admirably; every year the gardens have been more thronged, this year more than 18,000 have been admitted, and we have never heard of any disorderly conduct, or wilful damage to the plants or animals. The streets of Bristol are certainly more orderly than in former years, and the disgraceful exhibitions of inebriety are less often observed. This year, above a thousand young teetotalers with their teachers, arrived by the railroad from towns and villages in the vicinity, and joined the members of the Bristol Juvenile Society in Queen's-square, at an early hour. This spot, it may be remembered, was once the scene of dreadful riot and incendiarism; the large square was crowded now for a very different purpose, and it excited feelings of joy and thankfulness in those who watched the long procession winding through the streets to Clifton, that these boys and girls, the future men and women of our country, were engaging in a voluntary act of self-denial, and firm resistance of temptation, and that if they persevered to the end, they might save themselves and others from one of the most overwhelming evils of our country. The day was beautiful, the rather tardy spring had come forth in all its luxuriant loveliness, and from twelve o'clock till nine in the evening, the gardens were crowded with happy groups. Here were throngs visiting the various houses of the animals;—there groups of children, and some even of "larger growth," were amusing themselves with swings, roundabouts, &c.; family parties might be seen quietly enjoying themselves under the trees, or by the cool reservoirs; while in another part, a large waggon, converted into a temporary platform, was occupied by celebrated temperance speakers, whose eloquence attracted large crowds around them. All quietly dispersed at nine o'clock, when the rising rocket gave the appointed signal. We believe that such seasons of innocent enjoyment, not unmingled with rational entertainment and words of wholesome counsel, have a higher good than the mere withdrawal from hurtful pleasures; they refresh and soften the heart, open it to the sweet influence of nature, and warm the social affections; we hope that temperance will lead the way to many such holidays from the racking care and sometimes dull monotony of daily life.—Hovitt's Journal.

WALTHAMSTOW.

An interesting gathering of 447 agricultural labourers took place on Sunday last, in the grounds of Mr. R. L. Pinching, by whose liberality, aided by a few benevolent individuals in the neighbourhood they were provided with an excellent dinner. Mr. Claridge attended, from the National Temperance Society, and addressed them for about an hour on the advantages of total abstinence from intoxicating drinks. Mr. Pinching also addressed them with effect. The above were men who had come into the neighbourhood for haymaking, but owing to the unsettled state of the weather had not been able to do more than two or three days' work during the last fortnight. Mr. Pinching's liberality was gratefully appreciated in such a season of need; and it is worthy of remark that he embraced the occasion of administering to their physical necessities, of calling their attention to their moral and spiritual condition.

LEEDS TEMPERANCE GALA.

The gala of the Temperance Society in the Zoological Gardens was pre-eminently successful. During the afternoon and evening, the Headingly road was animated by one continued stream of pedestrians in gay holiday attire; these, added to the immense number of vehicles in requisition—from the carriage down to the humble waggon and donkey cart—would have suggested to a stranger that he must be in a locality which has its Derby day as well as Epsom. Having been thus drained for hours, the town partook of the stillness of a day of humiliation.

In the evening, the gardens, extensive as is their area, were a scene of unbroken throng. Their own beauty and attractions heightened the personal loveliness and gaiety which overspread them. To attend the temperance gala has now, from its periodical repetition, become a habit with the people. Its great reputation leads to the idea that an immense mass of persons will be seen, and hence the motive of thousands for their presence. With music, temperance addresses, and a tea marquee, the people have evinced, by these galas, that they possess within themselves other elements of enjoyment. Their sources of entertainment and joyous activity were exhibited in a variety of ways. The lawns of richest green and velvet smoothness, possessed all the liveliness of the ball-room, and, on every hand, games and pastimes were entered into indicative of a general merry-making, to which everybody had come prepared to be happy, and determined, if possible, to make everybody else happy. In this agreeable and innocent manner the gala proceeded from first to last, with occasional intervals for refreshment and rest.

A display of fireworks closed the entertainments, and a little after ten o'clock the company left the grounds. The success with which the whole passed off did the promoters much credit.

The number of persons who entered the gardens (looking at the receipts, and allowing for the subscribers, assistants of the gala, &c., who were admitted free) must have been between 24,000 and 25,000!

The subjoined are authentic statistics of the receipts, &c.:—

For Admission	£402	16	7
For refreshments	83	11	1½
For tea tickets	51	1	6

Aggregate amount taken .. £537 9 2½

Provisions sold at the refreshment booths:—3,600 bottles of ginger beer, upwards of 8,000 buns, 2,700 oranges, 3 bags nuts, and 5 boxes raisins.

Provisions for the tea:—2,288 lbs. spice bread, 200 lbs. seed do., 180 lbs. plain do.—total 2,668 lbs. of bread; 20 gallons of cream, 14 long rolls of butter, 17 lbs. black tea, and 180 lbs. lump sugar.

—Leeds Mercury.

KILMARNOCK.

The committee of the Total Abstinence Society in this town have printed an address to the people of Kilmarnock, entitled "Thoughts for the Thoughtful." From this we gather the following startling facts, which we hope will be the means of arousing the community here to a sense of the evil in which they have been indulging so long. There are in Kilmarnock, at the present moment, 150 public houses, which is 1 to every 22 families, or 1 to 133 individuals. In these houses are spent annually the sum of £20,000 for spirits alone, exclusive of ale and porter. This is £8. 2s. to every family, or £1. 7s. to every individual. Let us now see what has been spent for religious and educational purposes, including stipends to ministers, and salaries to teachers, and we find it amounts only to £5900. For poor assessments and a police establishment, the existence of which are evils mainly to be attributed to the love of strong drink, we pay £2180. The people of Kilmarnock complain, and have petitioned parliament against being taxed for the erection of New Court Houses and Jail; but why not put away the necessity for Court Houses and Jail, by banishing from our locality that which fills our jails and penitentiaries, and creates the necessity of upholding a police force? We hope the people of Kilmarnock will look to this, and reward the individuals who have been at the trouble of showing them these facts, by responding unanimously to their address.—A. Z. —People's Journal

CARLINGFORD TEMPERANCE SOCIETY.

The seventh annual meeting of this society was held on the evening of Wednesday last, in the Temperance Hall, Carlingford. The building was filled in every part. The chair was taken by James Haughton, Esq., of Dublin, who had been specially invited to attend; as were also the Rev. Mr. Alexander, of Newry; Rev. Mr. Scott, of Newry; Rev. Mr. Jessop, &c., &c.

Mr. HAUGHTON, in the course of a very powerful and eloquent address, said, I had occasion lately to make some inquiry on this head, for an English gentleman who is about writing a work on the subject, for a medical review. For this purpose, I went to one of the largest iron manufactories in Dublin—an establishment in which about 150 men are employed. One of the partners informed me, that some of the men in their employment, who were formerly exceedingly drunken in their habits, and who always lost a large portion of their time on the plea of sickness—whom he was always obliged closely to watch, and who were at last discharged from their service—were now among the very best, most trusted, hardest working, and steadiest men in the factory. Very recently, I was in conversation with one of the largest employers in Ireland, whose various employments in Dublin, give occupation to about 600 able-bodied men; and in different parts of the country, he employs very many more, he being a large railway contractor. His testimony in favour of teetotalism was complete. If a man gets drunk in his establishment, he is at once discharged; but this is a penalty rarely incurred. The truth is, my friends, that all men who have any work to be done, whether they are friendly to the principles of teetotalism or not, are well aware of the great value of having men about them who have adopted, and who faithfully practice, our principles.

Mr. PARKS then read the seventh annual report of the Carlingford Temperance Society, which was followed by loud cheers.

The meeting was afterwards addressed by the Rev. Mr. Alexander, the Rev. Mr. Scott, the Rev. Robert Jessop, Mr. Parks, and Mr. John Kendall.

NEWCASTLE-ON-TYNE.

On Whit-Tuesday, May 25th, a temperance demonstration meeting of Sabbath-school teachers, was held in the spacious lecture-room of the Music Hall. Mr. Samuel Rawell, sen., a laborious Sabbath-school teacher, in the chair.

Mr. T. P. BANKAS stated, that out of 100 children who had left a certain school in London, fifty had become drunkards, and the reason why multitudes cannot attend regularly is, because their parents spend their money upon strong drink, and cannot provide the children clothes. He related several instances which had come under his own notice.

Mr. JACOB WEIR said, if what Mr. Bankas had said was true, then it had a claim upon every Christian man. There [were], he believed, between one and a half and two millions of Sabbath-schoolers in the kingdom, so that teachers had one out of every thirteen of the population under their influence. If even two out of every three teachers in this country were teetotalers, what a mighty influence they might exert.

Mr. GEORGE WHITEHEAD said, prevention is better than cure. If children are trained in the way they should go, when they are old they will not depart from it. Like a plant, which while it is young, we may train the young mind as we please; but when it becomes a tree, it is impossible to move it.

Mr. BENSON, in a very able manner, examined some of the most popular objections against teetotalism.

A choir of singers from St. James' chapel were present, and they sung several beautiful anthems between the different speeches.

A TEMPERANCE TRIP.

MR. EDITOR.—I have visited different parts of Denbighshire, Merionethshire, Montgomeryshire, and Cardiganshire, since I wrote last to you, and have delivered sixteen lectures upon temperance, and several upon the great responsibility of parents. During my tour, I was engaged every evening, and frequently three times each day, at 10, at 2, and at 7 o'clock,—the attendance generally very good, and the impression seemed to be powerful. In Wales, the country-people will attend a place of worship at any time of the day, during the week, except harvest time; provided an interesting subject be announced.

My desire is to enlighten the minds of the young, respecting the bad habit of using intoxicating drinks and tobacco. I can hardly condemn intoxicating drinks, without at the same time condemning the use of tobacco; indeed, the latter takes much more money out of our poor country, but the moral influences of intoxicating drinks are certainly much more awful.

It is generally observed, that the decline of the temperance cause and the decline of religion, are closely connected together; and that the cause may be traced to the same source, viz., unsuitable advocates in one case, and inefficient ministers in the other—unfaithfulness and inconsistency of members and friends in both cases,—yes, the great want of the power of true godliness, and the love of God in the heart!

EVAN DAVIES.

Newmarket, Flint, March 15th, 1847.

Foreign Intelligence.

SANDWICH ISLANDS.

The temperance societies of Hamakua embrace all the churches and all the schools. The pledge precludes the use of tobacco as well as intoxicating liquors. Mr. Lyons found that few comparatively had violated their engagement; and most of these renewed the pledge. The different societies had their annual celebration in January. One of these celebrations, held last March, amid the beautiful scenery of Waipio, is described below.

The whole valley seemed full of life. The four schools, and multitudes of adults, assembled at the appointed place, midway between the extremes, and, forming a procession, marched to the shore. Waving banners, fantastic dresses, imitations of caps and plumes, and the rough music of rude Hawaiian drums, gave the procession a military aspect. Performing several evolutions along the shore, amid the deafening roar of the dashing surf, the processions formed into several columns, opening in the centre, and facing each other, Hymns, songs, and portions of Scripture were repeated in concert; after which the two choirs of singers, one belonging to the valley, and the other from abroad, united in singing an appropriate hymn. Prayer followed, and then all proceeded to a spacious yard, and sat down beneath an over-spreading awning to the temperance banquet. This being ended, a meeting was held, the exercises of which consisted of singing, addresses, one by a blind man, and a dialogue between a farmer and school master. At the close, the contribution towards the missionary's support was brought forward, and exhibited before the whole assembly. This consisted of a purse of money, containing fifteen dollars, and four large rolls of kapa, cloth, a bridle, &c., the whole amounting to about sixty dollars. It was contributed by the church members and some forty or fifty children, and was their first effort to aid in supporting their own missionary. Prayer closed the exercises of the day. — Mississippi Herald.

AFRICA.

"Fort Napier, Pieter Montsbury, South Africa,
9th June, 1846.

"The Total Abstinence Society, which was established here by my worthy self in 1844, I am happy to inform you is now in a more flourishing condition than at any former period; our noble and elevated principles are spreading among the inhabitants of Pieter Montsbury; several of the most respectable have adopted our system, and whole families have signed the pledge, and you will perceive, in reading the enclosed printed paper, that a Temperance Hall is in contemplation. The Soirée of which the paper gives a brief account, was more numerously attended than either of the former ones, for upwards of one hundred, including men, women, and children, partook of those 'cups which cheer but not inebriate.' I have not received any temperance papers since the December No. for 1844. If some kind friend would now and then send me a paper it would be thankfully received by their brother teetotaler.

"WILLIAM LEIGHTON,

"1st Battalion, 45th Regiment."

EXTRACT FROM A SPEECH BY THE REV. MR. KENNEDY.

"Suppose that there were to depart from a port, say in Madagascar, where cruelty now is rampant, a ship bound for the shores of Britain, well stored with provisions, and freighted with passengers of various classes—some very rich, and some very poor. Suppose that the passengers, on entering the ship, were only to pay for their transit, and that they were to purchase their provisions from the captain, mate, and steward, at prices corresponding with their plentifulness or scarcity on board. Now, if in these circumstances, a certain number of individuals possessing wealth were to purchase up a large proportion of those provisions, and cast them into the sea, or burn them, whether to keep themselves comfortably warm in the cold nights, or for any other strange, unreasonable purpose, and were thus to occasion a great rise in the cost of flour and biscuit to all their companions in the ship, what would we call them? Would you have any hesitation in designating them as unfeeling miscreants, altogether unmindful of the rights of their fellow-passengers? Suppose you saw on deck a burley, purse-proud, portly person, whose big belly was regularly well-lined with good bread, bacon, and beef, confronted with some poor famishing, lank, lean, languishing wretch, now less than half fed, because biscuit had risen to more than double the price which it was at the commencement of the voyage, what would you consider him? Would you pronounce him and his coadjutors free from reasonable blame? Would you not regard him as the cause of the distress which had overtaken his brother? And if you saw lying beside a coil of ropes, half-covered with a sail, a breathless body, around which a group of individuals was collected, who, after thorough inquiry, joined in declaring that poor creature died of starvation, what would your feelings be? Would they not be feelings of poignant sorrow, mingled with indignation, against those who had thrown the provisions overboard or burned them, which might have prevented all this misery and starvation? Would you not loudly condemn the sinful folly that had produced the artificial scarcity? Undoubtedly you would. (Hear, hear.) But this, you may say, is not a parallel case, and I admit there is a want of parallelism in it; but as has been judiciously noticed, the grain thrown overboard does harm to no one. It sinks into the sea, and is lost; but it is not the occasion of any person going mad, or becoming the habitation of wild ungovernable passions. There is that want of parallelism, but only that. (Applause.) Will the matter be mended if, instead of the biscuit being thrown into the stove and burned, it be supposed to be thrown into some huge vat and scientifically converted into strong beer, or stronger spirituous drinks? Will the hunger of the famished during weeks be easier to bear because the grain which he cannot now procure, but on which he might have fed to the full, instead of being burned to ashes, was malted, brewed, and distilled? By no means. It is all one to him how the grain is destroyed, if it really is destroyed, so as to render it unfit for human food. What is brewed or distilled cannot be eaten by man. Brewing and distillation have the same effect in this respect—they alike unfit the grain for being used as human food."

A FACT.—There can be no doubt that the vice of poaching, next to that of habitual drinking, has contributed most largely to fill the county prisons. — Blackwood's Magazine.

EXTRACT FROM THE REPORT OF THE AMERICAN TEMPERANCE UNION.

In Great Britain, the providence of God has, in the horrors of famine, taught both rulers and people a lesson on the wickedness of converting bread stuffs, the precious gifts of heaven, into intoxicating drinks for the increase of poverty and wretchedness, which nothing can wipe out but the hardening influence of those drinks themselves. While seven millions in Ireland are crying for bread, and thousands already through famine and its accompaniments, have been hurried into eternity, sixty-two million bushels of bread stuffs have been devoted in a single year to the creation of the poison of the body and the soul. For the liquor thus made in their distilleries and breweries, and for wines and spirits imported, the inhabitants of Great Britain pay annually fifty-two million pounds sterling—thus completing the awful trio of sin and shame—first destroying their bread stuffs, leaving millions to starve—next wasting the fruit of their labour on an article which does them no good but positive mischief, and lastly destroying the peace and happiness of almost unnumbered families and sending sixty thousand year by year to the drunkard's grave. This is work for serious reflection for the great and the good of our father land. It has happily been brought before Parliament by the friends of the temperance reform, and pressed by lecturers, and the press, upon the people,—O that it might, as it should be, by the pulpit also upon the public mind and public heart!

For a mitigated suffering amid the horrors of famine, Ireland has been in a measure prepared by the temperance reformation. "Few," says the excellent Theobald Mathew, "of those who have signed the temperance pledge, have been severe sufferers, as they had been led to a provident care of themselves." And what would have been the increased horrors of the scene, had the nation, amid the distraction for food, rushed in their agony to the intoxicating cup! "Their pledge," says the same extraordinary man and leader of the temperance host, "have they well kept, amid all their sufferings." Through the operations of temperance in America, by which our forty thousand distilleries have been reduced to less than ten, and our consumption of intoxicating liquor to nearly one one-half amid an amazing increase of population, we have bread enough and to spare; and what is still more the subject of lively gratitude, we have a heart to give it. In 1838, we were importers of grain for our distilleries; now, having in a great measure closed them, we are exporters to Great Britain and other countries. In less than eight months, forty-four million bushels of corn and wheat have been sent them from our ports. They distil, and the people are dying with famine. We forbear, and our people are temperate, prosperous, and thriving: an argument for temperance advocacy is highly respectable, and temperance which strongly impresses itself on England's rulers, and England's philanthropists. About two millions of the people of England, Scotland, and Wales, have adopted the total abstinence principle. Temperance meetings are well sustained; temperance publications such as command the respect and attention of all conditions. In Scotland, the clergy are beginning to move in this work, as they never have heretofore, and to call to its support the strength of the Churches. Sixty ministers of the Relief Secession church have in a body signed the pledge, and by a united effort of 180 ministers in the city and county of Edinburgh, and the provost, magistrates, and councillors of both, the existing custom of giving wines and spirits at funerals is nearly abolished. The drunkenness of Scotland, and consequent poverty of her operatives, is very painful. Thirty thousand of the population of Glasgow are reported as drinking themselves drunk every Saturday night. In his parish, in Dundee, the Rev. G. Lewis recently found there were eleven bakers and one hundred and eight spirit shops, at which £19,710 were annually squandered. The last census of Great Britain gives the number in connexion with the traffic in intoxicating drinks, 90,870; while the number of bakers, corn agents, corn merchants, and millers, is 70,632, or 20,248 less than those engaged in the traffic in intoxicating drinks.

TEMPERANCE AND SANITARY REFORM.

The following is extracted from the journal of John Williamson, at present engaged in the Central association:—

"From time immemorial, it has been the practice, on the occasion of an election, for a public dinner to be given to the electors of Calne, (Wilts). This festival was attended with much of the evil attendant on public dinners, where wine formed one of the articles of entertainment, and wine was abundantly supplied. The temperance principle is in favour in Calne; and some, who lamented the evil arising from the misappropriation of the money, proposed another and better way of spending it, in the sanitary improvement of the town.

"There was a stream of water, which carried off much of the refuse of the town, exposed to view. This stream, and its exposed state, had been an eye-sore to the inhabitants for some time, particularly as it (the stream) ran through the centre of the town. A proposition was, therefore, made by some of the members of the temperance society, that it would be advisable to give up the dinner, the next election which took place, and to apply the money which the dinner cost (about £800.) to the purpose of forming an arch over the stream, and laying down gravel; and instead of the then filthy appearance of that part of the town, they would have cleanliness, and would by that means promote the public health. A meeting of the electors was called, and with a slight opposition, it was resolved to abandon the dinner, and apply the money as proposed. A deputation was appointed to wait on the gentleman who gave the dinner: the views of the electors were stated, and he was requested to apply the cost of the dinner to improving the town, as stated, should it meet his wishes.

"To this no objection was made, on the contrary, the plan met with approbation, and an election taking place shortly afterward, the improvement was effected.

"I have been shown the place where the improvement was made. It is a triangular shaped piece of ground, in the centre of the town, near the Town Hall, and the principal hotel is on the spot; it is nicely covered with gravel, and the whole affair reflects great credit on the town and its inhabitants. Thus were the proceeds of the first act of self-denial applied. A second election has taken place since this move was made, and as some of the parishioners and others were anxious to have an organ for the use of the church, £400. of the second £800. were applied to the purchase of one, and it was presented to the church. A fact for church ministers, and others connected with the establishment, who oppose temperance. Some of the dissenters were not satisfied with the purchase of the organ, but they did not remonstrate. £400. is still in hand, and as the change has given general satisfaction to all but the innkeepers and dissolute, there is no disposition to return to old practices; and it is in contemplation to devote the proceeds of the next election fund to the formation of a park, out of a piece of waste ground which is at present used as a play ground by the boys of the town. Whatever may be carried into effect in future, the triumphs of the past are cheering."

LETTER FROM MR. JOHN DUNLOP.

5, Stanhope-street, Gloucester Gate,
June 1st, 1847.

MY DEAR SIR.—I am just returned from a third excursion, in which I have endeavoured to press forward the Medical and Anti-Usage departments of the Cause.

This and the two former journeys included Worcester, Walsall, Birmingham, Coventry, Northampton, Leicester, Derby, Nottingham, Rotherham, Sheffield, Leeds, Rochdale, Manchester, Liverpool, Preston, York, Newcastle, Carlisle, Greenock, Paisley, Glasgow, and Edinburgh.

I am happy to say that all the Committees and leading friends of the movement whom I visited and conferred with, agreed to take up earnestly the two objects I have mentioned; and which you know I have long considered as the two principal pillars of the British Temperance Reformation.

I am in hopes that not only additional medical names will be obtained in many quarters, but that the undertaking will be pressed forward by all the committees and agents, into an extensive movement; having for its object,—first, a favourable change of opinion among all the medical faculties of the empire; and, secondly, by this means, the general alteration of popular opinion from the false and dangerous notion, that daily use of alcoholic liquor is useful and proper for all classes.

With regard to the compulsory and artificial drinking-usages; it is admitted with pleasure, that the advance of our cause has had a favourable effect in many cases, in tending to abrogate these oppressive and destructive customs. But still there remains possibly three-fourths of these untouched, in the workshops and factories; being a chief cause of preventing individuals from joining our ranks, or inducing them to break their pledge after having joined.

I have also found lately, that in some places of business where imperious usages had been done away with for some years, they had re-appeared, and been established in as great force as ever.

Many influential persons, not yet teetotalers, would, if proper means were used, assist us in procuring the suppression and abrogation of the drink-fines, footings, entries, allowances, payment of wages in public-houses, and other mischievous practices; and I trust that no ignorant determination of refusal to accept of assistance from non-teetotalers, will prevent any of our friends from making use of every honest method by which the drinking-usage system may be abolished.

With kind regards to the members of the Committee,

I am, dear Sir,

Your faithful Servant,
JOHN DUNLOP.

Mr. Thomas Beggs.

Reviews.

The Teetotaler's Companion, or his Silent Plea for Temperance Reform, by PETER BURNE. London, Dyer & Co.; Ipswich, J. M. Burton; Edinburgh Zeigler.

We have received the concluding part of this meritorious work. Those who wish to obtain a comprehensive view of the facts in support of the Temperance cause, will find it here, in a compendious and useful shape. To the advocate, as placing within reach, what otherwise could not be obtained but by great labour and research, it is an invaluable acquisition. As a book of reference, it is essential to the temperance library—extremely neat in appearance, and well got up.

The People's Journal.—The Number of this well conducted periodical, for June 19, contains a letter from Mr. R. K. Philp, on the present scarcity and waste of Food, well worthy the attention of the public. Our limits prevent our quoting it, but we cannot forbear calling the attention of our readers to it, as well as to the Journal in which it appears, which for literary merit, stands among the first of our weekly periodicals.

Howitt's Journal.—In the last number appears an admirable letter from the Rev. P. P. Carpenter of Warrington, on the claims of Temperance Societies. The spirited proprietor of this Journal deserves every encouragement in his attempts to purify and elevate the public taste, and we hope the temperance public will appreciate and support those who give a place in our popular literature to an enunciation of temperance views.

Letters from Graefenberg, in the years 1843, 1844, 1845, and 1846, with the Report and Extracts from the correspondence of the Enniscorthy Hydropathic Society. By JOHN GIBBS. 12mo. pp. 280. C. Gilpin.

MR. GIBBS has given us a very interesting, and in many points a highly instructive volume. It appears that after the perusal of the works of Captain Claridge, Dr. James Wilson, Mr. Abdy, Dr. Edward Johnson, Dr. Courtney, and Mrs. Beamish, he resolved upon a journey to Graefenberg, with the twofold purpose of testing the efficacy of the treatment in his own case, and of investigating its principles and practice as exemplified in the cases of others.

The book before us is the result of his experience and observation, in letters addressed to various journals and newspapers. We do not know any book on Hydropathy, containing more entertaining and useful matter. It is the work of a mind of much discrimination and keenness of observation. We cordially recommend it to the serious attention of our readers, as most worthy of special attention.

The Philosophy of Bread Making; showing the rearing effects of yeast, and the advantages resulting from the use of unfermented bread. By EDWARD HARRIS MATHEWS. London: HOULSTON and STONE-MAN; Bristol: MATHEWS.

This is a very excellent tract on a very important subject, and we recommend it strongly to our readers. There are many startling facts contained in it.

The statistics of the Third District Police Prison, of the city of New York, show that the whole number of prisoners sent to the Halls of Justice, Penitentiary, Alms House, House of Refuge, and Insane Asylum, for the year, is 4,671. Of these, 3,274 were committed for intoxication.

IPSWICH JUVENILE TEMPERANCE BOOKS.

In 32mo., illustrated with handsome woodcuts, in sixpenny packets, of glazed coloured paper.

	PAGES
1. The History of Teetotalism	20
2. Scriptural Teetotalism	20
3. Teetotalism of Ancient History	20
4. Teetotalism of Modern History	20
5. The cost of Intemperance	20
6. Self-denial	20
7. Early Habits	20
8. The Force of Example	20
9. A Letter to Sunday School Children	20
10. H. Hawkins, the Drunkard's Daughter	20
11. Christian Courtesy and Benevolence	20
12. The Young Chemist's Inquiry	20
13. Little Henry and the Teetotal Festival	20
14. The Young Reasoner's Objections to Teetotalism	20
5. The Fear of Ridicule	20
16. The Teetotalism of Travellers	20
17. Temptation Resisted	12

	PAGES
18. What Little Boys can do for Teetotalism	12
19. Little Mary	16
20. Lucy Grey and her Pet Pigeon	8
21. What Little Girls can do for Teetotalism	12
22. Poor Little Willie	12
23. The Sixpenny Glass of Wine	12
24. The Town Meeting ; License or no License	12
25. The Unexplored Island	12
26. Is I not happy	12
27. The Apprentice Lad	20
28. The Power of Custom	20
29. Biographical Gleanings—Examples	20
30. Ditto ditto. —Warnings	20
31. The Guide to Glendalough	12
32. Bridget Lartum	12
ASSORTED PACKETS.—No. 1, 1 to 16—No. 2, 17 to 32, inclusive.

IPSWICH TEMPERANCE TRACTS.

Those Tracts marked with an * have PICTURES and are on better paper, 150 pages, in a sixpenny packet. The others have 168 pages to the packet.

1 The Doctor Scrutinized, or for what purpose do Physicians prescribe Alcoholic Beverages, by R. D. Alexander, F.L.S., 122 thousand...	8
2 Striking Facts, 84 thousand	2
3 Maker and Vender, 44 thousand	2
4 Our Creed, 52 thousand	2
5 Adulterated Beer, 34 thousand	4
6 Adulterated Wine, 40 thousand	4
7 The Malster, 37 thousand	4
8 Go Feel what I have Felt, 53 thousand	2
9 Facts are Stubborn Things, 53 thousand	2
10 The Spirit Dealer, 35 thousand	2
11 Christian Teetotalism, 70 thousand	2
12 The Trade, 33 thousand	4
13 Alcohol, 33 thousand	4
14 The Town of Ipswich, 33 thousand	4
15 Song of the Water Drinker, 37 thousand	2
16 Stimulation not Strength, 30 thousand	8
17 Farmer Woodman's Speech, 41 thousand	4
*18 The Beer Barrel Examined, 33 thousand	8
19 Teetotal Recipes, 38 thousand	4
*20 Speech of J. J. Gurney, 30 thousand	4
21 Pity the Poor Drunkard 49 thousand	2
22 The Fool's Pence, 25 thousand	8
23 Why am I a Teetotaler? 26 thousand	2
24 Dost thou smoke, Bill? 34 thousand	4
25 William the Laudanum Drinker, 30 thousand	4
26 The Ox Discourse	4
27 Letter to the Clergy, by a Brother Clergyman, 21 thousand	20
28 Common Sense, 20 thousand	2
29 Ralph the Soldier	4
30 Testimony of Eminent Physicians, 30 thousand	4
31 The Working Man, 35 thousand	20
32 Is I not happy? by Hugh Stowell, 30 thousand	4
33 David the Shoemaker, 49 thousand	4
34 The Drunken Couple, 48 thousand	2
35 Confessions of a drunkard, 29 thousand	2
36 Master Tailor, 20 thousand	4
37 The Fatal Gift, 36 thousand	2
38 Poor Sandy	4
39 Use & abuse, by Archdeacon Jeffreys, 34 thousand	2
40 The Schoolmaster	4
41 Water is Best, by J. J. Gurney, 37 thousand	8
42 Cobbett's Advice	4
43 Take a Public House	4

	PAGES
44 A Sailor's Yarn	4
45 Moderate Drinking Calmly Considered	12
46 The Pledge	4
*47 John Jarvis, or the Pledge Signed	12
*48 The Fifteen Friends	4
49 Sunday School Teachers, 22 thousand	12
50 Sunday School Children, 40 thousand	12
51 Money better than Beer, 37 thousand	4
*52 Little Mary ; or a Daughter's Love	8
53 Philosophy of Temperance by R. T. Trall, M.D. 20	20
54 Love to Man, or an Appeal to the Pious	20
55 The Young Woman's Tract	12
56 The Young Man's Tract	16
57 Dr. Campbell's Testimony, 18 thousand	8
58 Why Sign the Pledge? 40 thousand	2
59 The Poor Man's House Repaired	4
60 The Mother's Tract	8
61 The High Price of Food	4
62 Ladies' Tract Societies	8
63 The Praise of Water, 25 thousand	2
64 Important Calculation, 30 thousand	2
65 The Farm Servant, 25 thousand	2
66 Teetotalism Declining, 15 thousand	8
67 The Reformed Drunkard, 20 thousand	8
68 The Recruit of the British Legion	8
69 No. 1 of Temperance Anecdotes	12
70 No. 2 ditto	12
71 No. 3 ditto	12
72 No. 4 ditto	12
73 Luke Husler, or "I did not like to say No."	8
74 The Drunkard's Wife	8
75 The Unexplored Island	4
76 Ancient Wines ; by R. D. Alexander	8
77 Influence of Example, 15 thousand	2
*78 The Victim of Excitement.
*79 My Medical Adviser does not approve of Teetotalism.
*80 The Restoration.

ASSORTED PACKETS—No. 1, containing 1 to 31.—No. 2, 32 to 55.—No. 3, 56, and upwards.

Fifty Packets of Juvenile Temperance Books or Tracts delivered in London for a Guinea, sent by P. O. Order, to Richard Dykes Alexander, Ipswich. Samples of both post free, for five shillings.

London: Simpkin and Marshall.

LONDON TEMPERANCE TRACTS,

UNDER THE SANCTION OF THE

National Temperance Society.

The above Tracts comprise a variety of 150 different sorts, and embrace every point of the principle of Total Abstinence. Upwards of

THREE MILLION

have already been circulated. 2 pp. 8d.; 4 pp. 1s. 4d.; 8 pp. 2s. 8d. per 100., or in packets, assorted, 6d. each.

For the convenience of LOAN CIRCULATION, they are assorted into 60 sets, containing 16 pp. in each, and stitched into a strong wrapper, with a suitable address upon each, price 8s. per 100. Liberal allowance for large quantities. Lists may be obtained of the Publishers gratis.

HOULSTON & STONEMAN, 65, Paternoster Row.

Just Published, 8vo., Price 1s.

THREE LECTURES

ON THE

MORAL ELEVATION OF THE PEOPLE.

By THOMAS BEGGS.

* * In this pamphlet, there is of itself a mass of sound information on the condition of the people, which could not have been brought together except by much reading, and more actually mingling with the multitude. The perusal of it has made us rejoice that such men as Mr. Beggs find their proper places in the earth, while it is day with them. We have read these lectures with a peculiar pleasure, their morality is so sound, their feeling is so genuine, and their eloquence—the eloquence of a sad knowledge and a generous zeal is so pure and penetrating. Our space allows us little more than to recommend them to the public, which we do most cordially.—From Howitt's Journal, March 20th, 1847.

C. GILPIN, 5, Bishopsgate Street Without.

MEDALS! MEDALS!! MEDALS!!!

BENJAMIN LEPARD GREEN, 62, PATERNOSTER ROW, LONDON, has great pleasure in announcing to Temperance Societies and individuals desirous of promoting the great cause that he has been appointed Agent for the sale of Temperance and Rechabite Medals,

At 1d., 2d., 3d., and 4d. each.

A Large Discount made when quantities are taken.

* * Struck in Bronze, and Silver to order.

Temperance and other publications supplied on liberal terms.

62, Paternoster Row, June 20th, 1847.

Just Published, price Three-pence, Second Edition, enlarged.

BALAAH AND HIS ASS.

A POEM. WITH OTHER PIECES.

"The voice of the people is the voice of God."

OLD ADAGE.

London: HOULSTON & STONEMAN, Paternoster Row. 1847.

* * The NATIONAL TEMPERANCE CHRONICLE AND TEMPERANCE RECORDER is published on the first day of each month, at HOULSTON & STONEMAN, the Depot of the National Temperance Society, 65, Paternoster-row, and will be sent post-free for one year on receipt of 2s. 6d. postage labels. Annual Subscriptions received at the Society's office, 11, Tokenhouse Yard, London, and subscriptions and donations for the general purposes of the Society, by the Treasurer, G. W. ALEXANDER, 40, Lombard Street; by any Member of the Committee, and at the office as above.

TEMPERANCE
PROVIDENT INSTITUTION,
AND
GENERAL LIFE ASSURANCE SOCIETY,

39, MOORGATE-STREET, LONDON.

Patrons.

Sir Wilfrid Lawson, Bart., Brayton Hall, Cumberland.
Sir Culling Eardley Smith, Bart., Bedwell Park, Herts.
Sir Arnold James Knight, M.D., Liverpool.

Directors.

Robert Warner, Esq., Chairman.	C. H. Lovell, Esq., M.D.
R. D. Alexander, Esq.	J. T. Mitchell, Esq., M.R.C.S.
Rev. W. R. Baker	John Talbot Tyler, Esq.
Richard Barrett, jun., Esq.	Edward Vivian, Esq.
Samuel Bowly, Esq.	Richard Walkenden, Esq.
Robert Charleton, Esq.	John Watson, Esq.
H. F. Cotterell, Esq.	Edward Webb, Esq.
John Elliott, Esq.

Secretary.—Theodore Compton, Esq.

This Office is established under the provisions of the Friendly Societies' Acts, by which several important privileges are secured, viz. :—

Exemption from Probate and Legacy Duty.

Power of appointing Nominees to receive the benefits assured, without the delay and expense of proving a Will or taking out letters of Administration.

Power to settle disputes by arbitrators, whose decision is final.

Security in the investment of its funds.

The general privileges of a chartered company.

The institution comprises two distinct sections, one open to the public as in other offices; the other confined to persons pledged to abstain from all intoxicating beverages. The premiums are the same in both sections; but the profits and losses in each are kept separate, their respective advantages depending upon the rate of mortality each section may experience.

The whole of the profits in each department will be equally divided amongst the members of it; every member will therefore obtain the full benefit of his payments.

An additional advantage is offered by this institution in its mode of apportioning the surplus funds. Each member has the option of three modes of applying his share of the profits, viz., to increase the amount of his assurance; to reduce the amount of the premium payable on the assurance; or to limit the number of payments, so as to be entirely exempt from any payment after a certain age.

The premiums in this Office are considerably lower than in most of the Mutual Offices. Thus at age 40, the premium to assure £1,000 at the Old Offices, will assure £1,100 at this, being equivalent to a certain and immediate Bonus of £100, or, a reduction of 10 per cent. on the premium.

This is a certain and immediate advantage, quite independent of the actual profits of the society; the whole of which will be divided amongst the members.

The society in its first six years has issued 2,354 policies, and had only 18 claims; a fact which is believed to be unparalleled by the experience of any other office.

Every information may be had on application, personally or by letter, to the Secretary or Agents.

London: Printed by RICHARD BARRETT of 3, Regent-terrace, City-road, in the Parish of St. Luke, in the County of Middlesex, Printer; at his Printing Office, No. 13, Mark-lane, in the Parish of Allhallows Staining, in the City of London; and published by JOHN STONEMAN, of 24, Brooksbury Street, in the Parish of Islington, in the County of Middlesex, at HOULSTON and STONEMAN'S, No. 65, Paternoster-row, in the Parish of St. Michael-le-Querne, in the City of London. Publishers.—Thursday, July 1st, 1847.

THE

NATIONAL TEMPERANCE CHRONICLE

AND

TEMPERANCE RECORDER.

It is good neither to eat flesh, nor to drink wine, nor anything whereby thy brother stumbleth, or is offended, or is made weak.—ROM. XIV. 21

No. 20, JOINT SERIES.]

AUGUST, 1847.

[PRICE 1d., STAMPED 2d.]

CONTENTS.

	PAGE		PAGE
Medical Certificate	131	FOREIGN INTELLIGENCE:—Honolulu	130
The Passing Scarcity	132	HOME INTELLIGENCE:—Berkhamsted—Maldon—Hants—
British Association for the Promotion of Temperance	133	Poole—Wales	131, 132
Transforming Power of Intemperance	133	Literary Notices	132
Dr. Chalmers and the Temperance Cause	136	Dr. John R id on Intemperance	133
National Temperance Society	138	POETRY:—Stanzas on hearing of the lamented Death of
The late Joseph Andrew	138	Mr. Joseph Andrew	134
Benefit Societies and Public Houses	130	Advertisements	135

MEDICAL CERTIFICATE.

In our July number we entered upon the consideration of the objections urged against the important document in favour of total abstinence, signed by so large a number of the most distinguished members of the medical profession: we now resume our easy and pleasant task. The second proposition to which Dr. Robertson and the writer under the signature of θ in the Provincial Medical and Surgical Journal, raise objections, runs as follows: "That the most perfect health is compatible with total abstinence from all such intoxicating beverages, whether in the form of ardent spirits, or as wine, beer, ale, porter, cider, &c." θ proposes to modify this proposition by inserting the word "frequently" before "compatible;" but Dr. Robertson enters into a more minute statement of objections, in which he commits one or two strange oversights. He first admits that "in sound and robust persons" perfect health "may be maintained under almost every variety of diet," and, therefore, as a natural inference, under a system of perfect abstinence from spirituous liquors; but he goes on to inquire, "Can the same be said of the feeble, the leuco-phlegmatic, and the aged, and more especially of those who labour under the congenital misfortune of a strumous constitution?" Does not Dr. Robertson perceive that, with the exception of the aged, the parties to whom he refers cannot by any possibility enjoy "perfect health?" Their original defect of constitution renders that impossible. The signers of the certificate, therefore, must have meant to convey the idea that to parties of ordinary strength and vigour, alcoholic liquors were unnecessary to the preservation of health. The proposition as it stands pledges them to nothing more than this. When they say that "the most perfect health is compatible with total abstinence," they do not say that certain forms of ill health may not require the use of stimulants as medicine. The proposition evidently combats the opinion which is often put forward by those who ought to know better, that all men, however healthy and vigorous, require the use of alcoholic beverages for the support of their strength under labour or fatigue, however induced; but it does not preclude the physician from prescribing such stimulants in diseased conditions, whether acute or chronic. There is not one of the medical men who have set their signatures to this certificate, who will conscientiously feel himself thereby precluded from prescribing half a bottle of wine a day for a patient in typhus fever, or a glass or two of wine for one who is just recovering from it. In both instances he would feel at perfect liberty to use it as a medicine. Nor, as far as we can perceive, would he scruple to order wine in states of extreme debility, whether due to old age, to original weakness of constitution, or to disease. In answer, then, to Dr. Robertson's inquiry—"Have the eminent medical characters, who have signed the above sweeping aphorism, never had occasion to order wine, porter, or ale, to the scrofulous, the emaciated, or the atrophic?"—we answer, "yes, with a clear conscience, and without inconsistency." In such instances they have ordered alcoholic beverages as medicines, as articles required by the sick and not by the sound, as unnecessary to the healthy, but highly advantageous in certain forms and stages of sickness.

Dr. Robertson somewhat oddly concludes his objection to this second proposition by stating "that medical men do not generally order, even as medicines, things that they believe to be intrinsically hurtful."—Indeed! Why, what is the whole phar-macopœia of active and efficient drugs but a collection of things intrinsically hurtful—of poisons only fit for sick men, and never given to men in health—of poisons often given in large quantities with the express intention of producing transient disease, and of thus suspending and ultimately curing an existing malady? What are mercury, and arsenic, and opium, and strychnia, and henbane, and hemlock, and foxglove, but things “intrinsically hurtful,” and given with a full conviction that they are so? Spirituous liquors too, are things “intrinsically hurtful,” differing from those poisons merely in the dose required to produce dangerous or fatal effects, and, like them, useful in certain forms of disease, but injurious to healthy persons.

But while we are ready to defend the proposition which we are discussing from the attacks of Dr. Robertson, and to vindicate the good faith of all those medical men who, having attached their signatures to it, still continue to use liquors containing alcohol as medicines, we must not conceal our opinion that many medical men allow themselves too great a latitude in prescribing this class of remedies, and by so doing encourage the use of alcoholic beverages among the healthy and robust. To specify the cases in which this abuse is most apt to be committed would lead us too much into details, uninteresting to the bulk of our readers. A strong sense of the danger attending the use of liquors containing alcohol, even when prescribed avowedly as medicines, has induced several medical practitioners to abandon the employment of them even for this legitimate purpose. Their example and experience will doubtless influence the rest of the profession; but, be this as it may, the temperance cause has achieved a great triumph in securing the adhesion of the leading members of the profession to the health, life, and soul-preserving principle, that alcoholic beverages ought to be used ONLY as MEDICINES. We have said as much on this second proposition as our leisure and space will allow. We shall examine the third proposition and the objections to it on a future occasion.

THE PASSING SCARCITY.

Will you allow me to call to remembrance the position in which the population of the British Isles were before the appearance of scarcity? The highest classes consuming bread-corn to the almost total exclusion of potatoes; the middle classes corn with a large admixture of potatoes; the poorest classes potatoes as their staple article of diet, mixing with them, as they could get it, some very trifling portion of bread stuffs, and still less of animalized substances, as flesh-meat, milk, or cheese, or butter. Now is this a desirable condition? Is it right that the labouring portion of the community, on the strength of whose bones, and sinews, and muscles, we depend for the produce of our manufactures (whether the factory be the farm yard or the cotton mill, whether the tools be the plough or the loom), should be kept on a dietary, according to which if we were to feed our beasts of burden, our carriages must creep instead of fly, and half of our work stand still, for want of horsepower to do it? I am of opinion that, if our views and practice had been correct and righteous, the loss of the potatoes might have been esteemed a gain; for, when a man is leaning on a reed, liable from any little jerk in his roughened way to be broken, and to pierce the hand that holds it, is it not to be esteemed a gain when a friend will take it from him, and replace it with John Bull's stout oaken stick? Our first duty, on potatoes failing, was to have saved corn, and to have substituted that for the deficient succulent. Though we have gone all the world over, and sent our ships to both the old world and the new to fetch us grain, what have we been doing at home? What has become of the corn that grew in our fields, was stacked in our home-steads, threshed in our own barns, and bought in our own markets? Where is that? I wish I could say it had been ground in our mills, and eaten by our famishing brethren! Where is the corn? King Gin answers, “I have received it for tribute!” The tyrant Ale joins him, and says, “’Tis stored in my vats?” And please your majesties have you not the products of the grain to sustain those that are perishing? The prime minister of Gin and Ale, the Morning Advertiser newspaper, has actually confessed that the products of the still and the tun are not nutritious! So that we have been guilty of this awful behaviour; the food was destroyed while the people were starving! If there be such a thing as a guilty attachment to an idol, that crime has been manifested. I have read of the propriety of cutting off a hand, or plucking out an eye if it offends, but here is a refusal to part, not with a useful member, but with a useless luxury! I dislike as much as any man the gloomy side, but the sentiment presses for utterance—

“Quem Deus vult perdere, prius dementat.”

As to the quantity of corn destroyed in the distilleries and the breweries, it is computed, from parliamentary and other documents, that near nine millions of quarters of grain are thus wasted annually in the British Isles. We know a quarter weighs not less than 420lbs., and as there are 365 days in a year, ’tis plain that each one of nine millions of persons might have near 1lb. of bread a day, if the corn were thus appropriated,—enough bread to keep him from starving. The population said to be in extreme want is about two millions, so for these there might have been 4lbs. of corn a day, without sending to America at all. Many are as conversant with the money market as with the corn market, and what benefits would they not tell us might have resulted to our country, had the Bank suffered no drain of gold, and had our monetary affairs been conducted with steadiness, instead of being deranged by sudden fluctuations; and this might have been, had home-grown corn been available for bread. As to the blessings which would have accompanied the stopping of the use of corn in the production of intoxicating drinks—in that case the labouring classes would have the money in their pockets to buy the corn which would have been in the markets. Where do our artisans get highest wages? At Paisley? And yet what town so often on the beggar-list as Paisley? At Manchester? And yet where more cellars, where more filth and poverty, than at this the centre of manufacturing power? What then has become of their wages? The money has been melted and poured down their throats; and like so much burning lava has scorched up every feeling of shame, all sense of propriety, all patience and contentment, in persons who, had it not been for strong drink, might have been our fellow-citizens to interchange sentiments, and to strike out the best method of bearing one another's burdens, and soothing one another's cares. There is no power on earth that can elevate a drink-loving population, any more than it can make to stand steady and erect, a drunken man. I have been as much pained as surprised at what I may term the heartlessness exhibited by the Legislature in regard to the destitution of Ireland. I must explain myself. Though ten millions of pounds have been borrowed to meet the exigency, yet has there been criminal indifference; though troops of officials have been employed in disbursing tens of thousands of pounds weekly, yet I contend there has been a perpetration of injustice. Why should a huge debt be imposed on the working classes of England, for the benefit of whom shall we say? I maintain—of the brewers and the distillers, of the public-house and beer-shop keepers. The Chancellor of Exchequer would not, forsooth, interfere with the regular channels of trade! Kind man! Considerate shepherd of the flock! The regular business of the lion and the bear is to devour the flock, and when the sheep is being eaten a la mode, why then the shepherd allows the natural progress of events. The great business of a legislature is to take the initiative in measures necessary for the public weal. The only excuse I can find is that the English people themselves have loved to have it so. But to recur to our metaphor—when the flock would run down the precipice and be choked, 'tis the duty of wiser heads to prevent the mischief. Her Majesty, (long life and happiness to her,) has issued an order for the royal household to eat brown bread, and many of the nobility have joined in the resolution. Now, however gratifying it may be to see that royalty is not inattentive to the privations of the subject, yet the alteration is of no practical value; for it lessens not the consumption of corn, nor adds any to the common stock. Such an addition seems indeed not to be contemplated; for, just as her Majesty's ministers pay a tribute of eloquence to the regulation of their royal mistress, they are found sitting at a civic banquet where the bill of fare exhibits luxury devastating the domains of the poor! As the newspapers are careful to inform us that the wines and liqueurs were excellent and abundant, I suggest that such entertainments should be a channel of showing to the world the good deeds of the parties; and a Lord Mayor's feast, with nothing but sparkling fresh water to drink, would produce a wonderful effect. And when the Chancellor of Exchequer returned to his place in the house of Commons, he would know better than to raise a laugh at the expense of the destitute, by saying in effect that what was necessary was for distillers to provide the means of getting drunk from sugar instead of from corn. The Distillation from Sugar Act is an instance of sad incapacity. Magistrates are moving in several counties, and making provision against rioting, the chief reliance being on the military. There is a very homely illustration in Francis Moore's penny almanac for this year: a hieroglyphic, in which Famine is the principal figure, mowing down her thousands, while Britannia is represented running after her with shield and spear! This is a parallel with the behaviour of our magistrates, running after famine with swords and bayonets—they should go before the monster, and build a fort of bushels of corn, and of sacks of flour, and I'll lay down my life if Famine makes a breach in such walls. Where are we to get the materials? Give Ceres the key and the command of the malt kilns and the distilleries, and she will bring them to us. The liveried footman, the butler, and the coachman, put on water diet and good wages, would pass through a parish, and effect more than a regiment of soldiers. Hungry people need instruction and sympathy; and the magistrate who orders them to be shot, before he has given the one and manifested the other, takes on himself a responsibility truly fearful. There are many things which might be read to them in preference to the riot act, and one of the best would be an account of the emptying of the cellars, and the turning them into granaries for the poor. Let gentlemen of the clerical profession be enlisted in the cause of the nation's prosperity; let them march with a banner in their van, showing the inscription "Having food and covering let us be therewith content:" let them descant in front of the ranks on "There was corn in Egypt,"—and explain how it was so; while the rearguard may very properly exhibit "Gather up the fragments, that nothing be lost." Do not say that parsons never fight; this warfare would be bloodless; sacks of flour would be to them for powder, and loaves of bread for shot. Let farmers remember the saying of the wise man—"He who withholdeth corn, the people shall curse him; but a blessing shall be on the head of him that selleth it." Let them not delude their labourers with a drink made by destroying corn, lest the wages of these labourers, kept back by fraud, cry to the Lord of the harvest for vengeance. To agricultural labourers, and to the working classes at large, better days will come, even days of peace and plenty, when they abstain from strong drink. The millions of pounds sterling now spent at the public-house and the beer-shop, will, when embarked in righteous trade, make a wonderful return; and parties who are clamorous for bread, have no right to expect it cheap, while they themselves engage in the destruction of corn. We cannot drink our loaf and eat it too. In all proceedings to secure the public peace, in consequence of food riots, the saving of corn for food from the manufacture of intoxicating drinks, should be amongst the first measures adopted: and is it not the duty of all parties to assist by personal abstinence?

H. M.

BRITISH ASSOCIATION FOR THE PROMOTION OF TEMPERANCE.

The Thirteenth Annual Conference of the British Association for the Promotion of Temperance, was held in the Temperance Hall, Bolton, on Tuesday, Wednesday, and Thursday, July 13th, 14th, and 15th. Preparatory sermons were preached on Sunday, by the Rev. R. G. Mason. On each occasion the Rev. gentleman was attentively listened to by overflowing congregations.

Monday evening a meeting was held in the open air, on the vacant land behind the Exchange. A large number of persons were present on the occasion, and the proceedings passed off in a very orderly manner. Mr. John Cunliffe, secretary to the Bolton Temperance Society, was called to the chair. The Rev. R. G. Mason, and Mr. J. Addleshaw, addressed the audience in a lively strain, and the latter condemned in strong terms the use of intoxicating liquors for electioneering purposes.

Public meetings were also held in the Temperance Hall on Tuesday, Wednesday, and Thursday evenings, for the advocacy of Teetotalism.

On Tuesday evening, the chair was occupied by Robert Knowles, Esq., President of the Bolton Temperance society.

The Rev. F. HOWARTH in the course of his remarks, said, that the British Association contained 170,000 teetotalers, 7000 were reformed drunkards, and of that number 2480 were improved characters who had joined christian churches. Out of 20,000 Sunday school teachers, 7000 had joined the teetotal movement; and as one out of every seven of our youthful population fell victims to intemperance, this, it would be seen, was a step in the right direction.

Mr. Buckle, of London; the Rev. R. G. Mason; Lawrence Heyworth, Esq., of Liverpool; and Mrs. Carlisle, addressed the meeting.

On Wednesday evening, J. Taylor, Esq., Coroner of the borough, presided. In opening the proceedings, he alluded to the effects of intemperance as witnessed by himself in the capacity of attorney and coroner, and gave a few instances. On Monday week no fewer than thirty-four drunkards, apprehended on the Saturday night and Sunday previous, were brought before the mayor for their misconduct. On the same day an inquest was held, in which the verdict returned was "Died from excessive drinking." Early the following morning he saw a policeman take a drunken man to the lockups on a truck. He went to the cell into which the person was put, and there saw six or seven others in a similar state, the smells which they emitted being of a most disagreeable nature. He spoke with one of the individuals on his conduct, and was answered in a most vulgar manner. The next day another inquest was held, in which also the verdict was "Died from excessive drinking." He had been coroner eight years, and never yet held an inquest on a teetotaler.

Mr. W. Bradley of Stockport, Mr. Addleshaw, and the Rev. A. Hewlett addressed the meeting, after which the chairman introduced—

Mr. Hopwood, who alluded to intemperance as having been the common destroyer, to which many of the greatest statesmen and brightest luminaries of the country had fallen victims. But the day was fast approaching, when neither the younger nor the elder brother would be permitted to sell intoxicating liquors during the Sabbath of our God! The Government themselves were already disposed to interfere with these gentlemen, as was clear from a bill which they introduced into the House of Commons, and in which originally there stood a clause to prohibit the licensed victualler from selling between the hours of twelve on Saturday night and half-past twelve on Sunday at noon, and to compel the beer-shops to be closed the whole of Sunday. There was also a clause in the bill to prevent the licensed victuallers selling one drop of distilled spirits to persons under sixteen years of age. This was the bill of the Government; brought forward by them without being asked by the teetotalers to do anything of the sort. They might depend upon it, Government were only waiting to be asked by the virtuous and influential portion of the community to see if they could not put a bridle upon these gentlemen; and if this step were taken they would do it in the space of two months.

On Thursday evening, W. Morris, Esq., the president of the association, occupied the chair. The speakers were Messrs. J. M'Kenna of Glasgow, J. W. Miatt, of South Shields; and the Rev. R. G. Mason.

At each meeting, the Bolton Temperance Harmonic Band attended, and played with a surprising degree of precision and effect, a number of airs, overtures, &c., from the works of Handel, Haydn, and other eminent composers; the audience repeatedly testified their approbation of the excellence of the performances by loud cheering. The speakers were also much applauded throughout, and the meetings were crowded to excess.

A public breakfast took place on Thursday morning, at which about 120 of the delegates and others were present, and agreeably enjoyed each other's company on the occasion.

In the course of the week several open-air meetings were held in different parts of the town; and on Thursday afternoon Mrs. Carlisle held a meeting of mothers and children in Albert-place Chapel, on which occasion fifty-six persons took the pledge. A crowded meeting was also held in the Wesleyan Association Sunday School, Bowker's-row, last evening, and the audience addressed by Mr. James Teare of Preston, and Mr. Priestly of Birmingham.

The sittings of the delegates commenced at two o'clock on Tuesday afternoon, and continued till about four o'clock in the afternoon of Thursday. The delegates present were as follow:—

President—William Morris, Esq., Manchester.

Vice-Presidents—Robert Knowles, Esq., Bolton; Richard Willett, Esq., Huddersfield; Rev. Franklin Howarth, Bury; Lawrence Heyworth, Esq., Liverpool.

Committee—Joseph Spence, George Thomas, Thos. Monkhouse, York; Thomas Entwisle, Bolton; William Grimshaw, Manchester; Simeon Hutchinson, Helmsley; J. W. Miatt, South Shields.

Secretary—F. Hopwood, York.

Delegates—Robert Jones, William Howarth, Manchester; Rev. John Victor, J. G. Thornton, Leeds; T. B. Smithies, York; William Pendleton, Wigan; Jabez Newall, Keighley; John Holmes, Bradford; John King, Rawtenstall; Joseph Benson, Henry Washington, Huddersfield; Phineas Armitage, Rastrick; T. B. Wharton, Doncaster; William Bradley, Stockport; David Thomas, Bury; William Thomas, Halifax; Henry Mann, Selby; James Raper, Bolton; T. S. Ramsey, Hull.

Members—T. Richardson, Liverpool; Benjamin Wilson, Mirfield; James Teare, Preston; William Hanson, Littleboro'; David Morris, Manchester; John Thompson, jun., Manchester; James Stubbins, Birmingham.

Deputations—James Mc Kenna, Scottish League; James Buckle, London; Richard Wakelin, Central Association.

Agents of the British Association—R. G. Mason, John Addleshaw.

Various subjects in connection with the temperance question were discussed and disposed of, as will be seen from the following resolutions, which were unanimously adopted:—

1. Moved by Mr. Frederick Hopwood, and seconded by Mr. William Bradley:—"That the Meeting of the Conference be opened each morning by a few moments spent in silence, in order to supplicate the divine blessing upon our proceedings."

2. Moved by the Rev. F. Howarth, and seconded by T. B. Smithies:—"That the Report now read be adopted and printed; together with the Resolutions of the present Conference, under the direction of the Executive Committee."

3. Moved by Mr. Frederick Hopwood, and seconded by Mr. William Grimshaw:—"That this Conference, impressed with the fact that the interests of the cause, in many places, have been greatly impaired for want of the regular and efficient public advocacy of its claims, directs its Committee to use their utmost exertions to send out an increased number of well qualified advocates, and earnestly requests the auxiliaries and members to co-operate with the Committee in procuring employment for the agents of the Association."

4. Moved by Rev. John Victor, and seconded by Mr. Simeon Hutchinson:—"This Conference again directs the attention of its Auxiliaries, and the friends of temperance generally, to the important subject of 'DISTRICT UNIONS'—these associations, wherever formed, having proved eminently useful in the extension of the principles of true temperance; and the Conference urges the friends of the cause, more especially in large towns, to endeavour to form Unions of the surrounding societies, for the permanent employment of efficient agents."

5. Moved by Lawrence Heyworth, Esq., and seconded by Robert Knowles, Esq.—"That this Conference, deprecating the intemperance and revelry prevalent at elections, calls upon all friends of sobriety in every part of the kingdom to manifest a firm and consistent example at the approaching election—not only by discountenancing in every possible way the demoralization of the people by the aid of intoxicating liquors, but also by bringing the claims of the Temperance Reformation under the notice of the respective candidates and electors. For this purpose the Conference recommends that suitable addresses be presented to the candidates by the friends of temperance; and that tracts, and other publications, showing the immense injury inflicted on the nation by the drinking system, be liberally distributed amongst the electors."

6. Moved by J. G. Thornton, and seconded by Jesse Ainsworth, Esq.—"That this Conference highly approves of the means employed by its executive for preparing the people to demand the prohibition of the 'Sunday traffic' in intoxicating liquors; and earnestly recommends the friends of temperance, morality, and social order, to petition Parliament during the ensuing session in favour of this important measure. That whilst it is to be regretted that the clauses bearing on this question originally inserted in the 'Model Police Bill,' brought into the House of Commons by Sir Wm. Somerville and Sir George Grey (two members of the Government, have been withdrawn, nevertheless the Conference infers from the circumstance of the subject being introduced at all, that the Government is not averse to the regulation sought to be obtained, and, consequently, that it becomes the duty of all right-minded persons to record their sentiments by signing petitions, in order that the Government may ascertain the real disposition of the people relative to this question, and thus be encouraged not only to carry out its original intention of restricting the 'Sunday traffic,' but also to prohibit entirely the sale of intoxicating liquors to young persons."

7. Moved by Mr. F. Hopwood, and seconded by the Rev. R. G. Mason:—"That the address now read be presented by this Conference (signed by the President and Secretary) to the Conference of the Wesleyan Methodists, and a similar document to the official authorities of all other denominations of christians, and to the British organization of the Evangelical Alliance."

8. Moved by Mr. T. B. Smithies, and seconded by Mr. John King:—"That whereas much opposition to the spread of teetotalism is occasioned by prevailing error and ignorance regarding the real nature of alcoholic liquors, not only among the inhabitants of our country in general, but amongst many practitioners in medicine: the Conference hails with pleasure a salutary exhibition of sentiment among the leading members of the medical profession, as shown by their concurrence in the temperance certificate obtained under the direction of John Dunlop, Esq.; and all committees and official persons in connection with the British Association are recommended to assist in procuring medical signatures in all quarters of the United Kingdom to the above document; and thus to promote social views on the real qualities of alcohol."

9. Moved by Mr. J. W. Miatt, and seconded by Mr. John Holmes:—"That this Conference views with the deepest regret the system of drink-fines, footings, treats, and allowances of drink, which obtains in the factories and workshops of this empire, as well as many other compulsory or artificial drinking usages existing throughout domestic and business life. That as these dangerous customs tend to prevent persons becoming teetotalers, and also to induce them to break the pledge after they have joined, their abrogation would remove a great obstacle to the spread of the cause. As much yet remains to be done notwithstanding considerable amelioration in the powers of these customs, this Conference would recommend all committees and official persons to take systematic, permanent, and associated measures for procuring the universal abolition of all such usages, and not in this matter to refuse the assistance of non-teetotalers, when it can be obtained without compromise of principle."

10. Moved by Mr. Robert Jones, and seconded by Mr. William Bradley:—"That, believing a conference of ministers will be highly advantageous to the advancement of the temperance reformation, it is resolved to invite all ministers of religion who practice the principles of total abstinence from all intoxicating liquor, to meet at Manchester in the month of April, 1848."

11. Moved by the Rev. John Victor, and seconded by Mr. Jabez Newall:—"That the delegates, on their return, ascertain from their respective committees the amount they are willing to subscribe towards the expenses of the conference of ministers, and communicate the result to the secretary, at York, by the 1st September next; and also that applications be made to the members of the Association for subscriptions."

12. Moved by T. B. Smithies, and seconded by the Rev. F. Howarth:—"That this Conference, whilst it acknowledges with devout thankfulness to God the signal success with which He has crowned the efforts of the temperance cause amongst the adult population, more especially in the reclamation of thousands who had fallen through intemperance, is deeply convinced that in order to give stability and permanency to the cause, it is absolutely necessary to make a systematic and effective movement amongst the young and rising generation. That the unparalleled success which has attended the formation of Juvenile Temperance Societies, or 'Cold Water Armies,' in the Sunday Schools of America, loudly calls for the immediate adoption of the necessary means for the formation of similar societies in every city, town and village throughout the kingdom. That in order to promote this object, it is desirable to engage forthwith a suitable Sunday School and Day School Missionary or Agent, whose labours shall be confined to the young; and also to arrange for the publication of a 'Sunday School Temperance Journal,' or other periodical, with tracts and appeals to Sunday School Teachers, Parents, &c., and this Conference pledges itself to raise the necessary funds to carry out this resolution during the ensuing year."

13.—Moved by Mr. Buckle, and seconded by Mr. Miatt:—"That as a knowledge of the physical effects of intoxicating drinks constitutes the ground-work of the temperance reform, and as the colossal plates of the stomach, prepared by Dr. Sewall, of America, and republished by Dr. F. R. Lees, on this side the Atlantic, are admirably calculated to produce a deep impression of the injurious consequences arising from the use of these drinks, this Conference recommends their regular employment by lecturers, schoolmasters, and others engaged in enlightening the public mind on the great question of temperance."

14. Moved by Mr. J. G. Thornton, and seconded by the Rev. John Victor:—"That it is recommended to societies in large towns to carry out a series of special or extraordinary monthly meetings during the winter season, in order that the attention of the people may be more prominently drawn to the great principles of teetotalism."

15. Moved by the Rev. D. Thomas, and seconded by Mr. William Howarth:—"That a recent act of parliament having secured to a considerable portion of the labouring population a greater degree of leisure than they have been hitherto accustomed to enjoy, this Conference would strongly urge all temperance societies in the manufacturing districts, to take advantage of the above circumstance, by holding additional public meetings, the diffusion of temperance tracts, the establishment of free libraries, and the adoption of other means for the spread of temperance information amongst the masses of the people."

16. Moved by Mr. Hopwood, and seconded by Mr. Washington:—"That the thanks of this Conference be presented to the Rev. James Caughey, of the United States of America (who is about to return to that continent), for the eminent services he has rendered to the temperance cause during his sojourn in this country."

17. Moved by the Rev. R. G. Mason, and seconded by Mr. Thomas Monkhouse:—"That this Conference, being conscious of the importance of securing the hearty co-operation of ministers of religion, and being of opinion that numbers of them are comparatively uninformed as to the evil effects of our drinking usages, even in their own communities, recommends to the societies throughout the kingdom the collection of facts and statistics as to the ravages of intemperance in their different localities, and the bringing the same by means of addresses and deputations before the attention of the clergy, &c., and respectfully but argently soliciting their co-operation in banishing these direful results, by the adoption of the total abstinence pledge. That a similar course be recommended to be adopted in addressing magistrates, Boards of Poor-law Guardians, &c., &c."

18. Moved by the Rev. F. Howarth, and seconded by Mr. Miatt:—"That the cordial thanks of this Conference be given to the committee and friends in Bolton who have so kindly furnished accommodation for the officers and members of the Association."

19. Moved by Mr. Henry Mann, and seconded by Mr. James Stubbin:—"That the unanimous thanks of this meeting be tendered to the President, William Morris, Esq., for his valuable services in the chair during the sittings of this Conference."

TRANSFORMING POWER OF INTEMPERANCE.

There is no man who is not subject to desires, and impulses, and temptations, which often come without bidding, and return against remonstrance. So long as a man is under the influence of reason and conscience, he may, by divine aid escape, these evil influences. But when reason is dethroned and conscience hushed, the man, for the time being, has lost his humanity; and is nothing distinguished from the brute, except his more than brutal lust and ferocity.

This is just the case with the drunkard. He is a man of like passions with ourselves. He loves his parents, his wife, his children, and his friends, and would not injure one of them for the world when sober. He loves the confidence and honours of society, and dreads its scorn and contempt.—He can and does rejoice in the smiles of life, not only for himself but for others. He is a man made in the image of his Maker. But when drunk, he is still a man of passions, divested of reason and conscience, and, in proportion to his intoxication, is deranged, a lunatic. If in this state, passions be roused and temptations beset him, he is only as a chained captive, obedient to the nod of his tyrant, and falls into the snare as an idiot into the fire. A drunkard in B—— was arrested for murder. When he came to himself, and saw the blood upon his hands, he asked the keeper of the jail, for what reason he was committed. The jailer replied "For murder." The poor fellow forgot the dangers that awaited him, the disgrace, the trial, the death. His first thoughts were about his wife. "Oh," said he, "what will my poor wife say, what will she do, when she hears that I am a murderer!" It was that wife he loved, that he had murdered.

In the State of R —, a man was hung for murdering his wife. She had gone to the liquor-seller, and on her knees begged him not to let her husband have rum. But she was ordered out and her request denied. In the evening, after her husband became somewhat excited, the liquor-seller began to taunt and tease him by calling him henpecked, under petticoat government, and the like sneering epithets. After he had aroused the fiend in his heart, he told him that his wife had been there to stop his grog. "Has she?" said he, "sell me a knife, and I will cut her throat." He bought the knife, and started for home, bent on vengeance. When he reached the door, as he afterwards stated, his heart failed him. How could he injure his wife? She had known happy days before he married her, and amidst all his neglect and cruelty had never complained, had never upbraided him. She was the mother of his children, and had ever toiled for their good and his, and always taught them to respect him even when he knew he deserved not their love. How could he injure such a wife. His conscience would not let him do it. He fled from the house as though the angel with the flaming sword of justice was pursuing him. But he fled to the grog shop. Another half-pint did the business. Now no reason restrained, no conscience rebuked him. He ran to his house, seized his wife by the hair, and drawing back her head, cut her throat. She, clapping her hand on the gash, ran over to the liquor-seller's, and exclaiming to him, "See what you have done!" died on the stone steps at his door!—Jesse Johnston and his Times.

DR. CHALMERS AND THE TEMPERANCE CAUSE.

(From the Scottish Temperance Review.)

DR. CHALMERS AND TEETOTALISM.—We have had the pleasure of seeing a letter from Edinburgh, to a gentleman in this neighbourhood, wherein it was stated that the Rev. Dr. Chalmers had joined the temperance society, and promised all his influence in its support.—Bristol Herald.

On returning from the worthy doctor's table one morning, about two months ago, we read the above paragraph in the Bristol Herald. We at once perceived that our English friends had been misinformed; for not half an hour previous we had conversed with the doctor himself upon the very subject to which it refers, without his saying anything, which could be construed as an avowal of conversion to abstinence principles. Our first feeling was to say nothing about the paragraph; but finding that it has been copied into several of the English temperance periodicals, and also into those of America, we think it right to correct the impressions which it is fitted to produce. That the doctor was friendly, and more than friendly, was known to many in this quarter; and, influenced by the interest which he always manifested when the question was brought under his notice, we were cheered with the hope that he might, on no distant day, afford our cause the aid of his great name and pre-eminent talents. About eighteen months ago, having occasion to preach a temperance sermon in the village of Morningside, where he resided, we received, on entering the vestry, a polite note from him, in which he apologised for absence, in consequence of cold, and kindly invited us to breakfast on the following morning. A few days after this he was dining with a friend. Two or three temperance people were at the table, and the conversation turned upon the subject of the sermon. He entered into the discussion with all that earnestness and generous-heartedness so characteristic of his mind; and, to show his good will to our cause, preferred the coffee which was provided for the teetotallers, to the wine which the others were partaking of. We have heard of other instances in which he acted a similar part, and in which he even declined liquor, jocularly alleging that he had become a teetotaler. We are not, however, aware that in no instance he tasted, although the impression was produced on our minds, by what we have seen and heard of him, that he was almost, if not altogether, an abstainer. Some time after having preached the sermon, we were again invited to partake of his hospitality. To our regret, we found him in bed suffering from the effects of a public effort the day preceding. This did not, however, prevent the kind-hearted and noble-minded man asking us to his bed-side, and receiving us most cordially. It was a scene never to be forgotten. Notwithstanding the "vile influenza," as he called it, under which he was labouring, he sat up, and, for a considerable time, expatiated, with all his accustomed fluency and brilliancy, on several of his favourite schemes. The West Port Home Mission was evidently the jewel of his heart. "But," said we, "our opinion, doctor, founded on long experience, prevents us anticipating much success from such efforts, so long as the social habits of the people remain unreformed." "I see, I see," said he: "You refer to their drinking habits. Well, I shall be very happy should you, along with my missionary, originate a temperance movement down in that district." "But," continued we, "there is little hope of securing any permanent reformation among the poor, unless those above them exemplify the practice inculcated." "True, true," replied he doctor; but evidently evading the point at which our observation was directed, "so much am I impressed with the importance of what you say, that I think I shall make my next quarterly address to the West Port folks on the temperance question;" and then, with one of those peculiar flourishes of the left hand, which all who have heard him must remember, he exclaimed, with an energy that would have electrified an audience of ten thousand people,

"The temperance cause I regard with the most benignant complacency; and those who stand up in their pulpits and denounce it, I regard as a set of Theological Grey-beards." On another occasion, when enjoying his hospitality, he said, "I can well enough see how that liquors are not essential to health; but what do you say of their effect on strength? Have you given any attention to the physiological view of the question? For instance, should I exhaust myself with preaching, do I not require a drop, to recover my lost energy?" "Well, doctor," we replied, "if we understand the nature of these liquors, they have not the power so to recover you. They may stimulate, but a developing of the latent energy of the system, by means of stimulation, is very different from its invigoration, and must always be attended by a corresponding weakness; so that the very opposite of that which you seek is produced. Rest and food is what is required, and what can alone recover to you that which has been lost." "I see, I see," continued the Dr. somewhat jocularly. "But why do you call that pledge which prevents you giving it to others 'the long pledge'?—I would call it 'the short' one, as it puts your neighbour on as short allowance as it puts yourself." "Well, doctor," said we, "if we could see anything 'short' of 'the long pledge' that was adequate to the cure of the evil we aim at removing, we should most cheerfully embrace it; but the conviction that the long pledge, and nothing but the long pledge, is adequate, binds us over to the necessity of contending for its adoption."

On the following morning we again had the privilege of spending some time in his company; and, as on all former occasions, he had many questions to ask about the temperance movement and its principles, and they were questions such as none but one thinking seriously of the subject could propose. This latter conversation took place but a few days before he fell asleep in Jesus. Another proof of his interest in our cause is to be found in the last article from his pen, published in the North British Review a few weeks ago, on "the Philosophy of a Famine," in which he enforced the views advocated by ourselves in common with the rest of the abstainers, in regard to the stoppage of the distilleries, as will be seen from the passage we have quoted in another place. Although it is thus evident that he never openly identified himself with our principles, yet circumstances seemed, in the providence of God, to be bringing him over to an unreserved adherence to our cause. The abstinence principle having been warmly espoused by his son-in-law, the Rev. Mr. McKenzie, the excellent Free Church minister at Ratho, and through whom he was constantly learning of our progress, we did hope to see the name of Chalmers connected with a movement which we believed to be eminently congenial with his enlightened mind and generous nature. But in this we have judged with man's short-sightedness. The remembrance of his kindness, however, we shall gratefully cherish; and although our cause enjoyed not the benefit of his personal example, we feel that our own enthusiasm has been elevated to a higher degree by fellowship with that earnest spirit which knew no rest in beneficent action, having passed from the very midst of its devisings and deeds to that yet higher state which it ardently longed for, where they rest not day nor night praising and serving God. Our fellowship with him has impressed us more than ever with the dignity of active goodness, which, among the varied graces of his richly-adorned character, shone brightest of all.

National Temperance Society.

OFFICE 11, TOKENHOUSE YARD.

VICE-PRESIDENTS.

The EARL OF ARUNDEL and SURREY, M.P.
Sir Wilfrid Lawson, Bart.

R. D. Alexander, Esq.	Rev. Theobald Mathew.
J. B. Bassett, Esq.	W. J. Morgan, A.M., M.D.
Thomas Beaumont, Esq.	Richard Peck, Esq.
C. Bowly, Esq.	Rev. P. Penson, M.A.
Samuel Bowly, Esq.	Rev. W. Reid.
J. S. Buckingham, Esq.	Rev. W. W. Robinson, M.A.
Robert Charleton, Esq.	Rev. J. Sherman.
Rev. R. Cowes, M.A.	Rev. C. Stovel.
Joseph Eaton, Esq.	Rev. T. Spencer, A. M.
J. Forbes, M.D., F.R.S., &c. &c.	Joseph Sturge, Esq.
S. C. Hall, Esq., B.L., F.S.A.	Rev. W. H. Turner, M.A.
Lawrence Heyworth, Esq.	Edward Thomas, Esq.
William Janson, Jun., Esq.	Robert Warner, Esq.
Ven. Archdeacon Jeffreys.	Edward Webb, Esq.
G. S. Kenrick, Esq.	Rev. J. Wilson.

TREASURER.

G. W. Alexander, Esq., 40, Lombard Street.

CHAIRMAN OF THE COMMITTEE.

William Cash, Esq., Peckham Rye.

EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE.

G. W. Alexander	Charles Gilpin
George W. Atwood	Richard Hicks.
Richard Barrett.	C. H. Lovell, M.D.
Jabez Bums, D.D.	John Meredith.
William Cabell	W. W. Robinson.
William Cash	T. B. Scutt.
John Casell

SUPERINTENDENT OF MISSION.

John Meredith.

SECRETARY.

Thomas Beggs.

NATIONAL TEMPERANCE SOCIETY.

The Committee, some months ago, issued an appeal on behalf of funds to support a series of efforts in contemplation. In consequence of the distress in Ireland, and other causes, this appeal was only attended with very partial success. The heavy visitation which has passed over us, is another argument, however, in favour of increased exertions in behalf of the temperance cause. Every consideration of sound policy calls upon them to oppose a system which is wasting the food of the people, and spreading abroad the seeds of crime, poverty, disease, and irreligion. In order to make efforts commensurate with the greatness of their object, the Committee must have placed at their disposal much larger funds. Applications are being continually made to them for assistance they are unable to render, and fields of usefulness are left uncultivated for want of means. They have resolved to resume their application, and to make an energetic attempt to raise up the fund of £5000, originally proposed, and which was stated as necessary to sustain the Society's operations for the years 1847-8-9. In order to do this effectually, they have engaged four agents, who, in addition to public lecturing on the principles of the temperance reformation, will be employed in collecting funds. The following gentlemen are engaged as collecting agents:—

Mr. Thomas Whitaker,

— Jabez Inwards,

— Thomas Hudson,

— William Culverwell.

The Committee trust that the temperance body will support their efforts to spread the principles of temperance, and place the Society in a position to make greater exertions than ever to destroy the drinking system.

SUBSCRIPTIONS.

	£	s.	d.
Burns, Dr.	1	1	0
Davies, Rev. Evan	0	10	0
A Friend	0	2	0
Giles, Mrs. Mary	1	0	0
Grisbrook, Mrs. Mary	1	0	0
Gibson, Mrs. Ann	2	0	0
Per Mr. R. Gamble
A Farmer	0	5	0
A Master	0	5	0
Seayers, Miss	0	5	0
Smith, Williamson	1	0	0
Wight, Rev. W.	1	1	0

THE LATE MR. JOSEPH ANDREW.

We have this month to record the death of another tried and devoted friend of the temperance cause, Mr. Joseph Andrew of Leeds. This is not only a serious loss to every benevolent cause with which he was associated, but to an estimable family, and an extensive circle of private friends. We copy the following from the Leeds Times of July 10th.

"The temperance cause in Leeds has sustained this week a severe loss, in the death of Mr. Joseph Andrew, whose demise will be found in our obituary. Mr. Andrew was one of the earliest of the total abstinence members and advocates in this town, having been connected with the society since the early part of 1835, and a member of every successive committee up to a comparatively recent period. He had likewise held the offices of joint secretary to the society, and co-editor of the Leeds Temperance Herald, for some years. His eloquent appeals on behalf of the principles of teetotalism have not been confined to his native town, but have been spread over the whole of England. His labours in the cause have been characterised by consistency, energy, devotedness, and success; and his memory will be long cherished by a large circle of attached friends. Mr. Andrew was also connected with several other useful and liberal institutions, such as the Leeds Mechanic's Institution, the Anti-State Church Association (at whose meetings he was occasionally chairman), and an active canvasser and supporter of Mr Sturge. His illness was short, commencing on Friday with symptoms of typhus fever, and on Wednesday morning he had finished his short but useful career, at the age of thirty-five. The interment took place at the Woodhouse Cemetery, on Thursday afternoon, the Rev. John Ely (his pastor) officiating, who delivered a most eloquent and impressive address on the occasion. His remains were followed to the grave by a large circle of sorrowing relatives and friends, including the committee of the Leeds Temperance Society. His death will be long and deeply lamented by the temperance body generally, and by all who enjoyed the pleasure of his acquaintance."

We deeply sympathize with his bereaved wife and relatives. The following report has been forwarded to us:—

Quarterly Members' Meeting of the Leeds Temperance Society, held on Friday Evening, July 9th 1847. Mr. John Kershaw, in the chair. Moved by the Rev. John Victor, seconded by the Rev. Jabez Tunnicliffe:—

"That the members of the Leeds Temperance Society, having heard with deepest regret of the sudden and lamented decease of Mr. Joseph Andrew, do hereby most affectionately express their tenderest sympathy with his widow, in her most painful bereavement, and his relations in their unanticipated invasion and sorrow. That they recognize with pleasure and gratitude, the early association of Mr. Andrew with the Leeds Temperance Society—his disinterested, benevolent, persevering, and most efficient exertions in its behalf,—and while silently submitting to the unerring wisdom of the Great Disposer of all things, in so early and sudden removal of a brother, and fellow-labourer universally esteemed, they trust his deplored demise will be divinely sanctified to his bereaved relatives, that divine support and blessing may be their consolation, and that the memory of the departed will interminably be honoured in the affections of those who have long and highly appreciated his fellowship and distinguished labours in the temperance association.”

Scarcely hath the wail of sorrow o'er the early grave of the lamented Joseph Andrew been hushed, ere again the fiat hath gone forth, and another true man has been torn from the vanguard of the temperance ranks. On the 25th July, Edward Chrimes of Rotherham was called from his useful labours to his eternal rest. An earnest believer in human progress, and an intrepid asserter of human rights, he bent his powerful mind to an examination of the truth of teetotalism, and his love of the principle was as deep as his conviction of the power to redeem from drinking usage and evil was sincere. Inflexible and uncompromising in his views, he was powerful and convincing in the advocacy; and his place will, it is feared, long remain unfilled. J. G.

MALT RETURNS.—The total quantity of malt made in the United Kingdom amounted in 1842, to 35,881,324 bushels; in 1843, to 35,693,888 bushels; and in 1844, to 37,187,196 bushels; in 1845, to 36,545,980 bushels; and in 1846, to 42,097,085 bushels. The quantity of malt used by licensed brewers amounted in 1842, to 28,856,390 bushels; in 1843, to 28,537,842 bushels; in 1844, to 29,593,485 bushels; in 1845, to 30,180,130 bushels; and in 1846, to 32,436,289 bushels.

SPIRIT (IRELAND) RETURNS.

The number of gallons of Irish spirits brought to charge for home consumption in Ireland during the year ending the 5th of April, 1847, amounted to 7,392,365, against 7,633,364 in 1846. The falling off in the duty amounts to £32,133. The quantity of proof spirits on which duty was paid for home consumption, in 1846-47, amounted to 7,392,365 gallons, of which 533,453 were distilled from malt only, and 6,858,912 from a mixture of malt and malted grain. The number of detections of offenders against the laws for the suppression of illicit distillation amounted to 920 in 1846, and to 1955 in 1845.

(To the Editor of the National Temperance Chronicle.)

Calne, Ju'y 16th 1847.

SIR,—In the Chronicle of last month there is an extract from the Journal of Mr. J. Williamson, relative to some improvements in the town of Calne; and as in a few little particulars he has stated that which is not correct, I am anxious to put the matter right.

He states that “the proposition for the improvement was made by some of the members of the temperance society.” This was not the case; but it emanated from individuals unconnected with the society, and I believe before the temperance society was formed in this town. The next error is that “the election dinner cost £800.” I believe this is much too large a sum; but it is said that 800 bottles of wine have been served on these occasions.

To effect the change, from election dinners to that of improving the town, there was not a meeting of the electors, consequently no “slight opposition,” and no “deputation;” but I believe a few influential persons without any of these steps obtained the object.

There has been no particular sum expended on these occasions, and the improvement in the centre of the town must have cost much more than £500. The improvement to the town is great, but by no means was it so bad before the alteration as intimated by Mr. Williamson. It is said “that £400 is still in hand.”—This is not correct, for, as I have before stated, no particular sum has been expended on these occasions.

I am not aware of its being contemplated to “form a park from a waste piece of ground.” I think this must have allusion to Calne Green, at present a very pleasant spot, and some of my neighbours may have made a remark relative to improving it a little some future day.

In looking over the whole extract it appears to me very desirable that in stating facts, we should do so as plainly and simply as possible, without any colouring.

In closing this letter of explanation, I would just remark, that however much I rejoice in the improved way of expending money on these occasions, I entirely disapprove of its being expended at all at these times, for it involves a principle very objectionable, if not illegal.

I am, Sir, yours truly,
R. W. GIBSONS.

To the Editor of the National Temperance Chronicle.

SIR,—The enclosed extract is from the letter of a young woman to the matron of the Home for Penitent Females, 17, White Lion Street, Pentonville, whose appearance was deplorable in the extreme when first received into the Institution, and the state of her mind may be judged from the fact that she had attempted self-destruction. She has been filling a situation for two years with great credit to herself. J. V.

“I hope my past sins have been forgiven. I trust I now begin to feel the satisfaction of true religion, yet I feel more deeply than ever how great a sinner I have been in the sight of God. Among all the present inmates of your asylum, there cannot be a greater sinner or more miserable wretch than I once was; tell them to get their minds well stored with Gospel truth,—to pray to God to change their hearts; they will then be able to overcome the temptations of the world, and the corruption of their nature. There is one thing that I would especially advise, if any have given way to that accursed thing—strong drink; to them I would say, take no more of it; it may be pleasant to the taste, but it is poison to the soul. Don't say you cannot do without it. I once said so, but I find I am much better without than I was with.”

INTOXICATING LIQUOR TO THE INDIANS.—We are pleased to notice that the Secretary of War is endeavouring to arrest the abuse from which the Indians have so severely suffered, and has issued regulations of a stringent character, prohibiting, according to law, the introduction of intoxicating liquors among the Indian tribes. We hope he may be successful in his philanthropic efforts.—New York Organ.

BENEFIT SOCIETIES AND PUBLIC-HOUSES.

An article on this subject from the pen of Dr. Beard appears in the last number of the People's Journal, from which we make the following extract:

"Byignorant men, and for grossly selfish purposes, have very many Benefit Societies been founded. Their origin is briefly told. A publican, finding trade bad, or desirous of doing his business on a larger scale, determines on the establishment of a Benefit Society. For this purpose he must have a secretary. Who so fit for the duties of the office as that frequent visitor of his 'bar,' that talks as hard as he drinks, has a ready pen and a touch of the genteel, albeit somewhat shabby. 'Mine host' broaches the subject to this seedy 'man eloquent,' who thereupon goes at once to work. Rules are concocted, members found, the society established. They first have for their basis an old dirty copy of rules which once guided the course of a society that has already foundered. The publican's sign supplies the name—his tap-room the first bevy of members. The society, thus set on its legs, must now be nourished. A supper is given by the landlord, and an increase of members gained. Our secretary, 'wanting a job,' canvasses the neighbourhood from house to house. Individual members, in their several workshops, spread at once the fame of mine host's old ale and new institution. Never were such advantages offered before; never did a more jovial set engage in a work of true charity; never was there given a better supper; never would there be a more generous landlord. The fortune of the society is made; and so is that of the house.

"But the seeds of future ill are sown, and the crop will be abundant. In societies having such an origin, the appetite for drink will infallibly be stimulated and encouraged. What number they may bear to the total societies of the kingdom, we have no means of ascertaining; but from a Parliamentary 'Return relating to Friendly Societies in the several counties of England and Wales,' we learn that in 1842, of 3,860 of these institutions, not fewer than 1,396 were held in public houses; and, so far as can be gathered from the paper, only 176 in school-rooms or chapels. What a plentiful source of corruption is here. Were there no intentional and direct encouragement to drinking, such practices as this fact implies would go far to undermine the morality of a nation. The Benefit Society, which ought to be the working man's friend, thus proves first his tempter, and then his foe. It is an occasion, an excuse, and a cloak for intemperance. Not so easy would it be for the husband to make his way into the public house while his wife was sickly, and his children in rags. But 'I am going to my club' is a very different statement to 'I am going to get some drink.' True it is, that after a time the pretext deceives no one; but then the habit is formed, the way to the tap is trodden and smooth. Perhaps the wife, too, has her club, with its comforting drop or two, and the gossip to boot: so that man and wife agree to a mutual tolerance of practices that are destroying health, substance, and character.

"The facilities to intemperance afforded by Benefit Societies are growing less. They are still too numerous—far too numerous. Did there linger but one, that one would be our justification in this exposure of its baneful tendencies. We are, however, surrounded by evidences. Let the reader take as a specimen what follows. It is a general rule in societies held at public houses, that a certain sum shall be spent each meeting in intoxicating liquor. Say that the subscription is two shillings a month, then, in addition, three-pence, four-pence, or sixpence must, by the rules, be expended 'for the good of the house.' This increases the subscription by one fourth—and if we take into account what is voluntarily spent in addition, perhaps one half. Thus three, instead of two, shillings are given for certain specified advantages. To make these advantages secure, perhaps two shillings are insufficient. The three shillings actually parted with would do even more than is contemplated. But of this sum one-third goes to the landlord—in other words, is wasted. Yes, for the purposes of mutual insurance, is utterly wasted. But the waste entails another and deeper injury. The money for drink must be paid by all—the drink itself falls to the share of a portion of the members. In order to prevent disputes and brawling, each man is furnished with a ticket, which gives him command over so much beer; or perhaps the entire stock for the night is indiscriminately supplied by the landlord at his own pleasure. In either case, the bold and forward contrive to get others' shares beside their own. If they drink from a common stock, they 'drink deep' and oft. If the ticket system prevails, they get into their hands the tickets of absent or soberer members; and that not the less easily because, being probably in office, they can grant little favours, or at any rate understand their business, and are not held back by any of that mauvaise honte, better known as 'modest assurance,' which may attach to younger men less used to the 'free and easy' manners of the club room. In the club of the Manchester 'Engravers and Calico Printers' is a member who bears the disreputable title of 'drink steward,' and whose office—namely, 'to seee round the drink in just and equal proportions'—excites very painful reflections, to which we will not give utterance. In this society the members are compelled to spend in drink at least three shillings a year; a sum which is not inconsiderable to a poor man, and which, if properly invested, would secure the payment of two shillings a week, in sickness, from the age of fifteen. Two shillings more, however, are required from each member to provide 'an annual feast,' to be had, of course, 'at the house where the members of this sick list meet.'"

Foreign Intelligence.

HONOLULU.

(To the Editor of the National Temperance Chronicle.)

As in England and the United States, we have our "ups and downs" in temperance in this quarter of the globe. We are now having an "up." Our old society becoming practically dead, a new one was recently formed, which seems destined to run well, for a season at least. It publishes the Oahu Fountain, a copy of which I will also send. This organization has embraced some of our best and most efficient young men. The temperance tide is now much higher than two, three, or four years ago. Selling is not so reputable. Some of our merchants decline selling at wholesale. The Sandwich Islands Government is making a strenuous effort to prohibit the introduction into the country of all spirituous liquors. The king and chiefs, with several officers of the Government, are decided teetotalers. I am happy in being able to bear my humble testimony to the fact, that among the common natives of the island very little drunkenness exists. I never saw but a few natives intoxicated; not one native to fifty foreigners, although among foreigners the vice is disappearing.

As regards my own peculiar field of labour, viz., seamen, I rejoice to report decided progress. I scatter the Friend among seamen of every nation visiting the North Pacific, printing 2,000 copies twice a month.

I always read the Chronicle with deep interest, and it only makes me desirous of seeing more English temperance publications.

I have a field for the circulation of temperance publications as wide as the world. From 10,000 to 20,000 seamen annually visit this port, and I have free access to the crews of all vessels, English as well as American. Hundreds of the Friends find their way among English seamen on board Her Britannic Majesty's ships of war, as well as merchant vessels. The English admirals who have been upon the Pacific station, have always looked with favour upon the enterprise in which I am engaged. Only a few months since, Admiral Sir George F. Seymour, of Her Britannic Majesty's ship Collingwood, sent me his second donation of £5. Rear Admiral Thomas also was a donor to the Seamen's Chaplaincy, and during his residence of seven months at Honolulu, he was a constant attendant upon my preaching. I believe the latter to be a truly religious man. He has always felt a deep interest in the welfare of missions, and the prosperity of the cause of temperance, although not a teetotaler.

I hope you will not consider me a tedious correspondent, but let me remark that I saw copies of the Chronicle, addressed to His Majesty Kamehameha III., lying in the Foreign Secretary's office, which were just received, and he told me they were to be presented to His Majesty and his Prime Minister. Allow me to suggest that your society make the king an honorary member of your society, and also His Excellency John Young, the Premier of the kingdom.

The king and chiefs most certainly deserve great credit for the noble stand which they have taken upon the subject of temperance. I am most happy in being able to bear my decided testimony to that effect. For more than four years the king, and most of the chiefs, have been decided teetotalers. Their influence is most decidedly favourable among the common people. As a nation, the Hawaiians were formerly a nation of drunkards, now, as a nation, they are teetotalers. The good work is now progressing among the foreign community. Ardent spirits are now allowed to be sold nowhere, except in Honolulu, and the vendors are here under heavy bonds to confine the sale to certain limits, viz. 1. They must not sell to natives. 2. Their shops must be closed at 10 o'clock at night, and not opened till daylight next morning; and 3. they must be closed from 10 o'clock on Saturday night until daylight on Monday morning. This last does almost entirely away with Sunday tippling, which curse seems so heavily to afflict English society. For breaking these rules, several vendors have been fined the sum of 500 dollars each. The Government is now making a strenuous effort to alter the English and French treaties, in such a manner as to prohibit the importation of ardent spirits.

—S. C. DAMON.

The American frigate Macedonia dropped anchor in Cove harbour on the 16th, laden with 1800 tons weight of bread stuffs, the gift of the United States to the poor of Ireland. This superb war steamer has a crew of 600 teetotalers, and on the approach of Father Mathew in the Mayor's barge, Commodore De They manned the yards, and the gallant Yankees gave three thundering cheers for the modern apostle.—From a Correspondent.

Home Intelligence.

BERKHAMSTEAD.

I have held eight cottage meetings, eighteen in the open air, two in chapels, and three in school-rooms,—in all thirty-one; among which were two large meetings in the open air at Chatteris, in the Isle of Ely, one at Mauld, in the heart of the fens, and one in the British School-room at Aylesbury. During the quarter I have exchanged 516 tracts, added to which some kind friends have stitched some with the religious tracts which are constantly in circulation. 109 signatures have resulted from the meetings held and houses visited. I know of thirteen nursing mothers at the present time; there are also several men in my district moving on teetotal principles, several more working on the railways, others sawing and following various laborious occupations. One fact relative to the town of Chesham is worthy of notice. I have been privileged to labour there for a period of ten years; nine years ago I was pelted out of the town after a meeting held one evening,—now there are upwards of forty reclaimed drunkards, and what is more remarkable, there are ten persons who have become possessed of property which entitles them to vote at the coming election, only one of which, in all probability, would have been so circumstanced but for teetotalism; one is John Plato, who has a vote for three counties, viz., Herts, Bucks, and Oxon. He was the ringleader of my stoning party. In several instances in my district there are such cases; I think I can number (Chesham included) upwards of twenty. I gave this information to Mr. Dashwood, the member for Wycombe, at the teetotal fête in his park last week. One freeholder was a thorough reformer when a drunkard (save as it regarded himself). He was not worth forty shillings in the world, and thought it a great hardship he had no vote; he had plans for reforming every abuse, while he was begging his family and frequenting the ale-house. He is now a respectable man, doing a good business, a large house clear his own, and having reformed himself, rests quietly at home. I have also had the pleasure of addressing six Sabbath-schools, with parents and teachers, in which I brought the temperance question prominently forward. I have engagements for holding open air meetings in several towns: hitherto I have had great attention and kindness.

ROBERT GAMBLE.

MALDON.

MELANCHOLY AFFAIR.—On Saturday morning last, a man named Thomas Wheeler, of Langford, was found lifeless in the high road. As far as can be ascertained, it appears that he had been in the service of Mr. John Wood, of Langford Hall, upwards of 30 years, and was a steady, industrious man. On Friday evening he went with two malt sacks to Heybridge, when he stayed at the Victoria Inn, at which Messrs. Dick and Waddington's party were giving a public supper. He joined them, and left about half-past one o'clock, with a man of the name of Chapman. They were shortly after followed by two other men, who found the deceased and Chapman both lying in the road. On lifting them up, Chapman was able to walk, but deceased was necessarily led as far as Langford Cross. Here his assistants left him, as they were going a different road, and he said he could walk then, but about two hours after he was found dead. He had a slight bruise on his arm, and was very much bruised about the chest ; a quantity of blood had flowed from his nose and ears, and it is supposed that a cart must have passed over him. On Saturday an inquest was held over the body by W. Codd, Esq., and a respectable jury, when a verdict of "Found dead" was recorded, but as to how death was caused they had no evidence to show. They appended to their verdict the following remark : "The jury cannot separate without expressing their great abhorrence of the system called 'treating,' which gives rise to gross debauchery and drunkenness, and was a main cause of the sad catastrophe." The deceased has left a wife and five children.

HANTS.

Many circumstances of a pleasing nature have transpired in connexion with my labours, from which I select the following :—

At the village of Ampport, a young man who signed the pledge through my instrumentality three years since, and who has derived great benefit from the adoption of teetotalism, lately took to a wife, and it was pleasing to observe, that where drinking and other expensive and injurious practices have been accustomed to prevail, total abstinence and social prayer, blended with the song of praise were leading traits in the festivities of the day.

At Newtowntoncy, a man who for many years had been a drunkard, signed the pledge ; and instead of spending his money at the public house, has connected himself with the Temperance Provident Institution, and secured £100 for his family at his death.

Another young man at Walloss has been reclaimed, and, as a consequence of his improved habits, obtained a good situation, in which he gives great satisfaction to his employers.

I have during the last three months visited upwards of 1800 families ; attended twenty-three public meetings ; gave away more than 2000 tracts ; and obtained seventy-five signatures.

But there is a dark side to the picture : intemperance is still doing its work of death. Not many yards from my own dwelling, a man in the prime of life, died last week in consequence of drunkenness, leaving a wife and young family to meet the difficulties of the world unprotected.

Another young person in the same village, after a life of dissipation closed his earthly existence by committing suicide. But these details are of every day occurrence ; and to give you every case of this kind we meet with would become tedious.

Yours sincerely,

A. W. HERITAGE.

POOLE.

The tea meeting on Wednesday evening was addressed by Mr. Curtis, the secretary, who read the report, which shows an increase in the number of members. Mr. Jabez Inwards was unable to attend. The Revs. A. W. Heritage of Winchester, J. Chamberlain of Swanwich, and J. Causer, and Mr. Haskoll, of Shaftesbury, also addressed the company. On Thursday evening, the Rev. A. W. Heritage delivered an interesting lecture at the Independent Chapel, Parkstone, the Rev. Mr. Cecil in the chair. There was a very good attendance during the week, more especially on Wednesday, after the tea. A number of persons, male and female, have signed the pledge and joined the association during these demonstrations.

WALES.

I continue to give away tracts, which are much appreciated by the young, some of whom are working on the railway.

We find that the chief enemies to the temperance reformation, are ignorance and indolence, together with the numerous publicans, tempting and ensnaring the deluded young people in the evenings.

Some of the workmen on the railway are kept very late on Saturday evenings, without their wages ; sub-contractors taking the poor men to the public houses under the excuse of getting their money changed : the whole night, and the Lord's day, is often spent in drinking.

I have been arguing with stewards against such bad customs, but I feel much grieved that our gentry and magistrates are so indifferent to the temperance reform.

On occasions of festivals, birthdays, wedding-days, and holidays, our gentry continue the old habit of giving drink ! Every man of refined mind, and christian spirit, is dreading the coming election, owing to the drinking habits !

EVAN DAVIES.

Literary Notices.

Memoir and Correspondence of the late Mr. JOHN BRUMBY, President of the Bath Juvenile Temperance Society. By Alfred Keeler Matcham. 12mo, pp. 36. Houlston and Stoneman.

This is a memoir of a truly amiable young man, written evidently by an affectionate friend. Mr. John Brumby was present at the World's Temperance Convention, and moved the resolution relating to the young. In a few months he was no more. This unaffected tribute to his memory will be highly useful, as it is well calculated to inspire others with a desire to emulate the piety, devotedness, and usefulness of the departed. "Many will mourn for John Brumby, even as a much loved friend ; but more especially the members of the Bath Juvenile Temperance Society, with whom he stood closely connected, and to whom he was the active, intelligent, and untiring President."

Temperance Rhymes for Young Teetotalers. By JABEZ BURNS, D.D. 32mo., 16 pp. HOULSTON AND STONEMAN.

This is a neat little tract, a suitable present for children. As to its literary merits we will let it speak for itself in the following extract :—

WATER, AND NOT STRONG DRINK.

Water ! precious drink of heaven,
Unto man in goodness given ;
Clear and bright, and pure, and sweet,
Flowing richly at thy feet :
Drink, and bless the Giver's name ;
Drink, and freely give the same !

Water drink, and live in health,
Water drink, and save thy wealth ;
Water drink along the way
Leading on to endless day :
Then the streams on Canaan's shore,
Freely drink for evermore !

O, taste not the drunkard's drink !
Flee from ruin's deadly brink ;
Watch, and evermore beware
Of the luring, fatal snare :
Taste not, touch not, but abstain,
Live and die a temperance man.

Three Lectures on the Moral Elevation of the People.
By THOMAS BEGGS. 8vo., 80 pp. C. GILPIN.

This pamphlet is the substance of a course of lectures delivered by the author in several large towns in England. They were published in Cook's National Temperance Magazine, and from that a few copies got into circulation. Considerable alterations and corrections have been made in this edition, the whole having been revised most carefully by the author.

Balaam and his Ass. A Poem, with other pieces. 12mo., 46 pp.

We have received a second edition of this brochure, remarkable for the boldness of its sentiment.

A Visit of the Edinburgh Juvenile Abstinents to the Statuary and Royal Zoological Gardens, July 3, 1847. pp. 20. Edinburgh: R. Tofts.

This little work is very useful, and reflects credit upon its compiler, Mr. Sinclair.

The Model Parish, &c. By a clergyman of the Church of England. pp. 30. London: Seely, Burnside, and Seely.

We merely notice the receipt of this interesting little work. We shall return to it again.

We have received a very beautiful volume of Poems by the authoress of "Amy of the Peak." We are reluctantly compelled to postpone a notice of it, until next number.

Several correspondents will find their favours attended to in our September number.

DR. JOHN REID ON INTEMPERANCE.

(From his work on Hypochondriasis, 1821.)

It is no very uncommon thing, I believe, in this dissipated metropolis, for a woman of gaiety and fashion previous to the reception of a party, to light up by artificial means her mind, as well as her rooms, that both may be shewn off to the best advantage. But the mental lustre which is thus kindled, goes out even sooner than that of the lamps, and the mistress of the entertainment often finds herself deserted by her spirits, long before her company is dispersed. In like manner, a man who is meditating a composition for the public, is often tempted to rouse the torpor, or to spur the inactivity of his faculties, by some temporary incentive. Gay, if I mistake not, in one of his letters observes, that "he must be a bold man who ventures to write without the help of wine." But in general it may be remarked, that the cordials which an author may on this account be induced to take, are more likely to make himself, than his readers, satisfied with his productions. The good things which a person under the influence of fictitious exhilaration may be stimulated to say, are often, in their effects, the very worst things that could possibly have escaped him. From a want of sufficient steadiness or discretion, sparks sometimes fall from the torch of genius, by which it is converted into a firebrand of mischief.

We are apt to complain of the heaviness and weariness of volumes, where the pains taken by the writer have not been sufficiently concealed. But the apparent result of excessive care is much to be preferred to the heedless effusion of a mind, over which it is too obvious that the judgment has in a great measure suspended its control. It is far better that a work should smell of the lamp than of the cask.

Intemperance is a resource especially to be dreaded by men of more than common acuteness of feeling and vivacity of imagination. Such persons are in general least able to submit to the ennui of vacancy, or patiently to bend under the leaden weight of incurable sorrow. On which account, they too frequently endeavour to fill up a want of interest, or to disperse the cloud which darkens their horizon, by transient remedies that permanently ruin, by momentary reliefs which tend only to destroy more effectually the last wreck of their comfort and constitution. Under certain circumstances the motive is almost irresistible, to seek a repose from suffering in the opiate of intoxication, in that kind of sleep of the sensibility, out of which the awakening cannot fail to be attended with an accumulated horror. In the flood of intemperance, the afflicted inebriate does not drown, he only dips his sorrow, which will in general be found to rise again, with renovated vigour, from the transient immersion. Wine, during the treacherous truce to misery which it affords, dilapidates the structure, and undermines the very foundations of happiness.

The habit of indulgence in wine is not more pernicious than it is obstinate and tenacious in its hold, when once it has fastened itself upon the constitution. It is not to be conquered by half measures: no compromise with it is allowable; the victory over it, in order to be permanent, must be perfect; as long as there lurks a relict of it in the frame, there is danger of a relapse of this moral malady, from which there seldom is, as from physical disorders, a gradual convalescence. The man who has been the slave of intemperance must renounce her altogether, or she will insensibly re-assume her despotic power. With such a mistress, if he seriously mean to discard her, he must indulge himself in no dalliance or delay. He must not allow his lips a taste of her former fascination.

Webb, the celebrated walker, who was remarkable for vigour both of body and mind, drank nothing but water. He was one day recommending his regimen to a friend who loved wine, and urged him with great earnestness to quit a course of luxury, by which his health and his intellects would be equally destroyed. The gentleman appeared to be convinced, and told him, "that he would conform to his counsel, though he thought he could not change his course of life at once, but would leave off strong liquors by degrees." "By degrees!" exclaims the other with indignation, "if you should unhappily fall into the fire, would you caution your servants to pull you out only by degrees?"

To reprobate the use of strong liquors altogether, may be considered as a kind of prudery in temperance; as carrying this virtue to an unnecessary and even preposterous extent. But prudery, it should be recollected, consists not so much in the excess of a virtue as in the affectation of it. The real prudes in regimen are those who "strain at a gnat and swallow a camel," who would have great scruple perhaps in drinking a glass of wine, but who would not hesitate every day in their lives to swallow, in a pharmaceutical shape, draughts composed principally of the worst and most concentrated spirits. Tinctures are medicinal drams. The habitual use of them can be regarded only as a more specious and decorous mode of intemperance. In this may be said to consist the privileged debauchery of many a nervous valetudinarian. A female of decorum and delicacy may thus most effectually ruin her health, without in the slightest degree impairing her reputation. She may allay the qualms of the stomach, without the danger of occasioning any more disagreeable qualms of conscience.

It is possible for us to be intemperate in our eulogy of abstinence, and to violate moderation in our invectives against excess. But at the same time it is our duty to reflect, that what is evil in its essence, no reduction of quantity can convert into good. Vice retains its character throughout every gradation of its scale. In none of its descending degrees can it produce any thing better than more diluted and mitigated mischief.

The crime of intemperance must, after all, be allowed to be in a certain sense, a relative thing. Pope said, that more than one glass of wine was to him a debauch. There are multitudes who, without the intellectual vigour, labour under the corporeal imbecility of the celebrated poet, and who ought therefore to be equally nice in their notions of excess. The mischief, and of course, the guilt of intemperance, vary considerably according to the sex, as well as other circumstances of the individual. To the constitution of man, for instance, unnecessary incentive is injurious, to that of woman incalculably more so; and to that of a woman in a state of pregnancy, it involves the danger of two-fold destruction. Females in that situation are loaded with a double responsibility. By the abuse of inebriating liquors, they incur the risk of child murder, in addition to that of suicide. Or, if the infant of an intemperate mother so far escape as to be ushered alive into the world, little physical vigour or intellectual health can be expected from a human being, whose constitution has been made to know the influence of alcohol, before even it was exposed to that of air.

Poetry.

STANZAS ON HEARING OF THE LAMENTED DEATH OF MR. JOSEPH ANDREW.

Through the warm stillness of the summer air,
When nature's lovely face looked bright and fair,
A wailing cry smote on my startled ear,
And thrilled my inmost heart with grief and fear—
A cry of Death!

It told of one in manhood's early prime,
Unscathed by sorrow's blight, unworn by time,
Whose bright career of work clos'd swift and soon,
Who, ere life's glowing morn had reach'd its noon,
Sigh'd his last breath!

We weep when age lays down its honour'd head,
And rests from labour in its last low bed;
When infant blossoms wither and decay,
Or lengthen'd suffering has prepar'd the way,
Love will still mourn!

But when our hearts and hopes beat warm and high,
Round some young life, bright as a cloudless sky,
Then if Death's dart goes forth, it wakes a moan,
"Too deep for tears"—an anguish-stricken groan,
From heart-strings torn!

And thus we wait for thee! thou valued friend,
Whose name with every christian grace we blend,
Whose life display'd our being's better part,
Whose worth had bound thee unto many a heart
Now rent with grief!

Oh! thou wert formed on nature's noblest plan,
Truth stamped her superscription on the man,
And every cause, to save and bless mankind,
Thee, in its foremost ranks was sure to find—
A youthful chief!

Like some fair tree thy stately boughs were spread,
A glorious sunshine rested on thy head;
Warm kindred love amid thy branches played,
And friends delighted in thy verdant shade,
And gathered round!

Pleased with the varied tones they often heard,
When sweeping winds thy lofty branches stir'd,
Wakening the harmonies of thy strong sense
In glowing bursts of thrilling eloquence,
And solemn sound!

Mourn, TEMPERANCE! thy gallant champion dead,
PEACE! FREEDOM! weep, your gifted pleader fled,
RELIGION! join the wail, to him 'twas given,
To gild with active piety the way to heaven,
And know no pause!

Ah! was it that the energies of his brave soul,
Outstripping others, gained the shining goal?
That deeds of worth anticipated time;
And thus his work was done ere manhood's prime,
For every cause?

Then hush, rebellious murmurs! humbly lean
In this deep grief a meaning to discern,
Think not his bright brief life shall pass away
From loving hearts, and leave no holy ray
Of light behind!

His name shall be truth's watchword fondly spoken,
His deeds fair virtue's emulative token,
His life a pattern for our purest aim,
His love an honour we shall ever name
With grateful mind!

True friend, farewell! Enter thy glorious rest,
Soar to thy home, bright spirit! with the blest;
Death's stroke has smitten us, but set thee free,
In the fair land of light and liberty,
For evermore!

Thy sainted sisters,* with unchanging love,
Were thy sweet heralds in the courts above;
"Lovely and pleasant in your lives" were ye,
"In death not long divided:" Happy three,
On Canaan's shore!

For those left sorrowing in our world of woe,
Their earthly bliss destroyed by this stern blow!
May God sustain them by his mighty power,
And in the agony of this sad hour,
Teach them His will!

And when the storm of grief sweeps o'er each soul,
With force no human reason can control,
May the calm voice that still'd the raging sea,
Speak to the tempest-toss'd, and soothingly,
Cry—"Peace, be still!"

July 16th, 1847.

C. L. BALFOUR.

* Mr. Andrew lost two sisters, within a few weeks of each other, last autumn.

Advertisements.

EVERY HONOURABLE AND RIGHT-FEELING MAN

Must regard it as one of his first duties, to make provision for his family in case they should be deprived of his support by death. This can only be done by a system of mutual protection, in which the uncertainty of life is neutralized by the average duration of a large number. This system is called "Life Assurance." It secures an immediate provision at a trifling annual payment; whilst those who live to old age find their shares largely increased by the accumulations of profit.

For information on this important subject, with the rates of premium required at different ages, and all other particulars, apply personally or by letter to the office of the TEMPERANCE PROVIDENT INSTITUTION, and GENERAL LIFE ASSURANCE SOCIETY, 39, Moorgate-street, London.

IPSWICH JUVENILE TEMPERANCE BOOKS.

In 32mo., illustrated with handsome woodcuts, in sixpenny packets, of glazed coloured paper.

	PAGES		PAGES
1. The History of Teetotalism	20	18. What Little Boys can do for Teetotalism ...	12
2. Scriptural Teetotalism	20	19. Little Mary	16
3. Teetotalism of Ancient History	20	20. Lucy Grey and her Pet Pigeon	8
4. Teetotalism of Modern History	20	21. What Little Girls can do for Teetotalism.....	12
5. The cost of Intemperance.....	20	22. Poor Little Willie	12
6. Self-denial	20	23. The Sixpenny Glass of Wine	12
7. Early Habits	20	24. The Town Meeting ; License or no License...	12
8. The Force of Example	20	25. The Unexplored Island.....	12
9. A Letter to Sunday School Children	20	26. Is I not happy	12
10. H. Hawkins, the Drunkard's Daughter	20	27. The Apprentice Lad	20
11. Christian Courtesy and Benevolence	20	28. The Power of Custom	20
12. The Young Chemist's Inquiry	20	29. Biographical Gleanings—Examples	20
13. Little Henry and the Teetotal Festival	20	30. Ditto ditto. —Warnings	20
14. The Young Reasoner's Objections to Teetotalism	20	31. The Guide to Glendalough	12
15. The Fear of Ridicule.....	20	32. Bridget Lartum.....	12
16. The Teetotalism of Travellers	20	ASSORTED PACKETS.—No. 1, 1 to 16—No. 2, 17 to 32,
17. Temptation Resisted	12	inclusive.

IPSWICH TEMPERANCE TRACTS.

Those Tracts marked with an * have PICTURES and are on better paper, 150 pages, in a sixpenny packet. The others have 168 pages to the packet.

	PAGES		PAGES
1 The Doctor Scrutinized, or for what purpose do Physicians prescribe Alcoholic Beverages, by R. D. Alexander, F.L.S., 122 thousand ...	8	44 A Sailor's Yarn	4
2 Striking Facts, 84 thousand	2	45 Moderate Drinking Calmly Considered	12
3 Maker and Vender, 44 thousand	2	46 The Pledge.....	4
4 Our Creed, 52 thousand	2	*47 John Jarvis, or the Pledge Signed	12
5 Adulterated Beer, 34 thousand	4	*48 The Fifteen Friends.....	4
6 Adulterated Wine, 40 thousand	4	49 Sunday School Teachers, 22 thousand	12
7 The Maltster, 37 thousand	4	50 Sunday School Children, 40 thousand	12
8 Go Feel what I have Felt, 53 thousand	2	51 Money better than Beer, 37 thousand	4
9 Facts are Stubborn Things, 53 thousand	2	*52 Little Mary ; or a Daughter's Love	8
10 The Spirit Dealer, 35 thousand	2	53 Philosophy of Temperance by R. T. Trall, M.D. 20
11 Christian Teetotalism, 70 thousand	2	54 Love to Man, or an Appeal to the Pious	20
12 The Trade, 33 thousand	4	55 The Young Woman's Tract	12
13 Alcohol, 33 thousand	4	56 The Young Man's Tract	16
14 The Town of Ipswich, 33 thousand	4	57 Dr. Campbell's Testimony, 18 thousand	8
15 Song of the Water Drinker, 37 thousand	2	58 Why Sign the Pledge? 40 thousand	2
16 Stimulation not Strength, 30 thousand	8	59 The Poor Man's House Repaired	4
17 Farmer Woodman's Speech, 41 thousand	4	60 The Mother's Tract	8
*18 The Beer Barrel Examined, 33 thousand	8	61 The High Price of Food	4
19 Teetotal Recipes, 38 thousand	4	62 Ladies' Tract Societies	8
*20 Speech of J. J. Gurney, 30 thousand	4	63 The Praise of Water, 25 thousand	2
21 Pity the Poor Drunkard 49 thousand	2	64 Important Calculation, 30 thousand.....	2
22 The Fool's Pence, 25 thousand	8	65 The Farm Servant, 25 thousand	2
23 Why am I a Teetotaler? 26 thousand	2	66 Teetotalism Declining, 15 thousand	8
24 Dost thou smoke, Bill? 34 thousand	4	67 The Reformed Drunkard, 20 thousand	8
25 William the Laudanum Drinker, 30 thousand ...	4	68 The Recruit of the British Legion.....	8
26 The Ox Discourse	4	69 No. 1 of Temperance Anecdotes	12
27 Letter to the Clergy, by a Brother Clergyman, 21 thousand	20	70 No. 2 ditto	12
28 Common Sense, 20 thousand.....	2	71 No 3 ditto	12
29 Ralph the Soldier	4	72 No. 4 ditto	12
30 Testimony of Eminent Physicians, 30 thousand 4		73 Luke Husler, or "I did not like to say No.".....	8
31 The Working Man, 35 thousand	20	74 The Drunkard's Wife	8
32 Is I not happy? by Hugh Stowell, 30 thousand 4		75 The Unexplored Island	4
33 David the Shoemaker, 49 thousand	4	76 Ancient Wines ; by R. D. Alexander.....	8
34 The Drunken Couple, 48 thousand	2	77 Influence of Example, 15 thousand	2
35 Confessions of a drunkard, 29 thousand	2	*78 The Victim of Excitement.
36 Master Tailor, 20 thousand	4	*79 My Medical Adviser does not approve of Teetotalism.
37 The Fatal Gift, 36 thousand.....	2	*80 The Restoration.
38 Poor Sandy.....	4	ASSORTED PACKETS—No. 1, containing 1 to 31.—No. 2, 32 to 55.—No. 3, 56, and upwards.
39 Use & abuse, by Archdeacon Jeffreys, 34 thousand 2		Fifty Packets of Juvenile Temperance Books or Tracts delivered in London for a Guinea, sent by P O. Order, to Richard Dykes Alexander, Ipswich. Samples of both post free, for five shillings.
40 The Schoolmaster	4	London: Simpkin and Marshall,
41 Water is Best, by J. J. Gurney, 37 thousand... 8
42 Cobbett's Advice	4
43 Take a Public House.....	4

BREAD WITHOUT BARM!

MATHEWS'S

IMPROVED BAKING POWDER,

FOR MAKING THE CELEBRATED

UNFERMENTED BREAD,

PASTRY, PIE-CRUSTS, TEA-CAKES, PUDDINGS,

AND THE PREPARATIONS OF INDIAN CORN.

Sold in Packets at 3d. each, with directions for use.

"This new method is a striking instance of the successful application of chemical philosophy to the arts of life."—Chambers' Journal.

"We have tested the quality of the bread made with Mathews's baking powder, and pronounce it excellent."—Great Western Advertiser.

"The quality of every article with which it was used was greatly improved, particularly the puddings and cakes."—Bristol Mercury.

"We have used it fairly and repeatedly in our family, and it fully answers the description given of it by the Advertiser."—London Weekly Intelligencer.

"I have just made 500 plum-cakes and 100 loaves of plain bread with your powder, and they are excellent both in flavour and quality." B. Weston, Baker, 22, Castle Street, Bristol.

"We used the powder at sea constantly for four months, and the bread was of first-rate quality."—John White "Britannia," London.

"We have used your powder, and found it excellent."—Hesketh Davis, & Co. Export Merchants, 127, Leadenhall Street, London.

"Having had several opportunities of examining bread prepared with Mathews's baking powder, I have great pleasure in recommending its more general use. It is much superior to bread made with yeast, is more easy of digestion, more nutritious, and likely to prevent many serious dyspeptic affections. I think Mr. Mathews's preparation should be strongly recommended by every member of the medical profession."—Matthew Denziloe, Surgeon, Allington.

"I have given your powder a fair trial, and made bread far superior in quality and flavour to that made with yeast."—James Balston, Baker and Confectioner, North Allington.

"I continue to use your baking powder, and consider it a valuable improvement."—C. Harding, Baker, Yeovil.

For a detailed account, read "The Philosophy of Bread-making." Price One Penny. Houlston and Stoneman.

Manufactured by EDWARD HAZARD MATHEWS, 13, Upper Arcade, Bristol.

Sold by Agents in most large towns throughout the kingdom.

Wholesale Agents in London, Germain, Charles, & Co., 5, St. Bennet's Place, Gracechurch Street. Export Agents, Hesketh Davis & Co., 127, Leadenhall Street.

B. H. M. will be happy to treat with respectable parties in places where no Agents have been appointed. Letters requiring a reply to contain a penny-postage stamp.

LONDON TEMPERANCE TRACTS,

UNDER THE SANCTION OF THE

National Temperance Society.

The above Tracts comprise a variety of 150 different sorts, and embrace every point of the principle of Total Abstinence. Upwards of

THREE MILLION

have already been circulated. 2 pp. 8d.; 4 pp. 1s. 4d.; 8 pp. 2s. 8d. per 100., or in packets, assorted, 6d. each.

For the convenience of LOAN CIRCULATION, they are assorted into 60 sets, containing 16 pp. in each, and stitched into a strong wrapper, with a suitable address upon each, price 8s. per 100. Liberal allowance for large quantities. Lists may be obtained of the Publishers gratis.

Houlston & Stoneman, 65, Paternoster Row.

THE SCOTTISHTEMPERANCE REVIEW

is published on the first day of each Month, under the superintendence of the Executive Committee of the SCOTTISH TEMPERANCE LEAGUE, and contains 48 pages, octavo, of Original Articles, Essays, Reviews, and Illustrative Tales, by the most eminent writers on Temperance, with a careful selection of Temperance News and miscellaneous information.

The REVIEW is stamped, and is therefore transmissible by post to any address, and after being read, may be re-posted.

PRICE—3d. each No., or 3s. per annum, always payable in advance.

If 3s. in silver, or postage-stamps, be enclosed in a pre-paid letter to ROBERT RAE, at the Publishing-office, the REVIEW will be sent by Post for Twelve Months.

GLASGOW:—Published at the Office of the Scottish Temperance League, 30, St. Enoch Square.

THE PATENTGelatinous Hermetically Sealed Case

preserves the fragrant and delicious flavor of the Genuine Self-Clarifying Coffee as long as you please.

This has been a much desired convenience to Families, Single Persons, Parties travelling by Sea or Land, &c., which has never before been attained. It is put up when fresh roasted (on a scientific principle), and ground with a sufficient quantity of powdered Isinglass to clarify it, in 1 oz., 2 oz., and 4 oz. packets, marked at the same prices as the ordinary kinds are usually sold; and can be prepared, clear as amber, in the same time that Tea is made, by merely pouring boiling water on it.

Agents are being appointed in Towns and Villages throughout England and Wales.

Apply for Particulars of Agencies to G. P. SWINBORNE, Thames Bank, London.

THE MODEL PARISH;

or, the Present State of Parishes in Great Britain consequent upon the Drinking Usages of Society; and Proposals for the Erection of a Church, Parsonage, Schools, and College, to assist in the Eradication of these Drinking Customs. By a Clergyman of the Church of England. Price Two Pence.

London: SERLY, BURNSIDE, AND SEELY.

* * * The NATIONAL TEMPERANCE CHRONICLE and TEMPERANCE RECORDER is published on the first day of each month, at HOULSTON & STONEMAN, the Depot of the National Temperance Society, 65, Paternoster-row, and will be sent post-free for one year on receipt of 2s. postage labels. Annual Subscriptions received at the Society's office, 11, Tokenhouse Yard, London, and subscriptions and donations for the general purposes of the Society, by the Treasurer, G. W. ALEXANDER, 40, Lombard Street; by any Member of the Committee, and at the office as above.

London: Printed by RICHARD BARRETT of 3, Regent-terrace, City-road, in the Parish of St. Luke, in the County of Middlesex, Printer; at his Printing Office, No. 13, Mark-lane, in the Parish of Allhallows Staining, in the City of London; and published by JOHN STONEMAN, of 24, Brooksbury Street, in the Parish of Islington, in the County of Middlesex, at HOULSTON and STONEMAN'S, No. 65, Paternoster-row, in the Parish of St. Michael-le-Querne, in the City of London, Publishers.—Sunday, August 1st, 1847.

THE
NATIONAL TEMPERANCE CHRONICLE
 AND
TEMPERANCE RECORDER.

It is good neither to eat flesh, nor to drink wine, nor anything whereby thy brother stumbleth, or is offended, or is made weak.—ROM. XIV. 21

No. 21, JOINT SERIES.]

SEPTEMBER, 1847.

[PRICE 1d., STAMPED 2d.]

CONTENTS.

	PAGE		PAGE
Practical Steps; Strong Drink and Crime; The Tea Duties;		Her Majesty's Benevolence; Sugar used in Distilleries;
National Temperance Society; Present Aspect of the		The Pulpit.....	145
Temperance Reform	137-141	HOME INTELLIGENCE:— Missionary Labours; Metro-
A Drunkard on Fire; The World ahead of the Church;		politan; Leighton Buzzard; Aspley Guise; Exeter;
An Ungodly Minister.....	142	Hull; Glamorgan and Monmouth; Panton, Wilts..	145-148
Drinking and Pauperism; Life Assurance; What the		Temperance Soiree; British League of Juvenile Abstainers;
Wesleyans could do!	143	Intemperance Abroad; The Intemperate Female; Dis-
National Temperance Society; Subscriptions; Brunswick;		sipated Boys.....	148-150
Wesleyan Conference	144	Literary Notices; Advertisements	151-152

PRACTICAL STEPS.

Total abstinence societies have often been re-proved for not taking more practical steps to enforce their principles. It has been alleged that they have confined their attention almost exclusively to teaching, and have neglected the consideration of plans which might have been very efficient in keeping down intemperate habits. Our reply to this is, that in every reform it is first of all necessary to create a sentiment in its favour, and prove that the change is needed and practicable.
 The means taken to promulgate temperance principles have succeeded so far, and this seems a proper stage in its progress to adopt prudent and practical measures against the drinking usages, and other conventional proprs of the drinking system.

One of the sound principles laid down by the Parliamentary Committee on drunkenness, was contained in the 39th clause of their Report.
 Among the immediate remedies, legislative and moral, they recommend "The reduction of the duty on tea, coffee, and sugar, and all the healthy and unintoxicating articles of drink in ordinary use; so as to place within the reach of all classes, the least injurious beverages on much cheaper terms than the most destructive." No one, at all acquainted with the habits of the working classes, will doubt that creating a taste for the comforts and the harmless luxuries of life, is one important means of diminishing intemperance. Unfortunately, legislators are more anxious to gather a large revenue, than careful about the means by which it is procured. Their license laws have given respectability to a traffic which produces the greatest mischief in the community, whilst the heavy duties on articles like tea and sugar, which have become necessaries of life to the population, have induced them to rush, because cheaper, to a pernicious rather than a more wholesome beverage. The folly of this policy is now becoming apparent. A Parliamentary Committee was appointed last Session to inquire into our commercial relations with China, and one part of their inquiry was, how far a large consumption of tea would be promoted by a reduction of duty, and the effect such consumption would have upon the habits of the people. In another part of this Chronicle will be found some remarks upon the subject from the Times. These remarks are valuable, not only because they are excellent in themselves, but as they indicate an altered state of public feeling on a question vitally affecting the national welfare. A few years ago, it is not at all unlikely that the Editor of the Times would in relation to such a subject, have treated with contempt the idea of cheapening slops, and insisted most strongly upon the necessity of cheapening the poor man's beer.

 This at any rate was the general feeling. Now it is becoming evident that facilities must be given to the people to obtain those articles of reasonable and rational indulgence, which add so much to the comforts of the homes of our wealthier classes.
 Mischievous as are all our taxes upon the necessaries of life, there is not one that indicates a more short-sighted policy, than the duty on tea.
 In a fiscal and commercial point of view it is unwise, while on the moral and social condition of the people, it exerts a very prejudicial influence.

In London, there are a vast number of coffee-houses, the majority of which are respectable and agreeable houses of entertainment. By newspapers and periodicals, they afford a counter-attraction to the public-house. It is well known, that the tea sold is black tea of a very inferior kind, and often highly adulterated. A cup of good tea can scarcely ever be procured, and never under a charge of 3d. In all parts of the metropolis, boards are hung out announcing beer at 3d. per pot: so that a quart of a pernicious and intoxicating beverage, can be obtained for the same sum that a poor man can get a cup of tea. The evil consequences of such regulations will be seen at once. In work-shops and manufactories it is now common to have tea or coffee instead of beer; and we all know the advantages of the tea-parties, which are superseding the old dinner-parties. They have had the most happy effects upon the habits of the poorer classes. Is it not, then, of the greatest importance, that every facility should be given to enable them to obtain the best kind of tea, instead of a common and nauseous one?

It is of great consequence too, that as a question of domestic economy, the people should be enabled to procure tea at the cheapest rate possible. Tea is much used among the lower ranks, and would be used much more if cheaper. Instances were given in evidence, of poor people who emptied their tea-pot only once a week, adding a little tea every day, and on the Saturday putting in a little soda, to still further extract the essence before throwing the leaves away; and of many who were glad to receive the refuse leaves from the houses of richer people. Any law must be unjust, as well as impolitic, that deprives the working man of this harmless and refreshing luxury, while it affords to him the opportunity of getting gin or beer. We apprehend that Temperance Reformers must look at this subject carefully. Ask the man to give up his alcoholic drinks; teach him their evil nature and effects; try to win him from the beer-shop and the tavern; but, besides teaching all this, you must lessen the inducements of the public house, and enable him to increase the enjoyments of his home.

We have arrived at that stage in the temperance movement, when we must take up these questions and deal properly with them. We shall never succeed by merely inculcating temperance. And amongst the means to be employed, a reduction, if not total repeal of the duties upon wholesome articles of general consumption is absolutely essential.

STRONG DRINK AND CRIME.

When we look around us and behold the dreadful effects of strong drink, our zeal ought to be aroused, and our efforts redoubled, to bring those to a right consideration of its evils who have not thought seriously on the subject, and by constant and reiterated exhibitions of the consequences, excite them to a proper course of action.

The press of this country is mighty for good or evil, and it is a melancholy thing when those wielding so mighty an engine are either by ignorance, prejudice, or interest, disposed to lend its power to the suppression of truth, or induced to raise its voice in disparagement of any principle calculated to benefit mankind in general, such as that of total abstinence from intoxicating drinks.

The Weekly Dispatch has frequently said something of the noble cause of teetotalism, but, unhappily, it has been on the wrong side; and yet, one number only of that paper contains facts enough to show its editor, if he did not wear opaque spectacles, that he would do an incalculable amount of good if he would only come out from the bedimmed atmosphere of strong drink, and throw his influence into the teetotal scale; and we propose to show some of these effects on the people of this country in the middle of the nineteenth century, hoping better times are near at hand. The editor says, in the Dispatch of August 22nd, after alluding to the practice of some journals to show up Ireland as to crime—"Let us cast a glance at some of the wild sports of London and the provinces, and see, whether in point of morality or humanity, England is one whit before Ireland;" but he never once says, in order to show what is the great incentive to crime, and thus impress the public with the horrors of drinking, that strong drink was the exciting cause in almost every case recorded; so, to complete his work, we will show how far strong drink had to do with the following cases, and leave our friends to form their own judgment.—C. S., committed to Newgate for stabbing with a file, and otherwise ill treating his wife when drunk.—D. A., accused of arson when he was not sober, having drunk some ale, and afterwards some brandy. The prisoner had been quarrelling with his wife, and, in revenge, he took her clothes out of the trunk, and was burning them, when the chimney caught fire, and part of the boards were burnt.—C. B., sentenced to a fine of £5., or two months' imprisonment for a violent assault on her own mother. She was a violent, dissipated woman, whose countenance was a perfect index to her mind; and she had only been released from imprisonment about a fortnight for similar violence.—J. H., committed for stabbing her paramour with a knife. He had separated from her about ten months ago. The prisoner, who is a fine young woman, said, in defence, that she did not recollect any thing of the affair.—T. R. A., the landlord of the Britannia, licensed ale and beer-house, in Ratcliffe Highway, for defrauding a poor sailor, was fined £10., or three months' imprisonment, with hard labour, and to restore the sailor's chest, which he had detained, or pay 30s., the alleged value of it. The poor fellow had just been paid off from the Hercules, and was taken in tow by this scoundrel of a landsbark, taken to his house as a home, and charged £2. 8s., including 14s. for board and lodging from Friday till Monday, although he had only partaken of two meals in the house, and had never slept there at all. The sailor paid him 30s., and allowed him for twelve pots of beer, although he had only drunk six. He smoked his own tobacco, but the defendant charged him for it notwithstanding. Oh! that all our brave tars were teetotalers, with good teetotal homes to receive them when they came ashore, then would such rascalities be at an end.—S. J., transported for ten years for stabbing T. W. with a knife. The prisoner and the prosecutor had been at a public-house in Manchester for many hours, the parties being engaged in playing dominoes; a quarrel subsequently ensued, and the prisoner waited for some time to attack his opponent, he having been turned out of the house.—M. G., found guilty of the murder of his wife. The prisoner and his wife lived in the borough of Manchester, and both were persons of somewhat intemperate habits. The unfortunate deceased was much addicted to drink, and this had been frequently a source of great irritation to the prisoner. The week on which the deceased met with her death, was the Manchester race-week. She had attended the races, and on several occasions had come home much intoxicated. On Saturday, 29th of May, she was in the neighbourhood of her own house, and was so drunk that she required to be assisted home. The prisoner, on coming down stairs, and finding her lying on the floor in this condition, stamped upon her belly, and taking up the poker, struck her on the same part of the person. Inflammation of the peritonium came on, and in the course of the following day (Sunday) she suffered miscarriage. She continued to get worse, and died on the Wednesday. The prisoner, who was in liquor, cursed her, and said he wished he had killed her.—J. L., transported for life for killing F. D. by stabbing him with a knife. The prisoner kept a beer-shop at Charlton-cum-Hardy, and on the occasion when the circumstance took place, the prisoner, deceased, and another, were drinking. All the parties were very much intoxicated, and a quarrel arose about the prisoner's wife, when he went into the kitchen, got a knife, and meeting the deceased in the passage, plunged it into his body to the depth of eight or nine inches, penetrating the pericardium, and causing instant death.—J. R., tried at the Central Criminal Court on his own confession of the murder of H. W., but found Not Guilty. They had about two years ago been drinking in the neighbourhood of the Tower. They left the public-house together, and took a hackney-coach in the Moorfields, for the purpose of conveying them home to their residences in the neighbourhood of Gray's Inn Lane. They stopped the coach in Redcross Street, and had something to drink, got out at Gray's Inn Lane, were both tipsy, and one had a wound on his eye. He went home, but soon after died, and on examination a severe wound was found over the orbit of the eye, which penetrated to the brain, and had caused death. Two umbrellas were found in the coach, and the ferule of the one opposite the deceased, the handle was downwards, was covered with blood.—W. S., a wretch who, about twenty years ago, was tried and acquitted on a charge of having cut off the head of his child, was indicted for feloniously cutting and maiming M. A. S., a woman with whom he cohabited. On the night of Sunday, 25th July, they came home together, both of them partially intoxicated, a quarrel took place, in the course of which he seized a knife from the table, and attempted to stab her in the throat; she struggled with him, and saved her throat, but got her fingers very seriously cut, one of them to the bone. He was sentenced to twelve months imprisonment with hard labour.—J. McC., described as a naval officer, was fined £7 for assaulting a married woman, and using threatening language to her husband when intoxicated.—Several wretches induced two little boys to fight, one of whom was killed. The reward to the conqueror was to be some beer and halfpence. They gave the child who was killed a quantity of rum and beer, and made him drunk. The other boy declined to drink any, and ran away.

Such a horrid catalogue of crime as this, all resulting from strong drink, would, one would think, make every right thinking person abstain for ever from such body and soul destroying liquors; but we find, unhappily, that some are, from one motive or another, induced to go back to drinking habits after having been pledged to abstain, and now and then such fatal results as the following are the consequence. An inquest was held by Mr. Wakley on the body of J. M., who had been a totaler for four years, but had broken his pledge. He had been drinking, and scratched his hand, returned home very ill, became worse, and died next morning. He drank at such a rate that he left his family without fire or food. His brain and lungs were congested, and the latter gorged. His liver was a drunkard's. The action of the inflammation and fever on a depraved system caused so fatal and speedy a termination. The doctor, who recommended such characters to be confined in asylums, and fed on salt, water, and bread, said that he constantly held inquests on fine men who died from drinking. Verdict—died from an inflammation of the veins of his left arm, the result of scratches produced by drunkenness.

Reclaimed drunkard! do not tamper with this deadly foe, strong drink. Teetotaler! let this sad exhibition of depraved nature make you tenfold more energetic. Drunkard! be warned in time, you know not what evils your dread sin may lead you into. Moderate drinker! remember these were all once as you are, and little thought they should ever fall so low. Christian! ye that profess to love God and man, give us your influence to root out this scourge from our highly-favoured land. Oh! one and all! come to the rescue, rescue your fellow-man from strong drink and crime!

T. V. H.

THE TEA DUTIES.

In the Times of Monday, Aug. 16, is an excellent article on the Reduction of the Tea Duties. After remarking on the fiscal and commercial advantages, the writer remarks:—

"But there is another aspect under which the question presents itself, which renders it perhaps of still graver importance. A reduction in the tea duty, if it worked in the manner we suppose, would effect a great change for the better in the habits of every class of our population, by supplying them with a substitute for intoxicating liquors.

"It is impossible to overrate the importance of this consideration. The temperance movement in Ireland did not, unfortunately, produce permanent effects; but this was the natural result of the manner in which it was conducted. An appeal was made to the enthusiasm of an imaginative and excitable people. Now, great social changes, to be durable, should be based upon habit; that will be found in the end to be the only secure ground of reliance. Medals and pledges can never take the place of the natural wish to do the same thing tomorrow that we have done yesterday and to-day. Sumptuary laws have long since been abandoned, and the more politic legislation of modern times has admitted the principle, that the practice of the moral virtues should be rather encouraged than enjoined—rather suggested than enforced. All that we can do is, to place the great mass of the population under favourable conditions for contracting orderly and sober habits, the rest must be left to the innate workings of human nature, which would appear more prone to pass from evil to good than to fall from good to evil.

"When we come to examine the fearful records of crime, which the reports from the police offices and the assize towns furnish us with day by day, and month by month, in nine cases out of ten, it will be found, that intemperance has been the immediate cause of the deplorable transgressions against the laws of society which are there set forth. The gin-palace and the beer-shop are but the vestibules to the gaol and the convict hulk. Any measure, then, which would strike at the root of this evil, would be a thousand times more beneficial to the country in its indirect than in its direct effects. The CHANCELLOR of the EXCHEQUER, when considering even the fiscal effects of the removal of the duty upon tea, must be prepared to take into account the expenses incurred for the maintenance of the police offices where the drunkard is brought up for examination, of the gaol where he awaits his trial, of the poor-house where his wife and family must be supported by the country, of the asylum, the hulk, or the penal colony where he must end his days."

NATIONAL TEMPERANCE SOCIETY.

The committee, desirous of extending their operations, and diffusing a knowledge of their principles, have engaged four agents, who, in addition to lecturing and addressing public meetings, are employed in collecting funds to enable the society to make efforts commensurate with the greatness of the object. These gentlemen, Messrs. Whitaker, Inwards, Hudson, and Culverwell, have been holding a series of meetings, in the metropolis and its neighbourhood. One of the meetings took place on Wednesday evening, August 11th, in Bishopsgate-street Chapel, Rev. H. Townley's, which was filled by a highly respectable and intelligent audience. The chair was occupied by JAMES SILK BUCKINGHAM, Esq., who, on entering the chapel, was received with loud applause.

He addressed the meeting as follows:—They had assembled to call attention to what had been very properly called the Temperance Reformation. They remembered the time when temperance principles were laughed at. None of them then thought to see it in so short a time taken into such favour, received into the high places of the earth, and acknowledged by all as one of the greatest of moral reforms. Even those who did not act on their principles commended them for what they were doing.—(Hear.) These things afforded them great encouragement, and should stimulate them to make greater exertions. One of the chief difficulties, as he thought, had been, that those who from their superior position in society should have aided them, had stood aloof, and in some instances, had opposed them. Not only the makers, and those interested in the traffic, but intelligent, influential persons, and those whose piety could not be doubted, had been found amongst this number. He, however, believed that before long, those individuals would be brought in.—(Hear.) He believed that truth was great, and would prevail. They were anxious to have with them, medical men, magistrates, and above all, on account of their number and influence, ministers of religion. Some of these had thought that they were putting teetotalism in the place of the gospel. It was inconceivable how men could come to such conclusions. There was ground nevertheless for encouragement. He remembered presiding at a similar meeting about two years ago in the school-room, underneath that chapel, it being a question with the authorities as to whether it would be right to allow the chapel for the purpose. But there they were, and he doubted not that had even a better place been at the disposal of the friends it would have been at their service.—(Cheers.) That was a thing worth rejoicing over; because, although there was nothing in the act of holding a meeting in a chapel, any more than in a school-room, for the place was consecrated by the purpose for which it was used, yet it did indicate a difference in the state of public opinion.—(Applause.)

Mr. THOMAS HUDSON, who was the first speaker introduced, was cordially received. The observations he should have the honour to offer, must be regarded as a mere statement of the case; those who would succeed him would make the appeal. He trusted the statements and the appeal would be of such a character as to oblige that respectable meeting, before its separation, to tender their sympathy and co-operation.—(Hear.) He thought that at no period had so much activity been displayed by the people of this country in the acquisition of riches. Yet they took but little notice of the economical principles of the Temperance Reformation. He held that strong drinks were the dearest things that entered a man's house.—(Hear.) Yet millions were spent every year, not simply by the drunken and the profligate, but even by the respectable members of society.—(Hear.) In proof of this, the speaker entered into some ingenious calculations, by which he threw theonus on all who were in the practice of patronising the drinking system.—(Cheers.) Proof was in hand, that at least 75 per cent. of the £8,000,000 raised in this country, were applied to the maintenance of drunken paupers, or those who had been reduced by intemperance. There was no institution that was not injured and grossly imposed upon in consequence of drink—there was none that would not be greatly benefited by the diffusion of temperance principles.—(Hear.) In the month of December, of last year, out of fourteen cases of casualties admitted to the Bristol Infirmary, three were directly traceable to drunkenness, and the fourth was a presumptive case. The speaker then stated the details of these cases in corroboration. He thought, then, the temperance cause worthy of general support. He sought to lessen the poor-rates, to supersede the necessity of men becoming dependent paupers and hangers on upon the charity of others; and he sought above all to make the homes of this nation become, what they were fitted to be, the happiest homes in the world.—(Applause.)

Mr. THOMAS BEGGS, Secretary of the National Temperance Society, who was much cheered, showed the bearings of the temperance question upon education. He complained that in the discussions which had taken place on the subject of Government Education, little or no attention had been paid to the causes of our juvenile ignorance and depravity. It was too much the case that men mistook cause for effect, and attacked the more proximate causes of an evil instead of the primary ones. As an illustration, there were a class of minds, who, whenever it was proved that there was a great neglect of religion among the people could think of no other remedy, than building churches. He thought it would be far better to institute a preliminary inquiry—Why are those who have already not filled?—(Cheers.) And thus with ignorance: it was undoubted that a great amount existed. He could, if necessary, produce a whole library of statistics to prove it. It was proved by the records of crime and the reports of prisons. On this immense amount of ignorance being exhibited, some minds suggested school teachers, and education. He knew that more schools were wanted, and better teachers too; but it would have only a partial effect so long as those seminaries of sin—the gin-shops and public houses, were kept open. He had caused some inquiries to be made in the immediate neighbourhood of the place in which he then stood and he found that there were no less than fifty houses for the sale of intoxicating drinks while there were only sixteen Sabbath and weekday schools, including all kinds of schools, and it might be fairly computed that there were at least 1500 children without instruction. These were fearful facts to contemplate, for while these children were thus neglected, they were being educated in our streets, to people our workhouses, to fill our gaols, and some perhaps training for the hulks and the gallows.—(Hear.) Wherever inquiry had been made, as to the reason of the small attendance at the various schools, the answer invariably was intemperance or poverty. Seeing, then, that intemperance was the cause of seven-tenths of the poverty, intemperance might be fairly said to be the cause why the education of the children of the poor was neglected, and much was required at our hands. Besides the school, the home education had to be looked to: what could a few hours a day do, even in the best conducted school, to counteract the pernicious influences of a drunkard's home.—(Hear, hear.) Vast numbers of our children had their first lessons in evil from the example from profligate parents. This was a consideration that ought to stimulate them to increased endeavours. Law or Government could do little, the work was with the people.—(Cheers.) The morality of the people must put down the drinking system.—(Hear.) There were, however, as had been already observed, many things to encourage them. The fact that Government, which had been accustomed to bestow testimonials only upon warriors, or those who pandered to the vices of courts, was beginning to reward the benefactors of mankind. This was more worthy than trophies erected to their destroyers.—(Loud cheers.) It had testified its approval of the self-denying labours of Father Mathew, by giving him an annuity of £300. per annum, this was to his mind a most pleasing sign of the times as regarded the progress of their principles.—(Cheers.) Another encouraging circumstance was, the testimony which a large number of the most talented and influential members of the medical profession had recently borne to the advantages of entire abstinence from intoxicating liquors. The certificate which he read was signed by upwards of 1,200 medical men. He would not detain them by reading over the names of these gentlemen, and it would be invidious to make selections: yet he could not refrain from mentioning, that Dr. Forbes, the physician to the Queen, was one of those who had signed this document, and that he had recently shown his attachment to the principle, by allowing his name to be placed among the Vice-Presidents of the National Temperance Society. (Mr. Beggs sat down amid much applause.)

Mr. T. WHITTAKER was received with great cheering. He was glad that the chairman had announced that there would be a collection. He thought that the society might derive great assistance from that meeting. If 100 persons would give 5s. each, fifty 10s. each, and twenty £1. each, there would then be no difficulty in extending such meetings to an indefinite extent.—(Cheers.) Mr. W. then referred to an observation made by the chairman, as to the altered position of the temperance cause. He had that day come from Cirencester. As proof of the onward march of the cause, on the previous night he had the pleasure of addressing a large and influential meeting in the beautiful Temperance Hall of that town, which stood on a site formerly occupied by a brewery. That brewery had been purchased, and the Hall built by the munificence of Christopher Bowly, Esq., at an outlay of £2,000.—(Great cheering.) It was consecrated to benevolent purposes free of expense; and what was most cheering of all was the fact, that the floor of the building was composed of the staves of the barrels formerly in requisition in the brewery.—(Renewed cheering.) He could remember the time when persons would not admit that teetotalism was good for everybody or everything; now, go anywhere, they met with persons who admitted that their principles were good for the drunkard. They were, however, not to be let off by this admission.—(Hear.) Teetotalism was a good thing for the drunkard, so were schools for children, but some one must teach them; so were goals for thieves, but honest men must build them; so were lunatic asylums for madmen, but sane persons must erect them. Mr. Whitaker proceeded eloquently to enforce the duty of abstinence as a means of reclaiming the intemperate. In conclusion, he observed that the more he looked back on the way by which they had been led, the more he was convinced that teetotalism was of God; and all heaven seemed to say in language not to be misunderstood, Persevere! Thousands of reclaimed drunkards who had washed their robes in the blood of the Lamb, joined in the cry, persevere; thousands of lost drunkards in eternity groaned, persevere; ten thousand reclaimed and converted drunkards swelled the chorus, persevere. A voice came from the north, persevere; it was echoed back from the south, persevere; the east and the west caught the sound and flung back the word persevere. Write it on every banner, print it on every tract, engrave it on every heart: persevere until this the plague-spot of drunkenness is wiped from our country's brow, and the waters of abstinence, like the holy water of the sanctuary in Ezekiel's vision, be seen issuing from the east and the west, rising to the ankles, then to the knees, then to the loins, until the waters are risen waters to swimming, a river that cannot be passed over. (Mr. Whitaker was loudly cheered on resuming his seat.)

Mr. W. SPRIGGS moved a vote of thanks to the minister and managers of the chapel, and J. S. Buckingham, Esq., for presiding.

G. W. ATWOOD, Esq., seconded the motion, and stated to the meeting that the Rev. H. Townley, the minister of the chapel, was a pledged abstainer.

After a few remarks from the CHAIRMAN, the meeting (which was one of the most interesting we have ever attended) separated.

PRESENT ASPECT OF THE TEMPERANCE REFORM.

Extract from J. Henry Clark's Prize Essay on "The Present Position and Claims of the Temperance Enterprise."

The present aspect of society presents the greatest inducements to labour in the cause. An effort has been manifest among the masses every where of late to elevate their condition in society. Mental and moral degradation so uniformly result from intemperance, that in the attempt on the part of the society to lift itself up, every means must be resorted to, and every threatening danger avoided.

There is in the public mind a strong conviction in favour of temperance principles. This under-current of opinion nothing but their popularity will develop. Fashion, however, which has somewhat served the cause, now threatens to become again its powerful opponent; new efforts must be put forth, or the labour of a quarter of a century will be lost.

The generation that has seen and suffered the evils of universal intemperance is rapidly passing off the stage; those who have been active in the service have become wearied, and the younger portion of the community look upon it as a stale subject, lacking the dignity if not the importance that would commend it to their notice. Thus the present moment is one of danger.

Each political convulsion, every famine that visits Europe, will drive to our shores, and mingle with our people a mass of population quite unacquainted with temperance arguments, accustomed to drink freely, and unaccustomed to think for themselves; thus the work is to be done perpetually anew. In a quarter of a century our population will become one hundred millions, four times Great Britain, and three times France. Some who hold in their hand this tract will stand in the midst of that teeming multitude. How vastly important the bearing of every moral question at this crisis of our history!

The war with Mexico is teaching young men to drink, and at its close will throw back upon society a class of men morally destroyed by the idle dissipation of camp life, to circulate the dangerous lessons there learned.

The advocacy of temperance principles has fallen into disrepute. The dignity of temperance advocates has not been sustained, and audiences are accustomed to be amused, rather than listen to the discussion of moral truths.

The divisions of the great temperance army have too many separate interests. Some have fallen in the rear, thereby permitting other departments to assume responsibilities to which they are inadequate.

All seem to have depended too much upon legal assistance, which cannot do much in the advancement of a mere moral enterprise. Like the waggoner in the Latin fable who called upon Hercules, and neglected to put his shoulder to the wheel of the mired carriage, we have stopped working, and with our eyes upon the Legislature, we have allowed the evils of intemperance to increase, forgetting that there were no inherent principles in law to suppress the traffic or stop intemperance.

The vigorous efforts which have advanced the cause to its present high position, must still be employed to retain its influence, and secure its further progress. Let us not allow the flood-gates again to be thrown open, inviting back the ruin and the scourge of former years.

A DRUNKARD ON FIRE.

Dr. Nott, in his lectures, gives the following account of a young man about twenty-five years of age:—

"He had been a habitual drinker for many years. I saw him about 9 o'clock on the evening on which it happened; he was then, as usual, not drunk, but full of liquor. About 11 o'clock the same evening, I was called in to see him. I found him literally roasted, from the crown of his head to the soles of his feet. He was found in a blacksmith's shop, just across from where he had been. The owner, all of a sudden, discovered an extensive light in his shop, as though the building was one general flame. He ran with the greatest precipitancy, and on throwing open the door, discovered a man standing in the midst of a widely-extended, silver-coloured flame, bearing, as he described it, exactly the appearance of the wick of a burning candle in its own flame. He seized him (the drunkard) by the shoulders, and jerked him to the door, upon which the blaze was instantly extinguished. There was no fire in the shop, neither was there any possibility of any external source. It was purely a case of spontaneous ignition. A general sloughing soon came on, and his flesh was consumed or removed in the dressing, leaving the bones, and a few of the larger blood-vessels; the blood, nevertheless, rallied round the heart, and maintained the vital spark until the thirteenth day, when he died, not only the most loathsome, ill-featured, and dreadful picture that ever was presented to human view, but his shrieks, his groans, and his lamentations also, were enough to rend a heart of adamant. He complained of no pain of body; his flesh was gone. He said he was suffering the torments of hell, that he was just upon the threshold, and should soon enter its dismal cavern; and in this frame of mind he gave up the ghost."

THE WORLD AHEAD OF THE CHURCH.

The following extract is from an excellent article in the New York Evangelist.

To the shame of the church it must be spoken, the foremost men in some of our philanthropic movements, in the interpretation of the spirit of the age, in the practical applications of Christianity, in the reformation of abuses, in the vindication of the rights of man, are men who make no profession, and whom we have no reason to believe to be experimentally acquainted with Christianity. The Church has pusillanimously left not only the working oar, but the very reigns of certain necessary reforms of the day in the hands of men, who if not before inimical to Christianity, will be made so by Christianity's neglect of what is its proper mission to look after. They are doing practically with all their might for humanity's sake, what the church ought to be doing as heartily, through its ministry and representative men, for Christ's sake.

And if they succeed, as succeed they will, in abolishing slavery, in banishing intemperance, in killing war, in restraining licentiousness, in reforming social abuses, then the recoil upon christianity, the antagonist reaction from these christianized sensibilities upon the cause of religion itself, will be disastrous in the extreme.

Wo be to religion when irreligious men, by force of nature, or the tendency of the age, get ahead of the church in morals, and in the practical work of christianity. In some instances they are already a long way ahead. And we might specify individuals and journals in this country that are before the recognized organs of the church, in the advocacy of truth and righteousness and liberty. It would be difficult to say whether there is the more disgrace or danger in a fact like this.

We learn from the Scriptures, and it is a little remarkable that it is the only exact definition of religion found in the sacred volume, that pure religion, and undefiled before God, even the Father, is this, to visit the fatherless and widows in their affliction and to keep one's self unspotted from the world. Look not every man on his own things, but every man also on the things of others. Remember them that are in bonds as bound with them; whatsoever ye would that others should do to you, do ye even so to them.

AN UNGODLY MINISTER.

Ah! how awful is the thought!—a man sent to show to others the way to heaven, while he himself all the while is walking in the way to hell!—An ambassador of Christ, in whose heart Satan is enthroned!—A watchman, in unholy alliance with the enemy!—A man, in point of privilege and office, exalted to heaven, yet brought down to hell! Fathers and brethren, who bear the sacred office of the ministry, suffer the word of exhortation. A worldly, wicked, ungodly minister, is a moral monster,—the church's curse;—the living image of Satan when he transforms himself into an angel of light; and if joy could be felt in hell, it would be felt when such a man intrudes upon the high vocation. And the divinely-attested fact, that such a man once held it, should lead all who hold it to the closest self-scrutiny. Think of a minister, with all his opportunities of knowledge and of usefulness,—with all his seasons of devotion;—a man whose very business is connected with religion, and whose hourly pursuits are, or ought to be, such as others can only occasionally enjoy;—think of such a man testifying what he knows not, and speaking of what he has never realised or enjoyed,—an Achan in the camp,—a Judas among the twelve! Trace him to his death-bed; he looks back, all is comfortless! forward—all is despair! He cannot say, "This is our rejoicing, the testimony of our conscience, that in implicit and godly sincerity, not with fleshly wisdom, but by the grace of God, we have had our conversation in the world." The words, joyful to others, ring as the sentence of damnation in his ears,—“Give an account of thy stewardship;” and this will form one of the bitterest ingredients in his exhaustless cup of misery, that he held the torch to illuminate the pathway of others, and never felt its genial warmth, or was illumined by its cheering ray. Let us, my dear fathers and brethren, imitate another apostle, who said, “I therefore so run, not as uncertainly; so fight I, not as one that beatech the air; but I keep under my body, and bring it into subjection; lest that by any means, when I have preached to others, I myself should be a castaway.”

* * * Our readers may better conceive than we can express our feelings, on receiving the above extract from a Sermon, it seems, on the Death of Judas, preached twenty-four years ago, in Dublin, by a Presbyterian minister then respectable and popular, but now—utterly undone by strong drink! Little does our correspondent seem to have dreamed that the author of the awful picture he has sent us, has himself supplied, in his own person, an awful illustration! We were ignorant of the passage as our correspondent seems to have been of the author; but the providence of God has, by him and us, brought them thus together. May he in mercy render the dread fact a useful lesson to all his servants.—EDITOR, Christian Witness.

Extract from the Life of BENJAMIN DELESSERT, the founder of Savings' Banks at Paris, translated from the journal “De la Société, de la Moralle Chrétienne,” for July, 1847, p. 23:—

“Good measures operate with less promptitude than evil. The lower classes abandon themselves to excess with a deplorable facility; but great efforts are always necessary to change the manners, and uproot pernicious habits. Restless and suspicious, the people often look upon the benefits offered to them as snares; they resist a certain time, even against evidence. The owners of drinking houses looked with alarm on an institution, the vowed object of which was to reform the drunkard, would spoil their profits: they made a fierce resistance. The Savings' Banks had to contend against adversaries certainly not respectable, but having a strong hold on the people.”

DRINKING AND PAUPERISM.

A gentleman of Sunderland very recently told me, that he had been a Poor-law guardian seven years, and that having heard a great deal of the efforts made for the suppression of the drinking practices so generally prevalent, and of the improvements which these efforts had produced in the character and condition of the people, he was anxious to ascertain for himself how far these assertions were borne out. For this purpose, he made a point during three months of making himself acquainted with the history of every individual applying to the board of guardians for relief. And during the whole three months, (said this gentleman,) I never met with a solitary instance of an abstainer making an application.”—From The Model Parish.

* A publication forwarded to the National Temperance Society, from Paris, monthly.

[On careful investigation, it will be found that national idleness and poverty have been the uniform concomitants of free indulgence in the use of intoxicating liquor. The injurious effects of intemperance on industry were found by the Parliamentary investigation, which took place a few years ago, to be the “extinction of dispositions for practising any useful art or industrious occupation.” Such, indeed, will be found to be the universal tendency of this vice.—Bristol Herald.]

LIFE ASSURANCE.

WORSE THAN AN INFIDEL.—It is something more than wrong, it is criminal, for men with families dependent upon their labour for the means of existence to neglect the benefits of life insurance. We know of a man who died a few days ago in this city, leaving four young orphans without a dollar in the world, and not money enough to pay for his shroud. This man was a daily operator in stocks, in Wells-street, and had formerly been in easy circumstances. What a pity he had not been wise, and provident enough to have laid aside one shilling a-day for life insurance, which would have secured to his children the sum of 5000 dollars at his death. He that provides not for his own family is worse than an infidel.—New York Evening Mirror.

[We regret that there is so much practical infidelity in this city (Bristol) on this important subject, even among teetotalers, from whom better things should be expected. We hope that the foregoing remarks of our American contemporary will have a salutary influence upon all those who have hitherto neglected their duty in this respect.—Editor Bristol Herald.]

WHAT THE WESLEYANS COULD DO!

A correspondent of the Wesleyan, who supposes 1s. per week to be spent by the members of the Wesleyan Society, on the average, in intoxicating drinks, makes the following calculations, shewing what might be accomplished by abstinence, in seven years:—

470,000 members, at 1s. per week, is	£23,500
In one year	1,222,000
In seven years	8,554,000

This amount, he calculates, would provide for the spiritual wants of mankind to the following extent:—

1,000 chapels at £3,000. each ..	£3,000,000
5,000 preachers at £250. each ..	1,250,000
5,000 schools at £500. each ..	2,500,000
5,000 schoolmasters and assistants to missionaries, &c. at £100. each	500,000
20,000,000 bibles and general school books at 1s. each	1,000,000
3,000 missionaries' schoolmasters' outfit at £100. each ..	300,000

£8,550,000

Leaving a balance in favour to the amount of 4,000

Let your school education be ever so excellent, what can a few hours a day do, in counteracting the pernicious influences which must ever be at work under the drunken parent's roof! Can any discipline be more deplorable!—Prize Essay on Juvenile Delinquency, by THOMAS BEGGS.

National Temperance Society.

OFFICE 11, TOKENHOUSE YARD.

VICE-PRESIDENTS.

The EARL of ARUNDEL and SURREY, M.P.
Sir Wilfrid Lawson, Bart.

- | | |
|---------------------------------|---------------------------|
| R. D. Alexander, Esq. | Rev. Theobald Mathew. |
| J. B. Bassett, Esq. | W. J. Morgan, A.M., M.D. |
| Thomas Beaumont, Esq. | Richard Meek, Esq. |
| C. Bowly, Esq. | Rev. P. Penson, M.A. |
| Samuel Bowly, Esq. | Rev. W. Reid. |
| J. S. Buckingham, Esq. | Rev. W. W. Robinson, M.A. |
| Robert Charleton, Esq. | Rev. J. Sherman. |
| Rev. R. Clowes, M.A. | Rev. C. Stovel. |
| Joseph Paton, Esq. | Rev. T. Spencer, A. M. |
| J. Forbes, M.D., F.R.S., &c.&c. | Joseph Sturge, Esq. |
| S. C. Hall, Esq., B.L., F.S.A. | Rev. W. H. Turner, M.A. |
| Lawrence Deacon Jeffreys. | Edward Thomas, Esq. |
| William Janon, Esq. | Robert Warner, Esq. |
| Ven. Archdeacon Jeffreys. | Edward Webb, Esq. |
| G. S. Kenrick, Esq. | Rev. J. Wilson. |

TREASURER.

G. W. Alexander, Esq., 40, Lombard Street.

CHAIRMAN OF THE COMMITTEE.
William Cash, Esq., Peckham Rye.
EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE.

- | | |
|-------------------|--------------------|
| G. W. Alexander. | Charles Gilpin. |
| George W. Atwood. | Richard Hicks. |
| Richard Barrett. | C. H. Lovell, M.D. |
| Jabez Burns, D.D. | John Meredith. |
| William Cabell. | W. W. Robinson. |
| William Cash. | T. B. Scutt. |
| John Cassell. | |

SUPERINTENDENT OF MISSION.
John Meredith.

SECRETARY.
Thomas Beggs.

NATIONAL TEMPERANCE SOCIETY.

The Committee, some months ago, issued an appeal on behalf of funds to support a series of efforts in contemplation. In consequence of the distress in Ireland, and other causes, this appeal was only attended with very partial success. The heavy visitation which has passed over us, is another argument, however, in favour of increased exertions in behalf of the temperance cause. Every consideration of sound policy calls upon them to oppose a system which is wasting the food of the people, and spreading abroad the seeds of crime, poverty, disease, and irreligion. In order to make efforts commensurate with the greatness of their object, the Committee must have placed at their disposal much larger funds. Applications are being continually made to them for assistance they are unable to render, and fields of usefulness are left uncultivated for want of means. They have resolved to resume their application, and to make an energetic attempt to raise up the fund of £5000, originally proposed, and which was stated as necessary to sustain the Society's operations for the years 1847-8-9. In order to do this effectually, they have engaged four agents, who, in addition to public lecturing on the principles of the temperance reformation, will be employed in collecting funds. The following gentlemen are engaged as collecting agents:—

- Mr. Thomas Whittaker,
- Jabez Inwards,
- Thomas Hudson,
- William Culverwell.

The Committee trust that the temperance body will support their efforts to spread the principles of temperance, and place the Society in a position to make greater exertions than ever to destroy the drinking system.

SUBSCRIPTIONS.

£ s. d.		£ s. d.
Andrews, Mr. W.	0 5 0	Hornbuckle, Rev.	1 0 0
Arphor, Mr.	d. 0 5 0	W. T.	1 0 0
Bass, Mr. D.	d. 0 2 6	Horsleydown Collec.	6 9 4
Bow Society	0 5 0	Hunt, Mr. Georced.	0 5 0
Beccles Society	1 10 0	Harrill, Mr. F.	0 5 0
Bousfield, Mr. R. d.	0 10 0	Harrison, Rev. J. N.	1 0 0
Bailey, Mr. John	0 5 0	Joy, Mr. James	0 5 0
Bowly, D., Esq.	2 0 0	Johnson, Mr.	1 0 0
Brookes, S., Esq.	1 0 0	Jull, Mr. W.	1 0 0
Clarke, Mr. E.	d. 0 5 0	Kinghorn, Mr.	0 10 0
Clarke, E., Esq.	1 1 0	Lawley, Mr. W. d.	0 10 0
Dodd, Mr. T. C.	0 5 0	Marsh, R., Esq.	1 1 0
Fitzroy Society	d. 1 0 0	Maidstone Society	1 10 0
Friend	d. 0 2 6	Sims, W., Esq.	1 1 0
Do.	d. 0 1 0	Staines Society	d. 1 0 0
Do.	d. 0 1 0	Tanner, Mr. W. T. d.	0 5 0
Grant, Mrs. Hannah	5 0 0	Tisdall, Mr.	1 1 0
Glass, Mr. Joseph	1 1 0	Wilson, Mr.	1 1 0
Greayer, Mr. W. S., jun.	5 0 0	Wild, Mrs., & family	1 0 0
Gloucester Society	1 0 0	Wyles, Mr. Thos.	0 10 0
Hill, Mr.	1 0 0	Webb, Mr.	d. 0 2 6
Hawkins, J., Esq.	1 1 0	Young, John, Esq.	2 0 0

SPECIAL FUND.

A. N. £50 0 0

BRUNSWICK.

To the Committee of the National Temperance Society.

Honoured Brother Associationists,—

We have the honour to inform you, that the third general meeting of the German Associations against spirit drinking, will take place at Brunswick, on the 4th, 5th, and 6th October next, and invite you to this assembly to honour it with your presence, and to send deputies of the associations of your country here, and also to make known in our name in all your total abstinence papers an invitation.

1st. The Members of the Association will meet in Brunswick, on the 2nd October, at the Hotel d'Angle terre, to hear from the private State-Chancellor Pirscher further particulars; also about lodgings, &c., &c.

2nd. In the afternoon, at 2 o'clock, on the 3rd October, a sermon will be preached in the Brother's Church.

3rd. On the 4th, 5th, and 6th, the business of the Association will commence at 9 o'clock in the morning and end at 2 o'clock in the afternoon, each day.

4th. On the last day, after business is concluded there will be a meeting of the members to dinner.

We have been deputed to inform you, that Pastor Böttcher sends his heartfelt brotherly greeting to you and our friends; at the same time, we beg your usual courtesy and friendship.

Brunswick, 1st Aug., 1847.

The Association against brandy drinking in Brunswick.

By order,
(signed) D. PIRSCHER.

Lachmann.

WESLEYAN CONFERENCE.

The following was circulated among the members of the Wesleyan Conference, during its sittings we believe, by the British Association:—

REV. SIR,—The following extract from a work entitled "Practical Considerations on the Christian Sabbath," by the Rev. P. M'OWAN, is respectfully submitted to your serious consideration:

"It strikes us as a remarkable fact, that what is commonly regarded as flagrant breaches of the Sabbath, the sale of spirituous liquors is scarcely reckoned a sin. In London, porter is openly hawked about the streets; and those families are thought excessively precise who do not take it on the Lord's Day. In the country, public-house keepers who will not entertain company, nor sell spirits, are spoken of as paragons of goodness. How comes this about? How is this lenity to this most pernicious practice to be accounted for? In our opinion, those who retail spirituous liquors on this day, and who afford harbour to the sons and daughters of dissipation, are pre-eminently guilty. They not only neglect the means of grace themselves, but they furnish that which unfits and indisposes others for worshipping God, either in public or private. They poison and pauperize the working classes by wholesale. They are factors for the devil, and a curse to our nation. Though it may be an equal sin in the sight of God, it would be far less injurious to society, were the mason to take his plummet, his trowel, and his other implements, and proceed with the building he had been erecting the preceding week. There is a woe recorded against the man who giveth his neighbour drink, that putteth his bottle to him, and maketh him drunken; but a tenfold woe shall be the portion of those who make a trade of this practice on the holy Sabbath."

Liverpool, August, 1847.

HER MAJESTY'S BENEVOLENCE.

We are gratified to find that Her Majesty's benevolence has just been exerted in two instances that are calculated to afford very great satisfaction to the country. The first is the conferring of a pension of £300 a year on the REV. THEOBALD MATHEW, in consideration of the sacrifices he has made in the promotion of temperance, and the services he has thus rendered to the poorer classes. The second generous grant from the civil list is a pension of £200 for life to Mr. Leigh Hunt, in consideration of his contributions to English literature.—Morning Chronicle, June 28th.

SUGAR USED IN DISTILLERIES.

3,477,453 lbs. of sugar were used by licensed brewers in the United Kingdom, from the passing of the Act 10th Victoria, cap. 5, to the 5th of July last. The quantity of sugar taken into stock by distillers, during the same period, amounted to 11,419 cwt.; the quantity actually conveyed to the mash tun, to 10,026 cwt.; the quantity of proof spirits made therefrom, to 105,165 gallons; the average produce of gallons of spirits per cwt. of sugar, to 10.49; and the total amount of drawback allowed on such spirits, to £5,867.—Times, Wednesday, Aug. 18.

THE PULPIT.

Is my reader one who ministers in holy things? I would respectfully suggest that your responsibility is great if you refuse to enlist in this cause. Your position places you as the leader of moral and religious enterprises, and your course will influence many minds. The cause has been much staid, and is now impeded, for the want of the hearty co-operation of a few of our clergy; and because the pulpit of some of the best friends of the cause has been too long silent. Unless sustained at the altar of God, I have no hope for the perpetuity of this institution, or the continued blessing of the Almighty upon its efforts. Here it began as a specific movement—here it belongs; and from this source of every moral enterprise it may not be disconnected.—Dr. Clark's Prize Essay.

Home Intelligence.

MISSIONARY LABOURS.

While journeying from Dorking to Betchworth, the missionary met with T. C. He was spoken to. In reply, he said he had been a teetotaler two years and eight months, and was never so well in his life. The missionary asked him what induced him to break his pledge—he replied bad company. He had a good situation at Mr. Peto's, and was earning good wages, and at that time he had a good suit of clothes, a watch in his pocket, and plenty of money, which were very soon exhausted in drink and bad company. He said this happened three years ago, and he had done no good since he broke his pledge. His father got tired of his conduct (who he said had been a teetotaler for thirteen years) and went to America out of his way, and has never written to let him know where he is.

This young man appeared to suffer remorse, and as if self-convicted, said he wished he had continued a teetotaler, it would have been a very great deal better for him, for he knew not where to go nor what to do. He was advised to try again, and ask for divine aid to keep him from falling. He replied I will take your advice. He then resigned the pledge.

While passing through Betchworth, met with T. W., a drunkard, who looked very badly. His face was bruised, and he had a black eye. In his reply to the missionary, he said that such was the nature of beer and ale, that after he had taken one pint, he was sure to want another directly afterwards, and in consequence of this, he had often become intoxicated, which he knew was debilitating his constitution very much. It would be a great thing for him he added, if he could but make up his mind never to take any intoxicating drinks again. He said I can assure you my wife would like it much, for she has often endeavoured to persuade me to become a teetotaler. The missionary gave him advice as to the best means of carrying out the principle. He consented to give teetotalism a trial, and signed.

This man is related to a family who has been notorious for drunkenness for many years.

W. STONEMAN.

SUMMARY.

Drunkards spoken to	4
Farm labourers addressed	358
Drunkards visited	5
Families	137
Day schools	2
Infant	1
Railways	2
Revisits, families	416
	225

RESULTS.

Signatures, drunkards	1
Resignatures	1
Signatures, others	4

METROPOLITAN.—PUBLIC MEETINGS.

Special meetings of a highly interesting character, in connexion with the National Society, have been held, at which deputations have attended. The attendance has in every instance been large and respectable, and a powerful impression for good has been left on the several audiences addressed. The labours of the agents have been chiefly confined to the metropolis and its environs. A few meetings, however, have been held elsewhere.

On July 20th, a festival was held at Maidstone, at which Mr. Jabez Inwards attended: a meeting at Barning was also attended by the same speaker, on the following day.

July 22nd, Messrs. Hudson and Whitaker delivered addresses in the School-room, Grosvenor Street Chapel, to a very large and respectable congregation.

Another meeting, under the auspices of the Fitzroy Association, was held in the Rev. Dr. Archer's Chapel, Oxendon Street; Mr. Whitaker presided, and Mr. Thomas Beggs, and Mr. Thomas Hudson, delivered very effective speeches.

A festival was held at Staines on the 26th, Mr. Thomas Whitaker attended on behalf of the National Society.

On the same day, Mr. Thomas Hudson, with Dr. Oxley, Messrs. J. W. Green, Mann, Spriggs, and Mr. McBain, delivered addresses in the Farringdon Hall, on which occasion a memorial to the Wesleyan Conference was unanimously adopted and signed by the chairman of the meeting, James Silk Buckingham, Esq.

On the 26th and 27th, Mr. Jabez Inwards held meetings at Beccles, (Suffolk) which were of a highly satisfactory character.

On the 27th also, a large meeting was held at Harp Alley, Farringdon Street, under the presidency of Mr. James Buckle. Messrs. Whitaker, and Hudson, delivered addresses on the occasion.

On the 29th, Mr. Thomas Hudson and Mr. Whitaker, attended at Fair Street, Horsleydown, where a large meeting provided by the Catholic Society, was convened, over which Mr. Williams presided.

On Monday, August 2nd, a temperance gala took place at Leighton Buzzard, on which occasion not fewer than two thousand persons were present. A public tea party was held in a well erected tent, and about six hundred persons partook of a well provided repast. In the afternoon and evening, addresses were severally delivered by Mr. Bearn of Wellingborough, Mr. Plato of Chesham, Rev. J. Hirvons of Luton, J. D. Bassett, Esq., and Messrs. Beggs, Hudson, Whitaker, and Culverwell, as deputation from the National Society.

On the following day, a public meeting took place at 5 o'clock, at the White Cross, Leighton, when the electors of Bedford were addressed by Mr. Hudson and Mr. Whitaker, on the purity of election in connexion with temperance principles. The day was closed by a meeting at the beautiful Temperance Hall of that town, J. D. Bassett, Esq., presided on the occasion, and effective speeches were given by Messrs. Whitaker, Culverwell, Hudson, and Inwards. Meetings of a no less interesting and influential kind, have taken place at Stoke Newington, Bishopsgate Street Chapel, Suffolk Street, Carlisle Street, and Wardour Street Chapels, and in each case addressed by the deputation. At the close of the meetings, signatures have been obtained and subscriptions handed in, which we hope will continue to augment, so that the committee may have it in their power to extend their operations.

COST OF CRIME.—The procurator Fiscal, of Stranraer, stated at a late meeting that there were single individuals in that place, notorious offenders, who had cost the country hundreds of pounds each, —and one family could not have cost the public less than £1,000.—Daily News.

TEMPERANCE GALA, LEIGHTON BUZZARD.

On the 2nd of August, the teetotalers of Leighton determined on celebrating the triumphs of their principle, by holding a temperance gala. The day was delightful. A deputation from the National Temperance Society, consisting of Messrs. Beggs, Hudson, Culverwell, and Whitaker attended.

At two o'clock, a public meeting took place in a large tent erected for the occasion; Mr. Bearn, a good man and true, from Wellingborough, presided. The meeting was addressed by Mr. Plato, of Chesham, an agricultural labourer from the neighbourhood, and Mr. Whitaker, of London.

At four o'clock, the tent was cleared for the tea, of which six hundred partook. By this time, there must have been near two thousand persons from the town and neighbourhood collected together, scarcely a family in Leighton but was represented; many of them of the highest respectability, and there was written upon every countenance, without the aid of intoxicating liquors, rational enjoyment. Amongst the rest, we noticed that good and worthy man, the Rev. J. Wilson, Curate of Leighton, and a decided teetotaler, smiling satisfaction at the scene.

At six o'clock, a waggon was drawn up to a convenient part of the grounds, preparatory to our second public meeting. J. D. Bassett, Esq., was appointed chairman. The meeting was addressed by Mr. T. Beggs (secretary to the National Temperance Society), Mr. Hudson, Mr. Culverwell, the Rev. Mr. Hiron, of Leighton, and Mr. Plato. The speeches were alternately listened to, and apparently produced an excellent impression.

The day finished with an address from Mr. Whitaker in the large tent. The speakers and speeches were worthy of the people, and the people worthy of the speakers and speeches. It was blessed to give and blessed to receive, and all were doubly blessed.

At eight o'clock the grounds were cleared; everybody seemed pleased, and we trust many were profited. And thus ended one of the brightest and best days we have ever had. Great praise is due to the managers for their admirable arrangements.

W.

ASPLEY GUISE DEMONSTRATION.

On Monday and Tuesday, the 26th and 27th of July, a temperance fête was held at Aspley Guise. The friends of temperance are indebted to the activity and devotedness of that warm hearted man, Mr. G. F. Arnold, for this annual treat, which under his auspices has not only been made a holiday, but has administered to the mental and moral improvement of the people. The weather was delightful. Various recreations were provided for the young; and tea was got up in a very superior style, in a spacious tent, fitted up for the occasion—a band playing favourite airs during the time—after which a meeting was held. On Monday, Mr. Bearn of Wellingborough, who with his excellent lady had driven over to partake of the festivities of the occasion, presided, and the large assembly was addressed by Mr. M. Hart of London, and the Rev. Enoch Mellor. On Tuesday, Mr. Bearn again took the chair; and the Rev. E. Mellor addressed the meeting. His subject was the perfect harmony of teetotalism with religion, in answer to the objection started by the Evangelical Alliance. In a speech remarkable for great clearness of argument, and happiness of illustration, he dwelt on the simplicity and beauty of the temperance principle, and that peace and happiness were its natural results. Mr. Beggs, Secretary of the National Temperance Society, followed. He brought a great many facts to prove that the drinking system had produced ignorance, wretchedness, crime, and poverty, and that the principle of temperance had produced directly the converse of this. Mr. Robert Gamble of Berkhamstead followed, and thus concluded this highly interesting celebration. Too much importance cannot be attached to these rural fêtes. They afford a proof that the highest enjoyment may be attained without intoxicating drinks. They are looked forward to by a great number as a feast or a fair once was, and they cultivate the social feelings. Mr. Arnold, who has made great sacrifices to accomplish this good end, has afforded a most worthy example to all who wish to improve the social habits of the people.

THE EXETER TEMPERANCE SOCIETY.

The teetotalers had their pic-nic, on Monday, at Luscombe, the seat of Charles Hoare, Esq. The tables and seats were fixed at the top of Beech Grove, where there is a commanding view of the delightful and picturesque vale of Dawlish, and an extensive one of the sea.

From this enchanting spot, this lovely ground, What pleasing landscapes charm the eye around.

The company arrived about half after three, headed by their temperance band, and halted to the left of the mulberry tree, where they had a fine view of that remarkable and beautiful tree, the old drooping elm, which is so much admired by all visitors; they then went directly to the front of the house, where the bands played to the delight of the ladies. Mr. Hoare was wheeled in his chair into the library to see them; the venerable and excellent gentleman seemed highly delighted; he certainly is the picture of a fine old English gentleman. The company then went on the south front to the end of the roseary, up across a very steep hill, (for want of a guide) to Beech Grove, opposite to Woodbrook Cottage, the residence of Mr. Saunders, the steward, where are to be seen growing in the open air, without any artificial heat or glass, the lemon and shaddock, nearly ripe on that elevated situation so near Haldon. The company, about 2000, arranged themselves in parties, took tea, &c., which was delayed some time, for want of boiling water. Among the company to see them, was noticed, Lady Mallett Vaughan, Mrs. Hoare, Mrs. Pennyman, Miss Campbell, Miss L. Hoare, the Miss Blencowes, Mrs. Parr and family, Mrs. Manning, Rev. — Clarke, Mrs. Roebuck, &c., &c., &c. They came back in front of the drawing-room and library, where the dancing was renewed, till the train approached. The sax-horn band played the national anthem. The whole company then gave three honest hearty cheers, each for Mr. Hoare, Mrs. Hoare, Mrs. Pennyman, Miss Campbell, and Miss Laura Hoare, and then left, highly delighted with their excursion, and with grateful feelings to the kind and benevolent persons who had afforded them so favourable a treat. It is to be regretted that they had not more time to have strolled about and seen the terrace walk, plantations and American garden, where the majestic cedars are to be seen, some of which are about sixty feet high, and ten feet in circumference, and all planted since Mr. Hoare purchased Luscombe.

Threepence each was demanded of all who entered the grounds, and were not able to prove their identity with the festival, by showing the Train Ticket. Mrs. Hoare herself was denied admittance!! and compelled to pay, through the mistake of the gate keeper—her own people being absent—a mischance which the excellent lady enjoyed as a good jest.—Western Times.

HULL TEMPERANCE SOCIETY GALA.

The annual gala of this long-established society was held in the Zoological Gardens on Monday last. At two o'clock, the Bramley brass band, the members of which came with the monster train from Leeds, paraded the town, after which they proceeded to the gardens, where they performed many difficult pieces of music in a very masterly style. The company in the gardens was one of the happiest festive assemblies in the world, comprising individuals of all ages. The gardens, which are now in a most delightful state of cultivation, excited of themselves feelings of gratification and pleasure, and besides the usual attractions of botany, zoology, &c., &c., there were others of a not less pleasing and intellectualising character. Addresses were delivered by Dr. Firth, on "The Rise and Progress of the Temperance Cause;" by the Rev. T. J. Messer, on "The injury done to the movement by Sectarianism;" and by Mr. W. Clark, on "The folly of those who introduce political matters into temperance meetings," which addresses were attentively listened to by most of those present. The majority indulged in various rural sports. The pyrotechnical exhibition, at the close of the day's festivities, was admirably managed, and elicited very warm applause. Every effort was made by the managers to promote the happiness of their numerous visitors, and by half-past nine the gardens were cleared of a company, all of whom appeared to be highly gratified with the amusements afforded them.—Hull Advertiser.

GLAMORGAN AND MONMOUTH TEMPERANCE ASSOCIATION.

The annual meeting of this association was held at Newbridge, on July 29th and 30th, 1847. The first meeting was held at 7 o'clock in the Calvinistic Methodist Chapel, Mr. Watkins of Merthyr, in the absence of G. S. Kenrick, Esq., occupied the chair. After a brief but appropriate address, he called upon the Rev. Mr. Williams, Independent Minister, Hirwain, who spoke with good effect in the Welch language, and was followed by Mr. Fliun, agent of the Central Temperance Association, in an excellent and animated address. After which, the Rev. Mr. Davies, Baptist Minister, Swansea, wound up the evening's proceedings, in an excellent and lively address in Welch; when, after some delightful singing from choir, signatures were obtained, and the meeting adjourned until 10 o'clock the following morning. The adjourned meeting was held at the Independent Chapel, G. S. Kenrick, Esq., in the chair, who opened the meeting in an able speech. The Rev. Mr. Edwards, Independent Minister, Aberdare; Mr. Watkins, Merthyr; Rev. Mr. Rowlands, Wesleyan Minister, Tredegar; and Mr. Fliun, addressed the meeting, when a further adjournment took place, until 2 o'clock, at the Baptist Chapel. The people were addressed by G. S. Kenrick, Esq.; the Rev. Mr. Thomas, Independent Minister, Glyn Neath; Mr. R. Lewis, Merthyr; and Rev. Mr. Davis, Swansea. A vote of thanks was unanimously passed to the Chairman, when a final adjournment took place until six o'clock, at the large Calvinistic Methodist Chapel, which was densely crowded, even to the graveyard railing. Mr. Jones, of Newbridge, briefly opened the meeting. After which, the Rev. Mr. Rowlands, Tredegar, addressed a few practical remarks; the principal speakers were Mr. Flinn, and the Rev. Mr. Davis, Swansea. A more glorious meeting could not be held, the speeches were excellent; all was animation and joy. 24 persons signed the pledge.

Merthyr Tydfil, Aug. 9th, 1847. B. HOWELLS.

PUNTON, WILTS.

August 24.—A very interesting open air meeting was held at Punton, Wilts, the first ever held there. The chair was taken by Samuel Sadler, Esq., a magistrate, who, after a few appropriate remarks, introduced Samuel Bowly of Gloucester, who gave a clear and forcible statement of our principles, backed by powerful arguments thoroughly adapted to his hearers. Mr. Flinn, from the Central Association, followed with an eloquent appeal to the working classes to leave off their drinking habits, and raise themselves to cultivate the social and moral duties of man. The people were very attentive, and the interest of the meeting well kept up till nine o'clock. Many respectable gentlemen from the neighbourhood were present, who appear very friendly to our cause, and who seem able to say, "almost thou persuadest me," but whose habits of life cling too closely to them to be able to throw them off entirely.

TEMPERANCE SOIREE.

(Abridged from the Derry Sentinel.)

On Tuesday evening, a tea party met in Corporation Hall, in compliment to the Rev. Theobald Mathew, of Cork, the celebrated advocate and missionary of temperance. An immense number of persons of both sexes attended. Alexander Lindsay, Esq., the Lord Mayor of Londonderry, presided.

When the tea equipage was removed, the Chairman after passing a glowing eulogium on Father Mathew, observed that the cause of temperance was one totally unconnected with party. They were met there on neutral ground. He then dilated on the happy effects of temperance, both in regard to nations and individuals, and expressed an assurance that they would preserve strict order throughout the proceedings.

In proposing "The health of Father Mathew," Mr. Lindsay warmly lauded his exertions, remarking that through the medium of temperance, he had regenerated the country, and entitled himself to the very highest rank amongst its most distinguished patriots.

The Rev. Mr. Mathew, in returning thanks, addressed the meeting at considerable length. He stated that the first deputation that waited upon him, after the commencement of his labours, came from Londonderry. They presented him with an address, signed by all the worth of Londonderry, and they were the first that encouraged him to pay a visit to Ulster. He did so, and since he had come into the province, nothing had ever occurred to him that could pain the most sensitive mind. He might adopt the words of our national poet, with a slight verbal alteration—

"Blessed for ever be the day I relid
On Ulster's honour and Ulster's pride."

He regretted that religion should cause men to be estranged from one another. In the sacred Scriptures, from Genesis to Revelation, the injunction of heaven was that they should love one another. He had himself never made a distinction on this account. He had never sent away the naked without clothing, or the hungry without food, because they differed from him in religion, and though he would sacrifice life itself for the doctrines and discipline of the church to which he belonged, he maintained, at the same time, the equal obligation of charity towards all mankind. He was delighted to find that this spirit had established itself in Londonderry—that they had a Mayor who afforded to it his countenance and encouragement—and that it was still likely to spread further under the auspices of his learned and excellent patron, the Roman Catholic Bishop of Derry. The Rev. gentleman proceeded to adduce some arguments in favour of temperance, and denied that there was anything political in the movement, asserting that he commenced it first with the Society of Friends, Presbyterians, and members of the Established Church. He then described the progress it had made, and said he had come to assail intemperance, in its stronghold—Ennishowen. Many who were able to resist the blandishments of champagne and claret, and port and sherry, fell victims to Ennishowen; but he saw before him an army of water-drinkers, who would soon drive the pale horse and his rider into the sea. In conclusion, he expressed his cordial gratitude to the Mayor and citizens of Londonderry.—(Cheers.)

Doctor Maginn then informed Father Mathew that teetotalism was no new thing, as he supposed, for it was advocated and practised by one of the most illustrious philosophers of antiquity, Pythagoras. He then took a discursive review of the evils of intemperance, as exhibited among ancient nations, from Babylon down to the last days of the Roman empire. Babylon, he said, was founded by one who though not temperate in all his pursuits, yet abstained from intoxicating drinks. Babylon fell before the battering rams of Cyrus, the abstemious and frugal Persian, at a time when its last sovereign was indulging with his eunuchs in a debauch. He then related the anecdote about the Spartans making their slaves drunk, and causing their children to point the finger of scorn at them while in that state, to inspire their offspring with the horror of intemperance. Passing from the Lacedæmonian to Hannibal, who was, like himself, a Celt, borne somewhere near the Caspian Sea, he alluded to the famous achievement of the Carthaginian general dividing the Alps, not with kegs of Ennishowen, but of vinegar, but who "buried the germs of his glory" in the "shobee-houses" of Capua. The right rev. speaker concluded, by treating his hearers to a chapter from Roman history descriptive of the infamous debaucheries of Heliogabalus. He attributed the downfall of Rome to the intemperance of its inhabitants, while its conquerors were the Goths and Vandals, the hardy water-drinking children of the Scandinavian forests. Abstinence, he argued, rendered men more fit for the discharge both of temporal and spiritual duties; and were it necessary to do battle for a nation's rights, there was not a general who would not rather have a sober than a drunken army. In conclusion, he alluded to the dissensions which had heretofore existed between Irishmen, of different parties and different religious persuasions. They reminded him of the fable he had met with, and some of those simple tales covered a beautiful truth. Some might give to what he was going to say a political meaning, but he cared not for that. It was the fable of the frog and the mouse contending for a plot of ground that might have grazed a bullock. They were foolishly quarrelling among themselves, the Roman Catholic with the Prentice Boy, and vice versa, about a country that was big enough for both of them to dwell in harmony. But they seemed to be growing wiser at last, and he trusted that the principles of love and charity by which the present meeting had been so remarkably characterised, would henceforth be adhered to without surrender. Were they oppressed, the frog had only to retire to his bulrushes, and the mouse to his hole, and they would be safe, but he knew no better ruler they could have than the present Queen Victoria. —(Cheers.) He stated that there were 30,000 teetotalers in Ennishowen, and not six of them had broken the pledge.

Dr. White, Government Inspector of Prisons. During little more than a week he had seen 1200 cases of fever, and 300 to 400 of insanity, and he could, from his own experience, corroborate all the statements of the previous speakers in reference to the happy effects of temperance in both classes of disease. From statistical records he could bear the strongest testimony to the fact, that drunkenness was one of the most fruitful sources of insanity, but that under the influence of Father Mathew's movement it was rapidly decreasing, while delirium tremens was now of rare occurrence. —(Cheers.) In regard to the prevailing epidemic, he could state that Father Mathew had taken the sting out of fever, as the present was, by no means, like the epidemic that formerly existed. The records of the city of Derry itself showed, that, out of 200 cases not more than one individual had died during the last month.—(Immense cheering.)

BRITISH LEAGUE OF JUVENILE ABSTAINERS.

Whilst in the metropolis we attended several meetings of the "Edinburgh Auxiliary of the British League of Juvenile Abstainers." This association, it may be proper to observe, has no connection whatever with the Scottish Temperance League; and as we have met with a number of individuals in England and Scotland ignorant on this point, we feel called upon, in justice to all parties, to state the simple fact. This juvenile movement commenced in October last, and about two thousand children have been enrolled members of the society. There are at present, above a dozen of weekly meetings held in various districts of the city, and the attendance is upwards of seven hundred. The majority of the meetings commence about six o'clock, and continue for an hour; and although each meeting is superintended by an adult, still the children conduct most of the business themselves. We questioned several of the young people privately respecting their knowledge of the abstinence principle, and in every instance we were highly gratified, and in two or three cases, astonished. On Saturday, the 3rd July, not less than twelve hundred of these young teetotalers visited the statuary on Calton Hill, and, after singing the hundredth psalm and two temperance melodies, they proceeded, in the most orderly manner, to the Royal Zoological Gardens, where they were regaled with excellent currant bread and spring water. After partaking of the refreshment, and singing two or three temperance pieces, the children dispersed for a little to view the various objects of interest in the gardens. Mr. Hope, we believe, enabled the committee to arrange in such a manner as that the children might enjoy themselves free of any expense whatever. Mr. James Ballantyne, Mr. P. Sinclair, and a few others, appeared to take the most active part in the day's proceedings. No man can calculate the amount of good which this and similar temperance movements is certain to accomplish amongst the rising generation. Every blessing rest and remain upon such efforts, whose object is to retain our boys and girls in the position in which an all-wise Creator placed them, respecting not only all intoxicating liquor—what shall we call it?—snuff and tobacco!—W. L., Scottish Temperance Review.

INTEMPERANCE ABROAD.

Rev. Mr. Pomeroy, of Maine, having recently travelled extensively in Europe and Asia Minor, makes some statements in relation to the drinking habits of the people, from which we compile the following interesting abstract:—In Scotland and England almost every body apparently drinks. The people of those countries drink brandy, rum, whisky, gin, wine, ale, porter, beer, and malt liquors of every description. The more wealthy classes generally drink wine. There are some temperance people, but on the railways, or in coaches, the traveller sees very few of them. Teetotalers are seldom met with. Ale and malt liquors are most generally used. In the places where these liquors are manufactured, you see chimneys which occupy a large portion of the building. There is an immense number of these buildings all over the island, as may be supposed, to supply the demand. A bonâ fide Englishman cannot eat his dinner without malt liquor. It is cheap—a pint can be had for a penny, and it is within reach of the poor. The effect is seen in the countenance of the consumer; it has a stupefying effect. One cannot go along the streets but he sees the effects of hard drinking.

In France, and through the north of Belgium, wine is used every where like water. On the continent wine glasses have disappeared, for the beverage is now drunk by the tumblerful. At table, every traveller has a full bottle placed by his plate. Other and stronger liquors are also used. As in England, the drunkenness is mostly out of sight. There is an armed police which takes every drunkard immediately into confinement. Intoxication is less prevalent in France, Italy, and Sicily, than in England or the United States, for the reason that most of the poorer classes use only weak wines, not stronger in intoxicating qualities than ordinary gin and root beer. They drink weak wine freely, and give it to their children, and even crumb bread into it, like our old-fashioned New-England way of eating "bread and cider."

In Italy, the people take no part in public affairs, are less excited, and there is less intoxication than elsewhere.

In Greece, drunkenness prevails to a greater extent. The people are more excitable, and love to indulge in every thing productive of excitement. In Athens, there are immense quantities of Jamaica and New-England rum; and so rapidly is its use extending, that it is difficult to see how the swelling tide of intemperance is to be arrested among a people of so great excitability, coupled with so little moral principle.

In Turkey, alcoholic drinks are used. New-England rum is frequently drunk at Constantinople, Smyrna, Beyrout, and other places.

The use of wine is prohibited in the Koran. Brandy, gin, New-England rum, and the like, are not, for the reason, probably, that they did not exist when that book was made. A Turk with an India-rubber countenance will say, "I do not find that brandy, or gin, or rum, is prohibited by the Koran, and I think I will take a little brandy." But the Turks, after all, are almost the only temperance men that are found in the East, except the Americans. "I recollect," says Mr. Pomeroy, "of being in a steamer on the Mediterranean, in which was a Turkish Effendi—a nobleman. All the passengers on board drank but him and myself. He was gratified to find that he had company, and by picking up a word of English here, and of French there, he succeeded in making known to me his satisfaction."

In the Greek, Nestorian, Armenian, and Coptic churches, wines and distilled liquors are drunk, and the people are suffering from the liquors carried from this country. Casks of New-England rum are found 1000 or 1500 miles from Smyrna, in the interior of the country, whither they have been conveyed on mules. The taste for this liquor is increasing in that part of the world, and there being no moral principle, men drink without shame.

The poor people of Turkey have not the means of buying this drink. No idea can be formed of the poverty of these people, or the oppressions of their government. But they have a kind of brandy called arrack, which is cheap and made by themselves, and from which they suffer more than from any other drink. The use of strong drink is evidently on the increase in Turkey by exportations from this country.

On the Continent of Europe, the Northern nations—the Danes, Russians, Norwegians, Swedes, and Dutch—are more accustomed to intoxicating liquors than the Southern. The most brutal kind of drunkenness is found among the Russians.

In relation to the use of intoxicating drinks by the clergymen of Europe, Mr. Pomeroy represents them to be precisely like their people. In England and Scotland there are few exceptions. In the Churches in England, there is a little vestry room near the pulpit, where the minister deposits his hat and cloak. When he goes in, the deacon whose duty it is, asks him if he will take some refreshment—that is, intoxicating drink—the same after service. This is the case also on the continent. The Protestant clergymen use less distilled liquor than wine.

Most of the wine sent to this country is spurious. Very little of it contains a particle of the juice of the grape. There are large manufactories of this drugged drink in Marseilles and other places. He was told in Italy, that in Mount Etna there was manufactured from the grape an excellent wine called Lachrymæ Christi—tears of Christ—but not half enough to supply the city of Naples; but several persons from different nations assured him that an article purporting to be that, could be found in any quantity in any city on the continent!

Such is a brief outline of the condition of the most important nations of the earth. It presents a deplorable picture. What a work is before us! How many millions are running after the maddening poison! How many nations are working out for themselves a terrible ordeal! Before the cause of temperance reform is fairly established in the old world, the peans of its final triumph may be sung in the new. The nations of Europe will undoubtedly sleep in drunken apathy till awakened by the swelling chorus coming over the billows of the Atlantic from millions of American voices. "We're free! We're free!" Let us wait patiently, while we work diligently for that day.

THE INTEMPERATE FEMALE.

There is yet another picture behind, from the exhibition of which I would willingly be spared. I have ventured to point to those who daily force themselves before the world, but there is one whom the world does not know of—who hides herself from prying eyes, even in the innermost sanctuary of the domestic temple. Shall I dare to rend the veil that hangs between, and draw her forth?—the sacrificer and the sacrifice?

O, we compass sea and land, we brave danger and death, to snatch the poor victim of heathen superstition from the burning pile—and it is well,—but shall we not also save the lovely ones of our own household, from immolating on this foul altar, not only the perishing body, but all the worshipped graces of her sex—the glorious attributes of hallowed womanhood!

Imagination's gloomiest reverie never conceived of a more revolting object, than that of a wife and mother, defiling in her own person the fairest work of her God, and setting at naught the holy engagements for which he created her.

Her husband—who shall heighten his joys, and dissipate his cares, and alleviate his sorrows?—She who has robbed him of all joy, who is the source of his deepest care, who lives his sharpest sorrow? These are indeed the wife's delights—but they are not hers.

Her children—who shall watch their budding virtues, and pluck up the young weeds of passion and vice? She in whose own bosom every thing beautiful has withered, every thing vile grows rank? Who shall teach them to bend their little knees in devotion, and repeat their Saviour's prayer against "temptation?" These are truly the mother's labours—but they are not hers. Connubial love and maternal tenderness bloom no longer for her. A worm has gnawed into her heart, that dies only with its prey—the worm, INTEMPERANCE.—Sprague's Address.

DISSIPATED BOYS.

There is not a more melancholy spectacle to our eye than a class of dissipated boys whom we frequently meet in our walks, who seem to pride themselves in throwing off all restraint, and indulging in smoking, drinking, and profane swearing. All this they consider to be manly, and a mark of something above the common herd, who are trained up in puritan habits. Some of these lads are sons of wealthy parents who have the means of giving them a good education; but that they despise. Some are sons of pious parents who would train them up in the service of God; but they say, "It is a vain thing to serve God." Some are sons of ingenious, industrious mechanics and manufacturers, who would give them a valuable trade, or place them at the head of some important establishment, but they seem determined that they will never be doomed to get their bread by the sweat of their brow; they learn the low, disgracing arts of trickery, and gambling, and fraud; and soon begin to believe that they shall always have money enough without such degrading employments. But it is but a little while we shall expect to see some of these lads caught in a spree, breaking windows, or insulting people in the street, and then comfortably lodging in a watch-house. Early drunkenness will be their portions, and before they are twenty or twenty-five, not a few of them will be tenants of the State prison. This assuredly will be their course, as that the sun rises and sets. There is no mistake about it.

And then the hearts of fathers and mothers will be broken. Sisters now doting upon them, will be ashamed, and partake of their disgrace, and what expiation can they make? What reparation for the mischief done? And how can they go back into reputable society, or find the means of support? From dissipation they go to crime; from crime to beggary; and from beggary to an early grave. Then they find that the way of the transgressor is hard, and O! with bitter tears do lament the folly which we now see, but which they so much affect to despise.

Literary Notices.

East Yorkshire Temperance Letter. Malton.—We have received the first six numbers of this excellent periodical. The editorial management seems judicious. A consideration is given to subjects closely allied with the temperance movement, in a free and candid spirit. We hope it will have an extensive circulation, as it cannot fail to do great good. At this stage of our progress we require an elevated literature, and therefore hail with satisfaction every attempt to improve it.

Joys and Sorrows; where to find, and how to exchange them. By the Authoress of Amy of the Peak. London: C. GILPIN. Post 8vo., pp. 136.

To those who are acquainted with the former work of this talented lady, this little volume will require no introduction. The reader will not expect flights of imagination, or displays of great erudition; but he will find a chastened fancy, much feeling, and, occasionally, a simple and genuine pathos, with unaffected and pleasing versification. The sentiments are unexceptionable: the authoress attaching great, and as we think proper, importance to the Temperance cause, has consecrated her talents to its vindication and diffusion. There is a deep moral in each of the pieces in this volume, and greater argumentation than is to be found usually in verse. The whole is pervaded by a subdued and unobtrusive piety, which adds greatly to the charm of the volume. We give our readers a specimen, not the best, but one best fitted for extract, and suitable to our space:—

No bold ambition did Jerusha feel:
'Twas Heav'n-born charity's seraphic zeal
That with its soft, resistless influence stole
The sword and shield from many a warring soul.
And there were sighs and gilt-betraying moans;
Fast trickling tears, and bosom-piercing groans,
When, on a sudden, fell her voice to say
"Your solemn vows oh drunkards! where are they?"
Where, WHERE are they who trusted when ye vow'd?
Is there a seer among this feeling crowd?
Tell me the story of my future life:
Say am I doom'd to be a drunkard's wife?
Shall I, your fervent suppliant here that stand,
Give to some dark deceiver this poor hand?

Shall these poor eyes that now for you o'erflow,
Fail with long weeping o'er experienc'd woe?
Shall this poor heart that feels your every groan,
In secret break o'er sorrows of its own?
And pining more for kindness than for bread,
Expect no tranquil rest but with the dead?
Can I bespeak, for time when this ye see,
One pitying sigh—one gen'rous tear for me?
Ah no! not from the bosoms that consign
To hard neglect as tender hearts as mine.
Did I not hear some friendly voice respond
'Heav'n keep thee, maiden, for a happier bond?'
Methinks such feelings many drunkards own:
Then show your kindness where it should be shown.
Go to your slighted partners—say ye there,
'Awake to hope, lorn captive of despair!
Queen of my drear domain—my storeless cot;
For thee to-morrow brings a happier lot:
If I forsake the haunts of mis'ry now
And seek for nobler pastime, say wilt thou
Resume the gentle tones of by-gone days,
And let the wife's surpass the maiden's ways?
No more thy spirit's recklessness declare
By dangling garments and dishevell'd hair.
Soon can thy care the charms of home restore,
And make our cot a pattern for the poor.
Then shall I find again my heart's desire
Where smile my own around the cheerful fire;
Searching with thee, (right thankful that I can)
Thro' volumes worthy of the thoughts of man.
With mind's improvement comfort shall increase,
And plenty keep our little ones in peace;
When to their gladden'd hearts it shall be shown,
We feel their welfare precious as our own:
And may our souls, long gloomy and forlorn,
Be happier yet than on our bridal morn.'

IPSWICH JUVENILE TEMPERANCE BOOKS.

In 32mo., illustrated with handsome woodcuts, in sixpenny packets, of glazed coloured paper.

	PAGES		PAGES
1. The History of Teetotalism	20	18. What Little Boys can do for Teetotalism ...	12
2. Scriptural Teetotalism	20	19. Little Mary	16
3. Teetotalism of Ancient History	20	20. Lucy Grey and her Pet Pigeon	8
4. Teetotalism of Modern History	20	21. What Little Girls can do for Teetotalism.....	12
5. The cost of Intemperance	20	22. Poor Little Willie.....	12
6. Self-denial	20	23. The Sixpenny Glass of Wine	12
7. Early Habits	20	24. The Town Meeting; or License or no License... 12
8. The Force of Example	20	25. The Unexplored Island.....	12
9. A Letter to Sunday School Children	20	26. Is I not happy	12
10. H. Hawkins, the Drunkard's Daughter	20	27. The Apprentice Lad	20
11. Christian Courtesy and Benevolence	20	28. The Power of Custom	20
12. The Young Chemist's Inquiry	20	29. Biographical Gleanings—Examples	20
13. Little Henry and the Teetotal Festival	20	30. Ditto ditto. —Warnings	20
14. The Young Reasoner's Objections to Teetotalism	20	31. The Guide to Glendalough	12
15. The Fear of Ridicule.....	20	32. Bridget Lartum.....	12
16. The Teetotalism of Travellers	20	ASSORTED PACKETS.—No. 1, 1 to 16—No. 2, 17 to 32,
17. Temptation Resisted	12	inclusive.

IPSWICH TEMPERANCE TRACTS.

Those Tracts marked with an * have PICTURES and are on better paper, 150 pages, in a sixpenny packet. The others have 168 pages to the packet.

	PAGES		PAGES
1. The Doctor Scrutinized, or for what purpose do Physicians prescribe Alcoholic Beverages, by R. D. Alexander, F.L.S., 122 thousand... *	8	6. Adulterated Wine, 40 thousand	4
2. Striking Facts, 84 thousand	2	7. The Maltster, 37 thousand	4
3. Maker and Vender, 44 thousand	2	8. Go Feel what I have Felt, 53 thousand	2
4. Our Creed, 52 thousand	2	9. Facts are Stubborn Things, 53 thousand	2
5. Adulterated Beer, 34 thousand	4	10. The Spirit Dealer, 35 thousand	2
		11. Christian Teetotalism, 70 thousand	2

	PAGES
12 The Trade, 33 thousand	4
13 Alcohol, 33 thousand	4
14 The Town of Ipswich, 33 thousand	4
15 Song of the Water Drinker, 37 thousand	2
16 Stimulation not Strength, 30 thousand	8
17 Farmer Woodman's Speech, 41 thousand	4
*18 The Bear Barrel Examined, 33 thousand	8
19 Teetotal Recipes, 38 thousand	4
*20 Speech of J. J. Gurney, 30 thousand	4
21 Pity the Poor Drunkard 49 thousand	2
22 The Fool's Pence, 25 thousand	8
23 Why am I a Teetotaler? 26 thousand	2
24 Dost thou smoke, Bill? 34 thousand	4
25 William the Laudanum Drinker, 30 thousand	4
26 The Ox Discourse	4
27 Letter to the Clergy, by a Brother Clergyman, 21 thousand	20
28 Common Sense, 20 thousand	2
29 Ralph the Soldier	4
30 Testimony of Eminent Physicians, 30 thousand	4
31 The Working Man, 35 thousand	20
32 Is I not happy? by Hugh Stowell, 30 thousand	4
33 David the Shoemaker, 49 thousand	4
34 The Drunken Couple, 48 thousand	2
35 Confessions of a drunkard, 29 thousand	2
36 Master Tailor, 20 thousand	4
37 The Fatal Gift, 36 thousand	2
38 Poor Sandy	4
39 Use & abuse, by Archdeacon Jeffreys, 34 thousand	2
40 The Schoolmaster	4
41 Water is Best, by J. J. Gurney, 37 thousand	8
42 Cobbett's Advice	4
43 Take a Public House	4
44 A Sailor's Yarn	4
45 Moderate Drinking Calmly Considered	12
46 The Pledge	4
*47 John Jarvis, or the Pledge Signed	12
*48 The Fifteen Friends	4
49 Sunday School Teachers, 22 thousand	12

	PAGES
50 Sunday School Children, 40 thousand	12
51 Money better than Beer, 37 thousand	4
*52 Little Mary; or a Daughter's Love	8
53 Philosophy of Temperance by R. T. Trall, M.D.	20
54 Love to Man, or an Appeal to the Pious	20
55 The Young Woman's Tract	12
56 The Young Man's Tract	16
57 Dr. Campbell's Testimony, 18 thousand	8
58 Why Sign the Pledge? 40 thousand	2
59 The Poor Man's House Repaired	4
60 The Mother's Tract	8
61 The High Price of Food	4
62 Ladies' Tract Societies	8
63 The Praise of Water, 25 thousand	2
64 Important Calculation, 30 thousand	2
65 The Farm Servant, 25 thousand	2
66 Teetotalism Declining, 15 thousand	8
67 The Reformed Drunkard, 20 thousand	8
68 The Recruit of the British Legion	8
69 No. 1 of Temperance Anecdotes	12
70 No. 2 ditto	12
71 No. 3 ditto	12
72 No. 4 ditto	12
73 Luke Husler, or "I did not like to say No."	8
74 The Drunkard's Wife	8
75 The Unexplored Island	4
76 Ancient Wines; by R. D. Alexander	8
77 Influence of Example, 15 thousand	2
*78 The Victim of Excitement.
*79 My Medical Adviser does not approve of Teetotalism.
*80 The Restoration.

ASSORTED PACKETS—No. 1, containing 1 to 31.—No. 2, 32 to 55.—No. 3, 56, and upwards.

Fifty Packets of Juvenile Temperance Books or Tracts delivered in London for a Guinea, sent by P. O. Order, to Richard Dykes Alexander, Ipswich. Samples of both post free, for five shillings.

London: Simpkin and Marshall.

LONDON TEMPERANCE TRACTS,

UNDER THE SANCTION OF THE

National Temperance Society.

The above Tracts comprise a variety of 150 different sorts, and embrace every point of the principle of Total Abstinence. Upwards of

THREE MILLION

have already been circulated. 2 pp. 8d.; 4 pp. 1s. 4d.; 8 pp. 2s. 8d. per 100., or in packets, assorted, 6d. each.

For the convenience of LOAN CIRCULATION, they are assorted into 60 sets, containing 16 pp. in each, and stitched into a strong wrapper, with a suitable address upon each, price 8s. per 100. Liberal allowance for large quantities. Lists may be obtained of the Publishers gratis.

HOULSTON & STONEMAN, 65, Paternoster Row.

TEMPERANCE PROVIDENT INSTITUTION, 39, MOORGATE STREET.

THE RULES of this Institution have been now revised, and copies will be ready for delivery in a few days.

A NEW DEPARTMENT has been added for the Assurance of Joint Lives, in which two persons (a husband and wife, for example) can secure a sum of money, payable at the death of either, whichever may happen to die first.

DEPOSIT ASSURANCES are also granted, the premiums payable at any time, and withdrawable without deduction, at the Members' convenience.

BORROWERS in Building Societies can also assure for the term their Societies are calculated to last, at greatly reduced premiums, and with the option of reducing the amount from time to time at their own convenience.

Full particulars, with Tables, Rules, and Forms of Application, may be had gratis at the offices—39, Moorgate Street, London; 4, Princess Street, Manchester; 5, Drury Street, Glasgow; and 20, Bristo Street, Edinburgh, and of the different Local Agents.

N.B.—Agents are wanted in many of the provincial towns.

London: Printed by RICHARD BARRETT of 8, Regent-terrace, City-road, in the Parish of St. Luke, in the County of Middlesex, Printer; at his Printing Office, No. 13, Mark-lane, in the Parish of Alhallow's Staining, in the City of London; and published by JOHN STONEMAN, of 24, Brooksbury Street, in the Parish of Islington, in the County of Middlesex, at HOULSTON and STONEMAN'S, No. 65, Paternoster-row, in the Parish of St. Michael-le-Querne, in the City of London, Publishers.—Wednesday, September 1st, 1847.

* * * The NATIONAL TEMPERANCE CHRONICLE and TEMPERANCE RECORDER is published on the first day of each month, at HOULSTON & STONEMAN, the Depot of the National Temperance Society, 65, Paternoster-row, and will be sent post-free for one year on receipt of 2s. postage labels. Annual Subscriptions received at the Society's office, 11, Tokenhouse Yard, London, and subscriptions and donations for the general purposes of the Society, by the Treasurer, G. W. ALEXANDER, 40, Lombard Street; by any Member of the Committee, end at the office as above.

THE
NATIONAL TEMPERANCE CHRONICLE
 AND
TEMPERANCE RECORDER.

It is good neither to eat flesh, nor to drink wine, nor anything whereby thy brother stumbleth, or is offended, or is made weak.—ROM. XIV. 21

No. 22, JOINT SERIES.]

OCTOBER, 1847.

[PRICE 1d., STAMPED 2d.]

CONTENTS.

	PAGE		PAGE
Progress	153	Tea Duties	159
Drinking in Canteens	154	Wine-Drinking Advocates of Temperance	159
Teetotal Essayist	154	EDITORIAL REMARKS:—National Temperance Society—
Temperance is Universal	155	Subscriptions—Conference of Ministers—Agency' ..	160, 161
Strong Drinks	155	FOREIGN INTELLIGENCE:—Hobart Town	162
Temperance and Teetotalism	156	HOME INTELLIGENCE:—Leeds—Bolton—Manchester—
March of Temperance in Norfolk	158	Luton—Great Suffolk Street..Shadwell	162-165
Tobacco Smoking	158	Literary Notices—Advertisements	165-168

PROGRESS.

In this number of the Chronicle will be found several extracts from an elaborate article in the October number of the BRITISH AND FOREIGN MEDICAL REVIEW, on temperance and teetotalism, considered medically. We hail its appearance with peculiar pleasure. It is another sign of progress, and ought to inspire with confidence those who are apt to sink into occasional fits of discouragement, and suppose that we are doing nothing, because the excitement which once attended the advocacy of our principles has subsided. It is certain that our success can never be measured by the number of signatures, or the amount of enthusiasm; and those who saw the omens of decline in the decrease of our public meetings, took only a very superficial view of the matter. If they look abroad, they will see abundant ground for congratulation. We may refer to some few of those signs of progress.

A few months ago, we were much cheered by the announcement that the men selected to go out in Sir John Franklin's expedition were teetotalers, and that the ships were to sail on teetotal principles. This not only showed that attention had been paid to the principle in high places, but that they had every faith in the ability of men to undergo fatigue and exposure to weather without alcoholic drinks. This operated silently but powerfully in many quarters. Such an arrangement having been made by men who do not adopt new principles of action on slight grounds, and who were not previously known by their attachment to the temperance cause, was in itself an argument far more cogent, than any that rhetoric could supply. We find now that this has been followed up by an abolition of the sale of intoxicating liquors in Canteens. The soldier has removed from him that temptation which is always found most potent to those who are deprived of home and domestic associations, and which has been the principal cause of his degradation and punishment, as it has been in all other cases.

We see an altered spirit in the public press—a willingness to speak favourably of the temperance movement—a desire to promote it. We gave last month an article from the Times, in which the writer speaks of a subject in which we take deep interest—the reduction of the duties on one of the comforts of life; and amongst other cogent arguments urges that which we feel to be most powerful—its effect in lessening the consumption of intoxicating drinks, and as a necessary consequence, lessening the burdens entailed upon us by the drinking-system. A letter appears in this Chronicle from an old friend of the working-classes, on this important subject. Surely the time has come when the true interests of the country will be considered in our legislation; and when political economists and others will learn that after all, the true wealth and dignity of States, is in having an industrious, sober and virtuous population. Christian ministers may learn a highly useful lesson if they will look carefully in the world around them. It is time that they identified themselves with these subjects of public sympathy, in order that their sphere of usefulness may be enlarged. Let us hope that the ensuing Conference of Ministers, at Manchester, will tend to dissipate the apathy of that highly influential class and rouse them into activity.

We must not omit to notice the service which has been rendered to the cause by the inimitable pencil of G. Cruikshank. The "Bottle," we recommend to all our readers. We may refer to the character of our late elections—remarkable for the comparative peace and sobriety which prevailed—and also to the part which magistrates are taking regard to licenses.

Above all these, we regard the fact of medical men taking up and discussing the question, the most important and significant sign of progress.

In the family circle, and over every part of the community, they exert an influence. No profession contains a greater number of intelligent and high-minded men, and it is impossible that they can discuss the principle on its own merits, without admitting its claims, and giving it their sanction. The certificate has no doubt led the way to an entire change of medical opinion.

Notwithstanding these signs of progress, these omens of ultimate and glorious success, there is much yet to do. The customs of a nation can only be changed by degrees, and it becomes the advocates of the temperance cause to use every exertion, in fact, to increase their efforts, to diffuse knowledge and information. In the press, on the platform, and in the social and domestic circle, it is important to sound the warning and administer the lesson. In workshops and manufactories, the dangerous nature of the drinking-customs must be exposed; and in conclusion, we urge our readers to do all they can to get the employers' certificate found in another part of the Chronicle, extensively signed, and universally circulated. These customs are a disgrace to our country, and if fully exposed must enlist a powerful opposition.

DRINKING IN CANTEENS.

We have seen with great satisfaction an announcement of the intention of government to prohibit for the future the sale of intoxicating liquors in the canteen. If this regulation should be carried out, it will be found one of the best that ever was adopted for preserving the character and contributing to the happiness of the British soldier. Hitherto the canteen has offered him ready opportunities for contracting habits of dissipation and idleness, which, indeed, he must have found it very difficult to avoid; for, being isolated from worthier means of occupying his leisure, drinking became almost of necessity his only resource. It argues a long and culpable indifference to the respectability and comfort of the lower ranks of the army that they should have been until now abandoned to such a debasing employment of their time, when off duty, as a tap-room could afford. No care was taken to supply them with any better indulgence than that of ministering to a ruinous propensity, which proverbially brings every description of vice, as well as the utmost misery, in its train. By the regulations heretofore existing, the privilege of tempting the soldier to turn drunkard is a matter of contract between the Government and the keeper of the canteen, who, having purchased his right, felt himself at full liberty to make the most he could of it. The sale of intoxicating liquors was, of course, the most profitable part of the trade, for a habit of drinking is rapidly acquired, and when once it seizes its victim, it speedily absorbs all his means. Thus the soldier was encouraged in a vice which was sure to transfer every farthing he possessed to the pockets of those by whom the materials for gratifying his degrading propensity were supplied. We think the Government will have acted most properly in prohibiting altogether the sale of intoxicating liquors; for any regulations that might be prescribed in order to allow it under certain conditions, would almost certainly be abused.

While, however, the soldier is deprived of a direct temptation to idleness and dissipation, the service rendered him will be very incomplete, unless it is accompanied by some provision for the employment of his leisure, by which he may be at the same time occupied and improved. When the means of degradation are taken away, their place ought at once to be filled up by something of a more salutary kind; and reading-rooms, which we believe have been already introduced in some barracks, suitably provided with the means of instruction and amusement, would form a most wholesome as well as acceptable addition to the new canteens. We are convinced that the change suggested would work a wonderful reformation in the army, for its ranks would be filled by better men, who would, as a matter of course, be better soldiers. There would be an end for ever to the force of the argument, so degrading to the military character, that in consequence of its brutal insensibility to moral influence, the punishment of the lash is required. The steps recently taken towards improving the moral condition of the soldier are proofs of a desire to repair those errors which have reduced him in some respects below the level of his fellow-citizens. By showing him that his moral condition is cared for by the Government, he will be made careful of it himself; and the disuse of corporal punishment, added to the introduction of the means of mental improvement, will render the army no longer the refuge for the vicious and desperate, but a class to which it will be of itself an honour to belong.—Times, September 16th.

TEETOTAL ESSAYIST.

The last number of this periodical is one of peculiar interest, from the fact which is thus described:—In the month of June last, a meeting of the British Organization of the Alliance was assembled in the Hopetoun Rooms, Edinburgh, when the Rev. EDWARD BICKERSTETH, A.M., vicar of Watton, Herts, brought up a report from the Southern Division of the Alliance, with reference to Infidelity, which suggested that an endeavour should be made to ascertain how far facts in physical science may have tended to encourage infidelity, and also the connexion between infidelity and teetotalism. This suggestion excited perfect astonishment in the minds of the numerous teetotalers present. Several of them declared that they knew no ground for such a suggestion—that no instance of teetotalism leading to infidelity had come to their knowledge, though many instances of intemperance producing such results might easily be specified. Others declared their firm conviction of the Christian character and tendency of the Teetotal Movement; and some intimated that if the suggestion from the Southern Division had been to investigate the connexion between infidelity and grog-shops or free-and-easies, it would have brought the investigators much nearer to the knowledge of the truth. After an animated conversation, it was resolved to modify the phraseology of the recommendation, and to conduct the inquiry to "the connexion between infidelity and the operations of societies professing philanthropic."

It appears that the proprietor of the Teetotal Essayist addressed a circular to the most eminent and experienced Leaders of the Temperance Movement, including Ministers of Religion and Officers of Societies, requesting an answer to the following inquiry:—

"As the result of your own observation, what has been the effect of the operations of Total Abstinence Societies in reclaiming drunkards, in checking the drinking-customs, and, above all, in leading persons to attend the House of God, and to adopt a profession of the Christian Religion.

"Should you know of any remarkable cases of reformation of persons who have not only become sober but religious, will you oblige by briefly specifying them."

"Every post has brought us the most satisfactory replies to this inquiry, and we publish the principal portion of them, partly for the confirmation of our friends, but chiefly to aid the members of the Evangelical Alliance, or others, who may entertain similar views, in their investigations into this important matter. We had intended to have made a regular digest of the contents of these replies, and to have arranged them under distinct heads; but after mature consideration we have judged it best to present the documents themselves, for the most part in the form in which we received them. It is not likely that we shall be able to do justice to the subject in this number of the Essayist, but its importance will well warrant our devoting to it sufficient space. When we have gone through the evidence, we shall append such remarks as circumstances may suggest."

This number contains testimonies of the most valuable kind, from all parts of the kingdom, and makes an overwhelming amount of evidence against the proposition submitted to the Alliance. It is well worthy of attention, and will form a permanent document of no mean importance.

TEMPERANCE IS UNIVERSAL.

The use of all wine, spirits, opium, &c., is not only strictly forbidden both by religion and the civil law, but is entirely against public opinion. I have seen thousands together for hours on public occasions rejoicing in all ardour, without observing in an act of violence or ease of intoxication. During a residence of seven months among the Burmans, I never saw but one intoxicated, though the example alas! is not wanting on the part of foreigners. — *Malcom's Travels in the Burman Empire.

Unlike the Burmans, whose religion utterly forbids strong drink, and who scarcely ever use it, the Karens use it universally, and generally to excess; every family make arrack for themselves, and from oldest to youngest partake. Drunkenness with all its train of horrors is of course rife among them. But no sooner do any become serious inquirers, and consort with the disciples for further instruction, than they totally abandon the accursed thing. In Mata, therefore, not a drop is made or drunk. The children of the very men who were sots, are growing up without having tasted or seen it. The consequences to domestic peace and general welfare may be supposed.†

STRONG DRINKS.

Translated from the Journal de la Société de la Morale Chrétienne, for last August, by MR. SCUTT.

We have the satisfaction of hearing that the principles of the Temperance Societies, and the Associations themselves, make a favourable and peaceful progress. We will give an account soon of their existence in Germany and Holland.

In the mean time, we may say that we have constantly read for some years past the praise of these Institutions in the German and Holland papers. One of them has said:—

"Among the number of new things which exercise the greatest influence upon the inward life, and upon a true sense of religion, the Temperance Societies occupy the first rank. If we reflect on the deplorable effects produced generally by intemperance, and even by the use only of strong drinks, in destroying happiness and health, even domestic peace, in delivering up those who accustom themselves to it to sensuality and other vices, at length in producing an indifference to the most sacred interests of humanity, and in extinguishing religious sentiments, we ought to rejoice in seeing that redoubled efforts are now made in order to stay the evil and stop up the source of so much misery."

In another number of the same paper, these societies are considered in a religious point of view. "Temperance societies, it is said, without doubt make a deep impression on the course of life, since nothing presents so much opposition to a submission to Christian morality, to the discipline of the Church, as the usage of strong drinks, which arrests the progress and renders unfruitful the sacred word. The pastor, will he keep silence, at a period when the attacks of which he is the object, begin to produce upon the life of man a revolution of which the results are incalculable? Will he not rather enlighten himself with the torch of truth?"

It was with these views that the American ministers assembled at Cincinnati, said in 1844, "The cause of temperance is so intimately united with temporal and future happiness, that it ought to engross all our attention. Temperance is an essential part of the mission of an evangelical minister. Without temperance, we appeal in vain to christian sentiment. We do not confound the entire abstinence from intoxicating drinks with temperance, which is a fruit of the Holy Spirit, but we maintain that abstinence is the most efficacious way of attaining it."

Truly did they say there ought to be a central union. "The cause of temperance presents a means of co-operation so simple and so general, notwithstanding our difference of opinion upon other subjects, that we can join ourselves to it, and bring to that great undertaking our tribute with fraternal union. Here rests the foundation of christian charity. If Saint Paul preferred never to eat flesh rather than offend his brother, it behoves us to be deeply inspired with the spirit of the apostle Paul; who can see without a broken heart, the disgraceful and scandalous scenes which intemperance every where produces, and who would not renounce the intoxicating beverage, in order to produce by his example reflection and repentance."

Mark the exposure which is presented to us by a writer who has made himself acquainted with the workings of temperance societies. He relates himself what he saw in a journey which he has made in Germany and Holland, and it is thus that after having established the principles, he proves the necessity of reform.

"I found myself," said he, "at an inn, and there I could on that account study the habits of the people. I saw come there a carrier, accompanied by a child ten years old. He asked for a glass of gin. After having drunk half, he called his son, who was staying in the cart, and said to him, 'My boy, take some.' The boy came and drank. 'Shame,' said a person who was there to the father, 'do not give gin to a child of his age.' 'How,' replied the carrier; 'it is necessary he should learn to drink, if not he would never become a good carrier.'

"The inn was hardly the distance of a league from the town. Every day eight diligences passed. Generally they stopped there, and only for a sufficient time for the conductor to drink. The glass was generally of a large size, and emptied at a draught; it was repeated many times during the journey, and that was the sign by which you were to distinguish a good carrier."

* Chambers's People's Edition, p. 58.

† Ibid. p. 14.

"One day I was present at the same inn, on the sale of sixty horses. Many dealers and carriers were assembled. Every thing was regularly conducted; but we also constantly saw persons of a red and violet complexion, others bloated, and whose rude and altered features recalled the saying of Zehokke, 'God sets a mark on sinners.'"

The same writer adds, "A short time back wishing to leave Amsterdam by the half-past seven morning train, I saw by the side of that in which I was placed, a special train for a great number of militia-men who had to go to Harlem. They were already seated. The two trains remained by the side of each other five minutes, and I saw a great number of blue and white bottles applied to the lips with eagerness, and circulate among them all. What will be the fate of these young men who begin thus at nineteen years of age?"

In fact, the writer has great reason to believe that these young men who begin thus will be, or at least the greater part of them, at the age of thirty or forty years, as physically feeble as morally debased. It is generally supposed to the contrary; in France even, the most enlightened men are persuaded that alcoholic liquors strengthen the body and animate the spirit.

Lately a council of war was assembled to try a captain charged with the care of the accounts of his regiment, and who was accused with having misappropriated the funds intended to buy brandy to give to the soldiers. The accused said he made use of the money to buy vegetables and to distribute among them. The colonel president flew in a passion and replied, "Vegetables! vegetables! You ought to have conformed to the regulation, and not turned from its natural channel the money which was remitted to you. Brandy ought to have been bought, since it is prescribed for the comfort and health of the soldiers." This observation ought to carry with it many important reflections. No doubt it is proper that an officer, and especially if he has to account, should conform to the regulations; no doubt the money ought not to be diverted from its intended destination. But if there be any excuse to an apparent dereliction, it is the having employed for the nourishment of the soldiers, money intended for drink. Accordingly the captain was acquitted. Moreover, the colonel did not appear to know that medical men have always maintained that water is more healthy than liquors, and his irritation against vegetables in favour of brandy appears to be contrary to the most unquestioned opinions. It appears the accused gave him with much respect a very useful lesson, when he answered, "What I can affirm, my colonel, is that my squadron is that in which there has been the least sickness." It is well to establish that fact, and to demonstrate that it is a strong proof of the advantage to be derived from the suppression of alcoholic drinks.

In fact, it is very curious and very interesting to consult the new opinions which have been uttered lately by men the most ignorant, and by those the most enlightened.

A simple husbandman of the village of Langun, in Hanover, carried on his shoulder, fastened to a stick, a pitcher of brandy containing six measures, to distribute to his mowers. It unloosed from the stick, fell, broke, and the brandy was spilt. Many days afterwards, in repassing by the same road, he saw with astonishment the grass reddened and half destroyed upon the whole surface where the liquor had been spilt. He was so startled that he said to himself, "What effect then would be produced on the body by a liquor so burning?"

On the other side, a learned physician, after dinner, was anxious to convince, by a very simple experiment, his friends of the fallacy of the opinion which supposes that spirituous liquors facilitate digestion. He took two pieces of raw meat; he placed one in a glass of brandy, and the other in a glass of pure water. In one, an hour afterwards, was soft, tender, and we might almost say full of gravy, whilst the other was still hard and tough as a horn. We may conclude from this that strong drinks really hinder the transformation of food to that state to which it ought to arrive spread its nutritive principles throughout the body.

But this assertion is actually demonstrated in Germany by a recent proof, which is authentic, and which has produced the most lively and beneficial sensation throughout all the states of the Confederation. There was yet much doubt upon the salutary efficacy of alcoholic drinks, and that question was strongly debated. At length some governments consented no longer to distribute strong drinks to their soldiers, and ordered that the money for the drink should be spent in giving them a nourishment more substantial. It was very desirable to know what was the result, and it was ordered that the most exact statistical calculation should be made to prove, what since the change has been the sanitary condition of the soldiers.

Besides, it is necessary to say, that the greater part of those who had been deprived of strong drinks were the inhabitants of towns, of a constitution less strong and not inured to fatigue. The soldiers to whom they continued to distribute large quantities of strong drinks were for the most part strong labourers or wood-cutters from the country, and yet it was proved that the sanitary state was as follows.—

Corps to whom strong drinks were distributed:

	Men	Sick	Out of 1000
1. Holstein, out of 3600,	there were 82 sick,	1	1 out of 4
2. Mecklenbourg, " 3580,	" 82 "	1	" 1 " 4
3. Oldenbourg, " 718,	" 24 "	1	" 1 " 3
4. Hanovre, " 13,954,	" 284 "	1	" 1 " 4
	20,952	472	1 1

Corps to whom strong drinks were not distributed:

	Men	Sick	Out of 1000
1. Town of Brunswick, out of 2096,	there were 18 sick,	1	1 out of 1
2. Town of Oldenbourg, " 2821,	" 47 "	1	" 1 " 1
3. Hanse Towns " 2190,	" 14 "	1	" 1 " 1

The writer who has collected these facts, and even from the army, ends with these words, "After examples decisive, and the testimony of superior officers who have made analogous observations, there remains nothing to add."

The work from which we have extracted many these facts, is M. Huydecoper's; it has been translated from the Dutch by M. Bouquié Lefèvre, who has rendered by this publication a great service to mankind.

TEMPERANCE AND TEETOTALISM.

From an article in the "British and Foreign Medical Review" on Temperance and Teetotalism.

There are many reasons why we deem it incumbent upon our brethren of the medical profession to take an active part in the investigation which is now being carried on, by a large and important section of the public, in this country and elsewhere, with regard to the effects of the habitual use of alcoholic drinks, and the possibility of effectually maintaining the "mens sana in corpore sano" without recourse to them. The fearful array of social and individual evils, which may be traced to the abuse of fermented liquors, should excite every reflecting mind to consider how far the use of the is desirable or necessary; and this inquiry peculiarly incumbent upon those who assume themselves the right of guiding the public in a that concerns the welfare of the bodily fabric, whether in health or disease. Their influence for good or evil, in this matter, can scarcely be too highly estimated. If they are able, after careful consideration of the evidence on each side, to give their sanction to the statements of the advocates of the total abstinence cause, that sanction ought not to be withheld; since its weight in the scale of social order and morality demands the open and unqualified expression of it, unrestrained by any fear of ridicule or loss of the world's approval. That they would knowingly place their influence in the opposite scale, cannot for a moment be admitted; but there is too much reason to fear that, either from actual ignorance of what the experience of multitudes of all ranks and conditions has now demonstrated, or from a natural tendency to persistence in that sort of laissez-faire system, which it is so easy to practise and (in this matter especially) so agreeable to their patients, the generality of medical men are at present lending their sanction to a system of most pernicious error. Having long since made up our own minds on this subject, we have determined not to forego this opportunity—the last in our power—of recording our earnest convictions in regard to it; in the hope of leading our readers, if not at once to view the matter in the light in which we see it after many years of observation and personal experience, at any rate to inquire and observe for themselves, and to pause, before they again recommend or sanction practices which, though comparatively innocent in themselves, aid in perpetuating the direst evils with which our country is infected.

The medical profession in this country, however, is beginning to be awakened from this pleasant insouciance by the pressure from without; and to find it necessary to place itself in the midst of the current of human progress, which might otherwise sweep past it and leave its dicta among the despised relics of an immovable conservatism. Some hundreds of medical men of all grades and degrees, in every part of the British empire, from the court physicians and leading metropolitan surgeons who are conversant with the wants of the upper ranks of society, to the humble country practitioner who is familiar with the requirements of the artisan in his workshop and the labourer in the field, have given their sanction (as we shall presently see) to the statement, that the maintenance of health is perfectly compatible with entire abstinence from fermented liquors; and that such abstinence, if general, would incalculably promote the improvement of the social condition of mankind.

Now we are quite content to brave their condemnation, for the sake of what we consider to be truth; and feeling satisfied, as we just now said, that the interests of truth cannot be served by exaggeration, we think it right fearlessly to state that we cannot, with them affirm, that we consider alcohol in all its forms to be nothing else than a poison. We cannot conscientiously go the length of denying that under any circumstances, whether of health or disease, the administration of alcohol can be justified.

In the exercise of our own duty as cool-judging critics, we now propose to inquire in the first place, into the present state of our knowledge as to the physiological action of alcohol on the human body; next, to consider how far the results of the comparative experience of those who make habitual or moderate use of fermented liquors, and of those who entirely abstain from them, under a variety of circumstances, warrants the assertion that total abstinence is invariably (or nearly so) compatible with perfect health, or is even more favourable to health than habitual but moderate indulgence; and finally, to endeavour to deduce from these data such conclusions, with regard to the therapeutic use of alcohol, as may cause its employment by medical men to be attended with the greatest possible amount of good and the least admixture of evil.

All our present physiological knowledge, then, leads to the decided conclusion that alcohol cannot become the pabulum for the renovation of the muscular substance, which process can only be effected by the assimilation of albuminous materials in the food; and that the habitual use of alcohol, therefore, cannot add anything to the muscular vigour.

It appears, then, that the physiological influence of alcohol upon the system, under all ordinary circumstances, cannot be attributed to anything else than its stimulant character; and it is almost a self-evident corollary from this proposition, that its habitual use even in moderate quantities can exert no beneficial effects. For the healthy fabric should be quite capable of maintaining itself in vigour upon a proper diet, and with a due quantum of sleep, exercise, &c., without any adventitious assistance; and if it be not, assistance should be sought from alterations in diet or regimen, or from remedies which tend to promote the regular play of its functions, rather than from stimulants, which may produce in some of these a temporary excitement, but which thus tend to destroy the balance of the whole. The very nature of a stimulant is to produce a subsequent depression, and to lose its force by frequent repetition. The depression is proportional to the temporary excitement; and the loss is thus at least equivalent to the gain. And when a stimulus loses its effect, as such, by frequent repetition, it is still felt as being necessary to bring the system up to par, an increased dose being required to elevate it higher. Thus, as is well known, those who habitually employ fermented liquors for the sake of their stimulating effects, are led on from small beginnings to most fearful endings; and the habit, growing by what it feeds on, becomes a necessity. No pretext is more commonly given out as an apology for the habitual use of fermented liquors, than the aid which a moderate employment of them is thought to afford to the digestive process. But we maintain that, where a man duly observes the laws of health, the appetite will always desire the amount of food which the system needs, and the stomach will be able to digest it. If health is to be measured by the capacity for eating, then the habitual moderate use of fermented liquors may be conducive to it; but if the increase in this capacity which they produce be of no service to the economy at large, they cannot have any other than an injurious effect, by leading us to overtask the powers of our digestive apparatus. Thus, as Liebig has very well pointed out, the residents in warm climates who take stimulants before their meals, in order to make up for the deficiency of appetite, act upon a most unphysiological and ultimately injurious system; forgetting, or being ignorant that the real demand for food is much less when the surrounding temperature is high, and that the diminished appetite really indicates the diminished wants of the system. In a large proportion of the cases in which the habitual employment of fermented liquors has really a show of utility, we are quite certain that a copious use of cold water externally, and the substitution of it for more stimulating beverages, will be found in the end to be the most wholesome practice, tending (as large experience has shown that it does) both to improve the appetite and to invigorate the digestive powers.

We do not go so far as to maintain that no exceptions are to be made to this rule; but we are satisfied, that these exceptions are much fewer than is commonly supposed; and that they are to be made rather in cases where some temporary disturbing cause is acting upon the system, than in those in which there seems to be an habitual want of assistance.

We think that we have now adduced sufficient testimony of the inutility, to say the least, of fermented liquors, as regards the maintenance of muscular strength in field labour. It is obvious that practice here fully bears out theory; and that the substitution of solid aliment, containing the materials of muscular tissue, for a liquid which contains but little of these, and whose principal constituent is a heat-producing substance—never less wanted than when laborious exertion is being made under the summer sun—is attended with the very result which the physiologist would predict, namely, an increase in the amount of muscular substance, and consequently in muscular vigour. If we only go the length of admitting that they are unnecessary, the duty of doing our utmost to check their employment seems to us imperative; since it is the universal testimony of those who have fairly tried the abstinence system, that the temper and habits of workmen, who were previously “moderate drinkers,” are in every way improved by it,—to say nothing of the avoidance of absolute intoxication with all its evils, which, although the most obvious, is not perhaps the most important result of the abstinence system—since for one drunkard there are scores who are injuring their bodies and souls, their families and their employers, and who are consequently in the end more or less burdensome to the public at large, by what is accounted amongst them but a moderate use of fermented liquors.

We do not think it necessary to adduce any further evidence in support of our main position, that total abstinence from fermented liquors is consistent with the maintenance of the most perfect health, even under the constant demands created by labour of the severest kind, or by extremes of temperature; and that, on the whole, the abstinent system is preferable, on physical grounds alone, to the most moderate habitual use of them. The most powerful claim, however, which the total abstinence advocates have upon public attention, lies rather (to our apprehension at least) in the moral benefits which their system is calculated to produce; and it is with reference to these that we would earnestly recommend our readers to examine for themselves, whether a great deal that is commonly believed as to the therapeutic use of alcoholic liquors is not equally baseless with the notion of the necessity of their habitual use for the sustenance of the body in health. There can be no reasonable doubt that a great deal more wine, &c., is employed as medicine than there is the least occasion for. It is so pleasant a remedy, that we have recourse to it on the slightest occasion. People prescribe it for themselves, because they think they understand its action sufficiently well to supersede the necessity of proper medical advice, and because it is so palatable and comforting a draught. Other medicines are usually nauseous to the taste, and our patients are glad enough to get rid of them when they have done their work; but this is too frequently continued long after the purpose which it is supposed to answer is no longer required. And there is abundance of melancholy proof, that a craving for fermented liquors, which has ultimately led to habits of the most degraded intemperance, has been not unfrequently created even in most delicate, refined, and high-principled women, by the habitual use of them when introduced under the guise of medicine by the physician. The records of total abstinence societies, moreover, show that in a very large number of cases in which drunkards supposed to be reformed have “broke out,” or returned to their intemperate habits, the cause of the relapse has been the use of fermented liquors under medical direction, the meretricious taste which has excited the craving that seemed to be subdued. Hence in some of the forms of “pledge” the promise is made to refrain from even the medicinal use of alcoholic liquors; which we regard as a most dangerous and unwarrantable proceeding since there are cases (as we shall presently attempt to show) in which no other agents can have the same beneficial effect, and the difference may even be one of life or death. The proper course we apprehend to be, that those who take the total abstinence pledge should promise not to take alcoholic liquors, except when these are ordered by a qualified medical practitioner; and it is the obvious duty of the medical profession to refrain from ordering them, except where the indication of benefit to be derived from their use is of the plainest possible kind.

We believe, then, that cases are of no uncommon occurrence in which, under some temporary depressing influence, the powers of the digestive apparatus are not adequate to supply the demand upon made by the system, and that recourse may in such cases be advantageously had to alcohol as an equal temporary stimulus. But it is worthy of consideration whether, when it is thus administered for purely medicinal purposes, it may not be desirable to give it in such a medicinal form as will render it not peculiarly palatable or inviting, in order that the patient may have no inducement to continue the use of it after the real demand has ceased to exist.

[These extracts are taken with a view of shewing the style and spirit of the valuable article from which they are taken. From an advertisement which will be seen that the whole article will be reprinted in a pamphlet form, bringing it within the reach of all. Ed. N. T. C.]

MARCH OF TEMPERANCE IN NORFOLK

Extraordinary sale of Taverns and Public-houses.—Mr. W. Simpson, the auctioneer, has issued a notice stating that he is instructed to sell by public auction, at the Norfolk Hotel, Norwich, the extraordinary number of twenty-seven inns, public houses and beer-shops. What with the rapid strides of temperance and the deviations of road by the various railways, it would appear that public-house property in Norfolk is at a discount.—Observer, August 29th, 1847.

TOBACCO SMOKING.

Surely smoke becomes a kitchen farrer better than a dining chamber; and yet it makes the kitchen oftentimes in the inward parts of men soiling and infecting with an unctuous and oily kind of soot as hath been found in some great Tobacco takers, that after death were opened. A custom loathsome to the eye, harmful to the brain, dangerous to the lungs, and in the black stinking fume thereof, nearest resembling the terrible stygian smoke of the pit that is bottoms.—Counterblast by King James I.

 To the above dissuasions from the use of tobacco, may add another, which applies also to many other unnecessary articles used by man. While the world is filled with complaints of privation and misery, mysterious and inevitable, it is forgotten how vast a proportion of these evils are not of God's appointment, but of man's making. Thus blotted out of view, altogether all the evils flowing from the use of tobacco. After it is reared and prepared, let us reflect on the not inconsiderable amount of human labour, and of the earth's surface employed, or properly to speak, misemployed, in its production. Millions of money are expended annually in Europe, Asia, and America, on a mode of indulgence unknown and undreamt of until a few centuries since. In Scotland alone, according to the computation of the late Rev. Dr. Chalmers, the people lay out £6000. per year on snuff, and this is probably within the mark!—London
Medical Gazette.

TEA DUTIES.

(The Editor of the National Temperance Chronicle.)
Voluntary House, Walthamstow,
Sept. 17, 1847.

DEAR SIR,—I am very glad to see you are turning the attention of the public to "the Duties on Tea" in connexion with the advocacy of temperance. It is high time we gave some practical illustration, that the advocates of total abstinence from all exciting beverages do not wish to abridge, but to increase the comforts of the working classes.
 It has been difficult to convince them that this has been our object, but the course you recommended in your last journal will go far to disabuse their minds on this subject.
 I would suggest that at all future public meetings in our towns and villages, that petitions be prepared and signed to the House of Commons for a total abolition of the Duties on Tea (no half measures), setting forth the advantages to the health of the people, by the inducement to leave off alcoholic drinks, and the improvement of the morals of the people likely to result from the change.
 As to the substitute in the way of revenue, that will be left to the Chancellor of the Exchequer; it will be a new thing in the annals of our country, if a Chancellor of the Exchequer should be at a loss to know how to raise money from the pockets of John Bull.
 Notice should be given at all meetings, that such petitions would be produced for signature, when, where, and all reasonable and legal means be adopted to obtain the largest possible number of signatures.
 As to it, the lovers of sobriety, economy, and health, will bless the originators of this movement, and the result will be attended with the most happy effects to our cause.
 I can the more consistently advocate this movement, as I am neither a dealer in, nor consumer of, any article of tea, I prefer the pure water from the spring; but I am anxious that those persons to whom the price is an object, and who like it, believing also that it does them no harm but good, especially as I hope many may be induced by the abolition of the duties to leave off entirely all intoxicating beverages, that ere long your labours and suggestions on this subject will be crowned with success.—I am, my dear sir, yours faithfully,
 EBENEZER CLARK.

WINE-DRINKING ADVOCATES OF TEM-PERANCE.

We need no new evidence to prove, that our moderate wine-drinking citizens are the most formidable enemies that retain the field against the progress of temperance. We know that they are strong, very strong; that they occupy the highest walks of life, and fill almost every station of honour, trust, and emolument. We know they number in their ranks the learned, the wise, and powerful.
 We cannot employ towards them any other language than that of respectable entreaty and exposition; nor would we do it if we could. No;
 we would say to our fashionable wine-drinking citizens, "Come, let us reason together." To you, gentlemen, we must address our appeal; for we recognise no other opponents in the field. The unreformed inebriate, the rum manufacturer, the rum-seller and importer, are mere supernumeraries in your camp; they wear no arms; they are under your protection, and subsist on your example and support. Gentlemen, we are your fellow-citizens.
 In many of the duties and avocations of life we walk side by side; in many of the interests of our community and country we take sweet counsel together. We can testify to the integrity of your honour, to the respectability of your standing, the cordiality of your friendship, and the munificence of your philanthropy. And we appeal to these bright qualities of the heart when we say, that there are thousands of unfortunate beings who are trying in vain to reform on your principle. At the corners of the streets you may meet scores of poor inebriates who have tried to become temperate men by following your example; but it has plunged them deeper in the mire. These side-walks are daily thronged with those who are trying to arise from habitual intoxication to the moderate use of the intoxicating cup. Alas! is it your example that is hanging out this tantalizing phantom? Will you cheat their souls with the insidious delusion, that they may again be moderate drinkers? Will you bind, with wanton hands, another stone to the willing neck of a Sisyphus, to drag him back into the fiery abyss, at each successive attempt to rise from its torments? Will you torture a Tantalus with visions of the cooling waters of life, with which he may never slake his burning lips? Shall that father who has almost strength enough to face the tempter; shall that husband who has just recommenced an existence of life and love; shall that son and brother who has just been rescued from the lee-shore of intemperance—shall these be dashed back into their original ruin by a glance at the wine that sparkles on your tables? When the shipwrecked mariner has clung to his frail plank through all the wilderness of the wintry waves, and when he is in sight of the haven of rest, will you hang out false beacon-lights, to lure him on to breakers, whence his mangled corpse shall be dashed on the shore? When, with a desperate effort, he has caught hold of the ark of safety, will you strike off his hand and leave him to sink in the waves?—
Sparks from the Anvil, by Elisha Burritt.

We read in a Berlin letter of the 31st ultimo,—
 "A singular scene took place yesterday. On an invitation of the Temperance Society, there was a meeting of 3,000 of from four to sixteen years of age. They are to complete 'the Band of Hope' for the complete abolition of the use of spirituous liquors and the propagation of gymnastic exercises.
 After singing some hymns, the band of hope separated in the midst of huzzas."

National Temperance Society.

OFFICE 11, TOKENHOUSE YARD.

VICE-PRESIDENTS.

The EARL of ARUNDEL and SURREY, M.P.
Sir Wilfrid Lawson, Bart.

R. D. Alexander, Esq.
J. B. Bassett, Esq.
Thomas Beaumont, Esq.
C. Bowly, Esq.
Samuel Bowly, Esq.
J. S. Buckingham, Esq.
Robert Charleton, Esq.
Rev. R. Clowes, M.A.
Joseph Eaton, Esq.
J. Forbes, M.D., F.R.S. & C.
S. C. Hall, Esq., B.L., F.S.A.
Lawrence Heyworth, Esq.
William Janson, Jun., Esq.
Ven. Archdeacon Jeffreys.
G. S. Kenrick, Esq.

Rev. Theobald Mathew.
W. J. Morgan, A.M., M.D.
Richard Peek, Esq.
Rev. P. Penson, M.A.
Rev. W. Reid.
Rev. W. W. Robinson, M.A.
Rev. J. Sherman.
Rev. C. Stovel.
Rev. T. Spencer, A.M.
Joseph Sturge, Esq.
Rev. W. H. Turner, M.A.
Edward Thomas, Esq.
Robert Warner, Esq.
Edward Webb, Esq.
Rev. J. Wilson.

TREASURER.

G. W. Alexander, Esq., 40, Lombard Street.

CHAIRMAN OF THE COMMITTEE.
William Cash, Esq., Peckham Rye.

EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE.

G. W. Alexander.
George W. Atwood.
Richard Barrett.
Jabez Burns, D.D.
William Cabell.
William Cash.
John Cassell.

Charles Gilpin.
Richard Hicks.
C. H. Lovell, M.D.
John Meredith.
W. W. Robinson.
T. B. Scutt.

SUPERINTENDENT OF MISSION.

John Meredith.

SECRETARY.

Thomas Beggs.

COLLECTING AGENTS.

Mr. Thomas Whittaker.
Mr. Jabez Inwards.

Mr. Thomas Hudson.
Mr. William Culverwell.

NATIONAL TEMPERANCE SOCIETY.

Minute 482.—The following letter has been received from Thomas Beggs, resigning his position as Secretary to this Society, he having accepted an appointment with the Health of Towns Association, which resignation this Committee accepts, hoping that in his new position he will still be able effectually to promote the principles of temperance.

To the Committee of the National Temperance Society.

"GENTLEMEN,—Having accepted an appointment from the Committee of the Health of Towns Association, I have to resign my office as Secretary to the National Temperance Society.

"Although a sense of duty to myself and family calls upon me to take this step, I cannot but regret the separation. I shall always feel a lively interest in your success; and in entering upon a new sphere of duty, it is satisfactory to know that in its discharge, I shall be promoting the great cause, in the advancement of which we have laboured together for a brief but eventful period.

"I am gentlemen, with every feeling of affection and esteem,

"Yours very truly,

"THOMAS BEGGS."

The Statistical Committee of this Society have been engaged in preparing the following document, which they hope to get numerously signed by employers and others having the directiion of bodies of workmen. It is commenced with that it will lead to an effectual reform of the surd and tyrannical customs which have prevailed to the disgrace and injury of the w classes of this kingdom :—

OPINION ON THE SUBJECT OF ARTIFICIAL AND PULSORY DRINKING USAGES.

We subscribers, believing that the usages of the factories and workshoshs, compulsory drink-fines and footings, le, lead to sive evil.

That their imperious character is contrary true liberty.

That such an extensive system of of cruel injustice is not kept up, so far as we know, social customs of any other nation.

That by means of this compulsory or a system, young men are often, in a ma manner, to become drunkards.

That drunkards who would wish to to reform by these domineering and arbitrary custom vented from putting their good resolutiions in

That hereby a dangerous and mischischievous many millions a-year is imposed by workn one another, without consent of the pa parties

We consider the following penaltiities, ins to keep up the drinking and paying ag of fin footings, to be of the most revolting an and opp description, viz. : sending men to coveventry, p them out of the pale of good-will andand frien and kind assistance of brother workorkmen; manly refusing to teach apprentices ces work drink footings being unpaid; constrainraining st men, who from sickness or otherwise have out of work, or indeed any parties whawhatever journeyman's drink footings, by threatreats and means; secreting men's clothes, and ad dirtyring, cutting, and destroying themem; g notching, and otherwise injuring toolools, or s both to the pawnbroker's shop, and id in a fe manner pledging them for the regulgulation fines: forming conspiracies to force ce out of shops and factories, men who decline ine to pe ings; maltreating respectable individuals c account, by taunts, mockings, a varietriety of blows, and other injuries.

We further express our disapprobation pecuniary connexion between the for foremen tories and workshops and individuals wh public-houses, or foremen keeping ig public themselves; and all bribing of foremen and by drink, to bestow work.

We object to payment of wages in pn public-as of the most extensively ruinous ten tendenc also to linking or grouping men together with bank notes or gold, leaving them to pr procure where they can. And, in conclusion, on, we b timony from our constant and painfulful expe to the injurious consequences of the ce cease unmeaning connexion that has been on constit this country between business and strostrong di a variety of ways, far too multifarionious to b enumerated.

SUBSCRIPTIONS.

	£.	s.	d.
Albright, Hannah	0	10	0	Ellis, J. Esq. Esq. (per Brayton Society	1	0	0	Mr. Meredith)
Camberwell and Peck-				Gilpin, Mr. Cr. C.
ham Society	d	1	0	0 Miller, George
Compton, Mr. T.	1	1	0	Priestman, M., Mr. S.
				Spong, E.

SPECIAL FUND.

	£.	s.	d.
Atwood, G. W., Esq.	3	6	8
Barrett, R., Jun., Esq.	2	10	0
Cassell, J., Esq.	3	6	8
Gilpin, C., Esq.	1	13	4

SUBSCRIPTIONS.

Per Mr. Hudson.		£.	s.	d.
	£ s. d.
Gawthorp, Mr. W.	1 1 0	Grosjean, J., Esq.	1	1	0
Greenwich Society	d 0 10 6	Sutton, Mr. S.	0	5	0
Harris, Mrs.	1 1 0	Smith, B., Esq.	1	1	0
Harris, Miss L.	d 5 0 0	Baynes, Messrs.	2	2	0
Harris, Miss J.	d 5 0 0	Nuding, Captain	0	5	0
Benn, P.	qly. 0 1 3	Ellard, Mr., Quar-
Pugett, J. H., Esq.	1 0 0	termaster	0	10	0
Collection, Newing-		Busbridge, G. F.	0	5	0
ton	0 10 8	Allchin, Mr. R.	0	5	0
Dunstable Society	d 0 10 0	Viner, Mr. J.	0	10	0
Thurrock Society	0 5 0	Edmit, Mr.	d 0 2 6
Per Mr. Inwards.		Aylesbury Society	d 0 10 0
Draper, J. P.	0 5 0	Brown, Miss	0 2 6
Roper, Mr.	0 10 0	Pickering, Mr. J.	0 5 0
Wilcocks, Mr. H.	0 5 0	Flower, Mr. J.	0 5 0
Gibson, Mrs. Ann	5 0 0	Willis, W., Esq.	1 1 0
Curry, Mrs.	0 5 0	Adams, W., Esq.	1 0 0
Alexander, Mr.	0 5 0	Higgins, W. H., Esq.	1 1 0
Johnston, Mr.	0 5 0	Waller, Jas., Esq.	1 0 0
Gill, Mr.	0 5 0	Waring, R. Esq.	1 1 0
Kimpton, Mr. Thos.	1 10 0	Drewitt, Mr. W.	0 5 0
Davy, Mr. W. R.	0 5 0	Hirons, Rev. J.	0 5 0
Bird, Mr. J.	0 5 0	Green, Mr. J.	0 10 0
Beebles Society	d 1 0 0	Inwards, Mr. J.	0 5 0
Knight, Mr.	0 10 0	Brown, Mr. C.	0 5 0
Bird, Mr. H.	0 5 0	Balltrop, Mrs.	0 5 0
Price, Mr. R.	0 5 0	Bird, Mr. H.	0 10 0
Hawkins, Mr. W.	0 5 0	Per Mr. Culverwell.
Gwennap, Miss	0 5 0	Barger, Mr.	d 0 1 0
Per Mr. Whittaker.		Bradley, Mr.	d 0 5 0
Gutteridge, R., Esq.	1 0 0	Homes, Mr.	d 1 0 0
Gutteridge, J., Esq.	0 10 0	Welch, Mr.	0 5 0
		Pearson, Mr.	1 1 0

CONFERENCE OF MINISTERS.

An advertisement appears in this Chronicle respecting a Conference of Ministers of Religion. This Conference is convened by a resolution adopted at the Annual Conference of the British Association for the Promotion of Temperance. We call special attention to it, as we entertain a hope that it will lead to some practical step to enlist the powerful aid of a class of men, who having immense influence, have unfortunately used it against the temperance cause, or have maintained an indignant neutrality with respect to it. The time has come when they will be required by public opinion to take some decided course in a question, which is enlisting the attention and sympathy of all classes of the community. We urge the friends of temperance to take prompt measures to give effect to the meeting.

AGENCY.

In this department there has been great activity during the past month. Public meetings in London and in various parts of the country under the auspices of different local societies have been held, at which one or more of the agents has attended as a deputation from the National Society.

SHADWELL—August 21st.—Mr. Jabez Inwards lectured to a very crowded and attentive audience at Fox's Lane.

BROADWAY WESTMINSTER.—Mr. Inwards and Mr. Whittaker delivered addresses in the temperance Hall, Broadway, August 23rd. The meeting was one of a deeply interesting character. On the same day, Mr. Culverwell addressed a meeting at Hammersmith, and Mr. T. Hudson attended a festive meeting at Portland Town, when Dr. Oxley presided.

PECKHAM, 25TH.—A meeting attended by Messrs. Inwards and Culverwell. On the same evening, Messrs. Hudson and Whittaker delivered addresses to a large assembly in the Friends' Meeting-house, Deptford.

STANHOPE STREET.—A more than usually interesting meeting took place in the school-room, in connexion with the Wesleyan Chapel, addressed by Messrs. Spriggs, Hudson and Whittaker.

WOOLWICH.—On the 30th of August, Mr. Hudson addressed a meeting in the Temperance Hall, of this town. Addresses were also given by Messrs. Inwards and Culverwell on the 13th of September; and a lecture to a very crowded meeting, by Mr. Inwards on the 20th ultimo.

WEST MALLING.—Mr. T. Whittaker addressed a meeting, on September 1st. The attendance was not numerous, but there was a good impression.

ALBANY CHAPEL SCHOOL-ROOM.—A meeting took place in the above room, on September 4th; which was addressed by Messrs. Culverwell and Spriggs.

SOMERS TOWN, Sept. 6th.—Mr. Whittaker.

BROADWAY, WESTMINSTER.—Mr. Inwards to an overflowing house.

PRINCES' STREET, WESTMINSTER.—Festival and public meeting; addressed by R. Garde, Esq., Mr. Thomas Beggs, and Messrs. Balfour and Culverwell.

STOKE NEWINGTON.—Public meeting, addressed by Mr. J. Buckle and Mr. Thomas Hudson.

WHETSTONE, NEAR BARNET.—Sept. 7th, being Barnet Fair, J. H. Puget, Esq., well known for his benevolence and sympathy with the working classes, provided a sumptuous tea for about 60 of the navigators now at work on the London and York Line. The men assembled at 6 o'clock, and having regaled themselves, Mr. Puget addressed them in very affectionate terms, thanking them for the preference they had given him over Barnet Fair. Mr. T. Hudson then addressed them at considerable length. It is the intention of Mr. Puget to keep up fortnightly meetings of a similar description, and to throw open the excellent Infant-school for the purposes of reading and instructive conversation.

AYLESBURY.—Mr. T. Whittaker addressed a large number of youths in this town. The meeting was one of a very interesting character.

KENSINGTON—Sept. 8th.—Mr. Inwards and Mr. Culverwell.

DUNSTABLE.—Mr. Whittaker and Mr. Hudson attended a festival in this town, over which Mr. Harris of St. Albans presided with much ability.

LUTON—Sept. 9th.—Messrs. Hudson and Whittaker addressed a very numerous and highly respectable meeting, on the occasion of a festival being held in this place. The Rev. J. Hirons presided. A second meeting was held on the following night, addressed by Mr. Thomas Hudson.

SUFFOLK STREET, BOROUGH, Sep. 13th.—Messrs. Beggs, Whittaker, the Rev. James Sherman, and others attended a festive meeting at the above rooms. G. Atwood, Esq., occupied the chair.

DORKING—Sept. 17th.—Mr. Hudson delivered a lecture in the Friends' meeting-house.

UXBRIDGE—Aug. 30th and 31st.—Mr. Inwards had crowded meetings in the Assembly Rooms ; a powerful impression was produced.

WALWORTH AND CAMBERWELL—A very large meeting was convened in the National School, Newington, Butts, on the 30th of August. W. Simms, Esq., presided, pro tem, until the arrival of John Cassell, Esq. The meeting was eloquently addressed by Messrs. Whittaker, Hudson, and T. A. Smith.

Such is only an outline of the numerous, highly interesting and effective meetings held during the past month, in connexion with the National Society.

Foreign Intelligence.

HOBART TOWN.

We have been favoured with the sight of a letter from Hobart Town, from which we are permitted to make the following extract :—

"I became the coadjutor of the truly great and excellent George Washington Walker, in the establishment of a Total Abstinence Society, of which he was the Treasurer and I the Secretary. Hundreds joined us. After which we saw fit to separate, and form a new society upon a christian basis. The reasons for this course, in a land where so much depravity exists, may at once present themselves to your mind. Possibly you have heard all from Mr. Backhouse, through his friend Mr. G. W. Walker. The christian friend, Mr. Tacey, who bears this, is a member of our Committee, and can explain all.

"In our Van Diemen's Land Total Abstinence Society, Mr. Walker is our President, a Wesleyan, an Independent, and a Baptist Minister, are our Vice-Presidents, the Secretary, myself. Though established but a few months, God is prospering us. We have four branch societies. One of these at the penal settlement of Port Arthur, numbers already above four hundred. At Launceston a most flourishing society exists. There are in the country altogether twelve societies, numbering nearly 5000. At Sydney, the work goes on well. At Melbourne are two good societies. At Adelaide a noble cause is rising. In no part of the world is teetotalism so needed as here. In olden times, it was customary to purchase a pail of rum, and a number of friends would sit round, drink and sleep, drink and sleep, till all was gone. Had I time I could tell of many a tale of woe, and could speak of scenes of returning joy, but a longer letter will reach you shortly. "JAMES BONWICK."

Home Intelligence.

LEEDS TEMPERANCE SOCIETY ANNIVERSARY.

(Abridged from the Leeds Times.)

Two meetings have taken place at the Music Hall, this week, in celebration of the sixteenth anniversary of this progressing association. The first was on Monday evening, and was very fully attended. The Indian chief, Maun-Gwu-Daus, and one of his red brethren were on the platform, to bear testimony by their presence to the dire evils of the "fire-water," which our countrymen must take blame to themselves for having introduced among the aborigines of the American continent and elsewhere.

Mr. G. W. HARRISON, of Wakefield, was called to the chair, and in opening the meeting, said, for a measure, and stated the probability that the twelve years he had been a teetotaler. Adverting to his own conversion to teetotalism, Mr. Harrison stated, that he owed it to his lamented friend Mr. Andrew, who first urged him to try the system. With regard to their late and deeply lamented friend Mr. Andrew, he must say that every one who knew him, knew a man whose love for his fellow-creatures was very great—whose love for this cause was such as they seldom meet with—whose desire to do good as far as possible was entitled to veneration and respect.

Mr. THORNTON, the secretary, read the report. The report says that there has never been a year in the annals of [the Leeds Temperance Society, in which temperance principles have been more freely, fully and successfully disseminated in this populous and important town, than during the last. The various public meetings are then enumerated, and especial attention is directed to the recently established monthly meetings, and which out rival any thing which the Leeds Temperance Society ever attempted or achieved. Our periodical literature it observes, continues to improve, both in quality and quantity, so much so as to bear comparison with any serial publication of our times. The newspaper press, generally speaking, begins also to view and treat the question more favourably ; the three Leeds newspapers manifest, at all times, by their willingness to insert paragraphs or reports sent to them, their general approval and sympathy with our principles." The circumstance of two successful galas in one year, will make the balance in the hands of the treasurer somewhat larger than usual. The dependence of the society for support upon these annual galas, however lucrative they may have been, is, at best, but precarious. Special reference is made to the temperance medical certificate introduced by John Dunlop, Esq., and signed by fifty-two out of seventy-eight medical men, waited upon in Leeds, and by seven resident in the out-townships and villages adjacent. The death of Mr. Joshua Dyson and Mr. Joseph Andrew are adverted to, and deeply deplored. "At the sittings of the Bolton Conference last month, it was decided to convene a conference of ministers, to be held in Manchester next April, which it is hoped may tend to promote the cause amongst that influential class, and remove the reproach which somewhat attaches to them, as the opponents, or at all events the impediments to the spread of the cause." "Mr. Jervis Crane, late Town Missionary to this society, recently resigned his office, on removing from the town, and Mr. J. C. Winterbottom has been appointed his successor, with every prospect of usefulness. The Committee beg herewith to record their high respect for the character and labours of their late agent, whose services they much regretted to lose. It is stated—"most of the friends of temperance will be aware that an attempt will be made in the next Parliament to bring in and carry through a bill for prohibiting the sale of intoxicating liquors on Sundays. This step has originated with the British Association for the Promotion of Temperance. The prospects of success in the matter are highly encouraging, inasmuch as the Government last session admitted the principle by introducing a clause into their Model Police Bill, which closed public-houses half the Sunday, and beer-houses the whole day. This clause was afterwards withdrawn, but it is thought that it is sufficiently indicative that if strongly urged and pressed by the country at large, they are not averse to such a regulation. One of the bishops has also declared his willingness to promote such right reverend bench would look with favour on such a bill." "At the recent sittings of the Evangelical Alliance at Edinburgh, a report was brought up from the Southern Division by that eminent and godly man, the Rev. E. Bickersteth, and among the topics suggested for investigation was 'the connexion between Infidelity and Teetotal Societies.' This allusion excited the most painful feelings in the minds of many teetotalers, members of the Alliance, and a conversation ensued, which resulted in a modification of the phraseology." "It may be remarked, that at one of the weekly meetings of the society, shortly after receiving the circular referred to, at which about 200 persons were present, it was proposed that a show of hands should be taken on the following points:—First, how many are there here who have adopted a course of infidelity since becoming teetotalers? Secondly, how many have united themselves to Christian churches since they have joined the temperance society? Thirdly, how many now at this meeting regularly attend a place of worship, who before becoming teetotalers never did go to such places! To the first proposition no hand was held up; to the second twenty hands; and to the third forty-four were raised. It is a great pity that such a respectable body of men as compose the Evangelical Alliance, or at all events the 'Southern Division,' should have so far gone out of their way as to make such a wanton and gratuitous insult on a society, which comprises many of the most excellent of the earth, and which has been the means of rescuing thousands not merely from temporal ruin, but from spiritual destruction. It would have a much more intelligent and instructive query to have propounded for investigation, Has any society been the means of adding more to the Christian Church than the Temperance Society? The committee respectfully suggest such a question to the serious consideration of the southern division of the Evangelical Alliance when next they meet. The committee have recently added a new rule, (or rather an addition to rule 3rd), to their code of laws, which they desire to be generally known, viz., 'That ministers of the gospel residing in Leeds, being members of the society, shall be ex officio members of the committee.' Two ministers have taken their seats at the weekly meetings of the committee since this rule was added."

Mr. NOTHAM, the treasurer, then read the statement of accounts, from which it appeared that the total receipts during the past year, including £148. 3s. 8d.—being the balance in hand last year—amounted to £661. 11s. 8½d., and the expenditure to £372, leaving a balance in hand of £289. 11s. 8½d.

The Rev. JOSHUA PRIESTLY, of Wath, and Mr. THOMPSON proposed and seconded the adoption of the report.

Dr. F. R. LEES proposed the adoption of a resolution expressive of thankfulness for the blessings and success which had attended the labours of the society during the past year, and pledging those present to renewed exertions in the temperance cause. He declined, on account of the lateness of the hour, making a speech, and said he should address the meeting of Tuesday at more length. He, however, expressed his conviction that their cause was the cause of morality and philanthropy.

Mr. BORNOND, of York, briefly seconded the resolution.

On Tuesday evening, the Music Hall was densely crowded, in consequence of the presence of several American Indians, attired in their native costume. Maun-gwu-daus, a chief, in very intelligible English, addressed the meeting, giving an account of their travels with Mr. Catlin, the celebrated writer upon Indian manners and customs, and in reference to the main question of the evening, described the devastating effects of the "fire-waters" amongst the Indian tribes. To their introduction he ascribed nearly all the evils with which the race of red men have been visited since their first intercourse with Europeans; and regarded them as the greatest enemies to the progress of civilization. At the same time, while he viewed the evils of his race as springing from European intercourse, on the other hand he offered his most willing testimony to the great amount of good which had been accomplished by the labours of our Christian missionaries, who had done much by persuasion and example in stopping the progress of the "fire-water" curse. The Indian was followed by Dr. F. R. LEES, who entered into a physiological view of the injurious effects of intoxicating drinks upon the human frame, and in a speech abounding with powerful argument, proved that the practice of total abstinence was most conducive to a sound state of health. Several other speakers also addressed the meeting in favour of the total abstinence principle, adding their own personal testimony to its good effects.

On Wednesday evening, Mrs. CARLISLE delivered a lecture, especially addressed to females, in South Parade Chapel, on the advantages of total abstinence principles, and soliciting for it their influence and support.

BOLTON.

Annual Licensing Day.

Thursday last being the day appointed for granting innkeepers' licenses.

MR. TAYLOR appeared before the bench for the purpose of presenting a petition from some of the most respectable inhabitants of the borough, representing their feelings in reference to the subject now before the court. In what he had to say, he wished it to be understood, that it was not his wish to attack any one, or to say anything personally offensive either to the publicans or the beersellers. The principal ground upon which the applications for new licenses were made was, that such houses were necessary for public convenience, in addition to the interest of the parties who sought to enhance the value of their property. In one case it was said, that there were large works erected in the neighbourhood, and that a public-house would be a convenience to the workpeople. Now, so far from this being the case, he should say that it was quite the contrary. If there were a number of workpeople in the neighbourhood, the best thing that could be done would be to keep the public-house away from them. Let it be proved how much better works, with 700 hands, can prosper without this adjunct. Besides, additional public-houses were quite uncalled for. If the map of Bolton were laid down, and nothing but inns and beer-houses marked upon it, few people would perceive the difference. It would be like a map of the veins and arteries of the body, the whole space appearing to be occupied. There were 117 public-houses; 211 beer-houses selling on the premises; and 15 selling off the premises—making a total of 343. He would not say how many breweries, private stills, hush shops, and gin-palaces there were to be found, for it was impossible to tell. In the words of Mr. Roebuck, however, he might say, that their name was "legion;" yet, notwithstanding this, there were applications from fifteen persons for fresh licenses, on the ground of public convenience! It was known, however, that an increase of such places was always attended with demoralizing consequences, and if the magistrates were to grant the applications now, the number next year would be increased four-fold. Three or four years ago, seven or eight were granted, and now they had fifteen applications. By putting a fictitious value upon property, by means of licenses, encouragement was given to building houses. But let it be understood that no more licenses will be granted, and they will soon see how many will build houses for the convenience of the public, when they are not likely to be profitable speculations. The Mayor had already stated that the beer-houses had been weighed in the balance and found wanting. They brought ruin, desolation, and degradation upon thousands. This was not an idea of the imagination, but a positive fact. Mr. Harris, in his statistical tables, stated that in 1846, there were 117 public-houses, and 200 beer-shops, making a total of 317, whereas, in 1847, they amount to 342, making an increase of 25 in twelve months. Let us see, then, how this increase has worked, and what are the effects it has had upon the population. The trade of the town had been worse—provisions dear—rates high—and labour scarce—which would have led to the supposition, that drinking would be less. Such, however, had not been the case. In 1846, there were taken up by the police for being drunk and disorderly or incapable, 637 males, and 164 females: whereas, in 1847 the number had increased to 715 males, and 176 females. Such being the state of things now, what might they expect if an addition of fifteen were made to the number of public-houses! Even in point of revenue, it would be a saving not to grant those licenses. Three out of every five prisoners brought before the bench might trace their causes to drunkenness, and the expense of their keep, prosecution, &c., was considerable. In the borough there were from 7000 to 8000 inhabited houses, so that they had one house for the sale of liquors to every 25; and, taking the population, they had one to every 200 persons. So far as his experience, as coroner, went, he could confirm this melancholy account of the results of intoxication. Of 70 inquests held during the year, the cause of death in 14 of them was drunkenness. He asked the magistrates, then, to stem this evil. The memorial was signed by ministers of every denomination, and he (Mr. Taylor) trusted that the magistrates would co-operate with them in putting the monster evil—drunkenness—which was now desolating the land.

The magistrates then retired, and, after consulting for about three-quarters of an hour, returned into court, when the Mayor stated that no new license would be granted.

MANCHESTER.

Lecture on drinking customs. On Monday evening a lecture on the evils arising from the present drinking customs of society, and the desirableness of establishing a "model parish," with a view to eradicate them, was delivered in the Mechanics' Institution Lecture Hall, by the Rev. W. Wight, B.A. There was a very numerous and highly-respectable audience; W. Beaumont, Esq., the mayor, presided. On the platform, we observed Mr. Ald. Hadfield, Mr. P. Rylands, Mr. E. Robinson, Mr. T. G. Rylands, the Rev. P. P. Carpenter, Mr. N. Cooke, Mr. Smith, of Penketh, and several other gentlemen resident in the town and advocates of the temperance movement. After a few introductory observations from the mayor, the Rev. W. Wight came forward, and was warmly received. In the course of his address, which lasted nearly three hours, he strongly condemned the drinking customs of this kingdom, and showed at considerable length the evils and immoralities resulting from them. He was afraid that although our nation might be said to be pre-eminent in good works, it was also pre-eminent in whatever was degrading to our nature and dishonouring to God. We had unparalleled wealth, a multitude of churches, chapels, schools, and benevolent institutions; numerous clergymen, school-masters, Sunday school teachers, town missionaries, &c.; and yet, notwithstanding all these, the amount of pauperism, irreligion, ignorance, immorality and crime, was most appalling. They might talk of infidel France, but the amount of crime there, had no proportion to that of Protestant England. We had 114,193 children without education, although we boasted of our educational efforts; and it has been estimated, that upwards of a million and a half of our youthful fellow-creatures went forth into society every ten years entirely ignorant. In London alone there were 10,000 prostitutes, and it has been estimated that the total number of these unfortunate creatures in this country was 228,000. Medical testimony showed that their average life was five years, showing 228,000 of these wretched females were swept off every five years. There was no Sabbath observance among us; in one place he knew of, there were 70,000 inhabitants, and of these 30,000 attended no place of worship whatever; and in most places it was found on the average, that two-thirds of the people never attended church or chapel. On this point a comparison of the most enlightened of our parishes at home, with even the worst of our missionary settlements, was greatly in favour of the latter. The country was studded with huge workhouses, gaols, and penitentiaries, and on inquiry from their inmates, it would be found that with most of them intemperance had been the cause of their misfortunes.—After some further statistical information, drawn from lunatic hospitals and houses of correction, in illustration of his views, the lecturer called upon the meeting to discourage these pernicious customs by every means in their power, and to aid in whatever aimed at their entire annihilation. In conclusion, he explained a scheme he had devised for the purpose, which he called the "model parish," and which, if carried out, he was of opinion would effect not only local reformation, but ultimately national improvement. He proposed to obtain, as early as possible, a district in some central part of the kingdom if possible, where a new population was springing up. This district to be secured in perpetuity to five trustees; here a school would be erected in the first place, and the funds augmented, the trustees would proceed to the erection of a church, parsonage, schools, and a college. Of course the clergyman and teachers must set the example of total abstinence from all the drinking customs of society and all intoxicating drinks, and be prepared on suitable occasions to impress upon the children the importance of never acquiring a taste for such beverage.—The rev. gentleman was listened to with the most marked attention during his lecture; and after a vote of thanks to the mayor, the proceedings terminated shortly before eleven o'clock. The admission to the lecture was gratuitous, but donations were received at the door in aid of the funds for establishing the "model parish."

THE ROYAL HOUSEHOLD.—An account of the expenditure of the Royal Household has lately been published. Amongst the items are the following: Wine, £4850; Liquors, &c., £1843; Ale and Beer, £2811; upwards of £9,500, annually for intoxicating drinks. A good round sum.

LUTON.

The annual meeting of this Total Abstinence Society was held here on Thursday last, on which occasion the Rev. J. Hirons presided. The public meeting commenced at seven o'clock, it was highly respectable, and one of the most interesting meetings ever held in this town. Messrs. Whittaker and Hudson were present from the National Temperance Society, and gave very animated and spirited addresses, with which the audience seemed much delighted. The National Temperance Society in engaging such efficient agents, could not possibly have hit upon a more effectual plan of securing for the principles of total abstinence, a more favourable consideration from thinking and reflective minds. Mr. Hudson delivered a lecture in the same place on the following evening, which was very effective, and well attended.

W. INWARDS.

GREAT SUFFOLK STREET.

A tea-party and festival to celebrate the anniversary of the Temperance Society meeting in this place, was held on Monday the 13th of September: G. W. Atwood presided, who after a few introductory remarks, introduced Mr. Thomas Whittaker. The meeting was afterwards addressed by the Rev. James Sherman, Mr. Claridge, Mr. Thomas Beggs, and Mr. T. A. Smith. The audience seemed highly pleased with the addresses.

SHADWELL.

On Tuesday evening, Sept. 21st, a festival was held at Fox's Lane, Shadwell. Notwithstanding the unfavourable state of the weather, a numerous and respectable company sat down to tea.

Dr. OXLEY presided, and introduced the business of the evening, by alluding to the progress which their principles had made since they first held temperance meetings in that locality. After fifty years' experience of teetotalism, he was convinced that whether they looked at the subject physically, socially, or religiously, all persons would be greatly benefited by becoming teetotalers.

Mr. THOMAS BEGGS took a review of the past progress and present position of Teetotalism. He did not think that we were doing all that we ought to do, but, he believed, that our cause never stood better than it did at present. We had a broader platform on which to base our future operations than we ever had.

Mr. CULVERWELL regarded the progressive spirit everywhere witnessed as the most important feature of the present age. The various associations for promoting social, political, moral and intellectual improvement, were all manifestations of this spirit. Temperance societies occupied a high place amongst such institutions, and were calculated to do more to elevate the working-classes of society than the efforts of all others put together.

Mr. GREEN stated an important fact in reference to the question proposed in the Evangelical Alliance, as to the connexion between teetotalism and infidelity. He had written to Mr. Bickersteth, asking him if he had brought the subject forward from any circumstance having come to his knowledge leading him to entertain such an opinion. Mr. B. had sent him a very courteous reply stating, that he had merely introduced the subject officially, that he knew of no instance in which teetotalism had led to infidelity, while he was acquainted with many persons in his own parish, whom it had not only reclaimed from intemperate habits, but had been the means of introducing to spiritual benefits.

Rev. J. KENNEDY of Stepney, mentioned an interesting circumstance of an individual who had been an Infidel, but after he became a teetotaler, he joined a Christian Church, and had made himself exceedingly useful in connexion with various benevolent movements. Some schools in the town in which he resided being in debt, he, in conjunction with some working-men, formed a Committee, and by canvassing the town, in about ten days, they obtained between four and five hundred pounds, clearing away the debt and leaving a balance in hand towards their future support.

Mr. BUCKLE, Mr. BURT and Mr. APPEGATE, also delivered appropriate addresses.

Literary Notices.

Sparks from the Anvil, by ELIHU BURRITT, A.M., 12mo. C. GILPIN, Bishopsgate Street.

The name of Elihu Burritt is a sufficient introduction to this little work, which we have read with much pleasure. They are glowing thoughts, eloquently expressed—coming from a mind truly benevolent and enlightened, and imbued with a deep sense of christian obligation. The author's views on all the movements of the day are given, and we cordially recommend the temperance public to read it. One of these sparks, not the best, but one most appropriate to our columns, we have given in another place.

The People's Temperance Journal and Social Reformer. BRITAIN.

The last number of this Journal contains a well written article from the pen of Dr. Firth on "Crime not so much the effect of ignorance or want of education as of intemperance." We regret we have only room for the following extract:

"The recent report of the chaplain of Parkhurst Penitentiary shows that education has been rapidly extending among our criminal population. Of 900 boys in that penitentiary, only 38 had been in no school, while nearly 700, or 7 out of 9, had been upon an average three years and a half under instruction. Mr. Charles Pearson, the city solicitor, in a lecture recently delivered at the Crosby-hall Institution, on the Causes of the Increase of Crime, disclaiming any disposition to disparage the benefit of education, remarked, that 'the extensive diffusion of popular education was one of the glorious characteristics of the age, and had produced the greatest improvement in the moral and social condition of the people. But when the indiscreet advocates of education teach the public to look to it as the means, and the only means of checking the growth of crime, in a country enjoying a high state of civilization, they do great mischief to the interests they desire to promote, by placing the cause of education upon a false issue; for while the population has increased but 60 per cent., the education of the humbler classes has been augmented more than 600 per cent. The cause of the alarming increase of crime must, therefore, be looked for in some other circumstances; it was the result, in his opinion, of causes quite irrespective of education.' And in the county of Middlesex, from September 29th 1843 to April 1846, of 2,032 young thieves, 1,694 had been educated.

Advertisements.

TEMPERANCE

PROVIDENT INSTITUTION,
39, MOORGATE STREET,

THE RULES of this Institution have been now revised, and copies will be ready for delivery in a few days. A NEW DEPARTMENT has been added for the Assurance of Joint Lives, in which two persons (a husband and wife, for example) can secure a sum of money, payable at the death of either, whichever may happen to die first.

DEPOSIT ASSURANCES are also granted, the premiums payable at any time, and withdrawable without deduction, at the Members' convenience.

BORROWERS in Building Societies can also assure for the term their Societies are calculated to last, at greatly reduced premiums, and with the option of reducing the amount from time to time at their own convenience.

Full particulars, with Tables, Rules, and Forms of Application, may be had gratis at the offices—39, Moorgate Street, London; 4, Princess Street, Manchester; 5, Drury Street, Glasgow; and 20, Bristo Street, Edinburgh, and of the different Local Agents.

N.B.—Agents are wanted in many of the provincial towns.

NATIONAL

TEMPERANCE SOCIETY.

THE COMMITTEE of the NATIONAL TEMPERANCE SOCIETY are anxious of meeting with a gentleman to act as SECRETARY to that Society.

Application to be made by letter, addressed to the CHAIRMAN, at the Office of the Society, No. 11, Tokenhouse Yard, Lothbury.

THE SCOTTISH

TEMPERANCE REVIEW

is published on the first day of each Month, under the superintendence of the Executive Committee of the SCOTTISH TEMPERANCE LEAGUE, and contains 48 pages, octavo, of Original Articles, Essays, Reviews, and Illustrative Tales, by the most eminent writers on Temperance, with a careful selection of Temperance News and miscellaneous information.

The REVIEW is stamped, and is therefore transmissible by post to any address, and after being read, may be re-posted.

PRICE—3d. each No., or 3s. per annum, always payable in advance.

If 3s. in silver, or postage-stamps, be enclosed in a pre-paid letter to ROBERT RAE, at the Publishing-office, the REVIEW will be sent by Post for Twelve Months.

GLASGOW:—Published at the Office of the Scottish Temperance League, 30, St. Enoch Square.

CONFERENCE

OF

MINISTERS OF RELIGION,

CONVENED BY THE BRITISH ASSOCIATION FOR THE PROMOTION OF TEMPERANCE.

PRINCIPLE.—That the use of Intoxicating Liquors is entirely unnecessary to the healthy human system, and is productive of a frightful amount of social and moral evil.

At the Conference of the British Association for the Promotion of Temperance, held at Bolton in July last, it was unanimously resolved to invite all the Ministers of Religion, in the United Kingdom who abstain from intoxicating liquors, to meet in Manchester, during the month of April 1848, for which meeting extensive preparations are now being made.

The principle on which the Conference is convened is exceedingly broad, and one it is presumed in which all abstainers can heartily join.

The immediate objects of the Conference will be—1st, To devise means for aiding the effort to obtain the prohibition of the "Sunday Traffic," should that regulation not be previously attained; and, 2nd, To adopt measures for securing the co-operation of Christians generally on behalf of the Temperance Reformation.

The importance of this movement can hardly be too highly appreciated. It will doubtless exert an influence in our own country and the world, and be the means of securing respectful and prayerful attention to the Temperance Question, which it is to be regretted has hitherto to a lamentable extent been refused.

The following Ministers have kindly consented to act as the Preliminary Committee, and will meet in Manchester the day preceding the Conference to arrange the business for the general meeting. In the meantime all correspondence, &c., will be conducted by the Lay-Secretaries:—

Rev. P. Penson, Vicar of St. Oswalds.	Rev. Dr. Bates Glasgow.
" J. M. Holt, Vicar of Pulstow.	" John Ritchie, M.A., D.D., Edinbro'.
" W. R. Baker, London.	" T. M. Saul, Manchester.
" W. J. Shrewsbury, Retford.	" E. Darke ditto.
" R. Tabraham, Clitheroe.	" G. Lamb, Hull.
" Aquila Keene, York.	" T. G. Lee, Manchester.
" P. Carpenter, Warrington	" Enoch Griffiths, Necton.
" Thomas Savage, Bedale.	" Walter Scott, Airedale College.
" H. Hebron, North Shields.	" Newman Hall, B.A., Hull.
" W. Wight, B.A., Newcastle-on-Tyne.	" William Morgan, B.A., Bradford.
" B. Evans, Scarbro'	" William Roaf, Wigan.
" R. H. Hare, Brigg.	" John Peters, Manchester.
" J. Thompson, Bradford.	" William McKerrow, do.
" H. Solly, Cheltenham.	" Owen Jones, do.
" W. Patterson, Liverpool.	" T. A. Bayley, do.
" J. L. Poore, Manchester.	" J. Gutteridge, do.
" J. Handley, Stockport.	" William Johnson, Limekilns, Scotland.
" William Reid, Edinbro'.	" W. J. Stewart, Hull.
" F. Howarth, Bury.	" Edward Weeks, Dewsberry.
" Joshua Priestly, Wath.	" Theophilus Pugh, Dover.
" Hugh Bourne, Tunstall.	" J. Jenkinson, Kettering.
" R. Martin, Heckmondwike.	" Mr. John Candler, Chelmsford.

The Committee will feel obliged if such Ministers as practise the principle of abstinence, will transmit their names and address to the office of the Association, 3, Low Ousegate, York, stating also the denomination to which they belong. As, however, it is possible this address may not meet the eye of every Minister it will be esteemed a favour if the Secretaries of Temperance Societies throughout the United Kingdom, will forward the names of the Ministers in their respective localities who are known to abstain from Intoxicating Drinks.

SECRETARIES.

FREDERICK HOPWOOD and THOMAS MONKHOUSE, YORK,
ROBERT JONES, WILLIAM GRIMSHAW, and WILLIAM HOWARTH, MANCHESTER.

A special subscription for defraying the expense connected with the above meeting has been commenced, and the under-mentioned sums have been received or promised. Further assistance is urgently solicited, and will be thankfully received and duly acknowledged by the Secretaries at the office, 3, Low Ousegate, York.

N. Y.	..	£5	0	0	Grimsby Society	£0	10	0
Leeds Society		5	0	0	Bolton do.	3	0	0
York do.		5	0	0	Bridlington do.	1	0	0
Manchester do.		5	0	0	J. W. Miatt, So.	}	0	10	0
Barton do.		2	0	0	Shields
Bradford do.		2	2	0	Fred. Hopwood	1	0	0
Bury do.		1	0	0	Campbell, London	5	0	0
Wigan do.		2	0	0	Hull Christian	}	2	0	0
Doncaster do.		3	12	6	Temp. Society
Thirsk do.		0	10	0

IPSWICH JUVENILE TEMPERANCE BOOKS.

In 32mo., illustrated with handsome woodcuts, in sixpenny packets, of glazed coloured paper.

	PAGES		PAGES
1. The History of Teetotalism	20	18. What Little Boys can do for Teetotalism ...	12
2. Scriptural Teetotalism	20	19. Little Mary	16
3. Teetotalism of Ancient History	20	20. Lucy Grey and her Pet Pigeon	8
4. Teetotalism of Modern History	20	21. What Little Girls can do for Teetotalism.....	12
5. The cost of Intemperance.....	20	22. Poor Little Willie.....	12
6. Self-denial	20	23. The Sixpenny Glass of Wine	12
7. Early Habits	20	24. The Town Meeting ; License or no License...	12
8. The Force of Example	20	25. The Unexplored Island.....	12
9. A Letter to Sunday School Children	20	26. Is I not happy	12
10. H. Hawkins, the Drunkard's Daughter	20	27. The Apprentice Lad	20
11. Christian Courtesy and Benevolence.....	20	28. The Power of Custom	20
12. The Young Chemist's Inquiry	20	29. Biographical Gleanings—Examples	20
13. Little Henry and the Teetotal Festival	20	30. Ditto ditto. —Warnings	20
14. The Young Reasoner's Objections to Teetotalism	20	31. The Guide to Glendalough	12
15. The Fear of Ridicule.....	20	32. Bridget Lartum.....	12
16. The Teetotalism of Travellers	20	ASSORTED PACKETS.—No. 1, 1 to 16—No. 2, 17 to 32,
17. Temptation Resisted	12	inclusive.

IPSWICH TEMPERANCE TRACTS.

Those Tracts marked with an * have PICTURES and are on better paper, 150 pages, in a sixpenny packet. The others have 168 pages to the packet.

	PAGES		PAGES
1 The Doctor Scrutinized, or for what purpose do Physicians prescribe Alcoholic Beverages, by R. D. Alexander, F.L.S., 122 thousand...	8	*44 A Sailor's Yarn	4
2 Striking Facts, 84 thousand	2	45 Moderate Drinking Calmly Considered	12
3 Maker and Vender, 44 thousand	2	46 The Pledge.....	4
4 Our Creed, 52 thousand	2	*47 John Jarvis, or the Pledge Signed	12
5 Adulterated Beer, 34 thousand	4	*48 The Fifteen Friends	4
6 Adulterated Wine, 40 thousand	4	49 Sunday School Teachers, 22 thousand	12
7 The Maltster, 37 thousand	4	50 Sunday School Children, 40 thousand	12
8 Go Feel what I have Felt, 53 thousand	2	*51 Money better than Beer, 37 thousand	4
9 Facts are Stubborn Things, 53 thousand	2	*52 Little Mary ; or a Daughter's Love	8
*10 The Spirit Dealer, 35 thousand	2	53 Philosophy of Temperance by R. T. Trall, M.D. 20
11 Christian Teetotalism, 70 thousand	2	54 Love to Man, or an Appeal to the Pious.....	20
12 The Trade, 33 thousand	4	*55 The Young Woman's Tract.....	12
13 Alcohol, 33 thousand	4	56 The Young Man's Tract	16
14 The Town of Ipswich, 33 thousand	4	57 Dr. Campbell's Testimony, 18 thousand	8
*15 Song of the Water Drinker, 37 thousand	2	58 Why Sign the Pledge? 40 thousand	2
16 Stimulation not Strength, 30 thousand	8	59 The Poor Man's House Repaired	4
17 Farmer Woodman's Speech, 41 thousand	4	60 The Mother's Tract	8
*18 The Beer Barrel Examined, 33 thousand	3	61 The High Price of Food	4
19 Teetotal Recipes, 38 thousand	4	62 Ladies' Tract Societies	8
*20 Speech of J. J. Gurney, 30 thousand	4	63 The Praise of Water, 25 thousand	2
21 Pity the Poor Drunkard 49 thousand	2	64 Important Calculation, 30 thousand.....	2
22 The Fool's Pence, 25 thousand	8	*65 The Farm Servant, 25 thousand	2
23 Why am I a Teetotaler? 26 thousand	2	66 Teetotalism Declining, 15 thousand	8
*24 Dost thou smoke, Bill? 34 thousand	4	*67 The Reformed Drunkard, 20 thousand	8
25 William the Laudanum Drinker, 30 thousand	4	68 The Recruit of the British Legion.....	8
26 The Ox Discourse	4	69 No. 1 of Temperance Anecdotes	12
27 Letter to the Clergy, by a Brother Clergyman, 21 thousand	20	70 No. 2 ditto	12
28 Common Sense, 20 thousand.....	2	71 No. 3 ditto	12
29 Ralph the Soldier	4	72 No. 4 ditto	12
30 Testimony of Eminent Physicians, 30 thousand	4	73 Luke Husler, or "I did not like to say No.".....	8
31 The Working Man, 35 thousand.....	20	74 The Drunkard's Wife	8
32 Is I not happy? by Hugh Stowell, 30 thousand	4	75 The Unexplored Island	4
33 David the Shoemaker, 49 thousand	4	76 Ancient Wines ; by R. D. Alexander.....	8
34 The Drunken Couple, 48 thousand	2	77 Influence of Example, 15 thousand	2
35 Confessions of a drunkard, 29 thousand	2	*78 The Victim of Excitement.
36 Master Tailor, 20 thousand	4	*79 My Medical Adviser does not approve of Teetotalism.
37 The Fatal Gift, 36 thousand.....	2	*80 The Restoration.
38 Poor Sandy.....	4	ASSORTED PACKETS.—No. 1, containing 1 to 31.—No. 2,
39 Use & abuse, by Archdeacon Jeffreys, 34 thousand	2	32 to 55.—No. 3, 56, and upwards.
40 The Schoolmaster	4	Fifty Packets of Juvenile Temperance Books or Tracts
41 Water is est, by J. J. Gurney, 37 thousand.....	8	delivered in London for a Guinea, sent by P. O. Order,
42 Cobbett's Advice	4	to Richard Dykes Alexander, Ipswich. Samples of both
43 Take a Public House.....	4	post free, for five shillings.
		London : Simpkin and Marshall.

Important to Nonconformists.

Shortly will be Published, Price Threepence.

THE PROTESTANT

DISSENTERS' ALMANACK FOR 1848.

This will form the cheapest and most interesting Almanack for Nonconformists ever published. It is intended to represent the views of those who are opposed to all Endowments for Religious and Ecclesiastical purposes, and the connexion of things purely spiritual with those which are strictly secular. Besides the usual Calendar, Tide Tables, Lists of Her Majesty's Ministers and the Members of the House of Commons, and all matters pertaining to Almanacks, it will contain a series of ably written articles upon the following topics:—What is Religious Freedom?—Christ's Church not a political institution.—Religious Liberty incompatible with a State Church.—Education, what is it, and who ought to impart it? Ecclesiastical Courts unscriptural, inquisitorial, and tyrannical.—Church Rates unjust and impolitic.—What do Dissenters mean by the separation of Church and State.—The obligations of Civil and Religious Liberty to Oliver Cromwell.—Dissenters urged to become Freeholders.—The Established Church, its revenues and powers.—Spiritual freedom.—The opinions of Liberal Members of Parliament as to Ecclesiastical Endowments.—The claims of the Anti-State Church Association.—Correct Statistics of the various Protestant Dissenting Denominations, and other important information as to Religious Societies.—Useful Domestic Recipes, &c., &c. This Almanack, independent of Advertisements, will contain 64 closely printed pages in Crown Octavo, and will form altogether one of the cheapest Almanacks ever published. A limited number of Advertisements will be admitted. A circulation of TWENTY THOUSAND is guaranteed.

JOHN SNOW, 35, PATERNOSTER ROW.
Booksellers can order for November parcels.

Just Published,

TEMPERANCE TRACTS,

Price 5s. per 100, or 8d. per dozen.

THE CLAIMS OF TEMPERANCE ON THE YOUNG: OR AN AFFECTIONATE ADDRESS TO CHILDREN AND YOUNG PEOPLE, by Clara Lucas Balfour.

GIVING UP: an appeal to Parents and Guardians of Youth on the Temperance Question, by Mrs. Ellis.

TOTAL ABSTINENCE FROM INTOXICATING LIQUORS, an essential element in the Moral Training of the Young, by the Rev. Wm. Reid, Edinburgh.

AN ADDRESS TO SUNDAY SCHOOL TEACHERS, on the duty of adopting the principles of Total Abstinence, by the Rev. B. Parsons.

TEMPERANCE ENVELOPES, Price 3s. per 100.

The Testimony of upwards of Two HUNDRED MEDICAL MEN of the highest standing, to the safety and advantage of Total Abstinence from all Intoxicating Liquors, with their Signatures attached.

London: CHARLES GILPIN, 5, Bishopsgate St. Without.

THREE LECTURES

ON THE

MORAL ELEVATION OF THE PEOPLE.

By THOMAS BEGGS.

Price One Shilling.

"The working classes ought to read them, that they may learn how much power resides in themselves; the middle classes should read them, and learn that wealth confers increased responsibility on its possessor; and even our nobles should read them, that they may learn that the downfall of false and the reign of true nobility are alike at hand."—Nottingham Review.

"The lectures are full of large and comprehensive views of man, and the writer aims, in every respect, to promote his moral elevation."—Universe.

"These lectures are the production of no ordinary mind. They evince a sympathy with the objects of their solicitude, which cannot but secure for their Author the confidence of his readers. Their publication is most opportune."—Scottish Temperance Review.

"These lectures do Mr. Beggs great credit, and their wide circulation, will tend, we are convinced, to excite greater sympathy in behalf of the elevation of that important portion of the people—the working classes."—Teetotal Times.

London: C. GILPIN, 5, Bishopsgate Street Without.

LONDON TEMPERANCE TRACTS,

UNDER THE SANCTION OF THE

National Temperance Society.

The above Tracts comprise a variety of 150 different sorts, and embrace every point of the principle of Total Abstinence. Upwards of

THREE MILLION

have already been circulated. 2 pp. 8d.; 4 pp. 1s. 4d.; 8 pp. 2s. 8d. per 100., or in packets, assorted, 6d. each.

For the convenience of LOAN CIRCULATION, they are assorted into 60 sets, containing 16 pp. in each and stitched into a strong wrapper, with a suitable address upon each, price 8s. per 100. Liberal allowance for large quantities. Lists may be obtained of the Publishers gratis.

HOULSTON & STONEMAN, 65, Paternoster Row.

Price Sixpence.

On the 1st of October will be published by JOHN CHURCHILL, Princes Street, Soho.

TEMPERANCE AND TEETOTALISM CONSIDERED MEDICALLY.

An Inquiry into the effects of Alcoholic Drinks on the human system to health and disease.

Reprinted from the British and Foreign Medical Review, Edited by JOHN FORBES, M.D., F.R.S.

London: Printed by RICHARD BARRETT of 5, Regent-terrace, City-road, in the Parish of St. Luke, in the County of Middlesex, Printer; at his Printing Office, No. 13, Mark-lane, in the Parish of Allhallows Staining, in the City of London; and published by JOHN STONEMAN, of 24, Brooksbury Street, in the Parish of Islington, in the County of Middlesex, at HOULSTON and STONEMAN'S, No. 65, Paternoster-row, in the Parish of St. Michael-le-Querne, in the City of London, Publishers.—Friday, October 1st, 1847.

* * The NATIONAL TEMPERANCE CHRONICLE and TEMPERANCE RECORDER is published on the first day of each month, at HOULSTON & STONEMAN, the Depot of the National Temperance Society, 65, Paternoster-row, and will be sent post-free for one year on receipt of 2s. postage labels. Annual Subscriptions received at the Society's office, 11, Tokenhouse Yard, London; and subscriptions and donations for the general purposes of the Society, by the Treasurer, G. W. ALEXANDER, 40, Lombard Street; by any Member of the Committee, and at the office as above.

THE
NATIONAL TEMPERANCE CHRONICLE
 AND
TEMPERANCE RECORDER.

It is good neither to eat flesh, nor to drink wine, nor anything whereby thy brother stumbeth, or is offended, or is made weak.—ROM. XIV. 21

No. 23, JOINT SERIES.]

NOVEMBER, 1847.

[PRICE 1d., STAMPED 2d.]

CONTENTS.

	PAGE		PAGE
Drinking Usages	160	EDITORIAL REMARKS.—National Temperance Society—
Spirituous Liquors	170	County of Wilts—Procedure in abrogating Drinking
Congregational Union—Intemperance	171	Usages—Subscriptions—The Navy	176, 177
Banbury—Teetotalism and Infidelity—Cholera and Strong		HOME INTELLIGENCE.—National Temperance Society—
Drink—National Intemperance and National Education—		Walthamstow—Tottenham—Greenwich—Hackney—
To Mothers on Early Habits—Drunkenness—		Bath—High Wycombe—Mr. T. Whittaker—Mr. Thomas
Advantages resulting to Working Men by the Temperance		Hudson—Mr. Jabez Inwards—Mr. W. Heritage	178-181
Movement	172-175	Statistics—Consumption of Intoxicating Drinks—Intemperance in Edinburgh—Literary Notices—Advertisements	182-184

DRINKING USAGES.

About the time that this number is going through the press, a Conference of friends convened under the auspices of Mr. Kenrick and Mr. Dunlop will be held at Worcester, on the subject of the Drinking Usages. This department of temperance labour has been too long neglected, for it is quite clear, that so long as the workmen of England are slaves to customs, which in their operation are far more imperious than law, that the temperance cause can have no fair chance of progress among them. We regret to say, that in almost every inquiry made into the physical and moral condition of the large bulk of the people, this most important matter has been almost entirely overlooked. These customs are a subject of amazement to foreigners who visit our workshops; and explain at once, to those who examine closely into cause and effect, why our artisans, along with their skill and industry, possess the unenviable distinction of being the most intemperate among European nations. The connexion betwixt these and our gigantic drinking-system is obvious; yet it is not quite so well understood how the influence extends over the whole manners and habits of the people, corrupting the disposition, and vitiating both domestic and social life.

The writer of this article has passed through the several stages of apprentice, journeyman, overlooker and employer; and although the drinking usages of his trade have been in some degree changed, many of them remain in full force. A brief account of his own experience will show the gross cruelty, despotism, and absurdity, of those customs, which are clung to so tenaciously, by large bodies of workmen. He was apprenticed at the age of fourteen, about the same time with three others, all which three, became drunkards. On first going into the shop, the rule was for the boy to pay five shillings as a footing; the master paid an equal sum, the men one shilling each, and the apprentices sixpence each. This was spent in a public-house entertainment of beef-steaks, and ale, and ended in the men getting drunk, and losing two or three days' employment. In two out of the cases, it was a gross hardship to exact the money from the necessities of a poor widow, and a sick father; but the love of drink must be gratified at whatever expense. If the sum had been refused, none of the men would have given any instruction to the lad, and his fellow apprentices would have been encouraged to ill-use and torment him. The trade to which the writer served his apprenticeship happened to be a complicated one, having many departments, to which a boy arrives as he acquires knowledge. It is every boy's ambition to get on as fast as he can, and in order to do this, he must obtain each step by drink. Sums varying from 6d. to 2s. 6d. are paid. Every time the boy makes his first attempt at any new part of the trade, the ale jug is sent to him to fill.

It must be understood that the departments of the business follow each other, and are each justified by previous attainments. The writer has known many instances, where, after the men have been engaged in a fuddle the night before, and money and credit exhausted, longing for a draught the next morning, a boy has been put to "a new job," that in the ordinary arrangements he would not be expected to perform for some time to come, merely to extort money. He falls a victim to the snare, his money is spent, and then his inability to execute what he has been prematurely set to is a sufficient reason for putting him back. Every trivial thing thus becomes an excuse for exaction. He is himself encouraged to drink, and many a boy who has never tasted drink at his father's table, makes the first step in the drunkard's career in a workshop. He must either make himself on a level with those by whom he is surrounded, or he will lead the life of a dog, and be prevented from acquiring a knowledge of his business. In addition to that, a shilling was demanded on every birth-day, and for every new coat two shillings and sixpence, for a marriage, and the same sum when a child was born. Men who have refused to obey this despotism, have been branded as "black sheep," and their reputation damaged as workmen. In almost every trade, where men work together in bodies, similar customs prevail. It is not that these men are naturally more unfeeling or selfish than others, no such thing; for many of them are known to be generous even to a fault; but to uphold the customs of their trade, they do that in their collective capacity, of which individually they would be ashamed. There are many who loathe these pernicious regulations, but cannot break through them. It is now proposed that a special effort be made to break them down.

The practice also of holding trade societies, benefit societies, and other provident institutions, at public-houses is exceedingly opposed to the formation of temperate habits. These must be brought under revision.

The National Temperance Society have taken this subject in hand, and it is proposed that the declaration which was given in a late number of the Chronicle should be first signed by a body of influential employers, and then accompanied by a suitable address distributed extensively among large bodies of workmen; that local committees should be formed for the purpose of inviting attention to it, and an endeavour made to get them to abrogate these foolish, cruel, and tyrannical usages. This, in our humble judgment, would do much to improve the circumstances of the labouring population. Youth are made drunkards by them, and men made slaves by the habits thus formed; for no government, however barbarous, could forge fetters for the people so oppressive as those that they hug to their own breasts and tenaciously cherish. We hope that the systematic attack about to be made, will be sustained by the talent, intelligence, and influence of the Temperance Public, and many, we are assured, who will not sign a pledge, will assist us in the abolition of customs so injurious.

SPIRITUOUS LIQUORS.

The following article is of a most interesting description. It is originally published in an able work issued by a society in Paris—of which we have no counterpart in this country. It is a Philanthropic Association, having different committees, devoted to the promotion of several great national objects. It appears that the subject of Temperance Societies has lately come before them. The efforts making on the continent are against spirituous liquors only; and our readers will see that the sentiments of the writer are in favour of wine, but opposed to the use of distilled liquors. The article, however, will give a fair idea of what is felt by writers on this subject on the continent, and we may conclude this prefatory notice, by urging those who are leading the Temperance movement abroad, to examine the position they occupy. In this country the movement was felt to be inefficient and barren in results so long as it merely aimed at the abandonment of distilled liquors. The great principle involved is that of alcoholic liquors, under every form, being injurious to man's physical and moral well-being, and we can assure our friends in France and Germany, that no successful effort can be made, unless it aims at establishing this great fact upon the public mind, and leading to the disuse of everything that can by possibility intoxicate.—[Ed. N. T. C.]

Extracted by M. BONQUIE LEFEBVRE, from a Dutch Work, by HUYDECOPER, and translated from the September Journal de la Société de la Morale Chrétienne, by Mr. SCOTT.

It will now appear to be fabulous that 200 years ago, spirituous liquors were only found in the apothecary's shop. It created surprise in 1550, when they were distributed to the Hungarians, who worked in the mines. The English gave them for the first time in 1585, to the soldiers encamped in Zealand. During the war of thirty years, at the commencement of the seventeenth century, alarm was created in consequence of the savage forces of Tilly and Walestein, composed of Croats, seizing flagons of spirituous liquors from the apothecaries. While the war lasted, this custom made progress, but it was considered as disgraceful. It was not until afterwards, in 1672, that they began to drink brandy from grain, which was then only known as a medicine, under the name of spiritus frumenti. The most ancient document in which mention is made of it, is 1688. On 22nd March, 1692, the authorities addressed the Dutch States, a memorial respecting distillation, and 26th April, it was decided that a tax of £1.10s. per ann, which contains 180 quarts, should be imposed on the importation of brandy. Two years afterwards, a small quantity of gin was given to the crew of the vessels of the State. The ship of war, the Overyssel, expended £3.10s. in the shipment of gin, while £64.10s. was expended in beer. In 1742, the East India Company, ordered gin to be given to the crews of ships sailing to the Indies. In 1760, the ration was augmented, but it was not until the end of the last century, and the commencement of this, that the sellers of spirituous liquors increased, and the evil attained such an alarming height, to which the revolutions and wars of that period no doubt contributed.

The repression of this abuse was attempted in various ways; among others by the laws of Sweden.

Drunkenness is there punished, the first time, with a fine of nine shillings, the second time double, the third time, the delinquent is exposed at the door of the cemetery with fetters to his legs, and the fourth time, he is condemned to confinement in the house of correction. No funeral honour is granted to the person who dies in a state of drunkenness.

The repression has also been tried by many sovereign decrees, the first of which we are acquainted with, is that of the Duke Ernest Augustus of Ralenberg, in 1691. "Having been informed," he said, "that spirituous liquors were no longer used by the people as a means of healing, which is their purpose, but that the people begin to take them as an intoxicating drink, and that those who abandon themselves to this destructive habit lose their health, their reason, and their means of subsistence, we have resolved to prohibit them." In 1718, an ordinance of the King of Prussia, Frederick William I., dictated in the same spirit decrees, "The duty of a prince is seriously to direct his subjects to preserve themselves from that scandalous and obnoxious enemy which degrades all mankind, but particularly Christians, in placing them in the rank of animals deprived of reason, and as we will no longer tolerate this disorderly habit, but on the contrary, abolish it, we ordain," &c.

The decrees of princes, and governors, prohibitory laws, and municipal regulations have not been able to prevent the free sale of strong drinks. In permitting more and more easily the establishment of little taverns, their number has considerably increased from year to year.

At the commencement of the eighteenth century, the celebrated painter Hogarth, tried to express this truth, that in all families where strong drinks abounded, prosperity gradually disappeared. He has painted an admirable picture, representing the debaucheries and miseries of Gin Lane, London. Slovenliness, idleness, reckless squandering, afterwards quarrels, every disorder, and at last want, are the immediate and inevitable consequences of the use of strong drinks. The education of children is neglected, the drunkenness of the father causes the children not to respect him. If you give alms, you throw your money into a bottomless well, you encourage the evil, you maintain idleness and intemperance. I know mothers of families who prefer that their husbands should have no work, because he cannot drink, and who prefer privation than quarrels and bad treatment. The progress of misery among the working classes has proceeded in an equal pace with the increase of the consumption of strong drinks.

But God has been willing to reserve unto the nineteenth century, the exhibition of a glorious struggle against this enemy of the human race, and we are not sufficiently acquainted with what has been done in other countries.

We will cite at once what the princess of Lippe Detmold wrote in 1802, on the subject of spirituous liquors, invoking against them the genius of Germany, "Preserve Germany, my country, from the disgrace of protecting any longer the preparation of that deadly poison which the laws and the authorities permit, and often even encourage."

In the same year 1802, the celebrated Hufeland wrote that an imperative duty commanded to call attention to a plague to which no restraint had been given, and which spread its ravages without even being perceived, "It is my decided conviction," he added, "that mankind had never suffered an evil so dangerous, nor so general."

In North America, Dr. Humphries pronounced first, the word abolition, and proposed to banish the enemy from the bosom of families and society. Insult and mockery were his reward.

At length, a common husbandman determined in secret to follow this advice; he found the result satisfactory, which he disclosed to his fellow-workmen, and they all determined to abstain with him from the use of strong drinks. This trial had the best success. They found themselves more disposed to work, their health better, contentment reigned in their families, and they commenced saving. These experiments, repeated by others, determined a rich landlord to introduce the abolition of these drinks throughout his vast estates, and he made known the success of its adoption in a pamphlet, entitled The Farm well Governed. This gave birth to the first Temperance Society established at Boston, 13th February, 1826.

(To be continued.)

CONGREGATIONAL UNION.

An address has been presented to the ministers and delegates of the Congregational Union, assembled at their Autumnal Meeting in York. The address is ably and calmly written, and after setting forth the evils of Sabbath drinking sanctioned by good and christian men,—the waste of food in the manufacture of strong drink; the effect of the drinking system on crime, prostitution, Sunday schools, and missions. It gives the medical testimony, and concludes in the following terms—

"The Committee rejoice that the principles of total abstinence are spreading, and that wherever christian men have come forward to give them a right direction, they have already, under the blessing of God, led to the most happy results. During the past year, the success which has attended the operations of the society in this city has been encouraging in the extreme. At a meeting recently held, which was addressed by a large number of reclaimed ones, it was found on investigation that, with but one exception, they had all, since signing the pledge, become members of Christian churches.

"The Committee look forward, with interest, to the result of the proposed Conference of Temperance Ministers, at Manchester, and the contemplated movement amongst the young; and they trust that both these efforts will receive your united and individual support.

"The object the Committee seek to gain, is the total eradication of intemperance from our land, and the removal of one of the greatest barriers which Satan and men conjoined have raised against the spread of Christianity. In prosecuting this object, they are deeply convinced of the importance of securing ministers of the gospel to be pledged with them. For want of this, their hands have frequently hung down.

"The Committee respectfully and affectionately lay these matters before you, praying that a divine influence may attend your discussion of their claims; and that you may be led by the Divine Spirit to adopt the temperance pledge, a step which they believe would soon be followed by large accessions to the Christian Church.

"Signed on behalf of the Committee,

"EVAN LLOYD, Chairman,

"T. B. SMITHIES, Secretary.

York, October 12th, 1847."

The following resolution was passed by the Congregational Union.

"RESOLVED,—That this Union cordially acknowledges the respectful Address presented to them by the Committee of the York Temperance Society, and commends the very important subject to which it refers, to the attentive and prayerful consideration of their members."

Proposed by the Rev. A. BLACKBURN, Seconded by the Rev. Dr. CAMPBELL.

INTEMPERANCE.

From Hints to Workmen, being 170 of Chambers' Tracts.

Recommendations to save money will, we fear, be of little value where habits of intemperance require to be subdued. In alluding to the prevalent appetite for intoxicating liquors, we may be said to touch the grand sore which eats into the vitals of the manual labouring-classes. How sorrowful and humiliating the reflection, that be the times good, or be they bad, a large portion of all the earnings in the shape of weekly wages is consumed in purchasing intoxicating drinks! In the United Kingdom, annually, upwards of fifty millions of pounds sterling are spent in the purchase of wines, spirits, and malt liquors—the bulk of which is believed to be consumed by the humbler classes generally. The money so spent is in amount far beyond what is paid for supporting all the churches, chapels, and clergymen in the country.

The statistics of intemperance need not here be dwelt upon, for they have already engaged attention in the Tracts (No. 23); it will be sufficient to draw attention to a few facts. We would in all friendliness invite the working-classes to consider whether, as a body, they can possibly rise to a more respected position so long as this monster vice is so extensively practised by them. Tavern drinking by the higher and middle classes, once so common, may now be said to be unknown, except in places where habits of a mean order still happen to linger. The practice of resorting to public-houses, or of getting tipsy, is now almost entirely confined to the humbler classes. A hundred years ago, it was nothing wonderful to see a lord reeling home drunk; and duchesses were occasionally seen going away tipsy from places of public entertainment. The increasing refinements of a century have banished these sights. The only persons now seen drunk in the streets are—how melancholy is the confession!—working-men, or at least individuals whose earnings are paid in small or weekly sums. Look at the number of gin-palaces, public-houses, and taverns in the commoner streets of London, Manchester, Liverpool, Glasgow, Edinburgh, and other large towns! In one street, about a mile in length, in Edinburgh, there are a hundred spirit-shops or taverns. In Glasgow, there was lately a public-house for every fourteen families. In reference to this latter city, Sheriff Alison observes, in the course of an examination before a committee of the House of Commons:—"I am sure there are eighty thousand people in Glasgow who are just as completely heathens, to all intents and purposes, as the Hotentots of Africa. Of course they have all heard there is a God; but as to any practical operation of the influence of religion upon their minds they never go to church, or to any place where moral or religious instruction is carried on. I should think there are ten thousand men in Glasgow who get drunk on Saturday night—who are drunk all Sunday, and are in a state of intoxication, or half-intoxication all Monday, and go to work on Tuesday."

Evidence of this nature is most appalling. It appears that in the parish of St. David's in Dundee, there were lately but eleven bakers' shops, and one hundred and eight for the sale of liquors. In the parish of Lochwinnoch in Renfrewshire, three or four times more money is spent in this way than is required for the support of religion and education. The value of ardent spirits consumed in the parish of Stevenston in Ayrshire, with a population of 3681, exceeds the landed rental by £3836. Warrington in Lancashire raises £3200. per annum for all its religious, benevolent, and literary institutions, including schools, missions, Bible and Tract Societies, and Ladies' Charity; and spends £68,000. on intoxicating drinks. It is also stated, that in this town there were lately fifteen hundred drunkards; and that in one street there were more than forty drunken women. Finally, that the sum of £1460. is spent in the detection and punishment of crime; while upon the education of the poor, no more is expended than £300. In the small town of Peebles in Scotland, there is a public-house for every fifteen families, or every twenty-two males. These, it is computed, spend each £10. 18s. yearly for strong drink, or £5602. in all—a sum four or five times the amount of what is paid for the religious and educational establishments.

It is unnecessary to multiply examples of the universal expenditure on this one hideous vice—intemperance as to liquor. In vain do prosperous times arrive, when men are well employed: prosperity brings with it no blessing: money, with increased recklessness, is squandered in the lowest species of public-house debauchery. Every Saturday night, when wages are usually paid, becomes a saturnalia. Taverns and pot-houses are thronged; and men skilled in their profession, and animated with no deliberate wickedness, by a strange infatuation deliver themselves up to a practice to the last degree impoverishing and demoralizing. The loss of money, though enormous, is perhaps the least of the evils of intemperance. The mind is vitiated, the health ruined, and the family reduced to a state of misery. But far too appalling are the horrors, to be closely scanned. Every workman may see in his own neighbourhood, and perhaps in the persons and families of acquaintances, what dire disasters are wrought through an abandonment to the mean and despicable vice of dram or beer drinking.

Smoking is only a variety of intemperance. The fumes of tobacco act as an intoxicant on the nervous system; and for this cause, independently of the loss of money, smoking should be relinquished, or, more properly, never begun. It is ascertained by medical inquiry, that smoking, like the drinking of stimulants, is injurious to health. It produces disorders in the mucous membranes of the larynx and palate, seriously deranges the stomach, and affects the action of the heart and lungs. On the nervous system its effects are usually more fatal. Like all mean indulgences, smoking demoralises the feelings, and creates and confirms dirty and idle habits.

BANBURY.

(Extract from the Report of this Society.)

The accompanying statistics and calculations are added to the report by the committee; they prove the extraordinary expenditure of £60,840 per year, in Banbury and Neithrop, for alcoholic drinks, and however exaggerated it may appear, similar facts are discovered in other parts of the kingdom, fully corroborating them:—

Bakers	34
Butchers	26
Eating-houses and Sausage Makers	5
Fishmongers	2
Confectioners	4
Grocers and Tea Dealers	20
Milkmen	13
Millers and Mealmen for the Town and Neighbourhood	23
Poulterers	5
Tripe Sellers	3
Total	135
Brewers	5
British Wine Dealers	8
Maltsters	13
Spirit Merchants	8
Taverns, Inns, and Public Houses	45
Beer Houses	35
Total	117*

Suppose that each of these 117 dealers in wine, beer, &c. take £10 weekly, a very low average, it amounts to £1170 per week, or £60,840 per annum, for alcoholic drinks, the use of which is declared to be needless for sustenance, by eminent medical and scientific men in Great Britain and America; whilst judges, magistrates, and lawyers have discovered that they promote a very large portion of the poverty, diseases, and crimes of those countries.

* These statistics are taken from "Rusler's Banbury Directory."

TEETOTALISM AND INFIDELITY.

Dear Sir,—I attended the great Alliance Meeting at Manchester, in November last, when the British organization was formed, and was nominated one of the Committee of the "Northern Division of England."

With regard to an "Inquiry as to the connexion between Infidelity and Teetotalism," brought from the "Southern Division" of the Alliance, at the Edinburgh meeting lately, I was greatly astonished, and grieved! Had an inquiry been made, as to the connexion between the traffic in intoxicating drinks and infidelity; it would have been reasonable.

Low public houses, especially in all rural districts, were the chief nuisance, and the most awful dens of wickedness and wretchedness.

We have few policemen or constables in Wales, so the public houses are open all night during the week, and all Sundays—where all kind of gambling, robbery, adultery, and fighting, are practised, in connexion with the drinking habits!

Let the Rev. E. BICKERSTETH, and the "Southern Division" carefully ponder this connexion, and take up the subject.

I am truly happy that the Rev. J. A. JAMES is to write on Desecration of the Sabbath, as a given subject for the third division of the Alliance; and who can doubt, but that he will powerfully and faithfully show the connexion between the drinking habits of the country, and the profanation of the Lord's day.

There is another connexion which might be reasonably expected to be brought under the serious consideration of the Alliance; viz.: the connexion between the temperance movement and religious revivals.

We had a general and powerful revival in North Wales, between the year 1836 and 1839, in close connexion with the temperance reformation. And I am sure, that it was reported among us, that there were revivals in America, and in England, and Scotland, about the same time as in Wales.

Such was the powerful influences, both in connexion with the preacher and the congregation; the Spirit of the Lord was evidently moving all hearts, in a measure. I could enlarge would space permit, as follows:—

1. That the characters of ministers stand higher in the eyes of the public.
2. The churches are not troubled with so many disputes, and acts of discipline, excluding drunkards, they enjoy more peace.
3. Many who backslided through drunkenness are now returned, they have overcome their besetting sin.
4. The church members generally walk more consistently, since they left off drinking; family worship better observed; as they return from market in better time, they are more useful.
5. The congregations have increased much in connexion with the temperance cause. Many who used to spend their Sabbaths in public houses, are now not only regular hearers, but consistent members. They are now sitting, and clothed, and in their right mind. I had the pleasure and honour of receiving above 300 into church fellowship in twenty-one years. Several are reformed drunkards, and most of them are what you call in England, "TEETOTALERS."

It is to be apprehended, that we all are punished, for our inactivity and indifference with such a noble and necessary cause!

Yours ever most affectionately,

Mr. T. Beggs.

EVAN DAVIES.

CHOLERA AND STRONG DRINK.

Private letters from St. Petersburg of the 24th September, state that the Cholera continued to advance, and nearly by the same route by which it arrived in 1831. It had reached the environs of Toula (distant forty miles from Moscow). Its intensity differed according to the localities. As formerly, the greater number of victims belonged to the poorer classes—above all those addicted to the use of spirituous liquors.—Record, October 7.

Some alarm has been excited in this country as to the probability of a second visitation of this fearful pestilence. Preparations have already been made in France. We do not feel any strong apprehensions, as the winter will very likely arrest its progress. It is notorious, however, that it has singled out its victims from among the densely populated and wretched populations of our large towns and cities, and the habitually intemperate. Typhus fever, which is only a milder form of cholera, has made dreadful ravages in many of our towns, occasionally overstepping its usual bounds, and reveling among the middle and higher classes. It is stated by all medical men, that the best precaution against epidemics are habits of personal cleanliness and temperance.

The following Extract gives a faithful account of the moral effects following pestilence.

MORAL EFFECTS OF PESTILENCE.—"All witnesses, and a knowledge of our common nature, tell us that the continual recurrence of these scenes of sickness and death, instead of softening the heart, usually hardens it. Read the accounts of all great plagues—the plague at Athens—the plague at Milan, as described either in the historians of the day and the biographers of Cardinal Borromeo, or in the more popular pages of the best Italian novel, the Promessi Sposi—read the account of the plague in London—and you will see that in all these cases the bulk of the people become more reckless and profligate than ever."—Lecture on the Unhealthiness of Towns, &c. By Viscount Ebrington, M.P.

We hear of several parties who are interesting themselves in whitewashing the houses and cleansing the streets of our low neighbourhoods. Let us entreat that they will also enjoin Teetotalism. [Ed. N. T. C.]

NATIONAL INTEMPERANCE AND NATIONAL EDUCATION.

The Reports of the Education Inspectors recommend national education. The evils they describe can be met, they say, by no other remedies than a system of national education. Armies of schoolmasters, officered by inspectors, and led by a minister of public instruction, are the only assailants they recognise as worthy to do battle against ignorance, sedition, and crime. Journalists who wish to become inspectors, and inspectors who are journalists, are likely to take some pains to urge upon the Government the sort of remedy for the evils they expose, which will give the Government patronage, and the journalists and inspectors promotion.

We should put a more patriotic and generous interpretation upon their labours, if we saw them studying the evils, simply to discover their remedies. But instead of this, their accounts of the evils appear in support of a preconceived and predetermined remedy. They are used to prove a case. Our journalists and our inspectors are not seen, in the first instance, in the character of students of the evils which afflict the people. They are educationists, first, and observers afterwards.

However, their facts are instructive, if as much cannot be said of their lucubrations. The Rev. H. Mosely, the inspector of schools in the midland counties, says :—

“The miners of Bilston are 5000 in number, and it is computed that £50,000 are spent by them annually in the purchase of ale and liquors. In the adjacent ecclesiastical district of Moxley, there are said to be 440 houses, and from thirty to forty beer-shops, being one beer-shop to every twelve houses.

“The improvidence of the people may be studied with advantage in the Bilston market. No other market is supplied with finer poultry, or comparatively to the population, in greater abundance, and this is chiefly, if not entirely for the consumption of the labouring classes; for the resident inhabitants not directly associated with these classes are few in number. There sordid and ill favoured men may be seen buying, on Saturday, chickens, and ducks and geese, which they eat for supper; and in some instances, of which I was informed, drink bottled porter and wine. Yet, so little have they beforehand in the world, that, if the works were to stop, as I was informed by the intelligent proprietor of one of the largest, they would begin within a fortnight to pawn the little furniture of their cottages, and their clothes for subsistence and for drink.”

Mr. Moseley found, in the mining districts of South Staffordshire, the puddlers—as they are called, who make wrought iron from cast iron—earning average wages of £2. 10s. per week. Yet “these men and their families nevertheless live in more squalid and miserably dirty, and worse furnished abodes, their children appear worse clad and more neglected, their wives more slatternly and poverty-stricken, and about each of them fewer appliances of comfort, and fewer sources of happiness have been collected, than I have observed in respect to any other labouring population.” Their wages are spent in eating and drinking—on meat, poultry, porter and wine.

Now, we submit there may be somewhat of exaggeration in this picture. The publishers of cheap literature in London say that their chief customers are in Scotland and the potteries. But the national schoolmaster is not the only assailant suited to these evils, even if he be suited at all. The evils are not evils of ignorance, they are evils of intemperance. But intemperance is a vice to which many most intelligent persons are addicted. Thousands of men have found their information a snare to them in reference to this vice. They find themselves sought, and courted, and flattered, and treated, because their information made their society profitable and agreeable, until the indulgences of the table became habitual and ruinous to them. Let us suppose that education is universal in the mining districts. The puddlers can discuss philosophy and enjoy art. Poets, painters, and philosophers, have been drunken and sensual. The schoolmaster might teach as much reading, writing, and arithmetic as he pleases, and every puddler in South Staffordshire might be a cyclopaedia of information, and nothing would be done to diminish the receipts of the public-houses. Really we beg ten thousand pardons for our rudeness; but we must express a wish that the educationists who are so very enlightened, would give themselves a smattering of education in logical science. This smattering would prevent them from inferring from the prevalence of intemperance the necessity for information. This smattering would teach them to deduce from the evils of intemperance the necessity for remedies of temperance. They want to prove a want of schoolmasters, but they prove a want of temperance lectures. They bring forward facts to prove that the Government ought to set up a national scheme of education, and they prove, if any thing, that the Government ought to establish a national scheme of teetotalism.

There is one beer shop for every dozen houses. This is a fact worth looking at. Every beer shop is a school in which drinking maxims and ideas are taught. It is a missionary station, of which Bacchus is the god, and intoxication the gospel. It is not a place where the instruction is merely dogmatical and perceptive, but it is a real education, a practical training in the habits of character desired by the proprietor of the school. The keeper of the beer shop would not be matched by the establishment of a schoolmaster for every twelve houses. Indeed, he and his family are agreeable teachers—powerful trainers. Gambling is one of the attractions to his school, in the shape of skittles or four-corners in his convenient back yard,—of shovel-board, cards, or dice, in his snug parlour,—or of cricket, quoits, or pigeon-shooting in his field. Song and music and dancing, help his purpose. Clubs and friendly societies organise his pupils. The end to him is wealth, from the sale of beer and spirits. To them the end is ruin, death, or crime.

The beer-shop keeper is the schoolmaster of the puddlers. We submit to the most zealous educationists whether there is any thing in any scheme of national education which could be devised, likely to prove, a match for a successfully established organisation of publicans of whom there is one for every twelve houses. Dr. Kay Shuttleworth might just as feebly try a boxing match with the champion of all England, whoever he may be.

Frightful, indeed, is the bad aspect of the condition of the working classes. Some can scarcely subsist upon seven shillings a-week—others get no comfort out of two pound ten shillings a-week, squandered on gluttony and drunkenness. Meanwhile, the cry raised by statesmen and journalists is not, devise and establish institutions, one for every dozen houses if need be, to train the people in habits of temperance; but combat intemperance with information. Of course, knowledge is preferable to ignorance; but the error is a great one of those who expect moral fruit from intellectual seed.—North British Mail.

TO MOTHERS, ON EARLY HABITS.

BY JOHN LOCKE.

“Wine and strong drink have drowned more than the sea; and the teeth of intemperance have slain more than the sword.”—Family Book.

The child not being permitted to drink without eating, will prevent the custom of having the cup often at his nose, a dangerous beginning and preparation to good fellowship. Men often bring habitual hunger on themselves by custom. And if you please to try, you may, though he be weaned from it, bring him by use to such a necessity again of drinking in the night, that he will not be able to sleep without it. It being the lullaby used by nurses to still the crying children. I believe mothers generally find some difficulty to wean their children from drinking in the night. Believe it, custom prevails as much by day as by night; and you may if you please, bring any one to be thirsty every hour. I once lived in a house where, to appease a froward child, they gave him drink as often as he cried, so that he was constantly bibbing. And though he could not speak, yet he drank more in twenty-four hours than I did. Try it when you please, you may with small as well as with strong beer drink yourself into a drought. The thing to be minded in education is, what habits you settle; and, therefore, in this as well as in all other things, do not begin to make any thing customary, the practice whereof you would not have to continue and increase. It is convenient for health and sobriety to drink no more than natural thirst requires; and he that eats not salt meat, nor drinks strong drink, will seldom thirst between meals, unless he has been accustomed to such unseasonable drinking. Above all, take great care he seldom, if ever, taste any wine or strong drink. There is nothing so ordinarily given to children in England, and nothing so destructive to them. They ought never to drink any strong liquor but when the doctor prescribes it. Be careful, therefore, to have your eyes upon servants and injudicious but well-meaning friends, and restrain them with all the skill and industry you can, there being nothing that lays a surer foundation of mischief, both to body and mind than children being used to strong drink.

DRUNKENNESS.

An awful instance of drunkenness came under my own immediate cognizance. A few weeks ago, a respectable tradesman, well and religiously brought up, had a pious and an excellent wife, and fourteen children, ten of whom are now living.

He went as usual on Friday, to Holywell market, in perfect health and good spirits, transacted his business, and then went to a public-house and got drunk, as he frequently did of late years, to the great sorrow of his family and friends. A young man, seeing the tradesman so drunk, persuaded him to stop and lodge in a half-way public-house, and took his watch and pony, and went to see his sweetheart, leaving the drunken man in the public-house sleeping.

The drunken man soon awoke, went in search of his old pony, and in so doing, lost his path, and fell into a pool. A strict search was made, but the body was not found until Sunday morning at eleven o'clock, by a party who had gone out to look for it, with a determination not to return without having found it, for he was much beloved, notwithstanding his sin, and especially his large family was greatly pitied.

One of the men who were assisting in dragging the corpse from the water, took it so much to heart, and was so struck with horror at the sight, that he instantly took ill, went home to his bed, from whence he never arose, leaving his widow in a pregnant state and six children, in very destitute circumstances!

Thus the drunkenness of one man occasioned two excellent wives to be mournful widows, and seventeen children to be fatherless!

How inconsistent it is for ministers of the gospel to stand aloof, and not to be active with this cause.

E. DAVIES.

ADVANTAGES RESULTING TO WORKING MEN FROM THE TEMPERANCE MOVEMENT.

The first advantage arising from it was this:—it broke through that cold indifference which had always been felt by the more respectable class to the lower. It brought them into occasional communion; they stood upon the same platform, they mingled together, and by that interchange of feeling, understood each other better: hitherto they had looked at a distance, and their estimate of each other was necessarily inaccurate; but the poor labourer raised to-day by the adoption of the temperance principles, stood a fellow-workman with the rich talented man, and some even of the titled of the land; his voice was heard in the same chorus, and his appeal spoke to the same multitude. Would you break down the barriers that have always separated mankind, and made them think harshly of each other—would you destroy the spirit of caste which alienates our sympathies, and withers the affections,—bring men together, let them see each other, let them reciprocate the courtesies and kindnesses of life, and, brought together by the ties of a holy and good cause, whatever they were before, you will make them men. This softening of the feelings has been much promoted by the temperance cause. The man that was in rags yesterday, the victim of a debasing appetite, to-day with his heart swelling with high emotions, speaks of his deliverance to assembled thousands: you have by owning him, opened up a spring in his degraded nature that will wash away many of the impurities brought on by his excesses.

This mingling together men of different classes and various pursuits, has a kindly influence upon society. The development of various talents has done much towards creating a respect for the poor man, who has struggled to obtain knowledge and communicate it to others. Few movements have done more in this particular than the temperance movement. Some twenty or thirty years ago, it would have been a strange thing for a meeting to be addressed by working-men; now it is no uncommon thing to hear them speak with force and fervency, and even gracefulness of manner, with much knowledge and practical good sense.

It has assisted, with other causes, to familiarise working-men with public business, and has removed many obstacles out of the way: independent of these considerations, it has produced a desire for knowledge in the minds of many of our population, teaching them to make inquiries that never before occurred to them. Many a man who has been in the habit of attending temperance meetings, talks in his own rough way about digestion; nutrition, and the properties of food and stimulating drink, who scarcely knew before that he had a stomach. He may talk confusedly about them, but there is quite sufficient to let you know that he has paid attention to it—somewhere read or heard about it.

Temperance societies have encouraged a revision of men's habits. Nothing more natural. When a man finds that he has been trained up all his life in the error that stimulants are absolutely necessary, and has lately found out that he can do quite as well without them, he is more ready to listen to any other suggestion affecting his habits. A man says, "Well, for twenty years I have been drinking porter, believing it to be a good thing. I have found myself in error. How stand my other habits? May I not be under a delusion in something else?"

It has promoted the cause of peace, and done much to advance education. Of these things, as friends of the temperance principle, we have a right to be proud; but our efforts must not stop here. The trophies of our success surround us at every step, and they will inspire us with fresh hope for the future, and a determination to persevere. At this time, when every tongue is speaking about improvement, the advocates of temperance must be alive to the call made upon them. In the present demand for education, they will find their efforts much needed. The great mistake has always been made, that the working-classes can do nothing of themselves. A feeling of dependence has been inculcated and cherished, and they have fallen into the error, and sat down in apathy and listlessness. Their minds have often been soured, and they have consequently rejected any suggestions that may have been offered to elevate them. They must help themselves, or remain where they are. They have resources which they now misemploy, or waste in the indulgence of the pot-house; and they must become active agents in their own work.—From Lectures on the Moral Elevation of the People. By Thomas Beaggs

National Temperance Society.

OFFICE 11, TOKENHOUSE YARD.

VICE-PRESIDENTS.

The EARL of ARUNDEL and SURREY, M.P.
Sir Wilfrid Lawson, Bart.

R. D. Alexander, Esq.	Rev. Theobald Mathew.
J. D. Bassett, Esq.	W. J. Morgan, A.M., M.D.
Thomas Beaumont, Esq.	Richard Peek, Esq.
C. Bowly, Esq.	Rev. P. Penson, M.A.
Samuel Bowly, Esq.	Rev. W. Reid.
J. S. Buckingham, Esq.	Rev. W. W. Robinson, M.A.
Robert Charleton, Esq.	Rev. J. Sherman.
Rev. R. Clowes, M.A.	Rev. C. Stovel.
Joseph Eaton, Esq.	Rev. T. Spencer, A.M.
J. Forbes, M.D., F.R.S.&C.&C.	Joseph Sturge, Esq.
S. C. Hall, Esq., B.L., F.S.A.	Rev. W. H. Turner, M.A.
Lawrence Heyworth, Esq.	Edward Thomas, Esq.
William Janson, Jun., Esq.	Robert Warner, Esq.
Ven. Archdeacon Jeffreys.	Edward Webb, Esq.
G. S. Kenrick, Esq.	Rev. J. Wilson.

TREASURER.

G. W. Alexander, Esq., 40, Lombard Street.

CHAIRMAN OF THE COMMITTEE.

William Cash, Esq., Peckham Rye.

EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE.

G. W. Alexander.	Charles Gilpin.
George W. Atwood.	Richard Hicks.
Richard Barrett.	C. H. Lovell, M.D.
Jabez Burns, D.D.	John Meredith.
William Cabell.	W. W. Robinson.
William Cash.	T. B. Scutt.
John Cassell.

SUPERINTENDENT OF MISSION.

John Meredith.

SECRETARY.

Thomas Beggs.

COLLECTING AGENTS.

Mr. Thomas Whittaker.	Mr. Thomas Hudson.
Mr. Jabez Inwards.	Mr. William Culverwell.

NATIONAL TEMPERANCE SOCIETY.

The Committee, some months ago, issued an appeal on behalf of funds to support a series of efforts in contemplation. In consequence of the distress in Ireland, and other causes, this appeal was only attended with very partial success. The heavy visitation which has passed over us, is another argument, however, in favour of increased exertions in behalf of the temperance cause. Every consideration of sound policy calls upon them to oppose a system which is wasting the food of the people, and spreading abroad the seeds of crime, poverty, disease, and irreligion. In order to make efforts commensurate with the greatness of their object, the Committee must have placed at their disposal much larger funds. Applications are being continually made to them for assistance they are unable to render, and fields of usefulness are left uncultivated for want of means. They have resolved to resume their application, and to make an energetic attempt to raise up the fund of £5000, originally proposed, and which was stated as necessary to sustain the Society's operations for the years 1847-8-9. In order to do this effectually, they have engaged four agents, who, in addition to public lecturing on the principles of the temperance reformation, will be employed in collecting funds.

The Committee trust that the friends of temperance will support their efforts to spread the principles of temperance, and place the Society in a position to make greater exertions than ever to destroy the drinking system.

COUNTY OF WILTS.

Two of the agents of this Society are about to visit, on a Special Mission, the county of Wilts, at the invitation of several societies in that county. From the letters received, it would appear that considerable expectations are created on the subject; and much good no doubt will result. The gentlemen about to undertake this mission are Mr. THOMAS WHITTAKER and Mr. THOMAS HUDSON, both well qualified for the work. Applications on this subject may be addressed as usual to the Secretary of the National Temperance Society, at the Society's Offices, 11, Tokenhouse Yard.

Minute 522.—R. D. Alexander, Esq., of Ipswich, having kindly sent 300 packets of his valuable Tracts for the use of the agents of this Society, it is resolved, "That the thanks of the Committee be presented to that gentleman for his kind and considerate present."

PROCEDURE IN ABROGATING DRINKING USAGES.

Several gentlemen having inquired as to the mode to be adopted, it is recommended, that after getting the employer's opinion signed as extensively as possible, the Temperance Committees divide themselves into sections of two persons each; giving each section the charge of several workshops or factories. These sections will apply to employers and masters in a prudent and respectful manner, explain the dangerous nature of the drinking usages, and obtain their leave to speak with, and address their men on the subject. They will then find out a few among the men of peculiar good sense and conduct. Explain to them the oppressive and deleterious character of the "usages;" suggest their abrogation; disseminate anti-usage tracts among them;* procure their promise to talk quietly and judiciously to the men, in private, on the subject; suggest that instead of spending in drink any fines that it may be expedient to keep up in workshops and elsewhere, it would be preferable to institute a fund for a library, benefit club, or other useful purpose.

After the matter has been quietly agitated for a certain time, a meeting of the men to be called, and abrogation of the drink footings and other usages to be proposed: the assistance of the master to this effect, being also in a judicious and prudent manner requested.

Many workshops and factories have abandoned their "Drinking Usages" under procedure of this kind: and though total abstinence was not at the time made any part of the proposal, a great barrier to it was thus removed: and many non-teetotalers would give assistance in this department of teetotalism, if requested to do so.

Care must be taken not to offend, and not to cause any undue dictation on the part of the master that might hurt the proceedings. Employers might be requested to avoid paying wages in public-houses; and friendly society committees to hold meetings there.

* A tract for the purpose is at present in hands, and will be ready in a few weeks; and copies of the "employers' opinion" may be obtained by application at the Office of the Society.

SUBSCRIPTIONS.

SPECIAL FUND.

£. s. d.		£. s. d.
Cash, W., Esq.	16 13 4	Place, R., Esq.	5 0 0
Received at the Office.
Anstie, G. W., Esq.	1 1 0	Marriage, Mr. J. G.	0 10 0
Cabell, W., Esq.	1 1 0	Chelmsford Society	d 0 10 0
Harvey, Rev. B.	1 1 0	Green, Mr. J.	0 5 0
Stratford Temperance Society	d 0 5 0	Hersnell, Mr. C.	0 5 0
Per R. Gamble.
Squire, Mr.	0 10 0	Marriage, Mr. W.	0 5 0
Baldwin, Mr.	0 5 0	Copland, J., Esq.	1 0 0
Aylesbury Coll.	0 4 0	Copland, J.	d 1 0 0
Small Sums	0 10 0	Bott, Mr. W.	0 5 0
For Chronicle	0 5 0	Richardson, Mrs. d	1 0 0
Per A. W. Heritage.
Collections, Broughton, Winchester, and Houghton	1 4 6	Marriage, Miss C. d	1 0 0
Per Mr. Culverwell.
Purvis, Mr.	1 1 0	Marriage, Miss C. a	0 5 0
Allen, Stafford, Esq.	1 1 0	Marriage, Misses R. and L.	1 0 0
Barrett, H., Esq.	1 1 0	Marriage, Mrs. M.	0 5 0
Beech Street	1 1 0	Lester, Mr. J.	0 5 0
Hitchcock, Geo., Esq.	1 1 0	Haughton, Mr. J.	0 5 0
Sherman, Rev. J.	2 2 0	Marriage, Miss S.	0 5 0
Cox, Mr.	0 5 0	Marriage, Mrs. M., Pease Hall	0 5 0
Oxendon Chapel Collection	0 7 0	Potter, Mr. J.	d 0 10 0
Kay, Mr. H.	1 1 0	Bassett, Mrs. J. D.	1 0 0
Oatfield, Mr. C.	0 5 0	Harriss, Mr. A.	d 1 0 0
Per Mr. Hudson.
Partridge, Mr. J.	0 5 0	Jeffries, Mr. R.	0 10 0
Willmore, Mr. B.	0 5 0	Norton, Mr.	0 5 0
Ridgway, Mr.	0 10 0	Place, R., Esq.,	1 1 0
Simmons, Mrs.	0 5 0	Boulton, G., Esq.,	1 1 0
Manley, Mr. W., Jun.	0 10 0	Hatfield, Mr.	0 5 0
Manley, Mr. W., Sen.	0 5 0	Per Mr. Inwards.
Father of Teetotalism in Leighton Buzzard	d 0 10 0	Currie, Mr.	1 0 0
Poulter, Mr.	0 5 0	Whaley, Mr.	0 5 0
Waters, M. T.	0 5 0	Woodhouse, Mr. G.	0 5 0
Hemmings, Mr. J.	0 5 0	Wallis, Mr. G.	0 5 0
Miller, Mr. A.	0 5 0	Bottle, Mr.	0 10 0
Tyler, J. T., Esq.	1 1 0	Caie, Mr. J.	0 5 0
Miles, E. Esq., 2nd d	1 1 0	Sims, Mr. D.	0 5 0
Guest, Mr. J.	0 10 0	Wood, Mrs. E.	0 5 0
Turner, Mr. A.	0 5 0	Burgess, Mr. D.	0 5 0
High Wycombe So.	1 0 0	Farrow, Mr.	0 5 0
M. Y.	0 5 0	McKay, Mr. J.	0 10 0
Steven, Mr. E.	0 5 0	Woolston, Mr.	0 5 0
Smith, Mr. R.	0 5 0	Jones, Mr. J.	0 5 0
Per Mr. Whittaker.
Turner, Mrs. J.	0 5 0	Harlock, Mr. W.	0 5 0
		Bearne, Mr. J. H.	0 10 0
		Blott, Mr. W.	0 5 0
		Beal, Mr.	0 5 0
		Woolwich Society	0 7 6
		Smith, Mr. Thos.	0 5 0
		Maw, Mr. S. A. a	0 10 0
		Sims, W. D. Esq d	1 0 0
		Limmer, Mr.	0 5 0
		Plaistow Society	0 10 0

THE NAVY.

IMPROVEMENT IN THE HABITS AND CONDITION OF OUR SEAMEN.

The following important circular—the most important that has been issued from any Board of Admiralty for many years—has just emanated from their lordships. We publish it in extenso on the present occasion, allowing it to speak for itself, which it will do with such force that we are sure there is not a flag officer, captain, or commanding officer, serving in her Majesty's ships and vessels, who will not lend his utmost to assist their lordships in "carrying into effect so desirable an arrangement." We have heard that to Rear Admiral Dundas may be ascribed the merit of introducing this regulation into the service. The improved efficiency of the navy will be the best, as it will be the sure reward, of this gallant and distinguished officer's most salutary measure:

"Admiralty, October, 1847.

"Applications having been made to their lordships, on the part of the crews of her Majesty's ships to be allowed the indulgence of taking up an additional quantity of tea and sugar, in lieu of the daily ration of spirits, their lordships, with the view of carrying into effect and encouraging so desirable an arrangement, are pleased to sanction the issue of the following quantities of tea and sugar, for the daily ration of spirits, to such of the crews of her Majesty's ships as may be desirous of making the substitution—viz., tea, half an ounce; sugar, two ounces.

"Any men that may be disposed to take up only one-half the allowance of spirits would then receive one-half of the above proportion—viz., tea, quarter of an ounce; sugar, one ounce. Or they may be paid the savings' money upon the tea and sugar in lieu thereof.

"The above circular is to be read to the different ships companies, and fully explained that the proposed change is to be entirely voluntary on their part.

"H. G. WARD.

"To all Flag Officers, Captains, and Commanding Officers of Her Majesty's Ships and Vessels."—Morning Herald, October 12th.

The common food of the Indians consists of meat, fish, Indian corn, (Zea Mays), and garden fruit. They eat almost all animals they take by hunting, but deer and bears are their favourite food. The sugar, which they manufacture in large quantities from the maple (acer sacharinum), is used by them, either to sweeten their victuals or in the place of bread.

Their drink is nothing but the broth of the meat they have boiled or spring water. But they likewise prepare a kind of liquor of dried bilberries, sugar, and water, the taste of which is very agreeable to them. Rum and whiskey, with which Europeans have made them acquainted, destroy more lives than all their wars."—History of the Moravian Missions in North America.

WHAT ENGLAND OUGHT TO DO.—The increasing progress of drunkenness in Norway, has induced the Swedish government to appoint one temperance missionary to each of the four provinces of that kingdom, whose business it shall be to travel through the country, and preach total abstinence from all intoxicating liquors.

HOWITT'S JOURNAL.

We would especially draw attention to an admirable article on the DEPENDENCE OF LIFE UPON LIQUIDS—EFFECTS OF ALCOHOL, by Dr. Carpenter, in the Number of Howitt's Journal, published on the 9th of October last. It richly deserves the greatest circulation that the friends of Temperance can give it. We also urge the diffusion of the excellent article from the British and Foreign Medical Review.

WISDOM.—There are villages in Scotland with 1500 inhabitants, by whom more is spent on snuff and tobacco than is paid by them to their minister and three teachers.

Home Intelligence.

NATIONAL TEMPERANCE SOCIETY.

A meeting of this Society was held at Oxendon Chapel, Haymarket (Rev. Dr. Archer's), on Monday evening last, October 4th, W. CABELL, Esq., T. B. SCUTT, Esq., and Messrs HUDSON and CULVERWELL attended as a deputation from the Society. The attendance was numerous and respectable.

W. CABELL, Esq., occupied the chair. He had been a teetotaler upwards of ten years. He was happy to state, from the reports of one of their Missionaries, that several ships were now in the habit of sailing out of London without any intoxicating liquors on board. He had been gratified to hear that day from a friend, that a wedding had recently taken place in his family, without any intoxicating drinks being used.

Mr. J. T. TYLER had conversed with various Missionaries on the subject, and they had invariably stated that intoxicating drinks were the great barrier to the success of their labours. The Rev. C. Barff had told him that much good had been undone in the islands of the Southern Ocean by the introduction of those drinks; and Tahiti especially, which had been taken possession of by the French, had suffered greatly by the liquors which they had introduced into that island.

T. B. SCUTT, Esq., remarked, that two hundred years ago alcoholic drinks were confined to the apothecary's shop; and proceeded to notice their gradual introduction as an article of general consumption, and the various edicts and laws which at different times were passed against them. It was, he observed, in connexion with evil systems that the practice of drinking intoxicating liquors first arose, and was carried to its highest pitch; and it was both a remarkable and interesting circumstance, that since the wars had ceased, so many nations had banded together to destroy this their worst foe.

Mr. WILLIAM CULVERWELL regretted, that in the discussions which had taken place on the subject of education, while so much had been said about the connexion between ignorance and crime, scarcely any allusion had been made to that which after all was a great cause of the crime:—intemperance. The evidence adduced before the parliamentary committee on drunkenness, as well as the testimony of judges, chaplains of gaols, and criminals themselves, had clearly proved that more than three-fourths of the crime was the result of the drinking habits of the people. The speaker then referred to the reports of the government inspectors of schools, and various other documents, to show that intemperance was the great barrier to the progress of education.

Mr. HUDSON was amazed that men professing to be guided by the self-denying principles of christianity, could witness, without an effort to lessen the evil, the mass of moral putridity by which society was affected. It was a great misfortune, and that perhaps was one powerful obstacle to the spread of their principles, that the people had grown too familiar with our national vice. It did not attach to one particular class of men, to one particular district of country, it met them at every point of the compass, and that was at least one reason why the sin of intoxication, which, though in certain quarters it was fashionable to denounce, had ceased to excite general disgust and loathing. There was a kind of semi-respectability about the evil they sought to extirpate, made so by almost general consent, which did not distinguish any other of our social or national vices. If a man were brought to answer any charge before a magistrate, he not unfrequently put in the plea of intoxication, but such a plea had never been allowed in extenuation; nor, unless, drunkenness had been a vice in which society in general had parti-icipated, would such a defence have been offered in any civilized society. It was evident from such instances that intemperance, though devastating and ruinous enough as regarded the bodily constitutions of its victims, was still more cruel in its work of destruction on the mental and moral faculties. No man could look on the ruin strong drink had effected in the world of mind, without feeling desirous of staying the ravages of the destroyer. There was an admirable description given by Addison, of the notions entertained in his day, in relation to strong drinks, which, before the dawn of these better times, until within a few years, had almost universally obtained. Men had prided themselves on the amount of liquor they could swallow, and the honour fell, said Mr. Addison, on him who could knock down the rest of the company. The light they had diffused had certainly made an alteration in that respect; persons did not so much as formerly meet for the purpose of drinking; the door was not now locked until the guests had become drunken; and the host was allowed to exhibit his hospitality in other forms than by sending his company home in a state of helpless intoxication. Mr. HUDSON then touched upon a variety of points of great interest, and concluded by saying that, looking at all the favourable systems of the case, they were without doubt progressing in public estimation, and would continue so to do, if abstinence men would as a body act with vigilance, and boldly, and without compromise propound their principles. (cheers.)

WALTHAMSTOW.

A public meeting was held in the Infant School, Walthamstow, on Wednesday, October the 13th, to hear an address from Mr. BEGGS, on the importance of abolishing the tea duties, as a means of promoting the great cause of temperance.

R. L. PINCHING, Esq., surgeon, presided on the occasion.

Mr. BEGGS took the opportunity of contrasting the present state of the temperance reform with the aspect it presented a few years ago. One sign of progress was the issuing of the medical document to which so many eminent anatomists and physiologists had appended their names. But a more recent cause for gratulation was the appearance of an article in the forty-eighth number of the British and Foreign Quarterly Review, in which their principles were eloquently enunciated. These signs were preceded by others of an equally important nature; the press had given aid, royalty had in some measure favoured it, by the discontinuance of ale, to the recipient of the Queen's bounty. By a pension granted to the apostle of Ireland, another proof had been shown that our principle were rising. The expedition to the Arctic Regions on teetotal principles, and the new regulation appertaining to canteens, all, he affirmed, were to be taken as unmistakable indications for good. Such glorious results had not been effected without an effort on the part of the National Society. That body had directed attention to the Irish famine; they had also issued an address on the subject of popular elections, and they were now directing attention to the workshop usages. As another means to promote their great object, he (Mr. BEGGS) was anxious to place within the reach of the poorer classes the comforts of life, one of which was the article tea, amounting to the annual consumption of forty-five millions lbs. yearly. It was desirable to substitute social tea meetings, for clubs and other objectionable means of sensual gratification.

Mr. E. CLARKE then proposed, and Mr. CULVERWELL seconded, the following petition to the House of Commons:—

The humble petition of the Members of the Walthamstow and Leyton Temperance Society.

To the Honourable House of Commons of Great Britain and Ireland,—

SHOWETH,

That your petitioners believe the injurious custom of using intoxicating beverages, which prevails in this country, is productive of a large amount of the crime, sickness, and poverty which abounds.

That the heavy duty on tea prevents its more general use as a beverage, and as a substitute for intoxicating liquors, and thus tends to increase their consumption. Your petitioners, therefore, pray that it may be speedily abolished."

Mr. WHITTINGHAM here stated, that this would probably be the last time they should have the pleasure of meeting Mr. BEGGS on the temperance cause in his official capacity, they were desirous of embracing that opportunity to testify their esteem for the services of that gentleman by presenting him with the subsequent address.

To Mr. THOMAS BEGGS, Secretary of the National Temperance Society.

SIR,—The members and friends of the Walthamstow and Leyton Temperance Society, avail themselves of the present opportunity, to convey to you an expression of their sentiments of esteem, at the termination of your official connexion with the National Temperance Society.

It was with much satisfaction they heard of your appointment to the office of Secretary to that Institution, at a time, when it appeared most desirable to concentrate and combine the efforts of various friends of the temperance cause in the metropolis, anticipating much from your known urbanity and conciliatory disposition, as well as from the large amount of statistical and practical information you would bring to bear upon the subject.

They rejoice their anticipations, to so large an extent, have been realised in the brief period which has elapsed, and that you have been enabled to contribute so much to the advancement of total abstinence, by the manner in which you have discharged your official duties, and by your numerous contributions to temperance literature.

They regret your removal, while they rejoice in your appointment to another and perhaps more extensive sphere of usefulness; and as a small memorial of their esteem for your past services, and good wishes for your future welfare, beg your acceptance of this address, and the accompanying purse with its contents.

Signed on behalf of the Committee,

R. L. PINCHING, Surgeon, Treasurer.

W. E. WHITTINGHAM, Secretary.

Walthamstow, October 13th, 1847.

Mr. BEGGS in reply said, his new appointment would open to him an enlarged sphere of usefulness. He could truly say that the temperance cause never occupied so large a share of his regards as at the present time. He trusted still to be able to benefit the working population, whom he implored to take the proper course for personal elevation.

A vote of thanks was given to the chairman, and the meeting separated.

TOTTENHAM.

A very large and respectable meeting took place in the above hall, on Monday, the 11th inst. The hall has been raised mainly by the exertions of the teetotalers of Tottenham, and is available for moral and scientific lectures, a desideratum much needed in this locality.

The meeting on the 11th, might be called the house-warming, or the opening for the season, and a most triumphant and successful affair it was. The place was fairly crowded by a delighted and attentive auditory. B. ROYCH, Esq., presided. He principally directed his remarks to the opposition the cause received from the clerical portion of the community. As a visiting magistrate to some of the principal metropolitan prisons, he gave invaluable testimony to the efficacy of temperance, and left but one impression on the meeting, as to the prolific source of ignorance and crime. He concluded a most able and interesting speech, by expressing that however much he might be disposed to excuse the doctors, the same reason would not apply to justify the unscriptural indifference of the clergy and ministers of religion.

The Rev. W. R. BAKER, regretted exceedingly that the clergy and ministers of religion should lay themselves, by their indifference to the temperance movement, under the censure of good men. He did not quite agree with his esteemed friend, in respect to the doctors: if the clergy who are the great teachers of morality are guilty, from the fact of the standing apart from the movement, surely the doctors, the great conservators of the health of the people, could not be excused, when they not only did not condemn the drink, but in most instances recommended its use. He concluded by regretting that there were not more of his brethren in the ministry connected with them.

Mr. THOMAS BEGGS, Secretary of the National Temperance Society, next addressed the meeting. He took a statistical view of the question. If what had been stated by the honourable chairman were true, then indeed an awful amount of responsibility attached to some one. He believed that both ministers and doctors were to blame. The movement was both moral and physical, and no single drunkard could be reclaimed without deepening his respect for morals, and improving his health. Mr. Beggs then went into matters of fact, and succeeded in leaving a deep impression on all present that disease and crime would recede in proportion as the spread of temperance advanced.

Mr. T. WHITTAKER, agent to the National Temperance Society, was next announced. He showed the fallacy of entertaining the hope that the rising generation could be made teetotalers so long as the adult population drank intoxicating liquors. Children come into the world perfectly ignorant; they know nothing about the poison alcohol till instructed. He looked upon the mother as being the most responsible person, as good and vicious principles are not so much the result of birth as education; and it was madness for preachers, teachers, and parents to expect children to give up that which they daily practised. A good deal had been said about gospel preaching, but little done by walk and conversation. He concluded a very able speech by remarking that faith and practice must be more united before teetotalism can triumph.

GREENWICH.

On Thursday evening, October 7th, a large and influential meeting was held in the Literary Institution of this town. Mr. T. HUDSON, of the National Society, whose former lecture was so highly approved, attended for the purpose of delivering a second lecture, which consisted of a series of well-timed arguments in favour of the temperance movement. The Rev. W. LUCY, formerly of Bristol, presided with much ability.

HACKNEY.

This society, under the auspices of Dr. Oxley, held a tea festival and public meeting in the Lecture-room, London-lane, Hackney, on Tuesday, 12th instant. The Doctor's zeal in teetotalism and hospitality to friends is proverbial. There was a goodly gathering of happy and healthy looking teetotalers from Newington and Kingsland. The doctor is looking exceedingly well, and his great activity speaks much in favour of temperance. Mr. C. Taylor, who was on the platform, seemed likely to be a strong man at ninety, these gentlemen have been water drinkers for nearly fifty years. The public meeting was addressed by Dr. OXLEY, (chairman,) Mr. C. TAYLOR, Mr. WOOD, Mr. WRIGLEY, Mr. WHITTAKER, and Mr. DONALDSON. The interest of the meeting was well sustained, and all present appeared highly delighted.

BATH.

On Monday evening a temperance festival was held at the Guildhall, when the banquetting-room was comfortably filled by a respectable company. The Rev. William Woolhouse Robinson, A.M., of Christ Church, Chelsea, having read a portion of Scripture, and offered up a prayer to Almighty God, Mr. Cotterell, the Chairman said, it gave him great pleasure to meet so many of his friends on this occasion. He had been given to understand that the temperance cause had been going down, yet he could not but conceive that it was otherwise; and he had, in a great measure, to thank youthful labour for it. They had the testimony of 1300 medical men, who all stated that intoxicating drinks were not beneficial to health. He read the testimony of Dr. Forbes, physician to the Queen, and extracts from other authorities; concluding with one from the Times newspaper, in which an auctioneer had advertised for sale, in Norfolk, 27 public-houses and inns. He stated, with regard to the sale of malt, that, in 1845, 23 millions and a-half bushels had been disposed of; in 1846, 26 millions; and, in the present year, 1847, only 18 millions. Taking into consideration the deficiency of food and the badness of trade, he considered that the temperance cause was yet working great things in England. He called upon Dr. Lovell of London, who said, he had been the president of the United Military Temperance Society, in London; and he was sorry to say that, on account of all societies being banished from the army, this one had been broken up; but the Duke of Wellington had given it his most sincere support, and expressed the hope that, although the Temperance Society had been dispensed with in the army, the men would still maintain sobriety. Dr. Forbes had, like many others, laughed at teetotalism. He (the speaker) had now been a teetotaler 11 years, and had travelled as far as 3000 miles on nothing but water to drink, and at the same time never took cold; and he begged his hearers to understand that it was solid, not liquid, food, that strengthened.

The Rev. WILLIAM WOOLHOUSE ROBINSON now took the chair, he wound up a lengthened speech by urging his friends to support the cause of temperance, not only in a moral point of view, but as necessary to the extension of the word of God throughout the whole of the world. The miracle of Jesus Christ—turning the water into wine—was beautifully explained by the reverend speaker.

Mr. AYLAN, a working man of Glasgow, also bore testimony to the good effects of the temperance cause in many parts of Scotland; illustrating his evidence by a heart-rending account of a poor fellow-workman, who had been allured into the paths of intemperance, but was now a partner with him in the blessings of total abstinence.

S. BOWLY, Esq., of Gloucester, said, he had been a total abstainer ten years, and had listened with satisfaction to the previous speakers; but there had been one part of the question not referred to so strongly as he could wish. It was a national question, and men ought to live for one another as well as for themselves. He was convinced that the drinking-system did a great amount of evil; and he would ask their opponents to point out any village or hamlet that had been benefited by the use of intoxicating liquors. He would ask clergymen if their examples as teetotalers were not necessary to prevent those around them from taking the poisoning draught; and would advise the gentry of this country to set the example of temperance before their servants, and those whom they might have in control. If every individual had done his duty, instead of the two or three, what an impetus would, by this time, have been given to teetotalism.

HIGH WYCOMBE.

On Tuesday, October the 12th, 1847, a Temperance Tea Festival, in the Town Hall. About 100 sat down to tea; the greatest conviviality and good humour prevailed. The Wycombe Teetotal Band being in attendance, played a variety of favourite airs, which greatly added to the enlivenment of the scene. The evening meeting was well attended, the spacious Town Hall being completely filled, by a respectable and attentive audience. The Chair was taken by the Rev. Isaac Doxey, of Thame, who addressed the company in his usual pleasing style, and with much effect. He then introduced Mr. T. Hudson, one of the National Temperance Society's agents, who addressed the audience in an able speech. The Rev. D. Mossap, Primitive Methodist preacher, then came forward, and in a neat, solid, and convincing speech, gave us an instructive history of his conversion to teetotalism, clearly shewing that he took up the principle "for conscience' sake." After a few further remarks from the chairman, the company separated, being evidently much gratified with the proceedings of the day.

A. TURNER, Secretary.

TEMPERANCE HALL, Carlisle Street, Paddington.—The first of a series of addresses was given in the above place, on Wednesday evening, October 13, by Mr. W. Claridge, on the importance of the total abstinence principle, especially as regards the rising generation. A large company were present, and very marked attention given to the address.

TEMPERANCE HALL, Silver Street, Kensington.—On Friday evening, the 15th, a similar address was given by Mr. Claridge, in the above place, to a large number of juveniles, under very pleasing circumstances. The friends here are exerting themselves nobly.

MR. T. WHITTAKER.

The undermentioned places have been visited by the Agent of this Society as follow:—

Aylesbury, Leighton Buzzard, Whetstone, Tottenham, Kingsland, Hackney, Peckham, Chelmsford, West Drayton, Chelsea, Chatham, and Brompton. The whole of the meetings have been of a highly encouraging and respectable character, reminding us of the palmy days of the cause. A general sympathy has been manifested with the objects contemplated by the National Society.

MR. THOMAS HUDSON.

Mr. Hudson has attended many interesting and important meetings since the last report of his labours.

September 21st.—At WHETSTONE, Mr. Hudson gave a second address to the railway labourers at work on the London and York line. J. H. Puget, Esq., is still actively engaged in promoting the interests of this much neglected class of men. Signs of improvement are already visible.

September 22nd, a small meeting was held at Thurrock (Essex); and on the 24th, Mr. Hudson, formed part of a deputation to Leighton Buzzard, and took part in the annual meeting of the Leighton Society, over which J. D. Bassett, Esq., presided.

September 29th.—A special public meeting was held at Enon Chapel (Rev. Dr. Burns'), which was addressed by Mr. Hudson and others; on which occasion R. Hicks, Esq., Surgeon, presided.

October 4th.—Another special meeting was held, at Oxendon Chapel (Rev. Dr. Archer's), a report of which appears in another part of our Chronicle.

October 7th.—A very important meeting was held, in the Greenwich Literary Institution, to hear a second lecture from Mr. Hudson. The Rev. William Lucy, formerly of Bristol, occupied the chair.

High Wycombe, October 11th and 12th.—Meetings were held in this town, on the above mentioned days; on the latter day a festival was celebrated in the commodious Town Hall. The meeting was large and enthusiastic, and severally addressed by the Rev. Isaac Doxsey, of Thame, (Chairman), a resident minister, and Mr. Hudson, who attended as a deputation on behalf of the Society.

Maldon, (Essex).—The Cromwell Hall of this town is a fine spacious room devoted to public purposes. Numerous meetings to enforce the claims of temperance have at different times been held, under the presidency of the town clerk, G. W. Digby, Esq. Mr. Hudson addressed a respectable, but not very numerous attended meeting, on the 15th ultimo.

October 18th, FAIR STREET, HORSLEYDOWN.—A festival and public meeting of a very interesting character were held, over which BENJAMIN ROTCH, Esq., B. L., presided. The speeches of the chairman, Mr. M'BAIN, Mr. CULVERWELL, Mr. T. A. SMITH, and Mr. T. HUDSON, each distinguished by their peculiar excellence, were most cordially received.

MR. JABEZ INWARDS.

This Agent during the last month has held very satisfactory meetings in the towns of Ipswich, Harwich, Wellingborough, Trisden, Dover, and Sibston, besides attending several meetings in London. He says, "I never found a more general disposition to attend temperance meetings than at the present time."

Extracts from the Journal of A. W. HERITAGE. From July 12th, to September 30th.

Visited nineteen families in Tytherley, distributed tracts, and gave an address.

Paid a third visit to Winterslow, waited on thirty-one families, and obtained three signatures.

Visited a number of families in the New Forest, gave two addresses, obtained seven signatures.

Visited thirty-four families at Houghton, obtained one signature.

Visited a number of families at Whiteparish, entered into conversation with a pauper, who I found had been a minister of the gospel, but had fallen through drink. He signed the pledge, and appeared to feel bitterly, commended him in prayer to God, and gave him 5s.

Visited the Village of Dean, and distributed tracts.

Visited twenty-seven families in Wallop, and obtained one signature, drinking, smoking, and snuffing, prevail here to a lamentable extent.

Visited seventy-one families at Sutton Scotney and Bocombe gave an address, and obtained five signatures.

Visited nineteen families at Bulford, on Salisbury Plain, gave an address, obtained two signatures.

Visited the new line of railway, between Basingstoke and Salisbury, preached once, gave two addresses, obtained nine signatures.

Visited twenty-one families at Mottisfort, distributed tracts, gave an address, obtained two signatures.

Visited several families at Clatford, distributed tracts, obtained three signatures, gave an address at Pitton, obtained one signature.

Visited Titchfield, and Fareham, and obtained nine signatures.

Visited twenty-two families at Bishopstoke, gave an address, obtained two signatures.

Visited the Southampton Dock Yard, and Railway Terminus, distributed tracts, obtained five signatures.

Visited fifty-one families at Beaulieu, and Blockfield, gave an address, obtained three signatures.

Visited thirty-four families at Stockbridge, distributed tracts, gave an address, obtained five signatures.

Re-visited the Basingstoke and Salisbury line of Railway, preached once, gave two lectures, obtained seven signatures.

Visited several families at Sockerley, gave a lecture in the Baptist Chapel.

Visited several families at Broughton, obtained 17s. 4d. as subscriptions to the National Society.

Re-visited forty-three families at Tytherley, and Waterslowe, gave an address at the latter place in the Baptist Chapel, obtained five signatures.

Visited nineteen families at Abbotson, obtained two signatures.

Visited 113 families in the New Forest, held three meetings, distributed 127 tracts, obtained nineteen signatures.

Collected 7s. 2d. in small sums for the National Society.

Visited thirteen families at Houghton, distributed tracts, obtained three signatures.

Visited sixty-one families at Shrewton, and Bulford, distributed tracts, obtained nine signatures.

Re-visited Winterslowe, called on twenty-seven families, and distributed tracts.

STATISTICS—CONSUMPTION OF INTOXICATING DRINKS.

Quantities of malt and spirits retained for home consumption in the six months ending 5th July, in the years 1845, 1846, and 1847, according to the official excise accounts; also, of foreign spirits and wine entered for home consumption in the same periods, according to the official accounts of the Board of Trade:

		Six Months ending 5th July.
		1845.	1846.	1847.
Bushels Malt.	England, . . .	20,165,831	22,682,823	15,960,639
	Scotland, . . .	2,328,814	2,337,584	1,895,905
	Ireland, . . .	1,050,120	928,059	146,078
	United Kingdom, . . .	23,544,765	25,948,466	18,002,622
Gallons British Spirits.	England, . . .	4,360,709	4,295,402	4,179,270
	Scotland, . . .	3,023,385	3,308,270	2,849,323
	Ireland, . . .	3,471,453	3,673,625	2,500,259
	United Kingdom, . . .	10,865,547	11,277,297	9,528,852
Foreign Spirits, . . .	1,708,259	1,784,471	2,282,072
Total British and Foreign Spirits, . . .	12,573,806	13,061,768	11,810,924
Gallons Wine, . . .	3,431,646	3,369,854	3,264,521

DRINKING HABITS AND INFIDELITY.

Most of the publicans are considered practical infidels—their shops are opened all Sundays, and all nights, ensnaring and poisoning the rising generation. They hardly ever attend a place of worship, especially if the minister preach the whole truth as it is in Jesus. As for my public labour for the last six weeks, I had four lectures and three sermons delivered in the neighbourhood. I have my own three chapels always ready for temperance; and the Calvinistic Methodists, also, are most faithful, but I am sorry to say very few of the Wesleyan Methodists and Churchmen.—Evan Davies.

INTEMPERANCE IN EDINBURGH.

On the last Sabbath of June, after hearing two of our abstinence ministers, the Rev. William Reid, and Rev. W. G. Moneriff, we paid a quiet, yet painful visit to the almost neglected thousands of home heathen residing in Cannongate, High Street, Grass Market, and Cowgate. In Cannongate we counted more than two dozen of whisky shops open, most of which seemed crowded with victims; and we felt somewhat surprised to see a number of military gentlemen leaving these sinks of pollution, accompanied with servant girls, several of whom were not only tipsy, but had bibles in their hands as if they had been at church! It was also very distressing to witness a girl of some eight years of age, who appeared to have lately returned from school, enter a spirit shop with a tin jug for a gill of whisky, at the request of the parents. This is one way in which the efforts of Sabbath school teachers are frustrated. Every moderate drinking teacher ought to ponder the appalling fact recently published by the governor of Edinburgh prison, viz., that of one hundred and seventy juvenile prisoners who were examined on admission, it was ascertained that one hundred and twenty-one of the number had been connected with Sabbath schools. In the same street with these public houses, there is one Night Asylum for the Houseless, a Refuge for the Destitute, the Magdalene Asylum, a dispensary, &c. Now, we find no fault whatever with parties who support such important benevolent institutions; but it appears passing strange to find intelligent people so ready to aid such associations, almost every inmate of which has been driven thither by intemperance, and at the same time countenance, by precept and example, not only the very system which produces the evil, but actually treat with indifference or contempt the remedy which is certain to prevent such a fearful state of things. At the Night Asylum for example, an official informed us, that last month they had above 2300 inmates, and not a single evening passed but what a considerable number of drunk applicants had to be refused admission; and it was quite common for a mother to stagger up to the door with three, four, or even five children, in such a state of intoxication that she was unable to give her name; and in order that the poor innocent children might not be further punished, in such cases the directors gave the whole of them shelter for the night. In the Refuge, there are above 400 inmates, a goodly number of whom are drunken women, who have been sent there repeatedly by moderation husbands. In this house, too, are many juvenile orphans, whose fathers and mothers have been killed by strong drink.

We visited the Magdalene Asylum, and found 46 unfortunate females; and when conversing with the worthy chaplain, Mr. Simon Kemp, he observed that in many cases drink had been the chief cause of seduction, and in every instance it had something to do with it. The more we examine into this infamous system of prostitution, the more thoroughly are we convinced that it could not exist for a single week in its present state apart from the drinking system. The two monster evils will rise or fall together. We implore every moderate drinker to remember that, in countenancing the drinking customs, he is upholding the corner stone of prostitution;—mistresses, procuresses, supporters, and thousands of the poor girls have acknowledged that they would never countenance such an abominable system without intoxicating liquors. W. L.

Literary Notices.

TEMPERANCE AND TEETOTALISM.

An Inquiry into the Effects of Alcoholic Drinks on the Human System in Health and Disease.

Reprinted from No. XLVIII. of the British and Foreign Medical Review. Edited by JOHN FORBES, M. D., F. R. S., F. G. S. Physician to her Majesty's Household. CHURCHILL, Soho. 8vo. pp. 36.

"This is one of the most important documents that have been issued from the temperance press. It has been reprinted from the Review in which it first appeared, by the permission of the Proprietor; and we hope that it will obtain by this means almost universal circulation. The article is from the pen of a distinguished physician and physiologist, who has practised total abstinence for many years. It is ably and powerfully written, and will be a highly useful addition to our Temperance Literature."

An Address to the People on G. Cruikshank's "Bottle."

By J. PASSMORE EDWARDS. Britain. 12pp. 12mo.

This is a very creditable attempt to improve the "Bottle," recently published by George Cruikshank.

Journal of Public Health. 8vo. 32 pp. RENSHAW, Strand.

We have received the proof copy of a new publication devoted to the discussion of subjects appertaining to the Public Health. It has fulfilled every promise made in the announcement, and will be a most important addition to the periodical literature of the day. We notice it from a wish that the advocates of temperance would turn their attention to some of the causes of intemperance, and by helping to remove them, remove their effects also. The friends of sanitary improvements would do well also to enter into a strict examination of the drinking system, as that would help them to a better understanding of the sanitary condition. The day is fast approaching when the leaders of our popular movements will see, that there is an intimate connexion betwixt their several objects, that they all assist each other, and all aspire to secure the same end—the elevation of the people in morals and happiness. We rejoice to find in the following extract from a Review of the valuable pamphlet, reprinted from the British and Foreign Medical Review, a recognition of the sentiment here given. As we know it is the expression of an earnest sentiment on the part of the conductors of the Health of Towns Journal, we have the more pleasure in calling the attention of our readers to the valuable work in which it appears.

"The reprint of this very able review, and its issue in a separate form, challenges a notice at our hands. We should not be doing justice to our own cause, if we lost any favourable opportunity of testifying the interest we feel in that older public movement which has so many points in common with our own, and which forms, indeed, a constituent part of it. The two movements are bound together by this strong tie, that both have very remarkable physical, economical, and moral bearings, both re-act upon each other, and both must be brought to a triumphant issue before we can hope for any marked improvement in the physical or moral condition of our race. The Review, besides containing a history of the temperance and teetotal movements, establishes in succession, and on the firm foundation of fact, the intimate union which exists between intemperance and crime; the absence of any wholesome effect on the human constitution of alcoholic liquors, taken even in moderation; and by the ample testimony of the soldier, the sailor, the mechanic, and the farmer, the possibility of sustaining the most laborious exertions without the aid of this treacherous ally. We recommend the review to the notice of all our readers, and we trust that the reprint will have the extensive circulation it deserves."

The Tenets of Teetotalism Examined, and their accordancy with the Gospel demonstrated. By the Venerable ARCHDEACON JEFFREYS.

This powerful and convincing tract is printed in the Bristol Series. Good service has been done to the cause by this edition, in such a shape, that thousands of them may be distributed at a cheap rate. We hope all our readers will immediately procure it.

IPSWICH JUVENILE TEMPERANCE BOOKS.

In 32mo., illustrated with handsome woodcuts, in sixpenny packets, of glazed coloured paper.

	PAGES		PAGES
1. The History of Teetotalism	20	18. What Little Boys can do for Teetotalism ...	12
2. Scriptural Teetotalism	20	19. Little Mary	16
3. Teetotalism of Ancient History	20	20. Lucy Grey and her Pet Pigeon	8
4. Teetotalism of Modern History	20	21. What Little Girls can do for Teetotalism.....	12
5. The cost of Intemperance.....	20	22. Poor Little Willie.....	12
6. Self-denial	20	23. The Sixpenny Glass of Wine	12
7. Early Habits	20	24. The Town Meeting; License or no License... 12
8. The Force of Example	20	25. The Unexplored Island.....	12
9. A Letter to Sunday School Children	20	26. Is I not happy?	12
10. H. Hawkins, the Drunkard's Daughter	20	27. The Apprentice Lad	20
11. Christian Courtesy and Benevolence	20	28. The Power of Custom	20
12. The Young Chemist's Inquiry	20	29. Biographical Gleanings—Examples	20
13. Little Henry and the Teetotal Festival	20	30. Ditto ditto. —Warnings	20
14. The Young Reasoner's Objections to Teetotalism	20	31. The Guide to Glendalough	12
15. The Fear of Ridicule.....	20	32. Bridget Larkin.....	12
16. The Teetotalism of Travellers	20	ASSORTED PACKETS.—No. 1, 1 to 16—No. 2, 17 to 32,
17. Temptation Resisted	12	inclusive.

IPSWICH TEMPERANCE TRACTS.

Those Tracts marked with an * have PICTURES and are on better paper, 150 pages, in a sixpenny packet. The others have 168 pages to the packet.

	PAGES		PAGES
1 The Doctor Scrutinized, or for what purpose do Physicians prescribe Alcoholic Beverages, by R. D. Alexander, F.L.S., 122 thousand..	8	28 Common Sense, 20 thousand.....	20
2 Striking Facts, 84 thousand	2	29 Ralph the Soldier	4
3 Maker and Vender, 44 thousand	2	30 Testimony of Eminent Physicians, 30 thousand 4
4 Our Creed, 52 thousand	2	31 The Working Man, 35 thousand.....	20
5 Adulterated Beer, 34 thousand	4	32 Is I not happy? by Hugh Stowell, 30 thousand 4
6 Adulterated Wine, 40 thousand	4	33 David the Shoemaker, 49 thousand	4
7 The Maltster, 37 thousand	4	34 The Drunken Couple, 48 thousand	2
8 Go Feel what I have Felt, 53 thousand	2	35 Confessions of a drunkard, 29 thousand	2
9 Facts are Stubborn Things, 53 thousand	2	36 Master Tailor, 20 thousand	4
*10 The Spirit Dealer, 35 thousand	2	37 The Fatal Gift, 36 thousand.....	2
11 Christian Teetotalism, 70 thousand	2	38 Poor Sandy.....	4
12 The Trade, 33 thousand	4	39 Use & abuse, by Archdeacon Jeffreys, 34 thousand 2
13 Alcohol, 33 thousand	4	40 The Schoolmaster	4
14 The Town of Ipswich, 33 thousand	4	41 Water is best, by J. J. Gurney, 37 thousand... 8
*15 Song of the Water Drinker, 37 thousand	2	42 Cobbett's Advice	4
16 Stimulation not Strength, 30 thousand	8	43 Take a Public House.....	4
17 Farmer Woodman's Speech, 41 thousand	4	*44 A Sailor's Yarn	4
*18 The Beer Barrel Examined, 33 thousand	8	45 Moderate Drinking Calmly Considered	12
19 Teetotal Recipes, 33 thousand	4	46 The Pledge.....	4
*20 Speech of J. J. Gurney, 30 thousand	4	*47 John Jarvis, or the Pledge Signed	12
21 Pity the Poor Drunkard 49 thousand	2	*48 The Fifteen Friends	4
22 The Fool's Pence, 25 thousand	8	49 Sunday School Teachers, 22 thousand	12
23 Why am I a Teetotaler? 26 thousand	2	50 Sunday School Children, 40 thousand	12
*24 Dost thou smoke, Bill? 34 thousand	4	*51 Money better than Beer, 37 thousand	4
25 William the Laudanum Drinker, 30 thousand ... 4		*52 Little Mary; or a Daughter's Love	8
26 The Ox Discourse	4	53 Philosophy of Temperance by R. T. Trall, M.D. 20
27 Letter to the Clergy, by a Brother Clergyman, 21 thousand	20	54 Love to Man, or an Appeal to the Pious.....	20
		*55 The Young Woman's Tract.....	12
		56 The Young Man's Tract	16

	PAGE
57 Dr. Campbell's Testimony, 18 thousand	8
58 Why Sign the Pledge? 40 thousand	2
59 The Poor Man's House Repaired	4
60 The Mother's Tract	8
61 The High Price of Food	4
62 Ladies' Tract Societies	8
63 The Praise of Water, 25 thousand	2
64 Important Calculation, 30 thousand	2
*65 The Farm Servant, 25 thousand	2
66 Teetotalism Declining, 15 thousand	8
*67 The Reformed Drunkard, 20 thousand	8
68 The Recruit of the British Legion	8
69 No. 1 of Temperance Anecdotes	12
70 No. 2 ditto	12
71 No. 3 ditto	12
72 No. 4 ditto	12

	PAGE
73 Luke Husler, or "I did not like to say No."	8
74 The Drunkard's Wife	8
75 The Unexplored Island	4
76 Ancient Wines; by R. D. Alexander	8
77 Influence of Example, 15 thousand	2
*78 The Victim of Excitement	20
*79 My Medical Adviser does not approve of Teetotalism	4
*80 The Restoration	8
ASSORTED PACKETS—No. 1, containing 1 to 31.—No. 2, 32 to 55.—No. 3, 56, and upwards. Fifty Packets of Juvenile Temperance Books or Tracts delivered in London for a Guinea, sent by P. O. Order, to Richard Dykes Alexander, Ipswich. post free, for five shillings. London: Simpkin and Marshall.

On the 1st January, 1848, will be published,

Under the Superintendence of the Committee of the British Association for the Promotion of Temperance, The
FIRST NUMBER OF A SMALL MONTHLY PERIODICAL

ENTITLED THE

SUNDAY SCHOOL AND YOUTHS'

TEMPERANCE JOURNAL.

Price One Halfpenny, or 3s. 6d. per 100, paid in advance.

This periodical will be published at the Isle of Man, from which it can be sent free by post to all parts of the United Kingdom. It can also be re-posted the same as a stamped newspaper. It will be printed on good paper in a clear type, and will contain twelve pages, the size of the "Christian's Penny Magazine," conducted by Dr. Campbell. The outside leaves will form a cover, on which will be two splendid Engravings, designed expressly for this work by the celebrated George Cruikshank, Esq. The inside of the cover will be used for notices and advertisements connected with juvenile movements, leaving eight pages to be devoted to useful and instructive matter; adapted to Sunday School Scholars and young Teetotalers generally.

The Committee are glad to announce, that a literary gentleman of influence and long standing in the temperance world, and also of extensive experience in education, has undertaken (gratuitously) the editorial department; and the friends of the rising race are assured, that the utmost exertion will be made to render this little messenger of truth acceptable and instructive to those for whom it is specially designed.

The first number will be ready early in December, several thousand copies of which will be sent, per post, to Sunday School Teachers, and the leading friends of the temperance cause, throughout the kingdom, in order that time may be afforded for inspection, and for the forwarding of orders previous to the date of publication.

Sunday School Superintendents and Teachers are urged to make arrangements for supplying a copy to every child in their respective schools. Parents will do well to order it for their families.

The price as stated will be One Halfpenny each, or 3s. 6d. per hundred, paid in advance; and parties ordering more than twenty-five copies monthly, may have half their orders folded and directed singly, on forwarding the names and address (plainly written) of the persons to whom they wish the Journal to be sent.

All orders and communications, accompanied by a post-office order or postage stamps, must be sent to Mr. Frederic Hopwood, Secretary of the Association, 3, Low Ousegate, York.

SCALE OF PRICES.

	Per Month.	Per Year.	Per Month.	Per Year.
	s. d.	s. d.	s. d.	£. s. d.
1 copy...	0 0½	0 6	25 copies	1 0 0 12 0
6 ditto...	0 3	3 0	50 ditto	1 10 1 2 0
12 ditto...	0 6	6 0	100 ditto	3 6 2 8 0

Charge for Advertisements—5 lines, across the entire page, 3s. 6d., and 4d. for each additional line.

LONDON TEMPERANCE TRACTS,

UNDER THE SANCTION OF THE

National Temperance Society.

The above Tracts comprise a variety of 150 different sorts, and embrace every point of the principle of Total Abstinence. Upwards of

THREE MILLION

have already been circulated. 2 pp. 8d.; 4 pp. 1s. 4d., 8 pp. 2s. 8d. per 100., or in packets, assorted, 6d. each.

For the convenience of LOAN CIRCULATION, they are assorted into 60 sets, containing 16 pp. in each; and stitched into a strong wrapper, with a suitable address upon each, price 8s. per 100. Liberal allowance for large quantities. Lists may be obtained of the Publishers gratis.

Houlston & Stoneman, 65, Paternoster Row.

AN ALMANACK

handsomely printed in two colours, suitable for framing, is now ready for delivery at the Office of the Temperance Provident Institution, 39, Moorgate Street. Members and others may obtain it gratis on application to the Secretary.

25th October, 1847.

* * * The NATIONAL TEMPERANCE CHRONICLE and TEMPERANCE RECORDER is published on the first day of each month, at HOULSTON & STONEMAN, the Depot of the National Temperance Society, 65, Paternoster-row, and will be sent post-free for one year on receipt of 2s. postage labels. Annual Subscriptions received at the Society's office, 11, Tokenhouse Yard, London, and subscriptions and donations for the general purposes of the Society, by the Treasurer, G. W. ALEXANDER, 40, Lombard Street; by any Member of the Committee, and at the office as above.

London: Printed by RICHARD BARRETT of 8, Regent-terrace, City-road, in the Parish of St. Luke, in the County of Middlesex, Printer; at his Prnting Office, No. 13, Mark-lane, in the Parish of Allhallows Staining, in the City of London; and published by JOHN STONEMAN, of 24, Brooksbury Street, in the Parish of Islington, in the County of Middlesex, at HOULSTON and STONEMAN'S, No. 65, Paternoster-row, in the Parish of St. Michael-le-Querne, in the City of London, Publishers.—Monday, November 1st, 1847.

THE
NATIONAL TEMPERANCE CHRONICLE
 AND
TEMPERANCE RECORDER.

It is good neither to eat flesh, nor to drink wine, nor anything whereby thy brother stumbleth, or is offended, or is made weak.—ROM. XIV. 21

No. 24, JOINT SERIES.]

DECEMBER, 1847.

[PRICE 1d., STAMPED 2d.]

CONTENTS.

	PAGE	PAGE
Our Encouragement.....	185	Procedure in Abrogating Drinking Usages—Subscriptions —Winter Recreations
A good Example for Magistrates—Circular of "Death and Co.," to their Patrons and the Public.....	186	192, 193
Spirituous Liquors (continued)—Our Responsibilities	187	POETRY—A Welcome to J. S. Buckingham, Esq.
HOME INTELLIGENCE—Metropolitan Mission—Surrey— Norwich—Robert Street Chapel, Grosvenor Square— Hoxton Ladies' Association—Catholic Institute—Bath— Leighton Buzzard—Worcester—Preston—Sipson, near West Drayton—Hastings—Turner's Hill, Sussex—Totten- ham—Dover	189-91	193
Pleading Facts.....	191	Letter to the Secretary of the American Tem. Union
EDITORIAL REMARKS—National Temperance Society—		194
		FOREIGN INTELLIGENCE—Turkey—Court of Insolvency— Temperance Meeting in Westminster—Letter from Rev. W. Darby to Archdeacon Jeffries 195
		Drunkenness in the Army—Old Man's Story—A Smart Man—The Little Drop, or Moderate Drinking—Illinois— Jamaica—A strong Sentiment—The Band of Hope—The Wednesbury Riot—Wine at Dinner Parties—Hints to Workmen
		196-298
		POETRY—A Cold Water Ballad—Look not on Wine ..
		198, 199

OUR ENCOURAGEMENT.

"A BRIGHT time is coming." This remark, intended as a stimulus to increased exertion, often proves illusive, in consequence of the assertion being ventured without sufficient foundation to support it. Not so, however, on the present occasion, and in reference to the principle to which we apply it, that of total abstinence from all intoxicating drinks. We contend, not only is a bright time coming, but we assert it has already dawned. We hail with heartfelt joy the bright streaks of hallowed truth darting their life-giving, health-inspiring beams across the moral hemisphere, chasing away the vapours which have long hung as a black funeral pall over the best interests of our beloved country, dimming and mystifying the vision of some of the best and wisest of our species, inducing them to call darkness light and light darkness, to put bitter for sweet, and sweet for bitter. We again say, we hail with joy the dawning of this better day; our principles are beginning to be more known and appreciated, and this, not by any one particular class, but by all sections of society; they are now recognised and acted upon in high places, where but a few years back they were purely a matter of ridicule and contempt. And this salutary change has not only taken place in our own country, but in nearly every state in Europe. It is especially with lively emotions of delight that we contemplate the growing attachment springing up in favour of our principles, amongst that important portion of society, Sabbath-school Teachers, occupying a most important position in connection with the future prosperity of our country, having long thought and openly declared it to be our decided and growing conviction, that the chief hope of the ultimate triumph of Total Abstinence principles rested upon the rising generation. We trust we have now satisfactorily determined the point to their own consciences and feelings, that however important the inculcation of religious principles upon the attention of the young may be, and we fully and heartily admit them to be of paramount importance, yet, if unaccompanied by precept and example on the part of the teacher against the most powerful temptation which the adversary of souls uses to decoy and ensnare the youthful mind, the thorns will choke the word, and it will become unfruitful. This has been most painfully demonstrated again and again. We have also encouragement in the fact, that those strongholds of intemperance, where the chains that bind the slave of strong drinks are both forged and rivetted, viz. the factories and workshops, are now being looked into—the philanthropic feelings of employers are appealed to, so that their influence may be used for the abrogation of these cruel usages. In another place in this Chronicle will be seen the resolutions adopted at a meeting held in Worcester, noticed in our November Number, and we trust that, as there recommended, a systematic and vigorous attack will be made by every Society, to root up these pernicious regulations. Another feature of encouragement, is the countenance and support given by the Medical profession. But there is yet a great work to be done in this department of our labours. Our friends will, we trust, continue to prosecute this enterprise with redoubled zeal.

A GOOD EXAMPLE FOR MAGISTRATES.

On application being made at the last annual day for granting 15 new Licenses for Beer Shops, &c., the Magistrates of Bolton, in Lancashire, refused to grant them, on receiving a memorial signed by the most respectable inhabitants of the town, and presented by Mr. Taylor, the coroner, with the following address:—"In what he had to say he wished it to be understood that it was not his wish to say anything personally offensive to the publicans and beer-sellers. The principal ground upon which the applications were made, was, that such houses were necessary for public convenience, in addition to the interest of the parties who sought to enhance the value of their property. In one case it was said, there were large works erected in the neighbourhood, and a public-house would be a convenience to the people. He should say it was quite the contrary. If there were a number of people in the neighbourhood, the best thing would be to keep the public-house away from them. Let it be proved how much better works with 700 hands could prosper without this adjunct—Besides, additional public-houses are quite uncalled for. In Bolton there were 117 public-houses, 211 beer-houses, selling on the premises, making a total of 343. He would not say how many breweries, private stills, hush-shops, and gin-palaces were to be found, for it was impossible to tell, "their name is Legion." It was known that an increase of such places was always attended with demoralizing consequences, and if the magistrates were to grant the applications now, the number next year would be increased fourfold. Three or four years ago, 7 or 8 were granted and now they had 15 applications. By putting a fictitious value upon property by means of licenses, encouragement was given to build ale-houses. But let it be understood that no more licenses would be granted, and they would soon see how many would build houses for the convenience of the public, when they are not likely to be profitable speculations. The Mayor had already stated that the beer-shops had been weighed in the balance and found wanting. They brought ruin, desolation, and degradation upon thousands. This was not an idea of the imagination, but a positive fact. Mr. Harris, in his statistical tables, stated that in 1846, there were 117 public-houses and 200 beer-shops, making a total of 317; whereas in 1847, they amounted to 342; making an increase of 25 in twelve months. Let them see how this increase had worked. The times had been worse, provisions dear, rates high, and labour scarce, which would have led to the supposition that drinking would be less. Such was not the case. In 1846, the police took up for being drunk and disorderly, or incapable of taking care of themselves, 637 males, and 164 females. Whereas in 1847, the number had increased to 715 males, and 176 females. Such being the state of things now, what might they expect if 15 more were added to the number of public-houses. Three out of every five prisoners brought before the bench might trace their crimes to drunkenness. In the borough there were from 7 to 8 thousand inhabited houses, so that they had one house for the sale of intoxicating liquors to every 25, and taking the population they had one to every 200 persons. Of 70 inquests held during the year, the cause of death in 14 of these cases was drunkenness; and in every case the drink had been obtained at ale-houses. He asked the magistrates then to stem this evil. The memorial was signed by ministers of every denomination, and he, Mr. Taylor, trusted that the magistrates would co-operate with them in putting down the monster evil—drunkenness—which was now desolating the land."

CIRCULAR OF "DEATH AND CO.," TO THEIR PATRONS AND THE PUBLIC.

DEATH & CO., wholesale and retail dealers in spirits, wines, and malt liquors, take this opportunity of informing their friends, that they continue the trade of making Drunkards, Bankrupts, Beggars, and Maniacs, on the most reasonable terms, at the shortest notice.

The advertisers return their sincere thanks to numerous customers, and to all the tipping part of the community, for the extensive patronage they now receive; and they hope that the many proofs that are now to be found of their success in the above line of business, will secure to them the increased support of all drunkards and little drop drinkers, as well as forever silence the advocates of total abstinence societies, those bitter enemies of their long established and popular trade.

DEATH & Co. beg leave to assure the public, that the articles in which they deal are the best and most pleasant poisons in the world; and they will warrant them certain death, in every case where the individual perseveres in the use of them.

DEATH & Co. bring themselves under obligations to send more persons to the poor-house, the prison, the gallows, and the grave-yard, than any other firm; and they will also do it with the greatest possible dispatch. To accomplish these desirable ends, it is only necessary for the individual to take a glass occasionally, till he feels that quantity insufficient to gratify the craving appetite which it will soon create; and when this rum, whiskey, gin, brandy, wine, cider, ale, or porter appetite is formed, the person is then prepared to brave temporal and eternal misery for the sake of another glass. In short, DEATH & Co. will spare no pains or expense, to bring the wives and children of their customers to misery, temporal and eternal, and drive to delirium and death as many as the public good may require. They are constantly receiving new supplies of the poisonous liquids, which they will sell by the glass, the bottle, the barrel, or the hoghead.

For the accommodation of their numerous customers, and for the dispatch of their increasing business, DEATH & Co. have appointed a sufficient number of active agents, who are stationed at convenient distances, in splendid palaces, beer-shops, and public-houses. These palaces, beer-shops, and public houses may be known by the squalor, filth, obscenity, or misery of the customers who congregate around them, as well as by the odours of the poisons continually polluting the air around.

Satisfactory references can be given to county jails, houses of correction, lunatic asylums, hospitals, work-houses, insolvent debtors' court, the court of bankruptcy, or the wives and families of those whom DEATH & Co. have had the happiness to make drunkards.

N. B.—DEATH & Co. beg leave to caution all tipplers and dram-drinkers, from giving any heed to their wives, children, or friends, or to any advocates of total abstinence societies, as these parties are enemies to this soul and body-destroying business. Gentlemen, by calling on our agents, may see specimens of drunkards, and subjects for the charnel-house, at all hours, by day and by night, Sundays not excepted.

DEATH & CO.

SPIRITUOUS LIQUORS.

Extracted by M. BONQUIE LEFEVRE, from a Dutch Work, by HUYDECOPER, and translated from the September Journal of la Société de la Morale Chrétienne, by Mr. SCUTT.

(Continued from p. 171.)

Temperance Societies are spread throughout the whole world, at first throughout the whole of North America, then through the South. They exist in the North as far as Lapland, and in the South to the Cape of Good Hope and to Botany Bay. In the Old World, in 1839, a priest of Belfast in Ireland, having assembled his brethren, the first society was established at New Ross. We know the prodigious success which Father Mathew obtained, not only in Ireland, but also in Scotland and England.

Already in 1831, the Prince John of Saxony, brother of the King, endeavoured that the Continent should enjoy the blessings of this society. In 1833, the King of Prussia wrote to the Boston Society, they sent to Germany, in 1835, Robert Baird, author of the History of the Temperance Societies; the King of Prussia caused his work to be translated and published, dedicated to the Prince Royal, who is now king; and aided as much as possible so desirable a reform.

The physicians especially applied themselves to show the pernicious effects of strong drinks, Dr. Van Schokke, in a work, entitled The Plague of Brandy, Dr. Van Landen, also in a work named, The Reign of Gin; Dr. Heerenrath of Amsterdam, in a dissertation under the sanction of the Society of Utrecht, and Dr. Kranichfeld of Berlin, who regularly published with his periodical medical journal, a statistical account of poisoning by alcohol. We know by official reports, to what extent spirituous liquors have been consumed in different countries. In Holland, where there are only three millions of inhabitants, the consumption was 700,000 ankers, or more than thirty millions of quarts, more than ten quarts per head. In Hanover, only peopled by 1,700 thousand inhabitants, they consumed 660,000 ankers, near thirty millions of quarts, nearly eighteen quarts per head. In Sweden, they consumed with a population of three millions of men, 2,700,000 ankers, more than 130 millions of quarts, or forty quarts per head.

But since the establishment of Temperance Societies, the evil has greatly diminished. In the United States of North America, the consumption was 6,760 thousand ankers, or 325 millions of quarts, it has been actually reduced one-third; that is to say, to 2,250 thousand ankers, or 100 millions of quarts; but the reduction has now reached more than 200 millions of quarts. Holland attracts equally our attention—Boucher, the great advocate for abolition in Germany, wrote in his report upon the reform produced by temperance as far as the year 1840. "The inhabitants of the Netherlands, in those low and marshy countries surrounded by the North Sea, are persuaded that behind their sands and dikes, in a damp climate, strong drinks are necessary to prevent fatal results." He adds, "it is necessary to maintain the principles of temperance there, where the consumption has lately made the most frightful progress." It is true, that from the ports of Holland, have issued during many years, ships which have distributed spirituous liquors throughout the whole world; but the exportation has considerably diminished. This year 1847, the annual budget of the States of Holland, contains these words, "The accounts concerning the distilleries of Weesp, formerly so flourishing, show they are now decaying; all with the exception of one, have ceased their work. These distilleries, worked exclusively for North America, where the last two years, the importation has been subject to taxes so exorbitant, that it is equivalent to a total prohibition; the ruin of these distilleries has been the inevitable consequence." We have also seen that the braziers of Hamburg who make distilling utensils, complain that their trade has been crippled.

But many Temperance Societies are established in Holland, the Utrecht Society published in 1842, an address to the citizens, in which they have defied the contrary side to bring forward a single defender. At the same time, they challenge this opponent, if one can be found to show a single advantage from the use of strong drinks.

The cause of the abolition has made rapid progress upon the continent of Europe. According to the last accounts, there are actually 585 societies in the north of Germany, who reckon their members considerably to exceed 100,000. The first Association was formed in Sweden, at Stockholm, in 1836. The principal chaplain to the Court, Nordenson, Secretary to the Society, has fixed the number of the members according to a report in 1843, at 85,000.

The late king ordered the suppression of the distilleries found within his estates, and many members of the nobility imitated his example. The present king presided over a Temperance Society, when he was hereditary prince. Now its president is his minister Trautmann, and the king is able to contemplate the salutary effects; for it has been proved that in 1837, the number of dissolved marriages had reached 1,600, and in 1842, no more than 900. In 1837, the post masters were the principal sellers of strong drinks, and they made at their houses, but especially on Sundays, a considerable sale. They then became the theatre of serious disorders, and all kinds of quarrels; now they are nearly deserted in many places, and the sellers have been reduced 2,000 at least.

The societies have spread in Germany, and the Regency of Dusseldorf made, in 1837, an appeal to the inhabitants of that city, to induce them to establish one, declaring they considered intemperance as the source of all crimes. All the judges and governors of prisons of all countries have been unanimous in attributing, after a very moderate estimate of numbers, that three-fourths of the outrages against the person, and one-fourth of those against property, and four-fifths of crimes, and seven-eighths of contentions, directly or indirectly, may be traced to drink. We tremble with fear, when reading the last words pronounced upon the scaffold by a young incendiary, beheaded at Berden, in Hanover, 5th September, 1843: "Let my example serve as a severe warning; strong drink has ruined me, thrust it away, it is the blood of a demon."

(To be continued.)

OUR RESPONSIBILITIES.

Extracted from the Friend.

Among the important subjects which have of late engaged the serious attention of the public, is that of the Punishment of Death. The taking of human life by legal process, if no sufficient authority for the practice can be produced, is a dreadful assumption of power; and constitutes an evil, which loudly calls for investigation on the part of all who connect with our present state of being the realities of a world to come.

One is ushered into eternity by the relentless arm of the law ; another is cut off in the midst of his days by a course of guilty pleasure ; both perchance unprepared ; both overtaken in sins, into which, very possibly, they have been gradually betrayed by education and circumstances ;—circumstances which might, to a great extent, have been removed or prevented, had the efforts of good men been properly united to counteract them. The question is one which is more and more loudly demanding examination. The responsibilities of professing christians must be more and more exhibited. The possibility of prevention as applied to crime, executions, and other and far more extensive sacrifices of human life, must be yet more forcibly illustrated, more clearly and directly connected with some of our every day duties and movements. We mourn over fifteen or twenty annual deaths on the scaffold. We think of hurrying a fellow-creature, unprepared, before the final judgment. Our sympathies are awakened, and our exertions are roused, on his behalf. Forty or Fifty thousand miserable beings are prematurely cut off in one short year, by another not less potent and certain agency. Are we, in proportion to the magnitude of such an evil, and the possibility of its prevention, in these cases also, moved to sympathy and effective action ? O that we more fully exemplified our belief in the oft-admitted declaration, that we should do all in our power to alleviate and diminish human suffering ; that the great principle of prevention, susceptible as it is of application to some of our most gigantic social evils, were more thoroughly and practically appreciated. Not the less should we feel and act on behalf of the condemned criminal, but the more would our concern and our exertions extend to the causes and incentives, as well as to the consummation, of a life of crime. The more we should feel, that while the saving of individuals well engages our thoughts, labours, or self-denial ; much more anxiously and earnestly we ought to be stimulated, when the question turns on the saving of thousands.

To whatever source we direct our inquiries respecting the formation of depraved habits, and the growth of criminal propensities, we find one un-failing agency everywhere inscribed. The time surely cannot be far distant, when such statements as the following, confirmed as they are by universal observation, will receive such attention as will lead to more combined and decisive action ;—

“ If the murders, burglaries, robberies, riots, tumults, adulteries, rapes, and other enormities that have been committed during a period of twenty years, were divided into five parts, four of them have been the product of excessive drinking.”—JUDGE HALE.

“ Ninety-nine cases out of every hundred brought before him, originate in hard drinking.”—JUDGE ERSKINE.

“ Scarcely a crime comes before him, which is not, directly or indirectly, caused by strong drink.”—JUDGE COLERIDGE.

“ Every crime has its origin more or less in drunkenness.”—JUDGE GURNEY.

“ They could not but be sensible of the fact, that the facilities thus afforded to the indulgence of intemperate habits, were the principal cause of the crime that prevailed.”—JUDGE GILLIES.

“ He could not help adverting to the numerous cases of assault. These evidently originated in the excitement arising from the immoderate use of spirituous liquors.”—JUSTICE CLERK.

“ If it were not for this drinking, you (the jury) and I would have nothing to do.”—JUSTICE PAT-TISON.

“ Drunkenness is the most fertile source of crime ; and if it could be removed, the assizes of the country would be rendered mere nullities.”—JUSTICE ALDERSON.

“ He found from a perusal of the depositions at Liverpool, one un-failing cause of four-fifths of these crimes, was, as it was in every other calendar, the be-setting sin of drunkenness.”—JUSTICE WIGHTMAN.

Here then, beyond all controversy, is the path which leads to the scaffold ; and far more than this, which leads every year to tens of thousands of deaths, which, by the application of one practicable, lawful preventive, might all be saved. It is not needful now to examine the question, whether moderation in the use of strong drink may not be safely allowed and encouraged. The question is one which, during the last half century, has been abundantly discussed, and as abundantly answered. Good men have long been engaged in promoting moderation. It may be difficult to say what has been, we know with much more certainty what has not been, the result ; and it may be predicted with confidence, that if good men sanction, for ten years to come, the common use of intoxicating drinks, a quarter of a million of human beings will be sacrificed in the experiment.

The question must be viewed practically. The consideration of philosophical theories, of ancient wines, of Jewish customs, of abstract rights, is foreign to the subject. The use of strong drink, in the face of all the efforts which have been made to regulate it, has actually been attended by the evils which have been enumerated. We know at least one great result that would follow from universal abstinence ; and we know equally well what must be expected from the continued sanction of moderation. If, therefore, a hundred theories were propounded, and if every abstract liberty were discussed, so long as abstinence is lawful, the question would still return.—would it not be infinitely better for the general welfare, if abstinence were universally adopted ? Against its adoption, 'only one conceivable reason can therefore be urged ;—that intoxicating beverages are necessary, and cannot with safety be discarded. But this has been negatived by the testimony of more than 1300 medical men, comprising the most talented of the profession in Europe. The last link in the chain being thus completed, there would appear to be but one remaining obstacle in the way of the temperance reformation ;—that is, the unpleasantness of self-denial. With respect to the larger portion of the community, not only must even this be comparatively small, and every day diminishing, but in numerous instances, after a short period, it would be exchanged for an actual benefit. Whether this unpleasantness constitutes a good and sufficient reason for declining to aid a great moral revolution, it is not needful to decide. They who will fairly examine the question, with an honest desire to learn what line of conduct would, on the whole, most conduce to the happiness of the human family, will not be in danger of any great mistake.

To return to our original consideration. The drinking habits of the community are connected, directly or indirectly, with a greater sacrifice of life, than probably all other agencies combined. The ramifications of their influence are innumerable. To what extent even war, with all its horrors, is fed or sustained by them, has never been fully ascertained. In our own country, the very first step in the soldier's career is generally drink ; and one thing is certain, that without its brutalizing influence, the difficulty of inducing men to sell themselves for machines or slaves would be immeasurably increased. The lives that are destroyed by what are called accidents, by sea and land, furnish numberless mournful illustrations of the fatal tendency of drinking habits among men, to whose care is entrusted the safety, sometimes of hundreds of their fellow-creatures. Then in how many instances is it drink that finally nerves the murderer's arm; that murderer, whose life, after the dark deed is committed, we are so anxious to save. And finally, how many thousands are annually slain by drink itself, it is impossible accurately to number.

Let us then by all means endeavour to save. Let us contemplate the appalling extent to which human life is now sacrificed through avoidable agencies. Let us endeavour after some adequate conception, both of the magnitude of the evil, and our own solemn responsibilities; and if, in throwing our influence into the right scale, even some sacrifice be involved, it is just what, as Christians, we are required cheerfully to encounter. We are continually called upon to deny ourselves of something for the good of others: why not strong drink? If we are willing to contribute liberally of our substance for the benefit of our neighbour, on what principle do we hesitate, for the same great and good object, to surrender one small indulgence? If all professing Christians would put the question in all sincerity, not, what is it abstractedly lawful to retain,—but what good can we effect by careful self-denial,—there cannot be any reasonable doubt, that one of the greatest social reformations would speedily follow, that the world ever witnessed.—ZETA.

Home Intelligence.

METROPOLITAN MISSION.

STREET LABOURS.

Meeting two men who had been drinking the whole of the day, and were quite intoxicated. The missionary spoke to them, they said, "It is high time we changed—we cannot stand this game much longer. We are now what is called, regularly stumpt. We have not a mag left. Can you tell us where there is a temperance meeting? When asked what they meant to do at the temperance meeting? they replied, "sign the pledge to be sure." The missionary, producing his pledge-book, said, they could put their good resolve into practice now. They both signed the pledge.

SURREY.

BROCKHAM NEAR DORKING.

A lecture upon Animal Physiology, shewing the influence of alcohol upon the health of body and mind, was recently delivered in Mr. Tinckner's large room, by Mr. J. H. Donaldson. The lecture was illustrated with large coloured drawings and diagrams. The Brockham Temperance Society is the fruit of the Metropolitan Temperance Mission.

NORWICH.

I thank you for your letter respecting a City Temperance Missionary, I am happy to say that we are now about to employ one, we have engaged Mr. McCre, who has for some time been employed at Nottingham, we need much such an effort: almost every week some one or other is putting an end to his own life through strong drink. In Norwich, there is a great desecration of the Sabbath, I should like to be in communication with the Sabbath Observance Society, if there is such a Society in London; I enclose you one of our Circulars. SAMUEL JARROLD.

To the Superintendent
Of the Metropolitan Mission.

ROBERT-STREET CHAPEL, GROSVENOR SQUARE.

A numerous and highly respectable meeting was held in the school-room of the above chapel, under the auspices of the National Temperance Society, on Monday evening, November 1st. T. B. SCURT, Esq., one of the Executive Committee, in the chair. The chairman opened the meeting with some very appropriate remarks, refuting the objections urged against the society, especially that of putting teetotalism in the place of the gospel. He then alluded to the great good effecting through the agency of Temperance Societies in various parts of Europe, particularly in France, Sweden, and the Hanoverian dominions, which told well upon the audience.

MR. W. CLARIDGE was then called on, who spoke at some length on the fearful effects resulting from the drinking habits and customs of society, upon the great philanthropic and Religious Societies of the day, to a very lamentable extent, cramping their energies, thwarting their efforts, and in many cases, entirely destroying the good impressions produced. He then pressed upon the attention of the audience the great importance of teetotalism, as an indispensable auxiliary to all those great and good movements, appealing especially to christians.

MR. THOMAS WHITTAKER followed, presenting a most vivid picture of the state of Great Britain as stranded in Drunken Bay; the materials taken from the fact of the Great Britain steam ship having been stranded in Dundrum Bay. He alluded to the previous efforts that had been made by the Moderation, the one, two, and three pint societies, to get the vessel off the rocks, but which had all failed; showing most clearly, that nothing short of teetotalism could effect this desirable object.

MR. JABEZ INWARDS forcibly described the evils of intemperance, calling upon all (but especially Christians) to come forth to the rescue of their fellow-men, by setting an example of entire abstinence from all intoxicating drinks.

Each of the speeches, as well as the chairman's address, were heartily responded to. After a vote of thanks to the friends who kindly lent the spacious room for the meeting, and to the Chairman, the meeting broke up.

HOXTON LADIES' ASSOCIATION.

On Monday evening last, in the school-room of Dr. Campbell's Chapel, Mr. John Donaldson delivered a most valuable and important lecture on physiology. The subject was illustrated by large and beautifully executed diagrams, exhibiting the baneful effects of alcohol on the constitution. The room was respectably and densely crowded; the most marked attention was given throughout the evening. The lecture was one of Mr. Donaldson's best, and we never heard him to better advantage. We hear that this long tried advocate is disengaged. Societies will do well to call him to their assistance.

CATHOLIC INSTITUTE, NEW STREET, BISHOPSGATE

An interesting meeting was held in the above place, on Tuesday evening, Nov. 23rd, G. W. Atwood, Esq. in the chair. The audience was addressed by Mr. W. Culverwell and Mr. W. Claridge, of the National Society, Mr. J. W. Green and Mr. R. N. Hickman; after which, our old and much valued friend, Mr. James Teare, spoke at considerable length. Three of our friends have done nobly in taking upon them the responsibility of opening this place for teetotal meetings, in a locality which has felt, perhaps more than any other in London, the blighting influence of strong drink. We sincerely hope they may be sustained.

BATH.

Dear Sir.—It affords me much pleasure to inform you, that the deputation from the National Temperance Society to the county of Wilts have hitherto met with a very hearty reception. We commenced our labours by holding a meeting in the Town Hall in Devizes, (Nov. 5th), kindly granted by the Mayor, G. W. Anstie, Esq., in the chair. Went to Marlborough on the 10th, Market Lavington on the 11th, and Trowbridge on the 12th. The whole of the meetings were largely and respectably attended. The sympathy manifested has been very general, and the pecuniary support encouraging. We feel particularly indebted to Mr. D. Sinclair, the active secretary of the Devizes Society; to G. W. Anstie, junior, and William Burrows, Esq., editor of the Wilts Independent newspaper for their valuable assistance, as well as to the friends of temperance generally.

Our second week's engagements were as follow:—Frome, Monday the 15th; Coesham, Tuesday and Wednesday; Wootton Bassett, Thursday; and Purton, Friday. In every case we met with kind friends, and had full meetings. We have met with two valuable supporters in our second week's campaign, in the persons of B. Horsell, junior, Esq., Wootton Bassett, and Sam. W. Sadler, Esq. (Mayestoll), Purton. These two gentlemen presided over the meetings in their respective places, and kindly entertained the deputation.

Next week we hold meetings in Bath, Chippenham, Calne, and Wootton Bassett. Yours faithfully,

T. WHITTAKER.

LEIGHTON BUZZARD.

Leighton, November 19th, 1847.

Dear Sir.—There are few small towns so favourably distinguished as Leighton Buzzard for the advantages it supplies to teetotalers, and the facilities which it possesses for the promotion of the temperance cause; such as, a spacious and elegant temperance hall, erected at the joint expense of two members of the Society of Friends; the cordial and active co-operation of a benevolent banker, an evangelical clergyman, and a Baptist minister; a gratuitous circulating library connected with the hall, and also with the Friends' meeting-house; a convenient news room, amply supplied with daily papers and periodicals, at a small cost, in the occupation of an enterprising bookseller; a Juvenile Temperance Society, composed of the children of tradespeople, with many of the pupils of the British and Infant Schools; and what is equally worthy of record and commendation, there are two respectable boarding schools conducted on temperance principles.

E. L. ADEY.

[We heartily rejoice in hearing of the many openings for usefulness in Leighton Buzzard, and trust that our friends in that locality (of which we have no doubt) will make the most of these facilities for usefulness.—
ED. N. T. C.]

WORCESTER.

TO THE NATIONAL TEMPERANCE SOCIETY.

At a meeting convened by John Dunlop, of the members of the Total Abstinence Society of this city, the 25th of last month, with a deputation from Malvern and Pershore, for the purpose of introducing two subjects in which he feels deep interest, after entering into them at considerable length, the following resolutions were moved and passed, viz:—

"I. The meeting having considered and discussed the subject of artificial and compulsory drinkings in workshops, factories and elsewhere, in various departments of business and domestic life declare their opinion, that a special movement is necessary to lead to the abrogation and removal of a system so tyrannical and dangerous to our country; so hostile to the spread of teetotalism, and so perfectly subversive of what amount of National Temperance the society may have been the means of establishing in the land."

"II. The meeting having heard various statements as to the Medical Temperance movement, declare it as their opinion, that it ought to be earnestly encouraged and assisted by all individual teetotalers, throughout the kingdom, especially in procuring additional signatures to the Medical Certificate."

"III. The meeting conceiving that the Anti-usage and Medical Temperance Movements are not local, but of a general nature; and are of opinion, that their prosecution and encouragement, would appear to be, peculiarly the office and duty of the more general teetotal unions throughout the kingdom. They, therefore, respectfully suggest immediate and careful attention to these subjects—to the Executive Committee of the British Temperance Association—the National Temperance Society—the Central Temperance Association, and the Scottish Temperance League, with a view to a Special Fund being laid aside for the movements in question; and that agents be employed for the particular purpose of conducting these movements.

SAMUEL DARKE, Secretary.

PRESTON.

On Friday evening, October 29th, the Thirty-first Half-yearly festival of this society commenced with a meeting held in the Theatre. Mr. Lowe, silversmith, presided, and briefly addressed the meeting; after which, the Honourable Judge Marshall of Nova Scotia, delivered a most interesting and instructive address, which will not be soon forgotten. On the motion of Mr. Swindlehurst, seconded by the Rev. J. Jenkins, a vote of thanks to the learned gentleman was carried by acclamation. The theatre was well filled. On the Sunday evening following, a Temperance Sermon was preached in the Independent Chapel, Grimshaw Street, by the Rev. R. Slate, from the 1st verse of the 28th chapter of Isaiah. The Rev. gentleman in the course of his sermon described some of the national, moral and physical evils resulting from the use of intoxicating liquors; the divisions of the subject upon which he treated, were "The divine testimony against the sin of drunkenness," the testimony thus borne, illustrated and confirmed by matters of fact, and "The duty of christians in reference to drunkenness." From these premises, he fully proved abstinence from intoxicating drinks to be a christian duty. The attendance was good, including many of the leading advocates of the cause in Preston. On Tuesday, Wednesday, Thursday, Friday and Saturday evenings, Nov. 2nd, 3rd, 4th, 5th, and 6th, Washingtonian Meetings were held in the Temperance Hall, which was crowded each evening, and hundreds of persons were unable to gain admission. The following gentlemen presided, the Rev. Thomas Weston, on Tuesday; Mr. Livesey, on Wednesday; Mr. Swindlehurst, on Thursday; Captain Finley, on Friday, and Mr. John Teare on Saturday evening; and the meetings were addressed principally by reformed characters, and 117 signatures to the pledge were obtained. On Sunday evening, November 7th, a Temperance Sermon was preached in Lady Huntingdon's chapel, by the Rev. J. Jenkins, and on the following evening, a Total Abstinence Society in connexion with that place of worship was formed

J. S. PTE.

SIPSON, NEAR WEST DRAYTON.

On the 27th of October, a meeting and festival was held at Sipson, when about 170 sat down to tea, and 400 met in the evening to hear an address from Mr. Inwards, who spoke in a very interesting and instructive manner, convincing, if not converting, many on the temperance question.

To enliven the meeting, the West Drayton brass band was in attendance, and played a number of lively airs to the amusement of the company.

The meeting was held in a barn belonging to Mr. Wild, farmer, residing at Sipson, a firm and tried friend to the cause.

Much praise is due to all parties, and great good will, no doubt, result amongst the young and the rural population of the neighbourhood.

HASTINGS.

On Wednesday, October 20th, a public tea-meeting was held in connexion with the Temperance Society, and was attended by a goodly number of friends to the glorious cause. The meeting was presided over by Mr. W. Rock, sen., coach-builder, and addressed by the Rev. W. Evans; Messrs. F. Streeter, F. Beck, Secretary; and that old and tried friend of the cause, Mr. H. N. Rickman, in a powerful speech of an hour's length, displaying most clearly the benefits of total abstinence in a variety of views—not forgetting the physical—which he illustrated and enforced by a reference to Dr. Sewall's Colossal Stomach Plates, which were exhibited on the occasion. At the close of the meeting three signatures were taken.

TURNER'S HILL, SUSSEX.

A public meeting was held in the chapel of this little village, on Tuesday evening the 2nd inst.; the chair was taken by the Rev. H. Rogers; addresses on the various bearings of the great question were delivered by the chairman—who officiates at the chapel—Rev. G. Veales of Forest Row, Mr. Mills (who has lately left the army), and Mr. Cramp, Secretary to the East Grinstead Temperance Society. There was a good attendance, and a most respectful attention given to the several speakers. The testimony of Mills, who is a native of East Grinstead, secured special attention. He enlisted at the age of seventeen, accompanied his regiment to Ireland, to the West Indies and to Canada, and after nine years' service obtained his discharge, with a temporary pension, in consequence of broken health,—the result of his drinking and irregular habits. His strict sobriety and steady conduct have reinstated him in the possession of sound health,—and having added to his temperance, godliness, he has just been appointed an agent in the London City Mission.

November 3rd, 1847.

T. C.

TOTTENHAM.

On Tuesday evening, the 2nd of November, a lecture was delivered in the New Hall, Tottenham, by Mr. Thomas Beggs, late Secretary of the National Temperance Society. Samuel Fox, Esq., in the chair. It was the first of a series of monthly lectures which the Committee of that town are arranging for the winter. The hall was filled with an attentive auditory. The lecture, which abounded in facts, was intended to show that the drinking-system had a most powerful influence upon youthful depravity—by debasing parents—destroying the domestic affections, and wasting the means which ought properly to be employed in providing home comforts and education for youth. It was shewn too, how many attempts at education were rendered abortive by the love of drink. The object of the address was to shew that, besides building schools and appointing schoolmasters, it was necessary that efforts should be made to destroy the barriers which opposed the spread of education. Mr. Beggs concluded by an appeal to parents on the importance of making total abstinence a branch of home discipline.

DOVER.

The cause of true temperance is still moving onwards in this town. On Tuesday, October 26th, 1847, we were favoured for the thirty-seventh time, with a visit from our old, tried, and much valued friend, Mr. Jabez Inwards. At 5 o'clock a few of the friends, about seventy in number, took tea together at the Royal Oak Assembly Rooms. At half-past seven the doors were opened to the public. Mr. W. Horsnail having taken the chair, introduced Mr. J. Inwards to the meeting, who delivered a most interesting lecture on "The Bottle," to an attentive and crowded audience, at the close of which twenty signatures were obtained to the pledge. The labours of this truly eloquent advocate in his frequent visits to this town, have been the means of doing a vast amount of good.

In conclusion, we entreat all our friends who have the welfare, happiness, and improvement of themselves and fellow-creatures at heart, to give up the use of every thing connected with the drinking customs, and to endeavour, both by precept and example, to assist the onward progress of teetotalism. Yours truly,
HENRY HARRIS.

PLEASING FACTS.

In the town of Crewkerne, a Baptist church has been established about thirty years; but during the last five or six years, since teetotalism was introduced into the town, the church has received more additions to its communicants, than during the whole period of its history. More than one-half of the whole number of members, which now amounts to upwards of one hundred, have been added in consequence of teetotalism. The two ministers previous to the present pastor, one of whom had laboured twelve, and the other six years, amongst them, declared in their farewell addresses that nine out of every ten of the expulsions from that church had taken place through the use of intoxicating drink, and, with tears in their eyes, exhorted the people to keep away from the public-house. (Why not advise them to abstain from intoxicating drinks which did the mischief?) In Mr. Dummett's sail-cloth manufactory, before teetotalism prevailed among the workpeople, there were very few who were members of any Christian church, but now there are more than thirty, most of whom, if not all of them, had first become connected with the temperance society. In other families in the neighbourhood, where teetotalism had not entered, conversions were very rare, though much Christian labour had been bestowed upon them. Is it not astonishing, with facts like these before him, that a man can become the pastor of such a church and still stand aloof from the temperance movement? Yet so it is. The above particulars were given to me on my visit to Crewkerne in April, by a respectable man who is a member of the church referred to, and also an overlooker or manager in the manufactory mentioned in this communication.

J. SWANN.

National Temperance Society.

OFFICE 11, TOKENHOUSE YARD.

VICE-PRESIDENTS.

THE EARL OF ARUNDEL AND SURREY, M.P.

R. D. Alexander, Esq.
 J. D. Bassett, Esq.
 Thomas Beaumont, Esq.
 C. Bowly, Esq.
 Samuel Bowly, Esq.
 J. S. Buckingham, Esq.
 Robert Charleton, Esq.
 Rev. R. Clowes, M.A.
 Joseph Eaton, Esq.
 J. Forbes, M.D., F.R.S. & C. & C.
 S. C. Hall, Esq., B.L., F.S.A.
 Lawrence Heyworth, Esq.
 William Janson, Jun., Esq.
 Ven. Archdeacon Jeffreys.
 G. S. Kenrick, Esq.
 Dr. Lee.

Rev. Theobald Mathew.
 W. J. Morgan, A.M., M.D.
 Richard Peek, Esq.
 Rev. P. Penson, M.A.
 Rev. W. Reid.
 Rev. W. W. Robinson, M.A.
 Rev. J. Sherman.
 Rev. C. Stovel.
 Rev. T. Spencer, A.M.
 Joseph Sturge, Esq.
 Rev. W. H. Turner, M.A.
 Edward Thomas, Esq.
 Robert Warner, Esq.
 Edward Webb, Esq.
 Rev. J. Wilson.

TREASURER.

G. W. Alexander, Esq., 40, Lombard Street.

CHAIRMAN OF THE COMMITTEE.

William Cash, Esq., Peckham Rye.

EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE.

G. W. Alexander.
 George W. Atwood,
 Richard Barrett.
 Jabez Burns, D.D.
 William Cabell.
 William Cash.
 John Cassell.

Charles Gilpin.
 Richard Hicks.
 C. H. Lovell, M.D.
 John Meredith.
 W. W. Robinson.
 T. B. Scutt.

SUPERINTENDENT OF MISSION.

John Meredith.

SECRETARY.

COLLECTING AGENTS.

Mr. Thomas Whittaker.
 Mr. Jabez Inwards.

Mr. Thomas Hudson.
 Mr. William Culverwell.

NATIONAL TEMPERANCE SOCIETY.

The Committee, some months ago, issued an appeal on behalf of funds to support a series of efforts in contemplation. In consequence of the distress in Ireland, and other causes, this appeal was only attended with very partial success. The heavy visitation which has passed over us, is another argument, however, in favour of increased exertions in behalf of the temperance cause. Every consideration of sound policy calls upon them to oppose a system which is wasting the food of the people, and spreading abroad the seeds of crime, poverty, disease, and irreligion. In order to make efforts commensurate with the greatness of their object, the Committee must have placed at their disposal much larger funds. Applications are being continually made to them for assistance they are unable to render, and fields of usefulness are left uncultivated for want of means. They have resolved to resume their application, and to make an energetic attempt to raise up the fund of £5000, originally proposed, and which was stated as necessary to sustain the Society's operations for the years 1847-8-9. In order to do this effectually, they have engaged four agents, who, in addition to public lecturing on the principles of the temperance reformation, will be employed in collecting funds.

The Committee trust that the friends of temperance will support their efforts to spread the principles of temperance, and place the Society in a position to make greater exertions than ever to destroy the drinking-system.

PROCEDURE IN ABROGATING DRINKING-USAGES.

Several gentlemen having inquired as to the mode to be adopted, it is recommended, that after getting the employer's opinion signed as extensively as possible, the Temperance Committees divide themselves into sections of two persons each; giving each section the charge of several workshops or factories. These sections will apply to employers and masters in a prudent and respectful manner, explain the dangerous nature of the drinking-usages, and obtain their leave to speak with, and address their men on the subject. They will then find out a few among the men of peculiar good sense and conduct. Explain to them the oppressive and deleterious character of the "usages;" suggest their abrogation; disseminate anti-usage tracts among them;" procure their promise to talk quietly and judiciously to the men, in private, on the subject; suggest that instead of spending in drink any fines that it may be expedient to keep up in workshops and elsewhere, it would be preferable to institute a fund for a library, benefit club, or other useful purpose.

After the matter has been quietly agitated for a certain time, a meeting of the men to be called, and abrogation of the drink footings and other usages to be proposed: the assistance of the master to this effect, being also in a judicious and prudent manner requested.

Many workshops and factories have abandoned their "Drinking Usages" under procedure of this kind: and though total abstinence was not at the time made any part of the proposal, a great barrier to it was thus removed: and many non-teetotalers would give assistance in this department of teetotalism, if requested to do so.

Care must be taken not to offend, and not to cause any undue dictation on the part of the master that might hurt the proceedings. Employers might be requested to avoid paying wages in public-houses; and friendly society committees to hold meetings there.

THE MODEL PARISH.

Sermons were preached in the Parish Church of Yardley on Sunday, November 22nd, 1847, by the Rev. W. Wright, M.A. of Corpus Christi College, Cambridge, in behalf of the Model Parish, with its Church, Parsonage and Schools. Collections £6. 1s. 8½d.

* A tract for the purpose is at present in hands, and will be ready in a few weeks; and copies of the "employers' opinion" may be obtained by application at the Office of the Society.

SUBSCRIPTIONS.

	£.	s.	d.
Special Fund.
Executors of the late J. Charleton, Esq. of Bristol	90	0	0
Alexander, G. W., Esq.	35	0	0
Received at Office.
Venning, Mr.	1	1	0
Per Mr. Culverwell,
Anonymous	0	10	0
Bateman, Mr.	1	1	0
Deans, Messrs.	1	1	0
Fauntleroy, Mr. T.	0	10	6
Mead and Powell	1	1	0
Merry and Nutter	1	1	0
Rotch, E. Esq.	1	1	0
Sterry, J., jun., Esq.	1	1	0
Sterry, H., Esq.	1	1	0
Sterry, R. Esq.	1	1	0
Harriss, J. H.	0	10	6
Harriss, George	0	10	6
Teede, Mr. John	0	5	0
Saunders, Mr. G.	0	10	6
Per J. Meredith, Esq.
Atkinson, Mrs.	0	10	6
Bicknell, E., Esq.	1	0	0
Brookes, R. Esq.	1	0	0
Carter, Mr. S.	0	5	0
Capper, J. H. Esq.	0	10	6
Clare, Mr. C.	0	5	0
Corderoy, J., Esq.	0	10	0
Doulton and Watts	1	0	0
Doulton, Mr. F.	0	10	0
Field, Mr. W.	0	5	0
Field, Joseph, Esq.	1	1	0
Fillmer, Mr. W.	0	10	0
Grange, Miss	0	10	0
Grissell, T. Esq.	1	1	0
Nash, Mr. B.	0	5	0
Nash, Mr. J.	0	10	0
Olney and Son	0	10	6
Pilcher, G. Esq.	0	10	0
Sharpe, Mr.	0	5	0
Slade, W., Esq.	1	0	0
Two Friends	2	0	0
Per Mr. Hudson.
Binney, Rev. Thos.	0	10	0
Crispin, Mr. John	0	5	0
Hannar, Mrs.	0	5	0
Knight, Mr. Wm.	0	5	0
Stevenson, Rev. J.	0	5	0
Stone, Pelham, Esq.	1	1	0
Stone, John, Esq.	1	1	0
Smith, Mr. Wm.	0	5	0
Smith, Mr. John	0	5	0
Per Mr. Whittaker.
Chatham Temperance Society	1	10	0
Cranbrook Society	0	10	0
Draper, Mr. W.	0	5	0
Jackson, Mr. W.	0	5	0
Pugett, J. H., Esq.	3rd donation	1	0	0

	£.	s.	d.
Pugett, J. H., Esq., 4th donation	0	10	0
Robinson, Mr.	0	5	0
Sexton, Mr.	0	5	0
Snelling, Mrs.	0	5	0
Snelling, Mr. L.	0	5	0
Sturgeon, Mr. A.	0	5	0
Tottenham Temperance Society	0	10	0
Wood, Mr. George	0	5	0
Per Mr. Inwards.
Griffin, Mr. W.	0	5	0
Knight, W., Esq.	1	1	0
Lee, Dr.	1	0	0
Mathew, Rev. T.	1	0	0
Palmer, Mr. John	0	5	0
Wild Mr.	0	10	0
Yorrick, Mr.	1	0	0
Per Messrs. Hudson and Whittaker.
Abrahams, Mr Jos.	0	5	0
Ashley, Mr. Joseph	0	5	0
Bayley, Mrs G.	0	10	0
Blandy, Mr. E.	0	5	0
Carter, Mr. Thomas	0	5	0
Coward, Miss	d	0	2
Cozens, Mr. George	0	5	0
Dowling, Mr. Edw.	0	6	0
Drover, Mr. John	0	5	0
Duck, Mr. James	0	5	0
Elliot, Rev. Richard	0	10	0
Fell, Mr. Joseph	0	5	0
Fox, Mr. J. S.	0	5	0
Gantlett, Mr. S.	0	5	0
Green, Mr. W. G.	0	5	0
Guy, Mr. John	0	5	0
Harper, Mr. Robert	0	5	0
Horsell, Bartholomew, jun., Esq.	1	1	0
Ind, Mr. William	0	5	0
Keel, Mr. F.	0	5	0
Knott, Mr.	d	0	2
Lenthal, Mr. Jos.	0	5	0
Lilliphant, Rev. J.	d	0	2
Little, William, Esq.	0	10	0
Moore, Mr.	0	5	0
Neat, Mr. William	0	5	0
Page, Mr. Henry	d	0	2
Perkins, Mr. C.	0	5	0
Pulling, Rev. G.	0	5	0
Randell, Mr. James	0	10	0
Randell, Mr. S. A.	0	5	0
Randell, Mr. James	0	5	0
Reeve, Mr. Samuel	0	5	0
Saunders, Mr. S.	1	1	0
Slade, Rev. G.	d	0	2
Spackman, H. Esq.	1	1	0
Standford, Rev. C.	0	5	0
Stivell, Mrs.	0	10	0
Stratton, Mr. James	0	5	0
The Mayor of Marlborough	d	0	10
Tovey, Rev. E.	0	5	0
Watts, Mr. George	0	5	0
Winterson, Mr. J.	0	5	0

WINTER RECREATIONS.

WINTER is coming, with its long, wet, cold, and stormy nights, when fireside attractions are increased a thousand-fold, and the people must seek entertainments under shelter of roof and walls. Even stern winter, with all its terrors, has its charms: men come together in closer association, and rely upon each other for sources of entertainment, that the dull hours may pass pleasantly away. Our institutions have already filled up their programmes for the first winter quarter. Busy philanthropic minds have been preparing for the coming season, that the people may suffer no lack of enjoyment: the institutions have all been catering for the public wants, and taking steps to secure a rich fund of amusement and instruction, to be dispersed through the otherwise dull months of winter. But we have a care for those who reside in places where the alehouse is almost the only place of neighbourly association, and where mind and morals wither from the lack of opportunities for improvement, and we recommend to the people of every town and village where the want of these privileges is felt, the formation of Mutual Instruction Classes. There may be difficulties in the way, but none which may not be overcome. Let the first steps be earnest in their character and humble in their aims, and much good may be accomplished. There are great moral and intellectual wants to be supplied; and those may become truly the benefactors of their race, who, having the power, may originate the will to contribute to the need of those who suffer from privation. Let those who seek to curtail the influence of the tap-room, think how much that influence rests upon the opportunities for purer modes of association. Where there is one man with an intelligent mind in the midst of such circumstances, let him at once call together a few whom he thinks he may interest in such a movement, and propose the formation of a mutual instruction class. But half-a-dozen earnest men, having in themselves moderate abilities, may form a nucleus in each locality where hitherto such wants have been unheeded, and may, by their united aid, do much to benefit their fellows. They may expect to meet with much apathy and some distrust; but let them press on, regardless of impediments, and if they only give light and joy to a few noble minds they will do a great work.—People's Journal.

A WELCOME

TO JAMES SILK BUCKINGHAM, Esq.,

THE ADVOCATE OF TEMPERANCE, EDUCATION, BENEVOLENCE, AND PEACE,

Delivered at the Tea Festival held at the Waterloo Rooms, Edinburgh, November 3rd, 1847.

BY ALEXANDER MACLAGAN.

We welcome Thee, brave Buckingham !
 We hail thy laurels won
 With honour. 'Tis the heartfelt prayer
 Of every honest son—
 Of that proud land that well may boast
 A Bruce—a gallant Park :
 May the Dove of Peace and Olive Branch
 Still cheer thy wandering Ark.

Lo! when Shipwreck,—Plague—and Battle,
 Assail'd thy manly form,
 Like Britain's brave Old Oak, you bore
 The brunt of every storm ;

The Rev. James Cox of Antigua, West Indies, thus writes:—

Dear Sir.—The cause of teetotalism is increasingly dear to us. We are advocating it in every possible way. We witness its onward progress with abounding thanksgivings.

And that the glorious Fountain Head
Of Knowledge might be fed,
Thou hast hunger'd—thou hast thirsted—
Thou hast suffer'd—sighed and bled.

And thou hast led our Spirits forth,
As a spell o'er Sea and Land;
'Mid Tempests—on the Camel's track—
Through Seas of burning Sand :—
To Arab Camp,—through Orange Groves—
And made our Hearts the while Glow with the Power and Beauty
Of the Glad Old Glorious Nile.

Thou hast said unto the Pilgrim's Soul,
Arise ! with Joy Arise !
Like Egypt's mighty Pyramids,
Up to the cloudless Skies ;
And look upon the Holy Land,
Where Abrah'm's foot hath trod ;
Where Man first breathed a prayer, and bow'd
The knee to the True God.

With a Voice like mighty Waters
Thou has cheered the Temperance cause ;
And for this noble work alone
Thou hast earn'd the world's applause ;
And manly breasts with friendship warm,
And Beauty's eyes of light,
Are here to honour, Love and Hail !
The Hero of the Night.

We welcome thee ! brave Buckingham !
And where'er your wanderings be,
They live who love, and honour blend,
With every thought of thee !
Up ! Brothers, up ! three hearty cheers,
As ever Freemen gave,
Let us give to gallant Buckingham ;
The Honest—Good—and Brave !

LETTER FROM A GENTLEMAN IN LONDON TO THE CORRESPONDING SECRETARY OF THE AMERICAN TEMPERANCE UNION.

London, Oct. 2nd, 1847.

MY DEAR SIR,—The temperance cause is certainly gaining ground here, although in a very quiet way. The National Society employs four most intelligent and active agents now, who are doing good and efficient service, in and about the Metropolis. The movement seems now to be a popular one, and I hope may be continued for some time to come ; and as the evenings are now getting longer I look for some excellent meetings, that may be productive of good fruits during the coming winter. Dr. Campbell in this month's Christian Witness, in speaking of some of the Cornwall Wesleyans who have seceded from the main body on account of teetotal principles, "acknowledging none as members, unless they pledge themselves to abstain from all that can intoxicate," says : "Here is a new condition of fellowship—a condition wholly unknown to the apostles, and a condition which would shut out nineteen twentieths of the most intelligent, devout, and spiritually minded Christians in England. This is not the way to advance the cause of sobriety." Now the worthy doctor scolds you northern christians, for holding fellowship with southern slave-holders, as those who hold fellowship with the workers of darkness ; without expressing my own opinion as to whether he or you northern christians, who do thus hold fellowship, are right, I cannot but think the principle is the same. If it is right to drink intoxicating drinks, it is right to make them, and if right to make them, it is right to sell them. Now every one who has watched the progress of moral and political reform in this country—knows that the district of Cornwall has far outstripped all others in this respect, and this is clearly attributable to the fruits of the temperance reformation. It is now several years since the teetotalers elected there their own member for Parliament. There revivals of religion have prevailed to an unequalled extent—Sunday-schools have increased in number of scholars beyond all precedent and reformed drunkards have joined christian churches in great numbers.

Foreign Intelligence.

TURKEY.

Bebek on the Bosphorus, July 27, 1847.

To HENRY HILL, Esq.,
Treas. of the A. B. C. F. M.

DEAR SIR,—I have recently become much interested in setting on foot a temperance movement among the English residents in the vicinity of Constantinople, and I address you this hasty line to beg you to furnish me, if you find it practicable, with a good assortment of temperance publications, comprising as great a variety as possible. There are now seventy or eighty Englishmen connected with the manufacturing establishment now in process of building in this vicinity, under the auspices of the Sultan. Many of them have their families with them, and their number is constantly increasing. The chief engineer of all these enterprises remarked to me the other day, that in one year the residents connected with these works, counting the families, will not be less than 300, and that not less than 5000 men and boys, Turks, Greeks, and Armenians, but principally the latter, will be connected with these works as operatives and builders. Intemperance I have found to be on the increase most decidedly and visibly among them, and in danger of making shipwreck of the entire colony. When I first proposed to hold temperance meetings among them, the chief engineer readily fell in with it. Much apparent good has already been done. Sewell's plates have already done material service. It is important to push forward the work, not simply for the success of the great experiment of introducing the European arts into Turkey, that these should be temperate, moral, and religious men, but highly important in view of the general influence in favour of evangelical religion. Now, would not some friend of temperance, to whom, perhaps, you can hand this line, send us a liberal supply of sermons, addresses, temperance tales, reports, &c., &c. ? Let us if possible have a good supply. Begging you to take this trouble upon you for the good of a common cause, I am, dear Sir, yours affectionately,
C. HAMLIN.

COURT OF INSOLVENCY.

Friday, 28th May.

BENJAMIN LEWIS appeared to-day upon his final examination, and being unopposed, passed, after incoherently answering the usual questions.

The insolvent attributed his misfortunes to drink, having been, according to his own confession, in a state of obliviousness for six years, from the effects of inebriation. His recollection, with regard to his affairs, was consequently at fault upon almost every particular ; so much so that he forgot that he possessed two acres of land at Portland Bay, and insisted upon it that his expenses while in gaol were £3 a-day. He expressed to the Official Assignee his determination to go the next day to sawing, and that nothing should induce him to return to his old habits of dissipation.—From the Adelaide Observer.

TEMPERANCE MEETING IN WESTMINSTER.

MR. EDITOR.—The quarterly meeting of the North-easterly Division of the friends of temperance in the County of Worcester, was held at Westminster on Wednesday, October 13th. Though the weather was unfavourable, there was a large and respectable assembly convened; and the exercises and business of the day were not only conducted decently and in order, but the intellectual entertainment by the Rev. Mr. Trask, Rev. Mr. Peckham, and others, was of the most pleasing and gratifying character. The following Resolutions were reported by a committee appointed for that purpose, and after several interesting speeches, were adopted unanimously, viz. :—

1. That the success of the temperance reformation has been such as to inspire its friends with confidence, and that the opposition is such as to demand of us unwearied efforts.

2. That intemperance threatens the peace of the State, and the prosperity of the Church, and therefore the patriot who loves his country, and the Christian who loves his God, should unite their efforts to banish this evil from the community.

3. That while we sincerely believe in the utility and importance of acting in a faithful and vigorous manner through organised bodies and associations, for the purpose of carrying forward the interest of temperance, we also believe that a vast amount of good may be accomplished by individual effort and action; that it is the duty of every friend of temperance to use his influence, and to apply his energies as an individual, in behalf of this great moral enterprise.

4. That we need no stronger evidence of the importance and necessity of the pledge, in promoting the cause of temperance, than the fact, that it meets with the most bitter and violent opposition from the friends of rum and their apologists.

5. That no individual can consistently claim to be a true and consistent friend of the cause of temperance, whatever may be his professions, while he remains in a cold inactive state—while he habitually patronizes rum stores and taverns, or is unwilling to take an open and decided position among the ranks of temperance men.

Whereas, intoxicating liquors as a beverage are detrimental to the community, producing poverty and pauperism, thereby imposing a heavy pecuniary burden upon the people :—and whereas these liquors harden the heart, sear the conscience, and impair the moral sense on the one hand, and inflame the corrupt passions on the other, thereby fitting the intemperate for the perpetration of the worst of crimes :—and whereas these evil effects are frequently seen in the midst of us, in families reduced to beggary, children abandoned and abused by their fathers, and wives deserted and sometimes murdered by their husbands: therefore—

6. That he must be regarded as an unworthy citizen and a dishonest man, an enemy to humanity, and a pest to society, who, for the sake of gain, will violate the laws of the land by furnishing the lover of strong drink with an article thus prolific of woe, misery, and crime.

7. That the late outrages which have been committed in this town and vicinity, in the night time, upon the property of temperance men, call for the strongest expression of disapprobation from every friend of law and good order.

Whereas, no law of an immoral tendency should ever be enacted, and in our opinion, the Statute book of Massachusetts is not disgraced with such a law, therefore,

8. That the laws of this Commonwealth relative to the sale of intoxicating drinks and common drunkards, are directly calculated to promote sound morality and the best interests of society.

9. That the enforcing of these laws upon those who violate them, with a view to promote their and the public good, is the highest kind of moral suasion which can be used for their reformation, and in most cases, the only suasion of which they are susceptible.

10. That we recommend to the friends of temperance to make a persevering trial of this suasion upon all who need reforming.—Massachusetts Cataract,

Letter from the Rev. WILLIAM DARBY to ARCHDEACON JEFFRIES, Bombay, September 13th, 1847.

MY DEAR MR. ARCHDEACON.—The object of my present letter is to request that you will put down my name as a member of the Bombay Teetotal Society. I am led to make this request in consequence of a very melancholy and distressing event which has taken place at this station. You are aware that I was for a long time a practical Teetotaler without having taken the pledge, but latterly at the earnest representation of my friends, who suggested to me that it was necessary to my health, I returned to a very moderate use of wine and beer. A circumstance, however, has just occurred at this station of so dreadful a nature, as to convince me, that it is my duty to adopt the principles of total abstinence, and to support them by personal example, and by all other means in my power. I am determined, therefore, by the grace of God, from this time to continue the practice of Teetotalism, even though it should cost me my life, as I am persuaded that it is my duty to support the principle, even though I knew it was at the risk of life itself.

The circumstance to which I allude, and which has brought me to this decision, is the case of a sub-conductor of this station.

He had been a long time a member of your Bombay Teetotal Society, and under its influence had become a good husband and a good father, and was happy in his family. But a few months ago, he was unfortunately persuaded to depart from his pledge on the occasion of a christening (or marriage), when he relapsed into his former habits, and continued in a state of almost constant intoxication till he destroyed himself by cutting his throat. This dreadful event has made such an impression upon my mind and so convinced me of the sin and misery resulting from the use of intoxicating drinks, that I am determined by the grace of God (whatever may be the consequences to my own health or even to my life), never to taste them any more.

May I request that you will also associate with my name, the name of Mr. —, the Staff Surgeon of this station; and that you will kindly favour me with the publications of your Society, and such other tracts and publications as may be useful to promote the good cause.

Believe me, dear Sir,

Very sincerely yours,

WILLIAM DARBY.

DRUNKENNESS IN THE ARMY.

"Regimental After Orders, Fort St. George, 11th August, 1847.—On looking over the list of crimes and defaulters for the last six months, the Commanding Officer observes that drunkenness appears to be the chief and almost only cause of complaint and consequent punishment. The Lieut.-Colonel, therefore, entreats the men to look at this most pernicious habit in a more serious manner than they have hitherto done, and refrain from it as a vice which sooner or later will bring ruin and destruction with it, and leads men into the commission of crimes from which, in their sober moments, they would shrink with abhorrence and disgust—it destroys health, exposes them to the infliction of disgraceful punishment, to the loss of reason—produces mutiny and violence, and if they have a wife and children, it brings destitution and misery on them.

Lieut.-Colonel Brown would most earnestly recommend the men to employ their spare money in contributing to the relief and support of their distant parents and relatives; many of whom at this very moment, may be suffering severely from the distress and famine in our native land, and to whom such money can be easily remitted through the Pay-master.

The soldier who has no friend or relatives absent, for whom he is interested, should place all his savings in the Regimental Bank, and he will find when the time arrives for his discharge from the service that he will derive the greatest benefit in having a considerable sum of money to contribute, in addition to his pension, towards his comfort and maintenance in old age."

Such a Colonel is the true friend of the men under his command. The amount of good that may be done in a regiment by such an influence is incalculable. There are few British soldiers who would not in their sober moments regard the entreaties of their Commanding Officer, when made with so much feeling and enforced by such powerful motives and such earnest importunity. And how can a magnanimous officer better employ his unbounded influence over his men than by endeavouring to turn them away from a vice which is the chief and almost only cause of complaint and consequent punishment—and which sooner or later must bring ruin and destruction with it—to cultivate in them those sympathies and that charity which would tend so much to their real improvement and happiness, and that prudence and foresight which would secure their comfort in after life? Let the example of Lieut.-Colonel Brown be followed, and there can be no question that "complaints and consequent punishments" will be very greatly diminished in number, a better spirit of subordination prevail, and a higher standard of morality be soon established among our soldiery.

OLD MAN'S STORY.

From the Bombay Temperance Advocate.

The sheriff took out his watch and said, "If you have anything to say, speak now, for you have only five minutes to live." The young man burst into tears and said,—"I have to die. I had only one little brother, he had beautiful blue eyes and flaxen hair, and I loved him; but one day I got drunk, for the first time in my life, and coming home I found my little brother gathering berries in the garden, and I became angry without a cause, and killed him with one blow with a rake. I did not know anything about it until the next morning when I awoke from sleep, and found myself tied and guarded, and was told that when my little brother was found his hair was clotted with blood and brains, and he was dead. Whiskey has done it. It has ruined me. I never was drunk but once. I have only one word more to say, and then I am going to my final Judge. I say it to young people—never! never! NEVER! touch any thing that can intoxicate!" As he pronounced these words he sprang from the box and was launched into an endless eternity.

I was melted to tears at the recital, and the awful spectacle. My heart seemed as if it would burst and break away from my aching bosom, so intolerable were my feelings of grief. And there in that carriage, while on that cushioned seat, looking with streaming eyes on the body of that unfortunate young man, as it hung dangling and writhing between heaven and earth, as unfit for either place, then it was that I took the pledge never to touch the hurtful poison.

Long years have passed away. White hairs have thickened around these temples then so ruddy and young, but I have never forgotten the last words of that young man. And I have never violated the pledge. When the tempter has offered me the sparkling goblet, the words of that young man have seemed to sound in my ears again.

A SMART MAN.

Mr. Wilhelmus Simmons, of Taghkanic, New York, found a large hornet's nest under the eaves of his barn on Tuesday, and determined to destroy it. So he took some matches, tied them to a pole, and with them set fire to the nest, and totally destroyed it.—Unfortunately, however, the barn was also burned, together with a thousand bushels of oats, and a large quantity of rye, hay, &c. Loss from 1200 to 1500 dollars; no insurance.—New York Paper.

Well, well, said my uncle, as he read the foregoing scrap after I had clipped it from the paper, Mr. Simmons was a fool! It's nothing new, however, for I've known the same thing done hundreds of times.

What! burn down a house to get rid of a hornet's nest?

To be sure, my boy. What is a man doing when he drinks rum to cure disease?

Why, uncle, it may save his life.

It may save it for a while, but it is apt to destroy it after a while. Look at your neighbour Mr. Gruntly, he has been for a year trying to burn out a pain in the breast by firing his stomach with brandy, and the eaves of his house are on fire now (My uncle put his finger on his nose as he said this.)

That's true, uncle, but then Mr. Gruntly has a weakness for which he drinks brandy.

Exactly, and so has every man that drinks, a weakness. The WEAKNESS is sometimes very great.—There's Mr Caruncle who has been dosing for dyspepsia—burning out the hornet's nest with rum, till the front of the house is in a blaze. Mr. Caruncle's whole concern will soon be in ashes. I tell you my lad, many a fellow that stands high in life, is as big a fool as Mr. Simmons. It's all dead loss, too—no insurance—not a farthing. Mind what I say Peter—never do you make such a fool of yourself, as to set fire to your house for the sake of burning out a hornet's nest.—Philadelphia Pledge and Standard.

THE LITTLE DROP, OR MODERATE DRINKING.

Dr. Alcott in some admirable pieces he is sending to the Massachusetts Patriot, says:—

When an individual drinks a quart or more of spirits a day, the stomach recognizes that a foe is present,—nay, the whole system recognizes it. Hence a re-action takes place, and the foe is speedily expelled. Sometimes vomiting or catharsis follows; sometimes the alcohol passes off speedily through the lungs, skin, &c. But divide a quart of rum into twenty or thirty doses, and take one of them each day; and what follows? Why the quantity is so small that it seems to steal its way into every part of the system, poisoning wherever it goes. The consequence is that though the individual may not appear to suffer at the time, but may, in fact appear to be benefited, he is, in the "long run," a greater sufferer than he who gets drunk by drinking his quart or two once in two months.

Do you ask for proof? It is found first, in analogy. Alcohol is, in every form—whether that of rum, brandy, wine, cider, ale, porter, or small beer, a medicine, too. Now it is law with most active medicines, that in order to poison the system with them, most certainly and effectually, they must be given in very small doses: and these small doses must be continued for some time. Give them in larger doses, and they will be partly or wholly thrown off. Take calomel for example. Give a man twenty or even fifty grains of it at once, and it will produce a local effect; but probably nothing more. On the contrary, divide the mass into portions of one grain each, and give him one or two of these small doses daily, and his gums and teeth and salivary glands will soon testify that he is poisoned. Somewhat so with alcohol.

But we have proof, secondly, in facts which exist. These occasional drinkers—foreigners, for example,—will outlive, by far, the small drinkers. Of one hundred of them you will find twice the number who reach seventy years of age. This statement might be verified by going no farther than the Green Mountain range in New England. They who sip a little cider from day to day, and from year to year, and who become, as the saying is, pursy, are no sooner seized with epidemic or other severe disease than they wither at once,—while the occasional drinker will often recover. The children of the former too will have scrofula, while those of the latter may escape.

I might illustrate the position I have taken by a thousand examples; but the above are sufficient. The doctrine I wish to inculcate and establish is simply this, that however injurious occasional larger doses of alcoholic drinks are, small dosing is still worse. To take a common case. The habitual use of small beer is worse than the occasional use of rum. Not so much because the small drinking leads to the larger sort but because it poisons the system more certainly and effectually. Observe, however, that when I say this I mean other things being equal. I do not mean that a teaspoonful will poison a man more than half a gill; or half a gill more than a quart; but only that the small dose will do more harm than the large dose in proportion to its quantity.

ILLINOIS.

We have received the pleasing intelligence through a reverend friend, that Bishop Chase is about establishing a Village on teetotal principles in the above state, in his diocese. This, we doubt not, (in the words of our reverend friend) will have a favourable influence in behalf of our cause.

JAMAICA.

The cause of temperance is also one that claims and will have our warmest advocacy and support. We earnestly deprecate the use of ardent spirits, and every kind of intoxicating beverage, as fraught with imminent danger in every respect. It not unfrequently induces physical debility, and itself an evil habit, prepares the way for a thousand more. It unfits for business, and numbers to it may trace commercial ruin. It produces incapacity for the discharge of duty, and hardens the finest feelings of our nature. It makes friendship a name, and reputation a wreck, and brings a withering blight over the sweetest domestic enjoyments. It prepares for crimes of every character, and paves the way for remorse and shame. Let it not be said that we have placed it in a light too strong. We do not exaggerate, such are amongst its legitimate results. Intemperance must be exposed in all its loathsome deformity with whatever tends to produce or encourage it. The habit is too easily formed, and moderate drinking—that undefinable and latitudinarian thing, contracting or enlarging to suit men's tastes or desires, is more frequently than any other the agent in its formation. Indulgence in this vice has an influence altogether evil on the whole being of man, whether considered in relation to the pursuits, joys, duties, and prospects of the present, or with peculiar reference to another world. The question is invested with a solemn interest. Its bearing on time is sufficiently obvious—its connection with eternity should be deeply pondered.—Messenger, Falmouth, Jamaica.

[We are glad to see that the editor of the above paper, just commencing its career as a religious publication, appreciates our principle, as the foregoing extract proves.—Ed. N. T. C.]

A STRONG SENTIMENT.

Exodus, 21st Chapter, 20th verse.

God solemnly ordained, that "If an ox were wont to push with his horn in time past, and it hath been testified to his owner and he hath not kept him in, but that he hath killed a man or a woman; the ox shall be stoned, and his owner be put to death." Here is a fundamental and a first principle, which we are to apply to the seller of intoxicating liquors. He knows the evil which has been produced by this agent of human misery. He has been solemnly notified of the deaths and sufferings which have flowed directly from his traffic. If he will still persist in this trade, notwithstanding all the ruin which it has produced on the earth, God will hold him responsible, and the community ought to hold him responsible for all the evils which come upon man through the influence of his sinful trade.

STEPHEN H. TYNG.

Rector of St. George's Church, Beekman Street. New York, March 23rd, 1847.

THE BAND OF HOPE.

We read in a Berlin letter of the 31st ultimo,—“A singular scene took place yesterday. On an invitation of the Temperance Society, there was a meeting of 3,000 children from four to sixteen years of age. They are to complete 'The Band of Hope' for the abolition of the use of spirituous liquors and the propagation of gymnastic exercises. After singing some hymns, the band of hope separated in the midst of huzzas.”

MORAL COURAGE.—Mr Quincy, Mayor of Boston, at the dinner given to James K. Polk, while in that city, says the Religious Herald, refused to take the chair at the head of the table until the brandy and wine bottles which had been set upon the tables were removed. They were ordered off, and then the Mayor presided and did the honours of the occasion.—Evangelist.

THE WEDNESBURY RIOT.

"The circumstances that follow, I thought, were particularly remarkable. 1. That many endeavoured to throw me down while we were going down-hill on a slippery path to the town; as well, judging that if I was once on the ground I should hardly rise any more. But I made no stumble at all, nor the least slip, till I was entirely out of their hands. 2. That although many strove to lay hold on my collar or clothes to pull me down, they could not fasten at all; only one got fast hold of the flap of my waistcoat, which was soon left in his hand; the other flap, in the pocket of which was a bank note, was torn but half off. 3. That a lusty man just behind struck at me several times with a large oaken stick; with which, if he had struck me once on the back part of my head, it would have saved him all further trouble. But every time, the blow was turned aside, I know not how, for I could not move to the right hand or left. 4. That another came rushing through the press, and raising his arm to strike, on a sudden let it drop, and only stroked my head, saying, 'What soft hair he has!' 5. That I stopped exactly at the Mayor's door, as if I had known it, (which the mob doubtless thought I did), and found him standing in the shop, which gave the first check to the madness of the people. 6. That the very first men whose hearts were turned, were the heroes of the town, the captains of the rabble on all occasions, one of them having been a prize fighter at the bear-garden. 7. That from first to last, I heard none give a reviling word, or call me by any opprobrious name whatever; but the cry of one and all was The Preacher! The Preacher! The Parson! The Minister! 8. That no creature, at least within my hearing, laid anything to my charge, either true or false; having, in the hurry, quite forgot to provide themselves with an accusation of any kind. And, lastly, that they were as utterly at a loss what they should do with me, none proposing any determinate thing, only, 'away with him, kill him at once.'"—Wesley's Journal, October, 1743.

Thus did this servant of God sow in tears. Our readers will be wishful of some explanation. We are elsewhere informed, that the mob had been regaled with an ad libitum supply of intoxicating liquor by the magistrates and clergy. What cause have we for thanksgiving?

"Saturday, 12th, March, 1847.—I concluded my second course of visiting. The number of those who were expelled the society was—

Two for cursing and swearing.

Two for habitual Sabbath breaking.

Seventeen for drunkenness.

Two for retailing spirituous liquors, &c."—Wesley's Journal.

WINE AT DINNER PARTIES.

A stranger, on a recent visit to our city, informed us, that at several dinners to which he had been invited, among our most wealthy citizens, there had been either no wine on the table or but very little, often none, drank. It was not so in former days, and is a most encouraging mark of progress.

"I have had no wine on the table," said a lady to a friend, "for more than four months. Husband does not drink it when it is there, because of his gout, and when the boys ask me about it, I tell them pleasantly it does not pay for putting it on, and they have ceased saying anything on the subject, and I don't think I shall put it on again." So much for the influence of woman.

HINTS TO WORKMEN.

I once numbered among my acquaintance, says the writer, a young man whose studious habits had procured for him, at an early age, the respect of his wealthy neighbours, and through whose influence he was admitted to public lectures and private literary conversations, in the society of those parties who looked over his juvenile years and humble condition in life from a benevolent motive.

A gentleman of great literary acquirements took this young student by the hand, and led him to the mechanic's institution of his native town, made him welcome to his own select library, and, being a member of parliament, promised that great things should be done through his endeavours to obtain a lucrative berth for one whom he considered a rising genius. The young man continued to work at the vocation to which he had been apprenticed; he was a steady and exemplary character to all around him, and was making, at the same time, considerable progress in mathematics, architectural drawing, &c., and bade fair to be, at no distant day, removed from the necessity of factory labour.

Light progressed with the aspiring youth without its shadow, and he developed a strong and vigorous intellect, which did not pass unnoticed among the few who had formed his acquaintance. At length he arrived at manhood, and was on the eve of looking further into the depths of science, when, as a working man, and a talented one, he was called to take an active part in the "union" of that branch of the woollen trade to which he belonged. From that hour he fell. Intemperance waited upon every step he took as "grand leader" of the district, in conducting extensive strikes; and in the short space of two years, he was a wretched blight, whom not even his fellow-men would dare to trust. He was now also a drunken father, and a neglectful husband; and, after lingering through the various gradations that reduce such a mind from its once lofty privileges to wallow in the mire of wretchedness, he died of delirium tremens, one of the most abandoned outcasts, and universally despised and shunned by those who at one time were cowed into obeisance by the might of his superior mind.

A COLD WATER BALLAD.

BY E. J. EAMES.

[From the New York Tribune.]

We have flung by the goblet, we've broken the bowl;
We touch not—we taste not—the blood of the vine;
While our senses are kept under Reason's control,
We cannot be tempted to take the red wine.

We know the glass sparkles with ruby-like glow—
That the grape's purple wealth gems the festival-hall—
The harp of the minstrel sounds forth with its flow,
And garlands encrown it—but this is not all.

There is danger within it! O sorrow and shame!
It bringeth delusion, and misery, and care!
'Tis a blight on the fortune—a stain on the fame
Its beginning is madness—its ending despair!

But we in the haunts of all beautiful things,
Where the cool mosses gleam, and the wild lilies blow,
There find we the clearest and loveliest springs,
Whence gush the sweet waters of silvery flow.

From Nature's great fountain then quench we our thirst,
Her diamond wave yields the healthiest draught—
Pure thoughts by its generous nectar are nursed.
While we touch not, we taste not the wine when 'tis quaff'd.

Poetry.

LOOK NOT ON WINE.

"Look not upon the wine when it is red, when it giveth its colour in the cup."—Prov. xxii. 31.

Look not on wine ; although the cup
 Be crimsoned with its ruby stain ;
 Look not—'tis filled with wormwood up,
 And blood, and burning tears of pain.
 Its flash is as the red bolt's glow,
 Lighting the paths of death and woe.
 Look not on wine ; Circean spell
 Is breathed upon the purple grape,
 Changing to phantoms horrible
 The God-like mind, the God-like shape,
 And dooming with its poisonous breath
 The soul to everlasting death.

Look not on wine ; its rainbow glow
 Reflected is from falling tears ;
 But ah ! it is no peaceful bow
 Of promise, in life's storm and fears—
 But is a messenger of wrath,
 A fiery meteor on life's path.

Look not on wine ; Oh, who can tell
 The victim of its Moloch shrine ;
 Or speak the soul-destroying spell
 That mantles o'er the clustered vine—
 The withered hearts—the glories fled—
 The tears—the blood, that it has shed.

Look not on wine ! Your ruddy youth,
 Oh ! barter not, and spotless fame,
 And conscious dignity and truth,
 For premature old age and shame—
 And heaven, and hope, and all that's thine,
 For short-lived joys. Look not on wine !

IPSWICH JUVENILE TEMPERANCE BOOKS.

In 32mo., illustrated with handsome woodcuts, in sixpenny packets, of glazed coloured paper.

	PAGES		PAGES
1. The History of Teetotalism	20	18. What Little Boys can do for Teetotalism ...	12
2. Scriptural Teetotalism	20	19. Little Mary	16
3. Teetotalism of Ancient History	20	20. Lucy Grey and her Pet Pigeon	8
4. Teetotalism of Modern History	20	21. What Little Girls can do for Teetotalism.....	12
5. The cost of Intemperance	20	22. Poor Little Willie.....	12
6. Self-denial	20	23. The Sixpenny Glass of Wine	12
7. Early Habits	20	24. The Town Meeting ; License or no License...	12
8. The Force of Example	20	25. The Unexplored Island.....	12
9. A Letter to Sunday School Children	20	26. Is I not happy ?	12
10. H. Hawkins, the Drunkard's Daughter	20	27. The Apprentice Lad	20
11. Christian Courtesy and Benevolence	20	28. The Power of Custom	20
12. The Young Chemist's Inquiry	20	29. Biographical Gleanings—Examples	20
13. Little Henry and the Teetotal Festival	20	30. Ditto ditto. —Warnings	20
14. The Young Reasoner's Objections to Teetotalism	20	31. The Guide to Glendalough	12
15. The Fear of Ridicule	20	32. Bridget Larkin	12
16. The Teetotalism of Travellers	20	ASSORTED PACKETS.—No. 1, 1 to 16—No. 2, 17 to 32, inclusive.
17. Temptation Resisted	12

IPSWICH TEMPERANCE TRACTS.

Those Tracts marked with an * have PICTURES and are on better paper, 150 pages, in a sixpenny packet. The others have 168 pages to the packet.

	PAGES		PAGES
1 The Doctor Scrutinized, or for what purpose do Physicians prescribe Alcoholic Beverages, by R. D. Alexander, F.L.S., 122 thousand...	8	*24 Dost thou smoke, Bill? 34 thousand	4
2 Striking Facts, 84 thousand	2	25 William the Laudanum Drinker, 30 thousand ...	4
3 Maker and Vender, 44 thousand	2	26 The Ox Discourse	4
4 Our Creed, 52 thousand	2	27 Letter to the Clergy, by a Brother Clergyman, 21 thousand	20
5 Adulterated Beer, 34 thousand	4	28 Common Sense, 20 thousand.....	20
6 Adulterated Wine, 40 thousand	4	29 Ralph the Soldier	4
7 The Maltster, 37 thousand	4	30 Testimony of Eminent Physicians, 30 thousand	4
8 Go Feel what I have Felt, 53 thousand	2	31 The Working Man, 35 thousand.....	20
9 Facts are Stubborn Things, 53 thousand	2	32 Is I not happy? by Hugh Stowell, 30 thousand	4
*10 The Spirit Dealer, 35 thousand	2	33 David the Shoemaker, 49 thousand	4
11 Christian Teetotalism, 70 thousand	2	34 The Drunken Couple, 48 thousand	2
12 The Trade, 33 thousand	4	35 Confessions of a drunkard, 29 thousand	2
13 Alcohol, 33 thousand	4	36 Master Tailor, 20 thousand	4
14 The Town of Ipswich, 33 thousand	4	37 The Fatal Gift, 36 thousand.....	2
*15 Song of the Water Drinker, 37 thousand	2	38 Poor Sandy	4
16 Stimulation not Strength, 30 thousand	8	39 Use & abuse, by Archdeacon Jeffreys, 34 thousand	2
17 Farmer Woodman's Speech, 41 thousand	4	40 The Schoolmaster	4
*18 The Beer Barrel Examined, 33 thousand	8	41 Water is best, by J. J. Gurney, 37 thousand...	8
19 Teetotal Recipes, 38 thousand	4	42 Cobbett's Advice	4
*20 Speech of J. J. Gurney, 30 thousand	4	43 Take a Public House.....	4
21 Pity the Poor Drunkard 49 thousand	2	*44 A Sailor's Yarn	4
22 The Fool's Pence, 25 thousand	8	45 Moderate Drinking Calmly Considered	12
23 Why am I a Teetotaler? 26 thousand	2	46 The Pledge.....	4

	PAGE
*47 John Jarvis, or the Pledge Signed	12
*48 The Fifteen Friends	4
49 Sunday School Teachers, 22 thousand	12
50 Sunday School Children, 40 thousand	12
*51 Money better than Beer, 37 thousand	4
*52 Little Mary; or a Daughter's Love	8
53 Philosophy of Temperance by R. T. Trall, M.D. 20	20
54 Love to Man, or an Appeal to the Pious	4
*55 The Young Woman's Tract	12
56 The Young Man's Tract	16
57 Dr. Campbell's Testimony, 18 thousand	8
58 Why Sign the Pledge? 40 thousand	2
59 The Poor Man's House Repaired	4
60 The Mother's Tract	8
61 The High Price of Food	4
62 Ladies' Tract Societies	8
63 The Praise of Water, 25 thousand	2
64 Important Calculation, 30 thousand	2
*65 The Farm Servant, 25 thousand	2
66 Teetotalism Declining, 15 thousand	8
*67 The Reformed Drunkard, 20 thousand	8

	PAGE
68 The Recruit of the British Legion	8
69 No. 1 of Temperance Anecdotes	12
70 No. 2 ditto	12
71 No. 3 ditto	12
72 No. 4 ditto	12
73 Luke Husler, or "I did not like to say No."	8
74 The Drunkard's Wife	8
75 The Unexplored Island	4
76 Ancient Wines; by R. D. Alexander	8
77 Influence of Example, 15 thousand	2
*78 The Victim of Excitement	20
*79 My Medical Adviser does not approve of Teetotalism	4
*80 The Restoration	8
ASSORTED PACKETS—No. 1, containing 1 to 31.—No. 2, 32 to 55.—No. 3, 56, and upwards.
Fifty Packets of Juvenile Temperance Books or Tracts delivered in London for a Guinea, sent by P. O. Order, to Richard Dykes Alexander, Ipswich. Samples of both post free, for five shillings.
London: Simpkin and Marshall.

"THE POWER OF THE PRESS: IS IT RIGHTLY EMPLOYED?"

A PRACTICAL ANSWER to this question will be furnished in the first number of the Penny Record—New Series—to be published on the first Wednesday in January, 1848. This popular and widely-circulated Paper will appear in the form of Chambers's Edinburgh Journal, and will contain

TWENTY-FOUR PAGES OF INTERESTING MATTER.

BEAUTIFULLY PRINTED IN A NEW TYPE.

PRICE ONE PENNY.

Such a Penny Paper, with regard to size, has never yet been published in the Kingdom. As to literary talent, it is not for us to speak; but here is a "Witness?"—

"Many of your Leaders, for brilliance, point and pertinence, are equal to those of the best portions of the London Press."—REV. DR. CAMPBELL.

The principles of the Penny Record are too well known to need remark. The Christian Record is published on Monday, and the Penny Record on Wednesday, simultaneously—in London, by Partridge and Oakey, and in Jersey at the office of the Christian Record. Agents wanted in every Town and Village in the United Kingdom. Commission, 25 per cent.

The Record may be sent post-free, and may also be re-posted to any part of the United Kingdom, the Colonies, and France.

Enclose a shilling and a stamp, in a post-paid letter, addressed to "The Editor of the Record, Jersey," and the Penny Record will be regularly sent by Post for 13 weeks. Two shillings and two stamps will ensure the transmission of the Christian Record. This may be sent in half a sheet of note paper for a penny stamp.

Advertisements inserted in either of these journals on the following scale:—8 lines, 2s. Each additional line, 2d. Half-price for every subsequent insertion.

Advertisements for the New Series of the Penny Record command an immense circulation.

LONDON TEMPERANCE TRACTS,

UNDER THE SANCTION OF THE

National Temperance Society.

The above Tracts comprise a variety of 150 different sorts, and embrace every point of the principle of Total Abstinence. Upwards of

THREE MILLION

have already been circulated. 2 pp. 8d.; 4 pp. 1s. 4d., 8 pp. 2s. 8d. per 100., or in packets, assorted, 6d. each.

For the convenience of LOAN CIRCULATION, they are assorted into 60 sets, containing 16 pp. in each; and stitched into a strong wrapper, with a suitable address upon each, price 8s. per 100. Liberal allowance for large quantities. Lists may be obtained of the Publishers gratis.

HOULSTON & STONEMAN, 65, PATERNOSTER ROW.

AN ALMANACK

handsomely printed in two colours, suitable for framing, is now ready for delivery at the Office of the Temperance Provident Institution, 39, Moorgate Street. Members and others may obtain it gratis on application to the Secretary.

25th October, 1847.

THE MODEL PARISH,

or, the Present State of Parishes in Great Britain consequent upon the Drinking Usages of Society; and Proposals for the Erection of a Church, Parsonage, Schools, and College, to assist in the Eradication of these Drinking Customs. By a Clergyman of the Church of England. Price Two-pence. Third Thousand.

London: SEELY, BURNSIDE, & SEELY.

BOROUGH OF GREENWICH TEMPERANCE ASSOCIATION.

The first Festival and Anniversary will be held in the GREENWICH LECTURE HALL, on Thursday Evening, December 9th. BENJAMIN ROTCH, Esq., B.C.L., to preside. Tea on table at 4 o'clock. Tickets, 1s. each. Public Meeting at 7; admission free.

London: Printed by RICHARD BARRETT of 3, Regent-terrace City-road, in the Parish of St. Luke, in the County of Middlesex, Printer; at his Printing Office, No. 13, Mark-lane, in the Parish of Allhallows Staining, in the City of London; and published by JOHN STONEMAN, of 24, Brooksbury Street, in the Parish of Islington, in the County of Middlesex, at HOULSTON and STONEMAN'S, No. 65, Paternoster-row, in the Parish of St. Michael-le-Querne, in the City of London, Publishers.—Wednesday, December 1st, 1847.

* * The NATIONAL TEMPERANCE CHRONICLE and TEMPERANCE RECORDER is published on the first day of each month, at HOULSTON & STONEMAN, the Depot of the National Temperance Society, 65, Paternoster-row, and will be sent post-free for one year on receipt of 2s. postage labels. Annual Subscriptions received at the Society's office, 11, Tokenhouse Yard, London, and subscriptions and donations for the general purposes of the Society, by the Treasurer, G. W. ALEXANDER, 40, Lombard Street; by any Member of the Committee, and at the office as above.

THE
NATIONAL TEMPERANCE CHRONICLE
 AND
TEMPERANCE RECORDER.

It is good neither to eat flesh, nor to drink wine, nor anything whereby thy brother stumbleth, or is offended, or is made weak.—ROM. XIV. 21

No. 25, JOINT SERIES.]

JANUARY, 1848.

[PRICE 1d., STAMPED 2d.]

CONTENTS.

	PAGE		PAGE
The New Year	201	Extract from the 12th Annual Report of the Bury Temperance Society	212
The Social Evils of Great Britain, and their Remedies ...	203	A Drunkard's fate—Extract from Guiana Congregational Record	213
HOME INFCLLIGENCE—Greenwich—Whitstable—Camberwell—Leamington	204, 205	A serious warning to Tippling Professors	214
To the Committee of the National Temperance Society ..	205	The Religious Bearing of the Temperance Question	214
EDITORIAL REMARKS—National Temperance Society—Subscriptions—Metropolitan Mission	208, 210	Literary Notices	214
Spirituous Liquors (continued)	210

THE NEW YEAR.

Rapid and incessant is the flight of time. It neither slumbers nor sleeps, and knows no rest. It has brought us to the end of one of those chronic landmarks adapted for the convenient direction of human affairs, which we call YEARS; and now we are on the verge of another, just beginning, and we know not how it will end. Truly, we have spent our years as a tale that is told, and shall soon pass away to render an account to the Judge of all, of the manner in which we have spent them. May God grant that we may find mercy in that day!

As temperance reformers, who have to do battle with numerous enemies, whose mission is one of protracted labour and complicated difficulties, it is not unnatural that we should be inclined to review our past work, and to survey our future operations at suitable times and seasons. The commencement of a New Year affords us an opportunity, of addressing a few words to our companions in labour, which we are unwilling to neglect.

We may congratulate ourselves that much has been done for the promotion of our principles. The converts to our views have been a great multitude which no man can number; the influence we have exercised is untold, and the advantages we have gained are many and important. Our object has been long before the public; what was once considered a matter of opinion, is now conceded as a well-established fact,—the great experiment has been fairly tried, and the result has amply proved the wisdom of the promoters of the movement. Our sanity is not now seriously questioned, and upon the whole, our orthodoxy is in no great danger of being disputed. A sound and healthy public opinion is being formed; and the elements necessary for the creation of that power, which is destined to demolish the Bacchanalian temples of England are now in process of formation. The efficiency of our remedy is no longer doubted, and the adaptation of our system for the wants of the world is too plain to be denied. Memory has its luminous moments. At a glance one may see his whole life distinctly passing before him, and in an instant he again lives over his own existence. Perception is sometimes similarly favoured. We can comprehend occasionally the bearings of a great question at a glance, and enjoy a prospective view of the land before us which is absolutely delightful. We wish for the encouragement of our friends, they may be able to do the same in regard to the temperance cause. Let them lay down these remarks, and call to mind the ravages of strong drink—imagine its effects on the stomach, the blood, and the brain—see it in its thousand forms, producing internal disease, and bodily misery in the human frame,—watch its attacks on all that is virtuous and lovely in the human mind—witness the conversion to vice by its instrumentality, of all that was noble and god-like in man,—think how its deadly missions are ever issuing from its court to supply hell with victims—think of these things, we say, and imagine before you the vast multitude saved and delivered from these miseries by the temperance reformation. Has it not achieved wonders? Do we not find our reward. We have said that much has been done, yet we are only on the threshold of wonders, very much remains undone. Many formidable hills have been ascended, but there is yet many a “great mountain” before us. It is not time to put off our armour, as we have only just learned how to wield our weapons. In both hemispheres, on continents, and in distant isles of the sea, the temperance movement, like an angel of light, has rescued millions from destruction. Yet we must not conceal from ourselves the lamentable truth, that millions more are on the way to perdition; are being destroyed in every respect, and who “die daily,” a protracted but inevitable and miserable death by reason of the slow poison, they quaff from the maddening cup. There are stupendous heights before us. We are only on the verge of a waste howling wilderness. There is before us a moral desert of a boundless and appalling extent. Our ranks, therefore, are no fit places for the faint-hearted and inactive. We want men of unfaltering step and steady nerve. We must have calmness, deliberation and faith of no ordinary nature. The mental eye must rest on the vast tracts of ground employed in growing barley—on the numerous malt-houses, where God’s holy sabbath is desecrated—on the breweries where the streams of death are being prepared—on the distilleries where the waters of damnation are being decocted—on the splendid gin-palaces, the gorgeous hotels, and the public-houses and beer-shops, whence they flow like an infernal deluge over the whole world—on the armies of maltsters, brewers, distillers, vendors and other hosts of dependents, surrounded by almost impregnable fortresses of prejudices, customs, usages, and to which has been lately added a strong tower of pretended scriptural authority—on nations labouring under a “strong delusion” as the nutritive qualities of these death-draughts—and on a christian church not yet awake to the enormous evils of the system we oppose! Brother teetotalers, there is your work before you! and here is the New Year, extended to us by a long-suffering God before you! Here is time for the work, and here is work for the times! Set about it boldly, manfully, and resolutely. It requires deep, lasting, and christian faith to accomplish it. Recollect that the only true foundation of every moral reform is of God, and that all benevolence and morality not flowing from that source, are absolutely worthless, and even pernicious. No other foundation is capable of sustaining any superstructure destined to minister to human happiness. Proclaim with confidence, that the temperance movement is but one of the many forms in which the eternal and immutable principles of christianity are applied for the redemption of man. Take your stand on “the two great commandments, on which hang all the law and prophets;” unfurl your standards on these impregnable rocks, and there you can do battle with a vicious and ungodly world! Be not ashamed to honour God and he will honour you. Science in its various forms, social, industrial and political considerations may give us valuable aid; but our chief dependence must be on christianity; on the pure, uncorrupted and living christianity of the Scriptures, as “the word of our God standeth for ever.” Every cause involving moral bearings in which God is not acknowledged, will ultimately perish, and perish deservedly.

This then is our New Year’s offering to our friends. We bid them baptize their movements in the spirit of christianity, and promise them a glorious reward. For ourselves we will only promise that the movement will have our best attention, and that our energies shall be devoted to its promotion. Whilst our chief concern will be to carry on our operations on the principle we have just avowed, in order to enlist the advocacy and win the sympathy of the Christian people of these lands, we will not willingly neglect any source of auxiliary argument and ancillary illustration. We have seen intemperance amongst the masses, we have witnessed its baneful results among young and old, we have seen it in the domestic circle, and have traced its bloody footsteps in our Sunday Schools, and in our churches, and shall endeavour to give each department the attention it deserves. For the Committee of the National Temperance Society, we can say that their hearts are in the movement, and that they will pursue their labours with indefatigable perseverance. All they can do, individually and collectively, shall be done. To individuals and societies they will be prepared to render every assistance in their power, and they trust, that they shall be liberally and cheerfully supported in their arduous undertaking. Numerous agencies have to be employed—knowledge must be scattered abroad—the press must be kept in active operation—and no means of enlightening and converting men must be neglected. Let the Committee meet with the support it deserves, and the great work will be carried on with unwearied activity. Action is indispensably necessary; mere good wishes are no suitable weapons in this warfare. To be felt we must be doing, and to be useful we must employ well adapted means. God will give us the blessing, if our allotted work is done.

Let the New Year be commenced in this spirit of reliance on God. Let our aid be mutually given, and the year 1848 will be a memorable one in the history of our movement. Let us never think of retreating. Onward! Onward! must be ever our motto. Let our triumphs be laid at the foot of the cross, and we shall have the high honour of being co-workers with God in one of the holiest enterprises ever attempted in our world. Let us not despise a work and refuse a mission that would confer honour on the hosts of heaven. "Let us not be weary in well-doing, for in due time, we shall reap if we faint not."

THE SOCIAL EVILS OF GREAT BRITAIN AND THEIR REMEDIES.

What was called a lecture on the above, but was in reality directed altogether against the pernicious use of alcohol, was delivered in the Guildhall, Bristol, on Thursday, by the Rev. Dr. Marsh, of Leamington.

The chair was taken at one o'clock, by the Right Worshipful the Mayor, who explained the object of the meeting.

The Rev. Dr. MARSH then rose and said, though the high and important office held by their Mayor called upon him to prevent, as much as in him lay, the social evils of the kingdom, he felt personally indebted to him for the kindness and readiness which he evinced in taking the chair on the present occasion. His worship had been kind enough to make some useful allusions to which he must advert for a few moments. It was true, that he was out of his parish—out of his diocese—but the cause of charity, the cause of morality, the cause of religion, the cause of the present and future happiness of the human race, had no diocese, except, indeed, it were the diocese of the world (cheers.) Notwithstanding, he deemed it his duty to make an apology, first, if they pleased to his clerical brethren. He could attach no blame to those who differed from him, because he was sixty years at least in this world, without knowing the nature of the subject, which he proposed bringing before that assembly; but since he had known something of its nature, and the evils connected with it, he had felt it to be his duty to impart that knowledge to others (cheers.) He perceived some of his clerical brethren, whom he greatly loved, present, and he would tell them before hand—to adopt a term used with reference to a part of the subject—that though he tee-totally differed from them, they had undoubtedly a right after he had made his statement, totally to differ from him (hear.) This was one of the effects of our blessed religion that we agreed to differ—that we might differ and yet not differ—meaning that we might differ in sentiment on certain subjects, and yet not differ in heart. Allow him to say that the same liberty belonged to that assembly. George III. magnum et venerabile nomen, said on one occasion "I glory in the name of Briton;" he echoed the sentiment because he understood by that, that a Briton had liberty of thought, liberty of word, and liberty of action, as long as he was not an injurious member of civil society, that liberty he claimed, but at the same time he allowed it to others too. The placards announcing the lecture stated that it was on "the social evils of Great Britain and their remedies." His object was to fix on one of them in particular, but its name was "legion," and as he considered the subject involved the physical and moral welfare, and the eternal happiness of millions of his fellow-creatures, he trusted that he was not going out of his path, as a professed minister of Christ; in pointing out the evils that arose from an abuse of the creatures of God (hear.) The subject, then, which he should take was the nature and effects of alcoholic beverage. It was said to be cheering to the animal spirits, and, when sluggish, to quicken the circulation and improve the tone of the digestive powers and to be an agreeable accompaniment of the social circle. He was far from denying any one of these assertions, still less its beneficial effects when used medicinally, but as we were physical, moral, responsible, and influential beings, it became a serious question whether the constant use of alcohol was at all necessary to health or necessarily conducive to the social good of man (cheers). On the contrary it was still more important to inquire if great injury did not arise to individuals, to families, and the community at large, from other than its medicinal use. Alcohol increased the action of the parts with which it came in contact. It was not identified with and furnished no increase of the powers of life; it was unlike nature's restoratives, such as proper food, air, exercise, and sleep; instead of strength, there was a proportionable exhaustion; alcohol wasted the stock of vital power.—"Alcohol," said Dr. Fothergill, "overheated, not giving strength, and could not be converted into good flesh, blood, and bones." Testimony to the same effect was borne by Dr. Brodie and Dr. Gordon, the latter authority stating that obstructions, liver complaints, lassitude, depression, melancholy, and even insanity itself, cholera, gout, pains in the stomach, in the head, &c., were the body-guards that attended the drinking of alcohol. Intoxication, indeed, was derived from the latin toxicum, which literally signified "poison." In a most admirable pamphlet, written by the Queen's physician, the writer said, that poison in some of the alcoholic liquors was less than others. It was so, no doubt, but still the thing remained; they were poisonous in their quality, and intoxication, it was well known, was in itself a poisonous thing. The root of the word was tozum, a bow for shooting; the ancients used to dip their arrows in poisonous matter, and hence the application of the word to the effect of intoxicating liquors. He had the poet's words on his side—

"The leperous distilment; whose effect,
Holds such an enmity with blood of man,
That, swift as quicksilver, it courses through
The natural gates and alleys of the body;
And, with a sudden vigour, it doth posset,
And curd like eager droppings into milk,
The thin and wholesome blood."

So might it be described in the words of Shakspeare. The presence of alcohol in the blood was as repugnant to the vital blood as sand or pepper to the eye, or noxious gas to the lungs. While a man was in a state of temporary debility, the temporary use of alcohol, the same as any other medicine, might be required; but when he was restored to his natural health, the continuance of it, even in the most moderate quantities, could be of no use—nay, sooner or later, must produce some injury to the human constitution. But as the word of one who was not of the medical profession, might be considered rather bold, in his defence he got behind a thousand medical practitioners who had signed the following declarations:—

"1st, That a very large portion of human misery, including poverty, disease, and crime, is induced by the use of alcohol or fermented liquor as a beverage.

"2ndly, That the most perfect health is compatible with total abstinence from all such intoxicating beverages, whether in the form of ardent spirits, or wine, porter, ale, or cider.

"3rdly, Persons accustomed to such drinks, may with perfect safety discontinue them entirely, either at once or gradually after a short time.

"4thly, That total and universal abstinence from alcoholic liquors and intoxicating beverages of all sorts would gradually contribute to the health, the prosperity, the morality, and the happiness of the community at large."

Such was the testimony of some of the first medical practitioners of our land, including the names of Abercrombie, Brodie, Clarke, Sir H. Marsh, Farquarson, &c. &c. Drunkenness had triumphed over conscience, charity, over talent, over office, over domestic peace: two-thirds of our unhappy fellow-creatures in lunatic asylums; two-thirds of those immured in dungeons, two-thirds of the murderers, of whom alas! they heard so frequently in the present day, were led on to their doom by intoxicating drinks. He found that five of their judges had not long since delivered their opinion from the bench, that full two-thirds of those who were brought before them for crime were there from this cause. One of them indeed went so far as to say that if drunkenness could be put down, they should have nothing to do, he sincerely wished that that was the happy case (cheers). Might he not say in the language of inspiration that "strong drink was raging." It was when Alexander was drunk with wine that he took his spear and ran it into the heart of Clytus his friend, who had saved his life. It was when Herod was flushed with wine that he gave the order for the murder of John the Baptist. It was when William of Malmesbury was attending a drunken bout that he was murdered; but where should he begin, and where end if he went through sacred and profane history, with reference to the effects of this crime. Once more might he be allowed to quote from the invaluable volume, the saying of a wise man, and inspired also with respect to that saying—"Who hath woe—who hath sorrow—who hath contention—who hath babbling without cause—who hath redness of eyes? they that tarry long at the wine; they that drink their mixed wine." It was made stronger by what they put into it—"Look not at the wine; it is the red wine that gives it the colour in the cup; afterwards it bites like the adder, and stingeth like the serpent." The Rev. Dr. then after alluding to the tragedy of the Rothsays, which was caused by the drunkenness of the captain, entered into statistics to show the immense quantity of alcohol consumed in Great Britain. The grain consumed in the manufacture of which would cause a good sized loaf to be bought for 4d., and make the murmurings of the half-starved to be hushed. He concluded by calling in earnest terms upon the clergy, the medical profession, and the heads of families, to assist in putting a stop to the evil.

A vote of thanks was then passed to the Mayor, which his Worship responded to, and the meeting broke up.

NOTICE.

DR. BURNS will deliver his ANNUAL SERMON on TEMPERANCE, on Lord's Day next, January 2nd. At three o'clock in the Afternoon. He will give certain statements on the subject of Temperance in the United States of America.

Home Intelligence.

GREENWICH.

On Thursday evening, December 9th, the first public festival and anniversary meeting of the Borough of Greenwich Temperance Association, was held at the lecture-hall of the Literary and Scientific Institution. A large and respectable company took tea in one of the lower rooms of the institution, and at seven o'clock a public meeting was held in the large hall, which was well filled. BENJAMIN ROTCH, Esq., one of the magistrates for the county of Middlesex, presided.

Mr. COLE, one of the secretaries, read a report of the proceedings of the association during the first year of its operations. Public meetings had been held in that hall once in each month, the attendance at which had been good, and the attention paid to the speakers marked. It was evident, from that and other circumstances, that there was a growing interest in the temperance movement. The association was intended to interest, chiefly, the middling and upper classes, and the advocates had been selected accordingly from those whom the committee considered the most intelligent and eloquent. The greater portion of the report consisted of a development of the general principles of the teetotal movement, and an appeal to professing Christians to assist in that movement. It concluded with a brief view of the aspect of the times as encouraging to persevering exertion.

Mr. HURST, from Bolton, observed that all ages had had their peculiar theories for the cure of particular evils. As to the evil of drunkenness, moralists had written, preachers had warned, and orators had declaimed; still the vice had grown, striking its roots deeper and stretching its branches wider. It had threatened to sap the basement of society, and to fling the whole fabric into ruins. Total abstinence had been introduced as a remedy, and had become a public theory. It rested itself upon physical truth, and called upon all to judge of its merits. The laws of nature were the evidence, and human beings were to form the decision. If the system rested on the laws of nature, it rested on the laws of God, for both were identical. That it was possible for men to exist without strong drink, was evident; because millions had existed before the art of making it was discovered; and there always had been, in this country as well as in others, persons who had lived without using it in any portion. That the use of it had led to evil was evident. There were two classes who proposed to destroy intemperance—abstainers and moderate drinkers. Moderate drinking promised much, but it was delusive; it tempted but to destroy. As the fabled Syrens were said to have dealt with the unwary mariners, it either starved its victims to death, or drew them into the vortex of ruin. When it was found that so much mischief was spread in consequence of the use of strong drink, it was not enough to proclaim dislike to the evil,—every probable means must be employed to abolish it. Every energy must be concentrated, and then a lever could be employed which would lift from society the mountain which pressed upon it to its injury. If we succeeded to make a man sober, there was hope that we might lead him to serious thought—to his chamber—and to a preparation for a future and eternal state. The practice of the teetotal system required some self-denial, but the Christian system was a system of self-denial; and if the self-denial of professing Christians did not exceed that of heathens, how could they be said to excel? Examples were on record of heathens who had sacrificed their lives to benefit their country—would not their conduct put those Christians to the blush who stood hesitating before they would give up a glass of liquor—a small portion of that which was destroying thousands? Where was the self-denial of that man who would not sacrifice his glass, that his brother might be free? Mr. Hurst sat down at the conclusion of a very eloquent address, amidst the cheerings of the audience.

The Rev. JOHN KENNEDY, A.M., of Stepney, furnished an interesting account of the drinking usages of the Highlands of Scotland, and of the immorality and wretchedness resulting from those usages. He stated, also, the improvement which had taken place in many parts since the introduction of the total abstinence principle, and especially in Aberdeen, which had been for some years the scene of his labours as a Christian minister. The principle must prevail, for the country needed it—the state of the times required it—science supported it—Scripture warranted and sanctioned it; and woe be to Christian ministers if they did not help it forward! Reduce the catalogue of drunkards as you may, and it will very soon be filled up again, while drinking usages are sanctioned by honourable and Christian men. The Christian pastor must not assist to fill up that catalogue. The Christian pastor, standing out as he does before the world, is bound to go before the people; and to go beyond what may be said to be the strict line of duty, the path literally prescribed. He would ask any man who had been taught to put up that prayer of our Lord, “Lead us not into temptation,” whether he was acting consistently with that petition when he placed himself within the influence of those strong temptations which were presented by the use of the social glass? And even if he were quite confident that there was no danger as it regarded himself, let him ask if he were not bound to abstain for the sake of the example he might thus set to others?—to abstain from the use of that which most medical men would tell him he did not need, and which many who stood high in the profession would tell him was absolutely injurious? Let such a man seriously consider these things, and then let him be careful that he did not slight the convictions and dictates of his own conscience! For his own part he had never felt in danger of becoming intoxicated; but he acknowledged himself personally indebted to total abstinence, as it had kept him out of the way of temptation. For that reason he would urge the adoption of the principle, especially upon the young.

The Rev. Mr. LUCY, of Greenwich, said there was an old proverb, “Let those who lose laugh if they please; those who win are sure to laugh.” He would say, let those who look at the evils of intemperance laugh if they pleased, he felt that he could safely laugh, for he had left the evil and was following the good. He had some difficulties at the first, but from the time of his signing the pledge, he felt that he was a free man. He liked the object of that society, it was to make men honourable, happy, and useful. He liked the means it employed, namely, moral suasion; not dealing in hard sentences, but informing and convincing the judgment. And he liked the end also; that is, as it was accomplished in many delightful instances. Mr. Lucy furnished some instances of persons who had been reclaimed from gross intemperance, who were now consistent and useful members of churches. In conclusion he said, Success to the total abstinence society, till the world shall be rid of the intoxicating cup!

The CHAIRMAN detailed some of the horrid evils he had witnessed in the prisons of the metropolis, resulting from the use of strong drinks, and repeated, from his own knowledge, the declaration often made by teetotal advocates, that four-fifths of the crimes committed in this country resulted from the use of intoxicating drinks. He mentioned also some pleasing cases of reformation, and added that if persons could witness such instances, they would feel that there was a joy in being instruments of good to others, which was well worth seeking. Let all join the society, therefore, and the more sober they were the better, and thus they would derive benefit to themselves, and be the means of imparting benefit to others.

Mr. ENGLISH proposed a resolution of thanks to the Chairman, which was seconded by Mr. BEALE, and supported by JESSE AINSWORTH, Esq., of Oldham. This was briefly acknowledged by the Chairman, and thus the meeting, which was one of deep interest, concluded.

WHITSTABLE.

We had the pleasure on Monday and Tuesday, 29th and 30th of November, of hearing our esteemed friend, Jabez Inwards, in favour of teetotalism. The lectures were listened to with profound attention, particularly that on Tuesday evening, on the “Bottle.” This lecture being illustrated by eight beautifully painted diagrams of George Cruikshank’s celebrated plates, and shewn to the life by a powerful phantasmagoria, produced, with the remarks made upon each successive diagram, an impression that will not soon be forgotten by those who witnessed them; on the whole, we trust that much good will result from our friend’s visit. We believe the signs of the times here are favourable to true temperance—thinking men are being brought over to our side; but we long to see those who profess to be servants of the Most High, giving up, for the sake of their erring drink-deluded brethren, the moderation glass.

That the time may speedily come when the drink curse shall be banished from every family in our land,

Is the desire of yours truly,

W. KEMP.

CAMBERWELL.

Literary and Scientific Institution, Arthur Street, Old Kent Road.—The above building was some time back opened by Dr. Oxley as a Temperance Hall and Mechanics Institute, but from some cause or other the meetings in connexion with the temperance cause have been suspended, and the purposes of the Institute alone carried on. But the committee of the above society having entered into arrangements with the committee of the Institute, intend holding a series of monthly meetings, commencing on Tuesday, January 11th, 1848. On which occasion they intend celebrating their Fifth Anniversary with a tea-festival and public meeting—subsequent meetings to be held the second Tuesday in every month, at 8 o’clock. The committee hope to receive the kind assistance and co-operation of the friends and members of total abstinence, that henceforth the Institution may be devoted to the purposes for which it is held in trust, viz., “The Old Kent Road and New Cross True Temperance Society and Mechanics’ Institute;” and that we may have the happiness of beholding this our work of faith and labour of love increase until the blessings of true sobriety shall become universal, and intemperance with all its evils banished not only from this neighbourhood, but from the earth, and glory to God in the Highest be sung by many who now are wallowing in the mire of intemperance.

RICHARD HODGSON.

LEAMINGTON.

The total abstinence cause is still advancing at this fashionable town. A week or two ago, we were favoured with the services of Mrs. Stamps, who gave two exceedingly eloquent lectures, to large and enthusiastic audiences, at the conclusion there was quite a rush to the platform, of persons anxious to sign the pledge. On the next evening, she lectured at Warwick, with the same effect. Mr. Carter occupied the chair; and at the conclusion of Mrs. Stamps' powerful address, he said, that for some time he had not been so active as he ought to have been, but now he felt more vigorous in the cause than ever; and as he had come to live in the parish of Warwick, he would lend his assistance in carrying on the good cause they had, that night, heard so ably advocated. This gentleman, having just built a large iron-foundry, at Emcote, being anxious to show to his workmen the satisfaction he felt for their valuable services, invited them, and their wives, to a first-rate teetotal supper. He addressed the party in a speech, which did him credit; and said, that he was thankful to say, that the buildings had been erected, and completed, without any accident occurring; which he attributed to the goodness of God, and, to the fact, that there had never been allowed any intoxicating drinks to be brought on the works. And as he felt certain that any kind of work could be done without the use of such drinks, and their use being productive of so many varied and extensive evils, he should always think it his duty, to forbid their use on his premises. He had not, for many years, drunk intoxicating drinks himself, and he never intended to drink them again. He rejoiced to see, this evening, about 100 workmen, with their wives, enjoying themselves, in such an innocent, and agreeable manner. This was as it should be. Men should indulge in no pleasures in which their wives could not join. The party broke up early; and next morning, the men were all at their work, and in sound health.

W. COLLEY, Secretary.

TO THE COMMITTEE OF THE NATIONAL TEMPERANCE SOCIETY.

GENTLEMEN,—As it will be interesting to you and the friends of temperance generally, to be made acquainted with the result of our "Great Western" mission, I beg to present an outline of our operations.

On Monday, the 8th of November, in company with Mr. Thomas Whittaker, left London, and arrived at Devizes in the afternoon, where we held a large and highly influential meeting, in the Town Hall, by permission of the Mayor. Our obligations are the greater, it being the eve on which preparations are wont to be made for a display of civic hospitality by the Mayor elect. Our highly respected friend G. W. Anstie, Esq., presided, and delivered a speech characterized by much good sense and benevolence. It is but right to state that our journey into Wilts, originated in a desire expressed by that gentleman, that the dormant energies of the teetotalers should receive an impetus—a fresh campaign should be commenced, and for this purpose we were invited to enter the field. There is much intelligence in the county town of Wilts. Whenever this is the case, our way is comparatively clear—the people more disposed to listen to arguments—while the reverse is true, where "gross darkness covers the people." What is true of collective bodies, is no less true of individuals. They who have read and thought on the topic of temperance, in the majority of cases, draw right conclusions, and are friendly disposed; while they who have not read and pondered our statements, while unable from ignorance to answer our arguments, prove a formidable opposition.

From Devizes we advanced to Marlborough, where we have twice visited. In this borough, some years ago, the teetotal body was in a very healthy state, we found it however languishing and below the proper standard. There is every prospect, however, that by due attention on the part of judicious friends, this body will rally, and though, at present, somewhat decrepit, we believe it will yet stand erect; and walk forth in giant strength.

Market Lavington is a small town, five miles from Devizes, and was the scene of our next engagement. The Hon. Admiral Bouverie, brother to Earl Radnor, whose name will be found in the subscription list, resides here, and is very kindly disposed towards any and every movement calculated to elevate society. At Trowbridge we were most kindly received; at Forme, also—at both these places we held large and interesting meetings. Passing from the latter place, we alighted at the delightful town of Corsham, where the temperance cause has, without doubt, obtained a firm footing. The public-house business here, is anything but a profitable one, and report says, those who at present are occupants of the few inns and taverns that exist, would be pleased enough to retire.

From thence we proceeded to Wootton Bassett. A meeting was held in the town hall, over which Bartholomew Horsell, jun., Esq., presided with much ability. The attendance, especially of the agricultural portion of the town, was very numerous. A second Meeting has been held by Mr. Whittaker. At Purton, on the following night, the National School Room was quite besieged. The place would not contain one-half the people that were in attendance, anxious to obtain admission. Here teetotalism is much needed. The subject is warmly espoused by S. C. Sadler, Esq., county magistrate, who took the chair, and at whose hospitable mansion we were entertained.

By the Great Western line we came down to Bath, where we found preparations had been made for a Meeting in the Guildhall, which was numerously attended. H. F. Cotterell, Esq., whose devotion to our cause is well appreciated in this city, presided, and at once introduced the deputation, who were listened to with profound attention to a protracted hour.

At no place have we been so agreeably disappointed as in our visit to Calne. We had fearful forebodings that a very suitable place would be unobtainable, from what we had heard of the difficulty that attended the loan of the hall built by the Marquis of Lansdowne, and presented to the Council of the borough. The Mayor, however, granted the use of this beautiful room for two successive evenings, an example which we hope will be followed by all who may succeed him in the office of chief magistrate. The meetings were of a most telling description. William Gundry, Esq., took the chair, and expressed himself more than ever a friend to temperance, and the following night Mr. Gibbons, who has stood as a wall of defence for several years, occupied the chair at the second meeting. The cause is looking up in Calne, and will in due season march on to victory. The following night Mr. Hudson lectured to an audience of attentive listeners near the town of Calne, and on the following Monday (the 29th November), attended a second meeting at Devizes. We have since been permitted, through Divine Providence, (though my colleague, Mr. Whittaker, has been indisposed from the prevailing epidemic,) to hold meetings at Ramsbury, Hungerford, Cirencester, and Swindon.

Ramsbury is one of the oldest societies in the west. The population of the parish is 2000; out of these, 200 teetotalers are enrolled. A room formerly occupied as a malting, has been metamorphosed into a school and lecture-hall. But, while we congratulate ourselves and others on the advances we have made, yet day unto day, and night unto night, testify of the ravages of strong drink. While we were proclaiming a way of escape to the people, a male and a female victim were lying dead in the village, slain by the enemy; the latter, the wife of a resident publican. In Hungerford, meetings had not been held for two years until our arrival. On the evenings of Friday and Monday, the 10th and 13th instant, respectively, large meetings were held, and several signatures obtained.

It will be in the remembrance of many of your readers, that a year ago, in Cirencester, a spacious and elegant Hall, built on the site of an old brewery, by the munificence of Christopher Bowly, Esq., at a cost of more than two thousand pounds, was opened for the use of temperance and kindred societies. The 16th instant, being the anniversary of the opening of that institution, two large public meetings were held on that and the following evening. Messrs. Whittaker and Hudson were the speakers on the first evening, when a large audience was present to listen to the statements of the advocates. On the subsequent afternoon a tea-party was held, and certainly we never saw matters conducted more satisfactorily. Christopher Bowly, Esq., having taken the chair, he introduced severally, Mr. Hudson, Samuel Bowly, Esq., of Gloucester, and Mr. Thomas Whittaker; the densely crowded meeting dispersed about ten o'clock, the folk declaring it to be one of the most remarkable meetings in the annals of Cirencester. Would that every town were so fortunate in the possession of materials for good, as in this borough. The whole proceedings were to wind up, by a gratuitous tea-party to all juveniles who had given proof of fidelity to the pledge. On the afternoon of Friday, just as these little buds of hope were about to regale themselves, we made our exit to Swindon. I presume almost every body accustomed to pass up and down on the Great Western line, is aware that a large number of machinists and others are employed at New Swindon, in connexion with the railway company. No men, as a body, earn better wages, and no men, as a body, are more intelligent, and yet no men, as a body, (if report be true), are more improvident. In this instance, as in others, they who receive the highest rate of wages, are not the men who are the most comfortable and respectable. Without entering into detail, from what has been said, it will be evident enough that temperance principles are needed in the old town, but more especially in New Swindon. It was in this latter place, in the large and well-lighted school-room, we held, by the permission of the railway authorities, the first meeting (in-doors, at least) in New Swindon. The audience was composed wholly of men, with the exception of one or two ladies, who ventured near the door leading from the master's house.

A more attentive and intelligent company we never wish to address. There they sat, all anxiety to learn this new doctrine. It was a fine sight to look on a company of such good square and well-developed heads. At the close, several questions were proposed by some members of the company, which were answered by the deputation; and the announcement of a second visit was hailed, as the addresses had been, by loud acclamation. I should very much regret were I to omit in this brief outline to render our meed of praise to Mr. Gibbons, of Calne, whose exertions in his own town entitle him to consideration; but on this occasion, we are still more indebted as the medium of access into New Swindon. He presided on the occasion alluded to, and commenced, and concluded the meeting with great tact and ability.

Here, Gentlemen, closes our present tour in the west; and in taking a retrospect of our labours, we wish to state, that in no one instance have we been disappointed in our expectations of a hearty reception by the societies visited. The names of J. Anstie, Esq., and Messrs. Sinclair and Burrows (proprietors of the Wilts Independent), must be honourably mentioned as contributing much to smooth our passage. The columns of the Independent are ever open for the insertion of reports of meetings, and for matter bearing on temperance principles, so that many adverse to us receive occasional instruction from this source. We cannot, of course, particularize parties; but in every town we have visited, there are men whom we delight to honour for their works' sake. Out of the twenty-three public meetings we have held, not one failure has there been—they have been large, respectable, and in many instances filled to repletion. Not fewer than 5000 persons have been addressed on the momentous concern of a nation's advancement in sobriety, intelligence, and virtue. In addition, we have visited not fewer than 200 persons of distinction and influence, including thirty ministers of religion, seven medical men, seven belonging to the legal profession, fifteen magistrates, and several officers connected with the army and the navy. We certainly had not conceived that so much forbearance, not to say so much urbanity, would have been manifest, or so much would be said in favour of our principles, or that our principles themselves are so much in every day practice as we find them among the aristocracy. Gentlemen, we have had an arduous mission, but a most successful one, which enables us to accord with that saying of Dr. Isaac Watts, and especially in so good and holy a cause, "Labor ipse voluptas," is a happy proposition, wheresoever it can be applied.

I remain, Gentlemen,

Yours very respectfully,

(On behalf of my colleague, Thomas Whittaker, and myself),

Bristol, Nov. 18th, 1847.

THOMAS HUDSON.

We perceive by the Morning Papers, that a most important meeting was held on Tuesday, the 28th, at the Chambers of the Town Hall, at Manchester, on the subject of a reduction in the duties upon tea. We hardly need state that a reduction upon this article would greatly benefit our cause, and be a great boon to the working-classes of the community in particular. We, therefore, recommend the subject to the attention of all our friends. Petitions to the Legislature should be prepared for presentation at an early date, as numerously signed as possible, and placed in the hands of such members of the legislature as are known to be favourable to our object, and the amelioration of the condition of the people; or they may be forwarded at once to this office, when care will be taken of them, and their due presentation secured.

We have received a copy of a Reformed Almanack for the people, for 1848, by J. Baxter Langley, M.R.C.S., and R. Kemp Philip of the People's Journal Office, 69, Fleet Street, which we most heartily recommend to all our readers as a most valuable calendar of the great and truly philanthropic institutions of the day.

The Secretaryship of the Society has been filled up by the appointment of the Rev. E. Jones of Tredegar, who will commence his duties about the middle of January.

National Temperance Society.

OFFICE 11, TOKENHOUSE YARD.

VICE-PRESIDENTS.

The EARL of ARUNDEL and SURREY, M.P.

R. D. Alexander, Esq.	Rev. Theobald Mathew.
J. D. Bassett, Esq.	W. J. Morgan, A.M., M.D.
Thomas Beaumont, Esq.	Richard Peek, Esq.
C. Bowly, Esq.	Rev. P. Penson, M.A.
Samuel Bowly, Esq.	Rev. W. Reid.
J. S. Buckingham, Esq.	Rev. W.W. Robinson, M.A.
Robert Charleton, Esq.	Rev. J. Sherman.
Rev. R. Clowes, M.A.	Rev. C. Stovel.
Joseph Eaton, Esq.	Rev. T. Spencer, A.M.
J. Forbes, M.D., F.R.S.&c.&c.	Joseph Sturge, Esq.
S. C. Hall, Esq., B.L., F.S.A.	Rev. W. H. Turner, M.A.
Lawrence Heyworth, Esq.	Edward Thomas, Esq.
William Janson, Jun., Esq.	Robert Warner, Esq.
Ven. Archdeacon Jeffreys.	Edward Webb, Esq.
G. S. Kenrick, Esq.	Rev. J. Wilson.
Dr. Lee.

TREASURER.

G. W. Alexander, Esq., 40, Lombard Street.

CHAIRMAN OF THE COMMITTEE.

William Cash, Esq., Peckham Rye.

EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE.

G. W. Alexander.	Charles Gilpin.
George W. Atwood.	Richard Hicks.
Richard Barrett.	C. H. Lovell, M.D.
Jabez Burns, D.D.	John Meredith.
William Cabell.	W. W. Robinson.
William Cash.	T. B. Scutt.
John Cassell.

SUPERINTENDENT OF MISSION.

John Meredith.

SECRETARY.

(Pro Tem.)
W. Claridge.

COLLECTING AGENTS.

Mr. Thomas Whittaker.	Mr. Thomas Hudson.
Mr. Jabez Inwards.	Mr. William Culverwell.

A new epoch of time has just commenced; the golden sands of another year have run through the hour-glass of time into the unfathomable ocean of eternity: every moment of the past year has been fraught with events of a most thrilling and important character, which will have an influence upon society to the latest period of time. Many truly great and purely philanthropic schemes have been afloat, and have told upon the best interests of man. His better passions have been aroused. His latent energies have been quickened and brought out. A mighty revolution has been effected in the habits and customs of society. The signs of the times have been observed, and there has appeared a disposition more or less throughout the whole of civilized society to improve passing events. Governments have looked into those matters which tell most powerfully upon a country's woe or weal, and the consequence has been, many alterations for the better have been made; and in nothing has improvement been more apparent, than in the habits and customs of society in reference to the disuse of intoxicating drinks as beverages. The National Temperance Society have been actively and usefully engaged in disseminating information, and in appealing to the best feelings of society, on this important subject; several large and good meetings have been held in the metropolis; numbers of stirring lectures have been given, and powerful addresses delivered. Many parts of the country, too, have been visited by the agents and others in connexion with the Society, who are desirous that it should prove a year of great progress to the cause of sobriety.

For the past three or four years, the Committee feel that many things have transpired to hinder our movement, and for the time, in some measure to suspend their operations. The agitation of the repeal of the Corn Laws, the excitement on the subject of education, and the distressing times through which we have been passing, both in this and in our sister land, have so much absorbed the attention of the men of the age, and the sympathies of the benevolent, that the great question of Temperance Reform has been too much neglected.

The Committee, however, believe that the time has arrived for them to come boldly out and maintain that position in the country which the exigencies of the times demand. If the people want food, let them be told not to "spend their money for that which is not bread, and their strength for that which satisfieth not." If the children are to be educated, let their parents be taught provident habits, and that self-respect which is essential to a creditable existence; and let them know "that he who neglects to provide for his own household hath denied the faith, and is worse than an infidel." Tell those who seek the sanitary improvement of the people and the health of towns, that, if all they seek could be accomplished to-morrow, unless the people can be made sober, and the traffic in intoxicating liquors suppressed, filth will again accumulate, and disease be engendered; for there never was a brewery that did not blight the neighbourhood in which it stood, nor a public-house that did not pollute the people, nor a beer-shop that did not brutalise its customers. These efforts, like many more which might be named, and many of which we honour, never will accomplish the end without teetotalism. It is emptying the ocean with a bucket, or turning the tide with a straw, while the great fountain, from whence issue the streams which make up this mighty sea of moral pollution, is utterly neglected and permitted to flow. The public must be made more than ever to feel this. The National Temperance Society are anxious to make something like a national effort, and beg to call the attention of the well-disposed and benevolent, to their present operations and plans for the future. London and the south of England need special attention; and so far as means are forthcoming, and opportunity presents, the Committee are resolved to enlighten the dark places, and infuse life and vigour where the teetotal pulse at present beats feebly.

The British Association for the Suppression of Intemperance, the Midland Counties, the Bristol and Somerset Unions, the Cornwall and Devon Confederation, and the Norfolk, Suffolk, and Essex Army of Cold-water-men, with the miners of Northumberland and Durham, have for years (with few exceptions) been doing their work, for which we honour them. With any well-organized and systematic operations which may be in force, the Committee have no wish to interfere. We are all fellow-workers in the same holy cause, and labour for the same end—a sober world. There shall be no rivalry, but that of benevolent emulation, who shall be foremost in the noble struggle. The work is one of pure benevolence, and the Committee almoners to the public. Let all teetotalers become part of the great whole, and each one in his own sphere labour for the end. Never mind by whom the work is done, so that it be done. Let us have individual effort, and feel our individual responsibility, and the God of righteousness and truth will second our efforts.

The Committee give their time and money, and in some instances a large demand has been made upon both; this they are willing still to do, but other things by other parties must not any longer be undone. They are anxious to employ the press and the living voice more extensively than they have hitherto been able to do.

To accomplish this, they call upon individual members and friends of the temperance cause to give their sympathies and pecuniary support. If the Committee freely receive, they will freely give. Men are to be found who will devote their energies to the advocacy of the question, and the collecting of funds: four such are now employed, and the Committee would gladly multiply. Let every teetotaler who has saved £10. a-year, give 5s. a-year to the National Temperance Society, and he shall receive the Chronicle by post every month, which, being stamped, can be re-posted to a friend in any part of the kingdom. Let these winged messengers of temperance fly in every direction. The press is a mighty engine of power, it comes home to the fireside; and the temperance cause has never yet fairly and fully employed it. "Let us," as Elihu Burritt has it, "print our thoughts; and let them be thoughts that breathe, so that all who read them may feel the glow of life, and be stimulated to action." The Committee hope to meet with that co-operation the importance of the cause and the necessity of the case demands; and they trust they will not be misunderstood. They do not wish to put out the fires that have been already kindled, but rather to blow upon the embers that feebly burn. For this purpose, two of their agents, Messrs. Whitaker and Hudson, have for some weeks past been labouring in Wilts, touching occasionally the adjoining counties. In addition to holding large and influential meetings, of which long and encouraging reports have appeared in the local newspapers, they have been actively employed collecting funds, and waiting upon influential parties. The nobility, clergy, magistrates, military and naval officers, doctors, lawyers, and dissenting ministers, have thus been brought in contact with our representatives, and from their lips have heard arguments and facts in support of our principles; and the sympathy manifested with the support given, have been very gratifying. In like manner, the Committee are anxious to visit every district in the kingdom, and begin the year with the determination, that nothing shall be wanting on their part to accomplish this subject.

SUBSCRIPTIONS.

Received at Office.	£. s. d.	Per Mr. Inwards.	£. s. d.
Beck, E., Esq.	1 0 0	Dorking Society	1 1 0
Fordham, Mr. W.	0 5 0	Friends	d 0 5 0
Varley, R., Esq.	1 1 0	Hobbs, Mr.	0 5 0
Wilson, W., Esq.	1 1 0	Marsh, Mr. W.	0 5 0
Per Mr. Culverwell.
Aldam, Miss	1 1 0	Mitchell, Mr.	0 5 0
Barclay, Mrs. E.	3 0 0	Rose, Mr. H.	0 5 0
Backhouse, K.	2 0 0	West Drayton Soc.	1 1 0
Gatlif, C., Esq.	1 1 0	Woolwich Society	d 0 10 0
Lyons, J., Esq.	1 1 0	Whitstable.
Morland, T. Esq.	1 1 0	Camburn, Mr. John	0 5 0
Penson, Rev. J.	1 1 0	Friend	d 0 5 0
Chronicle
Smith, Thos., Esq.	5 5 0	Gann, W., Esq.	0 5 0
Sterry, Jos., Esq.	1 1 0	Gilbert, Mr. Thos.	0 5 0
		Kemp, Mr. W.	5 0

	£. s. d.		£. s. d.
Reeve, Mr. James	0 5 0	Wisden, Mr. John	0 2 6
Wood, Mr. Stephen	0 5 0	Calne.
Canterbury.
Barber, Mr.	0 5 0	Bailey, Joseph, Esq.	0 5 0
Hurst, Mr.	0 5 0	Bethell Mrs.	0 5 0
Rigg, S., Esq.	0 5 0	Bowman, Mr. Henry	0 5 0
West, Mr.	0 5 0	Calne Society	d 0 15 0
Ashford.
Dover Society	d 0 10 0	Cirencester Society	2 2 0
Hager, Miss	0 10 0	Gautlett, Mr. Q.	0 5 0
Hammond, Mrs. J.	0 5 0	Gibbons, R. W., Esq.	1 1 0
Swanborne, Mrs.	0 5 0	Gundry, W., Esq.	0 10 0
Per Messrs Whitaker and Hudson—Bath.
Alexander, S., Esq.	0 5 0	Gundry, Mrs., Lucy	0 5 0
Blair, W. T., Esq.	0 5 0	Harris, John, Esq.	1 1 0
Bouverie, Hon.		Harris, Henry, Esq.	0 10 0
		Harris, Mr. Thos.	0 5 0
Admiral, Market		Heale, Mrs.	0 5 0
Lavington	1 1 0	Liddiard, S., Esq.
Cotterell, J. H., Esq.	1 1 0	(Circenster)	0 5 0
Cotterell, H. F. Esq.	1 1 0	Sadler, S. C., Esq.
Crawford, Col.	0 5 0	(Purton)	1 1 0
Goodridge, E. H. d	0 2 6	Wayte, Mr. John	0 5 0
Hoare, Miss S.	0 10 0	Wilkins, Mr. Henry	0 5 0
Jay, Rev. W.	0 10 0	Marlborough.
Jeffries, Mr.	0 5 0	Bigwood, Mr. Geo.	0 5 0
Jones, Mrs. E.	0 5 0	Page, Mr. A.	0 2 6
Marriott, B., Esq.	0 5 0	Ramsbury.
Morriss, John, Esq.	0 5 0	Fox, Mr. Henry	0 5 0
Rutter, Messrs J. & R.	1 1 0	Harriss, Rev. A.	0 10 0
Saunders, Mr. Edw. o	10 0	Hacker, Mr. James	0 2 0
Stephenson, Mr.	1 1 0	Twycross, Mr. J.	0 5 0
Taylor, Mr. W. T. o	5 0	Hungerford.
Titley, Miss	0 5 0	Bodmin, Mrs. J. B.	0 10 0
Titley, Mr. J.	0 5 0	Coxhead, Mr. B.	0 2 6
Wheeler, Mr. John o	5 0	Langford, Mr. J.	5 0 0
		Lewis, Mr. D.	0 2 6
		Martin, Mr. George	0 5 0

METROPOLITAN MISSION.

PORT OF LONDON.

The missionary engaged in visiting the shipping in the port of London thus writes. That no class of men have suffered more, physically and morally, from the use of intoxicating drinks than seamen; but, in consequence of the introduction of temperance principles, their condition has been much improved. A number of ships now go out without any intoxicating drinks, except what is in the medicine-chest. Coffee and cocoa being supplied to the men as a substitute. The missionary observed a marked difference in favour of the crews of vessels where grog is not allowed, confirmed by the personal testimony of the captains and others. The missionary has been invariably treated with great courtesy by the commanders of the various vessels, and every facility has been afforded in addressing the sailors. The tracts and publications were thankfully received, and many pleasing testimonies given as to the result of the missionary's labours.

Ships and steamers visited	512
Seamen's homes	2
Seamen's Registring offices	6
Docks	4
Wharfs	29
Officers addressed	449
Sailors ditto	1942
Groups of ditto on shore	204
Emigrants spoken to and supplied with tracts	450
Ships sailing on temperance principles	24
Ships not allowing grog to the crew	77
Officers total abstainers	59
Seamen do. do.	194
Temperance meetings held	24
Signatures	91

(Signed) JAMES BALFOUR.

SCHOOLS SOUTH OF THE METROPOLIS.

The missionary engaged in visiting schools remarks, That the temperance principle is making its way both among teachers and scholars. On visiting Westminster Chapel Schools, found the master a teetotaler of several years' standing, and upwards of fifty of the boys pledged teetotalers. The mistress of the girls' school, after an address by the missionary, signed the pledge, together with forty-four of the scholars. York-road, Westminster:—After an address by the missionary forty signed, and thirty-one more on a revisit. John-street, Old Kent-road Festival:—There were about one hundred Sunday-school children present, and a number of teachers. The missionary gave an address, after which three of the teachers signed the pledge. Also addressed the children, both boys and girls, in the Sabbath and Day-schools, New-street, Dockhead; Kent-street; Marlborough Chapel, Old Kent-road; Palace-yard, Lambeth; and New Park-street, where many signatures have been obtained, and the parents of many of the children have been visited.

Day-schools visited	174	}	319
Infant do.	73
Sabbath do.	58
Ragged do.	15	}	1616
Families
Drunkards	240
Lodging-houses	107
Police-stations	10
Cabstands	74
Groups addressed	344
Signatures	406
Transferred to societies	74
Induced to attend temperance meetings	268
" " day-schools	20
Tracts distributed	2033

(Signed) R. HODGSON.

METROPOLITAN MISSION.

Circumstances, over which we had no control, have prevented the regular insertion of the proceedings of the Society under this important head, of its more recent operations.

SPIRITUOUS LIQUORS.

Extracted by M. BONQUIE LEFEBVRE, from a Dutch Work by HUYDECOOPER, and translated from the September Journal of la Société de la Morale Chrétienne, by Mr. SCURT.

(Continued from p. 187.)

In England, the frequent stranding of vessels on the coasts, have occasioned a commission of inquiry charged to investigate the causes. The result was a report from Admiral Codrington, that those strandings which caused the death of so many persons, ought to be attributed principally to the use of strong drinks; and the Commissioners declared, that out of 100 shipwrecks, more than fifty may be traced to drink. There are established at Boston, and London, Maritime Insurance Companies, who have fixed a price much less than the ordinary charge, upon ships that have not strong drinks on board. This example has been followed in Norway.

Those ships which have not spirituous liquors on board obtain the preference for freight, and this is at present so general, that it is only when these ships cannot receive goods, that others obtain cargoes.

We have also before us, Hamburgh papers which state, that at the fire which consumed that beautiful city, some years back, the fire reached, at the commencement, some large warehouses of spirits, and that the workmen drank so freely, that the greatest confusion spread among them, and that the fire made much greater ravages. In England, upon the railway trains, many accidents have been caused by engineers, who although not being in a complete state of drunkenness, did not, however, take the necessary precautions in consequence of the effect of drink.

Entering into the asylums, where the insane end their days. I received accounts, from which it appeared, that at the great hospital for insane at Hildesheim, the number of those who lost their reason, in consequence of drunkenness, formed one-eighth of the inmates. In North America and Dublin, the number is one-half. The physicians of the great hospital for insane at St. Petersburg, have proved that out of 966 inmates, 129 only have not yielded to the use of strong drinks. In Hamburg, in the city alone, we have ascertained that about 150 are every year the victims.

Bottcher, who has made a searching investigation into these facts, has ascertained that in Germany, out of 1800 suicides, which take place annually, there are about 1000 which are caused by the disastrous effects of strong drinks.

The nineteenth century was commenced with declaring, that the manufacture of drinks for the corrupt passions of man, ought to be considered an immoral, and inconsistent with the duties imposed upon christians. In 1814, Steinwerder published a pamphlet, entitled Is the trade in strong drinks to be approved? A word of truth and charity to all manufacturers and sellers of strong drinks who prefer to temporal riches, the tranquillity of their conscience, and the approbation of God. Dr. Hubener of Hamburgh, has inquired, whether the police could not take measures of prevention and repression against a drink which produced such bad effects, and of which the existing laws did not prohibit the sale. In the United States, the question has been raised, to ascertain how it is that crime is punished, whilst the source is tolerated. A work has been published there, entitled On the immorality of a legislative assembly permitting the poisoning trade in alcoholic drinks. That work was reprinted in England, in 1834, and distributed to Members of Parliament. Thousands of copies have been circulated throughout different countries.

The concurrence of females has been given to this national undertaking. Ladies moving in the highest circles in Baltimore, first established a society of females, under the name of the "Free Society of Temperance." Others have been formed in Germany.

Various journals also concur in the object of the Society. In the United States, and England, they are published in a great many towns, and at a very moderate price are sold, daily and periodical papers, especially dedicated to temperance. There are in many of the United States, societies of children, called The cold water Army. They are supported by a journal, called The Youths Temperance Advocate, which is read in the Schools every Sunday.

We may add, that among the examples which are quoted of the great, is that of Franklin, who, being a workman at a printer's, distinguished himself from his companions, because he only drank water, and was called The Aquatic.

Above all, we see with satisfaction, what is passing in savage colonies, where civilization has been introduced. We may here refer to the words of Shakspeare, in the Tragedy of Othello, "O thou invisible spirit of wine, if thou hast no name to be known by let us call thee devil." The black people also call brandy, the murdering devil. Certainly it is not possible to give a name more absurdly at variance with the fact than the French name for brandy l'eau-de-vie, water of life, it ought rather to be called l'eau-de-mort, water of death. The chief of a colony thus addressed the President of the United States, "We implore you to give us ploughs, and other instruments of agriculture, but all will be useless, if the Congress do not at the same time prohibit the sale to our red footed brethren of brandy and other spirituous liquors." In 1819, the Iroquois and Cherokees prohibited them. In 1829, they were also prohibited in Upper and Lower Canada. A decree of one of the Governors of Haïti, proscribed them in these terms—"Such poisons lower man to the level of animals, and give him ideas which lead to crimes and rebellion—A drunkard is more dangerous than a wild beast."

From 1832, the usage of strong drinks has also entirely ceased in the Sandwich Isles. Since that year it is ascertained, that not a single bottle of these drinks has been introduced into the Island of Mavi, which contains 20,000 inhabitants. Commodore Jones of the American Navy, has declared that he has found none in that island. He praises these islanders, who from this report are more advanced than the Christians, and in speaking to them in figurative language adapted to them, he implores them not to abandon themselves to King Alcohol, who is the most cruel despot they can serve. "That tyrant," says he to them, "takes from all his minions, health, strength, prosperity, honour, repose, and when nothing remains in this life but misery, the sentence at the moment of death is contained in the words of our Saviour, 'Depart from me ye cursed.'"

It is well known that objection has been made, and with justice, against the sale of opium in China. But it was not an Englishman, but an enlightened and learned German, Professor Kranickfeld, of Berlin, who proved that the evil produced by opium is less pernicious than the poison from alcohol in our countries. However, admitting for a moment, that instead of drinking brandy, the usage prevailed among us to take and chew opium; imagine that we see established by degrees shops open for the free sale of opium, and that the government permitted and encouraged that traffic; would not a cry of indignation be raised? Should we not have it loudly insisted that the use of this poison be prohibited, and that medical men alone ought to prescribe them? The comparison is just, and already gin is called the opium of the North.

But the manufacture of spirituous liquors is more criminal than that of opium, and more contrary to the design of divine wisdom. The corn which God has given the earth, is created to make bread for man's nourishment; the poppy which produces the first ingredients of opium has not so holy an office. Am I then in error, in considering that man renders himself extremely culpable when he converts the gifts of Providence into a usage diametrically opposite to their intention, when he causes the corn by an artificial fermentation to change altogether its nature, and to produce a drink of which the excitement weakens, excites thirst instead of quenching it, shortening life instead of preserving the health, and causing the blessings of the Creator to be made instrumental to the perdition of mankind?

However, it is consoling to see, that the millers in the United States refuse to grind for distillers. One of them was accused, brought to justice and condemned to pay a fine. He appealed to the government, and the judgment was reversed. See what was the decision of the superior authority. "The law relative to millers which obliges them to grind corn for the nourishment of the people, shall not be interpreted in such a manner, as to render the penalties applicable to those who refuse to grind rye sent by distillers; such a refusal ought not to be attended with punishment, nor be noticed by the tribunals." Who does not see that in diverting thus the corn from its destination, that in distilling those grains intended for the nourishment of men, not only a sacrilege is committed, but society is considerably injured!

According to extensive and precise calculations of Dr. Van Geens, the quantity of 700,000 ankers, or more than thirty millions of quarts, which at a moderate calculation have been consumed in Holland during the ten last years, would have produced nearly eighty millions pounds of bread. See what the distilleries of Holland have absorbed.

But in damp and variable climates, are not strong drinks necessary to a man engaged in hard work? Will it be advantageous to health to suppress the custom? I have already said, but it is desirable to repeat it, that we have had experience on the subject in the 10th corps of the army of the Confederation in the autumn of 1846, and that all the regiments to which they continued to distribute brandy, had one sick in from forty-four to forty-six, and one regiment had even one in twenty-nine; whilst those to whom strong drinks were suppressed, had one sick out of sixty men, and others one in 116, and one in 156.

In fact, the whole question rests in the false opinion entertained of the strengthening and warming qualities of strong drinks. It is true, that when we use them, we feel that it renders more rapid the circulation of the blood, gives a tension to the nerves, and we feel an agreeable excitement which we really believe to be strength. But it is soon succeeded by weakness, numbness, or sleep; and instead of warming we become more susceptible of cold. The medical men have observed, that after having taken strong drinks, that the greater number of persons suffer from cold in northern countries.

A scholar has shown more evidently the destructive result. He maintains that the duration of life may be calculated by the number of pulsations, which indicate the action of the heart. Thus a life of seventy years, has sixty pulsations a minute, giving a total of 2,207,520,000 pulsations, and as by the use of spirituous liquors, the pulse is raised to seventy-five pulsations a minute, it follows that if the blood circulates often with that rapidity, the same number of 2,207,520,000 pulsations are obtained in fifty-six years; from whence it follows that life will be abridged fourteen years.

In short, it is proved by the most complete evidence in detailing and analyzing the process of distillation, that the result is, that from the preparation of strong drinks, it is impossible that they should contain any nourishing or strengthening particles.

A generous physician, Dr. Laroche of Posen, made, 12th March, last year, an appeal to his brethren at Prussia, and the North of Germany, in order to ascertain what, from their experience, was the influence of strong drinks upon health. The number of memorials which he has received has been so great, that he has determined to publish a national collection (National Eutachten), as a monument raised to temperance. In the month of June, 1846, he projected a scheme to which thousands of subscribers have given in their adhesion, which may be hailed as of great importance for the future.

The engraver is come to the aid of the author.

Dr. T. Sewall, of North America, has drawn the inside of the stomach, to show the interior when there has been abstinence from strong drinks, or moderate usage, or immoderate, or when the patient has yielded to the delirium tremens of drunkards.

He went farther, he profited by an extraordinary circumstance. An inhabitant of Canada, named Martin, while hunting, received a shot which pierced his stomach. The cure could not be effected without leaving the wound open, by which they might examine the coats. From repeated experiments they saw, that after having drank a small quantity of strong drinks, the stomach contracted a red colour, at the same time the water lodged in the intestines became thick, from which it was demonstrated that even a small quantity is prejudicial to health.

Dr. Sewall has published the plates which have represented these different objects; they have produced a universal sensation. They have been exhibited in schools, so that they might impress the young men with a salutary alarm. A collection has also been deposited in each of the vessels and steamers of the American navy. The estates of New York, have granted 3000 dollars for that purpose.

These plates have also been offered to many foreign sovereigns. The King of Prussia, has given his collection to Professor Kranickfeld, of Berlin, ordering that they should be reprinted for Germany, and he has presented the American Editor with a gold medal, accompanied with a very flattering letter, dated 4th December, 1843. The King of Holland has sent the copy presented to him, to the Temperance Society in the Netherlands, as an evidence of the interest taken by him in this national cause.

To conclude, such importance has been attached to publications, that after having printed a great number of pamphlets, a popular work has been distributed, entitled On the bad effect of strong drinks upon health and life, which have been sold by thousands at the price of one penny for fifty copies.

We have no doubt, that so many devoted authors have succeeded in making proselytes, and they experience a real happiness in receiving the testimonies of gratitude of those who have renounced this fatal habit. These proselytes do not hesitate to declare, that now they breathe more freely, that they are better, feeling happy to have recovered their liberty; to be no longer the slaves of strong drinks; work is less painful and their family happier, "I have lost nothing, I have gained much," said one of them in addressing himself to God, with gratitude. "Formerly," said another, "I was forced to blush, now I dare raise my eyes before my equals." A third stretched his arms and cried, "See they no longer tremble."

In fact, the numerous facts collected by medical men, prove the satisfactory health of those who abstain from strong drinks. At Albany, with a population of 25,000 souls, there are 5,000 members of the Temperance Society. When the cholera made its ravages there, out of 25,000 inhabitants, 336 died, there were but two that belonged to the Temperance Society.

(To be continued.)

A CHANCE FOR TEETOTAL IMMIGRANTS.—One thousand workmen are wanted at the Central Railroad in Michigan, west of Talamazoo. No liquor is allowed on the road, and no labourers are employed who are liquor drinkers.—Boston Traveller, United States.

EXTRACT FROM THE TWELFTH ANNUAL REPORT OF THE BURY TEMPERANCE SOCIETY.

How should we feel in reference to a man, the head of a numerous family here, who while his children and dependents were complaining of a scarcity of food, was found destroying, or converting into a useless, an injurious beverage, the one-fourth of all the flour that he could procure? Surely we could not consider him to be other than inhuman or insane. What should we think of the commander and officers of an emigrant ship, on her way to a distant port with several hundred passengers on board, all depending upon her stores for subsistence, if we found them employing a portion of their crew in the work of destroying one-fourth of their stores, whilst as a consequence, the price of the remainder was increased, and some scores of the passengers in the steerage—the poorest, the most needy—were suffering all the pangs of hunger, and some dying of actual want? Should we not regard such conduct as most inhuman? But suppose that instead of burning the grain or throwing it overboard, they were to take the one-fourth and put it into a mash-tub, and by various means produce from it a liquor that would have a tendency, when partaken of, to destroy all order, corrupt morals, excite bad passions, and spread disease and death around, would their crime be less? Surely every one must see that this would be an aggravation of their guilt, as the grain would be worse than lost—made injurious.

And yet this is somewhat like what the distillers, brewers, and vendors of intoxicating beverages in this country, during the past season of great distress, have been doing; and the consumers of those drinks have been patronising them in this destruction of 25 per cent. of what is necessary to keep the people of this country in comfort. Surely whilst it is meet and right that every prudent measure science suggests, be adopted to increase the productiveness of our soil, and to apply a remedy to the disease of some of the products of our country, it is still more our duty "to put away from us the evil of our doing"—to put an end to this wholesale, God-insulting, man-destroying waste.

It has been computed that the grain necessary to make one quart of strong beer, would keep a man from starving one day; and that the grain necessary to make one gill of whisky, would, ground into oatmeal, give in plain, wholesome food, a breakfast to a man, his wife, and three children. Does not humanity—religion—cry, especially in times of famine, "cease making the beer, the whisky, without which men can very comfortably live; and let the men, women, and children have the grain, without which they cannot live."

The adoption of this simple remedy by all our countrymen, would drive famine from our shores—would rescue thousands from want—would direct the energies and capital of thousands more into other and better channels of labour—and would give an impetus to every branch of our national industry.

But there is another, and a most solemn view of this question to be taken. There are in this town licensed for the manufacturing and vending of these liquors, 124 places of every grade of respectability. There are 14 other places where British wines, all of which are more or less intoxicating, are sold. There are of these open on the Lord's day, 122. In five of the beer-houses common prostitutes are kept. To counteract the baneful influence of all these, there are fewer than 20 Sabbath-schools in the whole town, and only about 18 places of worship of all denominations;—122 synagogues of Satan open on the Lord's day—places of worship under 20!! Men and brethren, are these things so? Must not the bare mention of the numbers chill our blood?—the intoxicating lava of strong drink pouring forth from 122 openings every Sabbath, and some of them the vilest of the vile, with all the fearful aggravations of prostitution; and it appears that in the worst of times these places are frequented. If such are the awful facts of the case, will not all who wish their fellow-men to be fed, and to be clothed,—all who desire to see education spread, and morality prevail,—all who wish to see the Sabbath honoured and kept,—and all who pity the souls of men, and are praying for their salvation,—arise, and, by enlightened vigorous efforts, labour to arrest, to overcome this evil? Let us all resolve upon the accomplishing of this—not by mob-law, riot, or force—but by abstaining from the use of these drinks ourselves, and by labouring to convince others that it will be well for them to “do likewise.” In order to this, let the young be especially the objects of our care, and by Juvenile Societies in connexion with our Sabbath-schools, day-schools, and, where practicable, boarding-schools, as well as with every religious society, try to raise a barrier against the encroachments of an evil which affects us vitally in our trade, the supplies of food, the morals of the people, the purity and energy of our churches, and the healthy and vigorous character of all our religious institutions. Then, in the name of these various momentous and solemn interests, we urge all the serious and moral of our country to act. The cause is good. Take your stand upon the sure ground of total abstinence. Strive manfully for it; and “may God defend the right.”

A DRUNKARD'S FATE.

When residing, some five years ago, in one of the towns of Western Pennsylvania, I had occasion to visit a tavern, in the immediate vicinity of the town, in search of a young man, an acquaintance of mine. While there, I was introduced to a fine healthy-looking man, about forty years of age, who told me that he was from the same part of England as myself, and invited me to take a glass with him, but being a teetotaler, of course, I refused to do so. After leaving the tavern, my young friend, (who at that time was not a teetotaler, but has since become one, and is now I believe zealously labouring in the cause), gave me a brief history of the man's life, which in substance was this:—When he left England, for America, he was a respectable young man, a good mechanic, and a local preacher among the Wesleyans. He very soon procured employment in one of the iron-works of Pennsylvania, and connected himself with the Wesleyans there. He lived to be highly esteemed by the people of the place, and his preaching was acceptable and profitable to not a few.

In the course of a few years, he was induced to abandon his mechanical labours, and devote himself entirely to the ministry. He was appointed to a station in the state of Ohio, and there laboured with some success; but, calling in the assistance of alcoholic drinks, to enable him (no doubt, as he thought) to prosecute with greater assiduity, the work of calling sinners to repentance, he was deceived thereby, was detected in a state of intoxication, cited before his brother ministers, censured, and suspended. In the course of a short time, he acknowledged his folly with humility and contrition, and promised well for the future, he was restored to the confidence of his brethren, and was removed to a station in Pennsylvania. After labouring there a time, he again became the victim of alcohol, was again cited before his brethren, tried, found guilty, and expelled from the society. To obtain bread, he resumed his labours as a mechanic, but continuing to indulge his appetite for intoxicating drinks, he got from bad to worse. He was the constant patron of the taverns, where he quoted passages from Holy Writ only to torture and ridicule them, to the amusement of his companions. A few weeks after my interview with him, he was heard to say, “they are after me,” alluding to those imaginary supernatural beings, which dance before the vision of those affected with delirium tremens, “they are after me, but they shall not take me alive.” He crossed over the Ohio river to visit a friend residing on the other side, taking with him his work-book for his friend to examine, and inform him how he stood with his employers; while in the house of his friend, who had gone into an adjoining room for an ink-stand, he took a razor from his pocket, and put it to his throat! and fell weltering in his blood!

Such was the end of one, who, after preaching to others, became himself a cast-away.

“Let him that thinketh he standeth take heed lest he fall.” J. A. N.

(From the Guiana Congregational Record.)

When in England about seven years ago, a minister of considerable reputation and of extensive usefulness in the christian church, hearing that we were from British Guiana, waited on us, expressing much anxiety about his brother, who he believed to be in Demerara. After directing us where to make inquiry concerning him, he said, “But I am afraid his is a lost case. My brother may be regarded as the spoiled child of the family. His father's heart was wrapped up in the life of the lad, and he was tenderly loved of his mother. His faults on these accounts were hardly observed, while parental fondness was willing to regard every serious look as a sign of unwrought piety. Nothing short of future eminence in the Gospel ministry was anticipated for him. My brother's taste, however, eventually discovered that these fond hopes were not to be realized. He chose to go to the West Indies, and has been variously occupied for years in Demerara. But we can learn nothing definitely from him, nor any thing satisfactory from others. He has, I am sorry to say, shewn himself unworthy of those fond attachments which had been cherished towards him: and I am deeply concerned for the salvation of his precious soul; which, however, I greatly fear will perish for ever! If you will kindly inquire for him at Dr. —, you will learn where he is, and I will take it as a great personal kindness if you will speak faithfully to him about his eternal interests. I have reason to believe concerning my other near relatives that they know Christ crucified in whom they have found salvation. And we are all concerned about his.

This duty was undertaken with feelings of solemn interest, being fully persuaded that this was not a solitary case in Demerara. Soon after our return we waited on Dr. —, and inquired if he was acquainted with a Mr. —? “Yes,” he replied, “I knew him very well. I was intimately acquainted with him.” “Could you inform me where I might find him, or favour me with his address?” With a serious countenance, the Doctor answered, “Mr. — was a young man of good disposition enough, but too much accustomed, I am sorry to say, to drink to excess. Being well acquainted with him, as he was not unfrequently at my house, I warned him that he might fall a victim to this habit. And so it was. At such a time he was removed from this stelling, in a state of confirmed delirium tremens, to the Colonial Hospital, where in a few days afterwards he died!

A SERIOUS WARNING TO TIPPLING PROFESSORS.

Another instance of the awful effects of intemperance recently occurred in the neighbourhood of Stirling. One Joshua Allott, a workman on the Scottish Central Railway, came from Yorkshire some time ago, where he had been a consistent member of the Wesleyan body. He joined that body here, but subsequently fell into intemperate habits. Having been for some days in a state of intoxication, and hearing that some of his companions had gone to Castlecary upon business, he set out after them, but missing them, he proceeded forward to Glasgow: while passing through the tunnel, he attempted to get from one carriage to another, when he fell between them upon the rails, and the remainder of the train passed over him. He was taken up and carried to the Infirmary, where he died in extreme agony. So fearfully was his body mangled, that it could not have been identified but for some sailor's marks upon his arm. Is not this another instance of what intemperance is doing to the Church of Christ? How much longer before ministers and people will see and do their duty?—National Temperance Advocate.

THE RELIGIOUS BEARING OF THE TEMPERANCE QUESTION.

(An Extract from the Temperance Lever.)

The temperance movement is the result of increased knowledge respecting the laws of our nature and the influence of an intoxicating beverage upon the human frame. In exact relation to the extent of our knowledge, is our individual sin in adopting or not adopting the total abstinence principle. Doubtless, if our worthy ancestors had discovered that the use of arsenic and water was agreeable, and that the human frame might be so addicted to its moderate use as not apparently to suffer from it, there would be no sin in taking it, till it was discovered that by a law of our nature, the moderate use invariably tended to the immoderate use, and [that] the moderate and the immoderate use were both injurious to society: the one silently undermining the human frame and preparing the way for disease and premature death; the other manifesting its injurious influence by the derangement of the mind, and by causing those under its influence to violate all the known laws of God, causing crime and disease to abound in the land. Such is it with alcohol.

With this knowledge there is sin, if we do not use all lawful means to arrest the progress of this evil. There is sin if we sanction the continuance of a practice which naturally tends to evil, and which our increased knowledge has taught us may be abandoned with impunity. The second great commandment is, thou shalt love thy neighbour as thyself. The precepts of the New Testament teach us that if we love not man whom we have seen, we cannot love God whom we have not seen. The precepts of the New Testament teach us that we are to forego our own present and private gratification for the good of others,—that we are not to seek pleasure, but the benefit of our fellow-creatures and the glory of God. The temperance movement, then, is not only consistent with these, but with our existing knowledge upon the subject, connexion with the temperance movement, so far as that movement is conducted in a christian spirit, becomes a religious duty.

There is one portion of Scripture which is seldom appealed to as confirmatory of the present important movements in religion and morals. It is perhaps well not to dabble in things too deep for us; but I see no reason why the prophecies of the old Testament should not be better understood than they are. There are two I cannot resist alluding to on the present occasion. "Cast ye up, cast ye up, prepare the way, take up the stumbling block out of the way of my people."—Isaiah lvii. 14. "Go through, go through the gates; prepare ye the way of the people; cast up, cast up the highway; gather out the stones; lift up a standard for the people."—Isaiah lxii. 10.

Nothing could more beautifully depict the character of the present great movements amongst civilized nations. It is true that all the "stones" and "stumbling blocks" are not being gathered out by persons who are anxious to travel on the highway of righteousness themselves, but there are many sincere, earnest and enlightened Christians co-operating in these movements,—men who are not working from selfish or interested motives—men who are actuated by a love for God and man. And why should they not co-operate even with the scavengers and navvies of the moral world? The labour of the scavenger and the navy is honourable; what Christian scavenger or navy would refuse to labour at the same work with the ungodly ones? Let all of us who love our fellow-creatures, but especially such of us as call ourselves christians, set ourselves earnestly and heartily to the work of gathering out the "stones," of removing the "stumbling-blocks," and of preparing "the way of the people."

Literary Notices.

A Tract for the Times, by WILLIAM GAWTHORPE. Houlston and Stoneman, Paternoster Row. Price One Penny.

This is a well written tract on the Sunday Traffic in intoxicating liquors, by one who has evidently given great attention to his subject. The author discusses with much tact and ability the following topics:—

1. Reascus for preferring at the present time an effort to obtain the prohibition of the Sunday Traffic, rather than the entire abolition of the License Laws.
2. The necessity existing for Legislative aid to accomplish the object in view.
3. The right and duty of the friends of temperance, and the people generally, to promote the effort.
4. The beneficial results likely to follow the enactment of such a law.

We have read this production with feelings of great interest, and without quoting from its pages, where all is so excellent, we will leave our readers to purchase to read and to circulate this seasonable "Tract for the Times."

The history of the Origin and Success of the advocacy of Total Abstinence from all Intoxicating liquors. By JAMES TEARE. London: Charles Gilpin, 5, Bishopsgate Street. Price Sixpence.

The seventh thousand of this truly important and interesting history has just issued from the press. It is an enlargement on former editions, and is written in Mr. Teare's own peculiar and forcible style. It is, we think, a shame to any man not to have made himself acquainted with the rise of the great temperance reform of this country, and from whom could so faithful a sketch be expected as from the pen of one whose fidelity is above all suspicion? Such a work had long been needed to set at rest the question of the origin of the Temperance movement; and we are ourselves personally obliged to our friend Mr. Teare for this history, which will remain a record to be consulted in future times; when this great English apostle shall be gathered to his fathers.

IPSWICH JUVENILE TEMPERANCE BOOKS.

In 32mo., illustrated with handsome woodcuts, in sixpenny packets, of glazed coloured paper.

	PAGES		PAGES
1. The History of Teetotalism	20	18. What Little Boys can do for Teetotalism ...	12
2. Scriptural Teetotalism	20	19. Little Mary	16
3. Teetotalism of Ancient History	20	20. Lucy Grey and her Pet Pigeon	8
4. Teetotalism of Modern History	20	21. What Little Girls can do for Teetotalism.....	12
5. The cost of Intemperance	20	22. Poor Little Willie	12
6. Self-denial	20	23. The Sixpenny Glass of Wine	12
7. Early Habits	20	24. The Town Meeting ; License or no License...	12
8. The Force of Example	20	25. The Unexplored Island.....	12
9. A Letter to Sunday School Children	20	26. Is I not happy ?	12
10. H. Hawkins, the Drunkard's Daughter	20	27. The Apprentice Lad.....	20
11. Christian Courtesy and Benevolence	20	28. The Power of Custom	20
12. The Young Chemist's Inquiry	20	29. Typographical Gleanings—Examples.....	20
13. Little Henry and the Teetotal Festival	20	30. Ditto ditto. —Warnings	20
14. The Young Reasoner's Objections to Teetotalism	20	31. The Guide to Glendalough	12
15. The Fear of Ridicule.....	20	32. Bridget Larkin	12
16. The Teetotalism of Travellers	20	ASSORTED PACKETS.—No. 1, 1 to 16—No. 2, 17 to 32,
17. Temptation Resisted	12	inclusive.

IPSWICH TEMPERANCE TRACTS.

Those Tracts marked with an * have PICTURES and are on better paper, 150 pages, in a sixpenny packet. The others have 168 pages to the packet.

	PAGES		PAGE
1 The Doctor Scrutinized, or for what purpose do Physicians prescribe Alcoholic Beverages, by R. D. Alexander, F.L.S., 122 thousand ...	8	*44 A Sailor's Yarn	4
2 Striking Facts, 84 thousand	2	45 Moderate Drinking Calmly Considered	12
3 Maker and Vender, 44 thousand	2	46 The Pledge.....	4
4 Our Creed, 52 thousand	2	*47 John Jarvis, or the Pledge Signed	12
5 Adulterated Beer, 34 thousand	4	*48 The Fifteen Friends.....	4
6 Adulterated Wine, 40 thousand	4	49 Sunday School Teachers, 22 thousand	12
7 The Maltster, 37 thousand	4	50 Sunday School Children, 40 thousand	12
8 Go Feel what I have Felt, 53 thousand	2	*51 Money better than Beer, 37 thousand.....	4
9 Facts are Stubborn Things, 53 thousand	2	*52 Little Mary ; or a Daughter's Love	8
*10 The Spirit Dealer, 35 thousand	2	53 Philosophy of Temperance by R. T. Trall, M.D. 20
11 Christian Teetotalism, 70 thousand	2	54 Love to Man, or an Appeal to the Pious.....	20
12 The Trade, 33 thousand	4	*55 The Young Woman's Tract.....	12
13 Alcohol, 33 thousand	4	56 The Young Man's Tract	16
14 The Town of Ipswich, 33 thousand	4	57 Dr. Campbell's Testimony, 18 thousand	8
*15 Song of the Water Drinker, 37 thousand	2	58 Why Sign the Pledge? 40 thousand	2
16 Stimulation not Strength, 30 thousand	8	59 The Poor Man's House Repaired	4
17 Farmer Woodman's Speech, 41 thousand	4	60 The Mother's Tract	8
*18 The Beer Barrel Examined, 33 thousand	8	61 The High Price of Food	4
19 Teetotal Recipes, 38 thousand	4	62 Ladies' Tract Societies	8
*20 Speech of J. J. Gurney, 30 thousand	4	63 The Praise of Water, 25 thousand	2
21 Pity the Poor Drunkard 49 thousand	2	64 Important Calculation, 30 thousand.....	2
22 The Fool's Pence, 25 thousand	8	*65 The Farm Servant, 25 thousand	2
23 Why am I a Teetotaler? 26 thousand	2	66 Teetotalism Declining, 15 thousand	8
*24 Dost thou smoke, Bill? 34 thousand	4	*67 The Reformed Drunkard, 20 thousand	8
25 William the Laudanum Drinker, 30 thousand ...	4	68 The Recruit of the British Legion.....	8
26 The Ox Discourse	4	69 No. 1 of Temperance Anecdotes	12
27 Letter to the Clergy, by a Brother Clergyman, 21 thousand	20	70 No. 2 ditto	12
28 Common Sense, 20 thousand.....	20	71 No. 3 ditto	12
29 Ralph the Soldier	4	72 No. 4 ditto	12
30 Testimony of Eminent Physicians, 30 thousand 4		73 Luke Husler, or "I did not like to say No.".....	8
31 The Working Man, 35 thousand.....	20	74 The Drunkard's Wife	8
32 Is I not happy? by Hugh Stowell, 30 thousand 4		75 The Unexplored Island	4
33 David the Shoemaker, 49 thousand	4	76 Ancient Wines ; by R. D. Alexander.....	8
34 The Drunken Couple, 48 thousand	2	77 Influence of Bxample, 15 thousand	2
35 Confessions of a drunkard, 29 thousand	2	*78 The Victim of Excitement	20
36 Master Tailor, 20 thousand	4	*79 My Medical Adviser does not approve of Teetotalism.	4
37 The Fatal Gift, 36 thousand.....	2	*80 The Restoration	8
38 Poor Sandy.....	4	ASSORTED PACKETS.—No. 1, containing 1 to 31.—No. 2, 32 to 55.—No. 3, 56, and upwards.
39 Use & abuse, by Archdeacon Jeffreys, 34 thousand 2		Fifty Packets of Juvenile Temperance Books or Tracts delivered in London for a Guinea, sent by P. O. Order, to Richard Dykes Alexander, Ipswich. Samples of both post free, for five shillings.
40 The Schoolmaster	4	London: Simpkin and Marshall.
41 Water is best, by J. J. Gurney, 37 thousand... 8
42 Cobbett's Advice	4
43 Take a Public House.....	4

THE TEETOTAL TIMES AND ESSAYIST.

TO THE TEETOTALERS OF THE UNITED KINGDOM.

On the 1st of January, 1848, will be published, Price ONE PENNY, No. 1, of a NEW SERIES of THE TEETOTAL TIMES,

IN WHICH WILL BE INCORPORATED

THE TEETOTAL ESSAYIST.

It will contain an Essay "On the Possibilities and Probabilities of Teetotalism," by the Rev. EVAN JONES, of Tredegar; an Essay, "Conscience and Teetotalism," by the Rev. BENJAMIN PARSONS; "Pencilings from our Note Book," by the Rev. T. WALLACE; Important testimonies in reference to Teetotalism and Cholera; Reports from Societies; and other articles illustrative of the principles and progress of Teetotalism.

This publication will be the same size as "Chambers's Edinburgh Journal." The most able writers on the Temperance question have engaged to enrich its columns with their productions; and it is the intention of the Proprietor to adopt every means for making it the best temperance periodical in circulation.

The Teetotal Times and Essayist will appear regularly on the first day of every month. It will possess the privilege of free postage as does the Essayist at present; so that Societies or individuals will have the means of circulating the successive numbers at a trifling cost. They may be supplied for this purpose at 6s. per hundred, which will be sent to them in parcels, post free. Single copies will be sent regularly to individuals, on the payment of One Shilling per annum in advance. Orders, with the amount in Post Office Orders or Stamps, to be addressed to Mr. JOHN CASSELL, Budge Row, London.

W. BRITAIN, 54, Paternoster Row, London.

LONDON TEMPERANCE TRACTS,

UNDER THE SANCTION OF THE

National Temperance Society.

The above Tracts comprise a variety of 150 different sorts, and embrace every point of the principle of Total Abstinence. Upwards of

THREE MILLION

have already been circulated. 2 pp. 8d.; 4 pp. 1s. 4d., 8 pp. 2s. 8d. per 100., or in packets, assorted, 6d. each.

For the convenience of LOAN CIRCULATION, they are assorted into 60 sets, containing 16 pp. in each; and stitched into a strong wrapper, with a suitable address upon each, price 8s. per 100. Liberal allowance for large quantities. Lists may be obtained of the Publishers gratis.

HOULSTON & STONEMAN, 65, Paternoster Row.

THE MODEL PARISH,

or, the Present State of Parishes in Great Britain consequent upon the Drinking Usages of Society; and Proposals for the Erection of a Church, Parsonage, Schools, and College, to assist in the Eradication of these Drinking Customs. By a Clergyman of the Church of England. Price Two pence. Third Thousand.

London: SEELEY, BURNSIDE, & SEELEY.

* * The NATIONAL TEMPERANCE CHRONICLE and TEMPERANCE RECORDER is published on the first day of each month, at HOULSTON & STONEMAN, the Depot of the National Temperance Society, 65, Paternoster-row, and will be sent post-free for one year on receipt of 2s. postage labels. Annual Subscriptions received at the Society's office, 11, Tokenhouse Yard, London, and subscriptions and donations for the general purposes of the Society, by the Treasurer, G. W. ALEXANDER, 40, Lombard Street; by any Member of the Committee, and at the office as above.

TEMPERANCE
PROVIDENT INSTITUTION,

AND

GENERAL LIFE ASSURANCE SOCIETY,
39, MOORGATE STREET, LONDON.

Enrolled 31 Dec., 1840, under 10 Geo. IV., c., 56, and 4 and 5 Will. IV., c. 40.

THE SEVENTH ANNUAL MEETING of this Society will be held, pursuant to the 33rd Rule, at the office, in Moorgate Street, on Friday the 7th January, at 3 o'clock precisely. Every Member is entitled to attend.

By order of the Board.

THEODORE COMPTON, Secretary.

Arthur's Domestic Series, Complete—
Hodson's Edition.

THE MAIDEN—THE WIFE—AND THE MOTHER.

forming the Complete Series of Domestic Tales, by T. S. ARTHUR, are now Published uniform, at 6d. each, sewed, or 1s. each, cloth, gilt and lettered, together, 2s. 6d. or in handsome bindings.

J. S. Hodson has taken much pains in preparing these Works for the English public; and the very able manner in which the duties of the female in her several relations of life are herein set forth, and their practice illustrated, render these Books the most useful and important that can be introduced into the domestic circle

* * Be careful to order HODSON'S EDITION, 2, Clifford's Inn Passage, Fleet Street.

ARTHUR'S NEW BOOK

A CHRISTMAS BOX for the SONS and DAUGHTERS of TEMPERANCE. By T. S. ARTHUR. In 32mo. at 9d. sewed, or 1s. 3d. cloth gilt.

THE MODEL PARISH,

With a notice of Bishop Chase's proposed Temperance Village. By a Clergyman. Third Thousand. Price 2d.

ALSO,

TALES OF TEMPERANCE,

by Mr. and Mrs. S. C. HALL, with an introduction by the Rev. WILLIAM MARCH, D.D., cloth, gilt edges, with a beautiful steel engraving, adapted for presents, or the drawing-room table. Price 2s. 6d.

SEELEY, BURNSIDE, & SEELEY.

The profits will be devoted to the Model Parish.

Recently published, price 6d. Second Edition.

AMY OF THE PEAK,

OR

THE TRIUMPH OF PRINCIPLE.

LONDON: C. GILPIN.

It is indeed a precious jewel, encased in harmonious verse.—Theobald Mathew.

* * Abounds in lofty sentiments.—Temp. Levee.

Just published, price 3s. 6d. with a Frontispiece,

JOYS AND SORROWS;

by the authoress of "Amy of The Peak."

London: C. GILPIN.

* * * This delightful vol. It is a gem.—National Temperance Advocate.

London: Printed by RICHARD BARRETT of 3, Regent-terrace, City-road, in the Parish of St. Luke, in the County of Middlesex, Printer; at his Printing Office, No. 13, Mark-lane, in the Parish of Allhallows Staining, in the City of London; and published by JOHN STONEMAN, of 24, Brocksby Street, in the Parish of Islington, in the County of Middlesex, at HOULSTON and STONEMAN'S, No. 65, Paternoster-row, in the Parish of St. Michael-le-Querne, in the City of London, Publishers.—Saturday, January 1st, 1848.

THE

NATIONAL TEMPERANCE CHRONICLE

AND

TEMPERANCE RECORDER.

It is good neither to eat flesh, nor to drink wine, nor anything whereby thy brother stumbleth, or is offended, or is made weak.—ROM. XIV. 21

No. 26, JOINT SERIES.]

FEBRUARY, 1848.

[PRICE 1d., STAMPED 2d.]

CONTENTS.

	PAGE	PAGE
Our Mission—Physiology for the People—Intoxicating Drink	217-223
EDITORIAL REMARKS—National Temperance Society—Subscriptions	224
Intoxicating Drink (continued)	225
HOME INTELLIGENCE.—Safron Waldon—Fitzroy Teetotal Association—Borough of Greenwich Temperance Association—Health of Towns Association Petition—Braintree
—Temperance Trip—West Cowes—Ashford—Tenth Anniversary of the Chatham and Brompton Temperance Society—Abstract from the Seventh Report of the Temperance Provident Institution		226-229
FOREIGN INTELLIGENCE.—Boston, United States—Letter from America		230
EFFECTS OF INTemperance		230
POETRY.—Bacchanalians' Pursuits		230

OUR MISSION.

Todd, in his Student's Guide, tells of a man who was cutting a path through the snow, on a very snowy morning. He worked hard, but as he laboured without rule or order, his progress was slow. Tired at last with his fruitless efforts, he stood and surveyed his work, and then took his spade and marked out on both sides the task he had to perform. He then set to work with vigour, and in a few minutes had removed more snow, and that with much more neatness, than he had in the previous half an hour.

The grand secret of success in every undertaking is to understand thoroughly the business upon which we are entering. Without such knowledge, grievous faults will be inevitably committed, and much of what would be otherwise hopeful and promising, will be destroyed. The Temperance cause, in our opinion, has seriously suffered on account of its object, and the best means for its attainment, not being thoroughly understood. Our mission is to do war with the drinking-usages of society, but, like Todd's snow-digger, in too many instances, we have set to work without marking the edges, and a sad work we have made of it.

We would not assume to ourselves the censor's chair, and pronounce uncharitable judgment on the noble efforts that have been made by disinterested and worthy individuals and bodies, however mistaken we may deem their policy, and however ill-adapted we may consider their proceedings. Rather would we cry "Well done!" approvingly for the past, and humbly offer a friendly caution for the future. Very few of us will have the courage to deny, that we have anything to learn from the American snow-man.

The mission before us is great. Its wide-spread and untold bearings are yet hardly understood by the most eminent friends of our cause. What a mighty change must occur in society before all its drinking usages will be abolished, and before the world will bow to the sceptre of sobriety? What light must burst on the lands, and what a mass of solid thought must be awakened. Drinking usages prevail from the splendid residences of royalty, down to the abode of unmitigated misery: king and beggar, and beggar and king, are alike wedded to their absurdities. They meet us at the threshold of being, and often earlier, and watch us till the last green sod is placed on our long home. Like the frogs of Egypt, they creep to every room, and make known their presence in every apartment. They are licensed by law, and sanctioned by lust. They sit by the judge on the bench, and put the halter around the neck of the wretched form before him. They comfort the divine, and cheer the prostitute. They are equally loved by both, though, perhaps, in all cases, the one is not so zealous in their defence as the other. They impoverish the many and enrich the few. They are supported by powerful and combined interests, who have gathered around them the sanction of ages, and the presumed recommendations of Divinity. Such is the system we have to overthrow. Is there a man among us who does not tremble at, as well as magnify, our mission? If right-hearted, we trow not.

Let us then ever remember our mission. Let there be an ever-abiding impression on our hearts, that we have undertaken to overthrow entirely the drinking-usages of all countries, and to promote the universal disuse of intoxicating drinks as common beverages. This is to be the one great work of our lives. To other matters we may and must attend as men, citizens and Christians, but here is the field on which we are to display the most active energies of our being, and to put forth our most vigorous, as well as most indefatigable exertions. And it is but seldom that we can find in the annals of our world, a more glorious mission entrusted to human agency. But the battle must needs be long and arduous, and probably the flowers of many springs will bloom and wither over the graves of the earliest friends of our cause, before our triumph will be complete. If such should be the fate of all of us, who are now engaged in the contest, let us so conduct ourselves that at the close of his day, each may exclaim, "I have fought a good fight."

As our work is so great, it will be our wisdom to concentrate our strength on the most vulnerable points of the drinking-system. Let us keep before the public its ruinous expenditure, and teach them how the land groans under the burden of drunkenness. Let us shew how paupers, lunatics, thieves, prostitutes, robbers, and murderers, are being continually manufactured by its instrumentality, and who inflict upon the whole land an incredible amount of expenditure, misery, degradation, suffering, and national disgrace. To our religious men, and our religious and benevolent societies, let us explain how the drinking-usages destroy what they build, and curse what they bless. They contribute to feed the hungry, and their contributions find their way to pamper the publican. They give alms to clothe the naked; the clothes are taken to the pawn-broker, and the money replenish the gin-shop coffers. They distribute tracts, religious books, and the Holy Bible; our drinking-customs deaden the moral feeling of those who receive them, so as to make their perusal of "non-effect." They send missionaries to the ends of the earth, and to the distant isles of the sea, to proclaim the glad tidings of salvation and to bring the lost back to the fold of God. Their voice is heard with gladness. The man-eater casts aside his ferocity, and becomes a little babe. The mother, who can hardly remember the number of her murdered infants in the days of her ignorance, weeps for the dead and prays for the living. An earthly pandemonium is changed into a moral Paradise; but alas! speedily as if on the wings of the blast, our drinking-usages follow the messenger of peace;—the scene of moral beauty that once met his eye proves to be a dissolving view,—a very "Paradise lost,"—as the fiend has been at work there. Nor has he any hope of seeing "Paradise regained," until the fiend is expelled the land, and sobriety is restored to its primitive honours. Armed with moral means, and furnished with spiritual appliances, our christian men and christian societies seek to reach the human soul, and make it captive to the obedience of Christ, forgetting that the gospel is no more intended to produce an impression upon a man under the influence of intoxicating drinks, than upon an idiot or a madman. It is intended for men under the influence of reason, and not for those under the sway of temporary or habitual madness. We have seen men estimable in all the affairs of life, honest, truth-telling, and very moral when not under the influence of the mocking-cup; but then their good qualities seemed to vanish away like the morning dew. We have spoken to such men, we have heard their confessions, and have seen their tears; we had strong reasons for believing that they really lamented their transgressions, but alas! their repentance lasted no longer than the terms of their abstinence. They again trusted the destroyer, and again they were disgraced. These then are truths to be made prominent in our mission. Men of God! Will you or will you not understand our mission? We solemnly tell you it is no laughing matter. Whatever may have been our errors, your responsibility is fearful, and in no wise affected by them. If we employed unsuitable agency, we did the best we could,—you were not with us to guide our movements. If our language has been coarse and intemperate, it was not chastened by your presence, nor softened by your advice. If our movements have been ill-advised, bear in mind that you, as you ought to have done, did not appear to lead us. If we have grievously erred, our errors were aggravated by your coolness and disheartening distance. Teetotalism is not now, nor will it ever become a legitimate subject of complaisant success over the wine glass after dinner. The destiny of myriads is bound up with it. Men for whom the Saviour died, are affected by our mission, and of them you will have to present your account amidst the awful and over-powering realities of dissolving worlds! Oh think! solemnly think how awful will be the doom of those who wilfully neglected infallible means for improving, to a great extent, the moral condition of man! Brethren, beloved! the thought of this last audit has often oppressed our souls, and with all respect and humility, yet with deep earnestness we implore you to consider our mission.

PHYSIOLOGY FOR THE PEOPLE.

DEPENDENCE OF LIFE UPON LIQUID.

[From an article in Howitt's Journal, by Dr. W. B. CARPENTER.]

If a continual supply of liquid be as requisite for the maintenance of life as it has been shown to be, the question arises, What kind of liquid is the most beneficial, or may a mixture of different liquids be employed with advantage? This question we propose now to discuss. It is one of vast importance; because upon its determination rests the propriety or impropriety of the habits of a large proportion of the population, both rich and poor, of this and almost every other civilized country, whose accustomed beverage includes a liquid, alcohol, the properties of which are altogether different from those of water, and are such that it must do positive harm if it does not do good.

It has been already pointed out that a large quantity of liquid exists in the organized textures of living beings, and that the proportion is greater the more active are the functions of those textures. This liquid is invariably water. If we dry a seaweed or a mushroom, a moss or a fern, a grass or a rose-tree,—any kind whatever of vegetable fabric,—we drive off nothing but water and volatile oil, leaving the solid matters behind. True it is that alcohol is obtained from vegetable substances;—that beer is brewed and gin distilled from the sugar yielded by malted barley, rum from the sugar of the sugar-cane, and brandy from that of grapes and other fruits. But the alcohol could not be directly obtained from these sources; for it does not exist in them. The nearest approach to it which they present is sugar; which substance is prepared in the plant for the nourishment of growing parts. It is only by a process of decomposition or decay (for this is the real nature of fermentation), such as never takes place in the growing plant, that this solid substance is converted into the liquid, alcohol. A further change of the same nature would change it into vinegar; and the putrefactive fermentation which corrupts this is nothing else than the last stage of the process. If either of these changes were to occur in the sweet juices of the living vegetable, it would speedily be fatal; for alcohol acts as a decided poison to the plant even when considerably diluted with water. No other liquid than water can afford that which is necessary for the seed to germinate, for the leaves to unfold, for the branches and roots to shoot forth, for the flowers to expand, and for the fruit to swell. It is water that is taken in by the roots, holding dissolved in it certain of the mineral substances of the soil; it is water which forms all the liquid portion of the sap that rises in the stem and branches to be perfected by the agency of the leaves. It is water which unites with the carbon derived from the atmosphere to form the various compounds that contribute to the extension of the fabric of the tree, or that are stored up in its cavities. And even when other liquids are produced within the vegetable,—such as the fixed oils (rape, linseed, walnut, &c.),—or the volatile oils or essences (otto of roses, essence of lemon, oil of cinnamon, &c.)—these owe their existence to water, being formed by the combination of its elements with carbon through the agency of the green cells of the leaves.

It may be further remarked that the activity of all the processes of vegetation corresponds with the amount of fluid exhaled from the leaves, by the function resembling the perspiration of animals. If a plant, perspiring actively under the influence of a bright, warm sunshine, be carried into a dark room, the exhalation of liquid ceases; but the absorption by the roots ceases also, (or is at least very much diminished) until the light and warmth are restored, and the loss of liquid by the leaves recommences. The larger the quantity of water which thus passes through a plant, the more solid matter does it gain; since, although the amount dissolved in it be exceedingly minute, it is enough to be of consequence to the plant, which thus extracts for itself in a short time that which is yielded by many times its own bulk of liquid. As long as the plant is freely supplied with water, it may continue to exhale to any extent without injury. It is only when the quantity exhaled exceeds the supply which the plant can gain by absorption, and the proper quantity of water in its tissues is thereby diminished, that the loss of fluid from the leaves is really weakening and injurious.

Now, with regard to animals, precisely the same holds good. Whatever animal tissue we deprive of its liquid by drying,—whether the soft mass of a jelly-fish, or the hard shell of a crab,—the soft nerves and muscles of a human body, or its hard bones and teeth—we drive off nothing but water. It is through this liquid alone that all the active functions of animal life are carried on. It is water alone that can act as the solvent for the various articles of food which are taken into the stomach; the gastric juice itself being nothing else than water, with a small quantity of animal matter and a little acid, which form with the albumen, &c., of the food new compounds that are capable of being dissolved in that liquid. It is water which forms all the fluid portion of the blood, that vital current which permeates the minutest textures of the body, and conveys to each the appropriate materials for its growth and activity. It is water, which when mingled in various proportions with the solid matter of the various textures, gives to them the consistency which they severally require. And it is water which takes up the products of their decay, and conveys them, by a most complicated and wonderful system of sewerage, altogether out of the system. No other liquid naturally exists in the animal body; save the oily matter of fat, which is derived from the plant, and which is stored up chiefly to serve as respiration-food.

It might be inferred, then, that water, in addition to properly selected articles of solid food, would constitute all that the wants of the system can ordinarily require. And there is abundant evidence that the most vigorous health may be maintained, even under very trying circumstances, without any other beverage. This is demonstrated, not merely by the experience of individuals amongst civilized communities, who have purposely abstained from every other kind of drink; but by the condition of whole nations previous to their acquaintance with fermented liquors. Where, for example, shall we now meet with greater power of endurance than was displayed by the North American Indians, before their race became deteriorated by the introduction of European vices? The question cannot be decided by the amount of strength which can be put forth at a single effort. It may be freely admitted that when the body is exhausted by fatigue, an alcoholic stimulus may impart a temporary strength, which shall enable the next effort to be successful in doing that which could not have been accomplished without it. But there is strong reason to believe that the power of sustained exertion is thereby impaired; and that those who habitually have recourse to this stimulus are really doing themselves a great deal more harm than good. In like manner, it may be admitted that many of those mental productions, which are most strongly marked by the inspiration of genius, have been thrown off under the stimulating influence of alcohol. But it does not at all follow that the individual who produced them, or the world at large, have benefited thereby; for all experience shows that steady and prolonged mental labour is better borne the more completely all stimulants are avoided; and in every case (I believe) in which genius has depended for its power of exertion upon alcoholic excitement, it has been short-lived,—so that though it may shine with a soberer lustre without such aid, the light is steadier and not so early quenched.

In considering the effects of various beverages upon the system, we may altogether leave out of view those which owe their peculiar qualities to the solid nutritious matter they contain—such as milk, broth, &c.—since these should be ranked merely as food reduced to a liquid form by being diffused through water. And in regard to tea, coffee and cocoa, a few words will suffice; since, unless they are taken in undue strength, or in excessive quantity, they have no powerful effects upon the system. It is a very remarkable fact, that when the peculiar extracts of these three substances drawn out by boiling water are reduced to their simplest and purest forms—in which state they are known to chemists as theine, caffeine, and theobromine—they are found to have very nearly the same composition. And the active principle of Maté, or South American tea, is believed to be of the same nature. Thus it appears that in various parts of the world, mankind have discovered plants of very different characters, which contain a substance that has a pleasant influence upon the system, and which they employ in nearly the same manner,—the use of tea having come to us from China, of coffee from Arabia, and of cocoa from Mexico. The last of the three contains a considerable quantity of oily matter, which renders it, for those with whom it agrees, an article of diet of great value in supplying combustible material. It is difficult to understand on what the peculiar refreshing power of these beverages depends. They cannot be said to have a stimulating influence, unless they are taken in undue strength and quantity; for it is not found that the habitual use of them (as in the case of alcohol) deadens their influence, no increase in the amount taken being required for the continued production of the same effect. The peculiar chemical principles they contain are not adapted to nourish any of the tissues of the body, and the mode of their action upon it is at present quite unknown. We may regard them, when employed in moderation, as—to say the least—innocent beverages; the grateful flavour of which renders them agreeable, whilst their warmth is frequently very useful in helping to keep up the temperature of the body. But there can be no doubt that, when employed in excess, tea and coffee have a stimulating influence upon the nervous system; increasing its activity for a time, and thus enabling the midnight student to prosecute his labours when he ought to be reposing; but, like other stimulants of the same nature, leaving a subsequent exhaustion from which it requires a long period of rest to recover. The oily matter contained in cocoa causes it to disagree with some persons of “bilious” temperament; and in general this beverage is better adapted to those who are exposed to cold, and who require a considerable supply of combustion-food, than to those who habitually live in a warm atmosphere.

In considering, in the next place, the effects of the various beverages of which alcohol forms the principal ingredient,—such as distilled spirits, wine, beer, cider, &c.—we may leave out of view the amount of solid, nutritious matter which is dissolved in them; for this is so extremely small, as not to be worth consideration. The greatest quantity exists in malt liquors; but a gallon of the most potent of these contains far less albuminous matter (or tissue-food) than a penny roll; so that they cannot be at all compared in this respect to milk, soup, &c. The influence which these beverages exert upon the system is attributable, therefore, almost solely to the alcohol they contain; and we shall now inquire into the mode in which this liquid operates on the body.

In the first place, then, it may be stated as an unquestionable fact, that alcohol cannot be converted into muscular tissue or flesh. Alcohol,—like sugar, starch, &c.,—consists of the three elements, oxygen, hydrogen, and carbon, alone; and we have no reason whatever to believe that any of these substances can be united with nitrogen in the animal body so as to become tissue-food: this being furnished, as we have seen, either by the flesh of other animals, or by substances having exactly the same composition which are prepared by the agency of plants. Now the muscular force which man (or any other animal) is capable of exerting, depends upon two conditions—the size and vigour of the muscle, and the strength of the influence sent into it from the nerve. We are all conscious of greatly-increased power in making an effort when we are confident of success; whilst a doubt serves to unnerve us. We see the extraordinary force which even a weak female is able to put forth under the excitement of maniacal rage, of self-defence, or of desire to protect her helpless offspring; whilst, on the other hand, we see the finely-developed muscular system of the most athletic man become altogether powerless by some injury to the nervous system which prevents it from calling the muscles into play. The degree of force which can be put forth for a short time seems to depend chiefly upon the amount of nervous energy which can be called up. But the power of continued exertion depends in great part upon the due nutrition of the muscular system. Every movement that we make (as we have remarked on several occasions) involves the death and decay of a certain amount of muscular tissue; and if this be not replaced by a new growth, the muscle gradually loses strength, so that no exertion of nervous power can in the end call forth a vigorous action. For this new growth rest and material are required, and alcohol can supply neither of these. If, under its influence, the exertion be prolonged for a time, then a greater quantity of muscular substance is destroyed, and a longer rest and a larger supply of material become necessary for its replacement. Hence the supposition of the influence of alcohol in sustaining the muscular strength is altogether unconfirmed by scientific inquiry: we shall presently see whether it is borne out by experience, when its results are carefully tested.

(To be continued.)

INTOXICATING DRINK.

(FROM THE DAILY PRESS.)

[The following are a few extracts from the daily press. As the result of the drinking system of society, we invite serious attention to them.]

MARLBOROUGH-STREET.—A young man of fashionable exterior, who gave the assumed name of Robert Wilson, was charged with having a pair of loaded pistols in his possession, with intent to commit suicide.

From the evidence of Webb, one of the waiters at the Colonnade-hotel, Haymarket, it appeared that the defendant had been staying at the hotel for the last week or ten days. The defendant for several nights past had been in a state of intoxication. On Saturday the defendant loaded a pair of pistols, and said to witness that he must not be surprised if he did not see him again. The waiter believing that something serious was intended, followed the defendant, and caused him to be taken into custody by the police.

The defendant admitted that he had been drinking too much wine, and that his mind had become excited by excess; but he denied that he intended any act of violence towards himself.

MR. BINGHAM required the defendant to provide two good bail, as the best means of ensuring his safe delivery into the custody of his friends.

The defendant is reported to be a near relative of a distinguished and wealthy family.

WORSHIP-STREET.—Jane Gough, a young woman, was charged with having by her negligent and drunken conduct caused the death of her male infant, four weeks old.

Inspector Gravestock, of the G division, stated, that the prisoner, who was very much intoxicated, was brought in custody to the Featherstone-street station-house at a late hour on Saturday night, with an infant in her arms, and, as it was quite manifest that she was not in a state to be entrusted with it, he sent the child to the workhouse, to insure its safety till the morning, and detained the prisoner upon the charge of being drunk and incapable of taking care of herself. On the following morning the infant was sent back by the workhouse authorities, and, as she had then recovered from the effects of her intoxication, it was restored to the prisoner, who was then liberated upon her own recognizance to meet the charge on the Monday. Between 9 and 10 o'clock that morning, she surrendered herself at the station in discharge of her recognizance, but without the child, for the absence of which she accounted by stating, that upon awaking that morning at her lodgings in Radnor-street, St. Lukes, she put out her hand to feel for the infant, which had been previously lying at her side, and, finding that it was quite still and cold, got up to procure a light, when, upon holding the candle over it, she discovered that it was a corpse. Suspecting, from the state the prisoner had been in, that it might not have come to its death by fair means, he sent for Mr. Mather, the divisional surgeon, with whom he proceeded to the prisoner's lodging, and found that it consisted of a most wretched apartment at the end of the passage, apparently intended for a sort of washhouse, upon a table in which, the only piece of furniture in the place, the body of the dead child was lying. Upon the floor in one corner of the room was an old piece of carpeting, which was evidently used for a bed, and the only thing like covering to be seen was a small cradle-blanket almost reduced to a web. On examining the child, the surgeon expressed an opinion, from the general appearance of its body and great discolouration about the mouth, that it must have died in convulsions, occasioned most probably by neglect and the severity of the cold to which it had been exposed. Having subsequently ascertained that the prisoner, after leaving the station-house on Sunday morning, had been seen reeling about the streets for some hours with the child in her arms, he felt it his duty under such circumstances to alter the original charge of simple drunkenness to the more serious one above mentioned.

Police constable Macdonald, 24 G, stated, that while passing through Hatfield Street, St. Luke's, at a quarter to two o'clock that morning, he heard a scuffling noise in the passage of one of the houses, from which the prisoner was at the same moment ejected by a man who lived there, who complained of her unwarrantable intrusion, and on whom the prisoner retorted that she had entered it by his invitation. Perceiving that she had an infant under her cloak, which was crying piteously, and that she was very much intoxicated, he advised her to take it home, and followed her into Golden-lane, but there lost sight of her.

A second constable deposed to seeing the prisoner at about two o'clock, very drunk, the child still screaming, and that upon his asking her to give it the breast, she said that it could not or would not take it.

Evans, 245 G, stated, that shortly before three o'clock the same morning, he met the prisoner in Old-street with the child, which was then screaming violently, and that shortly after he found her attempting to enter the door of her own house in Radnor-street, upon at last opening which she fell forward upon her face. She was endeavouring to get up, when the infant uttered a piercing cry, and he told her that unless she took more care of it, she would certainly kill it; to which she gave him a snappish answer and shut the door.

When called upon for her defence, the prisoner, who displayed not the slightest emotion, denied that she was so much intoxicated as had been represented, and declared that she was perfectly capable of taking care of her child, which, she said, she had covered with her own clothes as soon as she reached home and placed by her side, but that upon waking up in the morning, she found that it had expired in the course of the night, as she had before stated to the inspector.

Mr. HAMMILL said, that as the production of the medical testimony was indispensable, and he had no hesitation, after the evidence he had heard, in detaining the prisoner, he should order her to be brought up again in the course of the week, to await the result of the post mortem examination.—Dec. 14th, 1847.

STARTLING FACTS.—The Lincoln Mercury says—“The practice of taking opium, laudanum, ether, and morphia, has increased, and is increasing, amongst the population of the fens of Cambridge-shire and Lincolnshire to a frightful extent. It obtains amongst the aged, the infirm, and the young, and it is confined to neither sex—old men, old women, and young women are equally its victims. It may be safely averred that every second customer who visits the druggist's purchases opium, laudanum, or some opiate or narcotic, whilst every second customer of the grocer is a purchaser of tobacco. It is common to see the man or woman of 20, 30, or 40 years with cadaverous countenance, tottering frame, and palsied step, daily going for his or her sixpennyworth of poison; and we have heard of yearly bills of £20 in one family for opium and laudanum! In the town of Wisbech alone, there are 400 gallons of laudanum sold and swallowed every year; eight gallons of laudanum per week, one small shop actually vending two gallons of this quantity! The apothecary's practice is thus a lucrative one in the fens. Take away the laudanum retail trade, and the druggist's occupation is gone—it is the staple of the trade. Added to this frightful consumption of laudanum, there are 1,128,780 gallons of beer, and 20,500 gallons of ardent spirits, consumed annually in Wisbech. To manufacture the one and to vend the other, there are no fewer than 2 maltsters, 12 brewers, 9 wholesale dealers in ardent spirits, 48 innkeepers, and 45 Tom and Jerries. As if this were not enough to vitiate the appetite, or rather to satisfy the cravings of a vitiated appetite, there is to be added to the catalogue the fact of there being 170 persons retailing tobacco. To counteract all this laudanum, beer, and spirit swallowing, and tobacco inhaling, there are 70 dealers in coffee and tea, with two coffee-houses, nicknamed temperance hotels.—Dec. 16th, 1847.

GUILDHALL.—George Brown, one of the city policemen, was brought before Mr. Alderman Wilson, charged with being drunk upon his duty.

Police constable 250 stated, that about two o'clock on Sunday morning he found the prisoner was drunk on his beat in Aldersgate-street. He reported him to the inspector, who directed him to fetch the prisoner to the station immediately. He returned and requested the prisoner to accompany him to the station. He refused to do so. Witness said he must resort to force. The prisoner drew his truncheon and threatened to split his skull if he touched him. Witness persuaded him to put the staff back in his pocket, and then, calling assistance, threw him on his back, disarmed him, and conveyed him to the station.

Inspector Howard said, the prisoner was locked up in a cell, and he kicked at the door and made such a noise all night that he could venture to say such a violent man had never been locked up there before.

The prisoner said the charge was just. He admitted he was drunk. He only made a noise to obtain some water, being very thirsty, and because he kicked three or four times they came into the cell and took his boots away. He had been imprisoned many hours. He should lose his situation, and he hoped the alderman would take that into consideration.

Mr. Alderman Wilson adjudged the prisoner to be imprisoned and kept to hard labour in the House of Correction for 14 days.

John Meager, another policeman, was charged with a like offence.

Sergeant Eno stated, that the prisoner's beat was in New-street-square, and, finding him to be drunk on Sunday night, after being missing from his duty for half an hour, he ordered him to the station. Here he refused to give up his lantern and truncheon, and the officers were obliged to throw him on his back to get them away from him. He afterwards struck the serjeant in the face. He was, therefore, locked up in a cell for the night.

Mr Alderman Wilson committed him to hard labour for seven days.

The police commissioner dismissed from the force four other constables who had been found drunk on their beats.

EXTRAORDINARY AFFAIR.—On Friday an inquest was held at Warrington, on the body of Robert Rogers, a private in the 1st Royals. The deceased had been on furlough, and arrived in Warrington on Monday, en route to his regiment in Ireland, at the Bowling-green public-house. He got into a somewhat merry lot of company, and, to afford them amusement, he made a bet of 5s. that he would thrust down his throat a stick two feet long. A thin smooth stick was procured; he commenced the feat, and actually drove the stick down his throat to the length of eighteen inches! This was the limit of his powers, however; he became of a deathlike hue, and fainted, much to the alarm of those about him, who earnestly desired him to desist from further efforts to accomplish his mad object. He then pulled the stick up again, and blood followed in the wake. A glass of ale was given to him, which he drank, and his head and chest then sank down, and in this doubled-up position he remained for some time, apparently in dreadful agony from pains in the stomach, and surgical aid was procured; but he died on Wednesday morning at three o'clock. Death was caused by inflammation, produced by internal injuries from the stick.—Globe, Dec. 28th, 1847.

PROVIDENTIAL ESCAPE.—On Monday, at the New Bailey, two men, named William Hatfield and Mark Clegg, the former an engine-driver and the latter a fireman in the employ of the London and North Western Railway Company, were brought up before Mr. Trafford, the stipendiary magistrate, and Captain Whittaker, charged with drunkenness and gross negligence in the discharge of their duty. Mr. Wagstaff, solicitor of Warrington, appeared on behalf of the company, and from his statement and the evidence of the witnesses, it appeared that the prisoners had charge of the night mail train from Liverpool to London on Saturday. The number of carriages and passengers was not stated, but the pointsman at the Warrington junction being at his post waiting for the train, was surprised to hear it coming at a very rapid rate. He had been preparing to turn the points in order to shunt the train on to the Warrington junction; but as the train did not diminish in speed, but rather increased as it approached, he, anticipating great danger if he should turn the points, determined on the instant upon letting the train take its course, and not turning them. Most fortunate was it that he exercised so much judgment and sagacity, for, in consequence of the acuteness of the curve at the Warrington junction, and the tremendous rate at which the train was proceeding—not less than 40 miles an hour—it does not appear that anything could have otherwise prevented the train from being overturned, and a frightful sacrifice of human life ensuing. Meantime the train continued its frightful progress; but the mail guard seated at the end of the train, perceiving that it was going on towards Manchester instead of staying at the junction, signalled to the engine-driver and fireman, but without effect, no notice whatever being taken of the signals. Finding this to be the case, he, at very considerable risk, passed over from carriage to carriage, till he reached the engine, where he found both the prisoners lying drunk, and apparently insensible, from the effects of liquor. They resisted for some time all his efforts to stop the train, and he was unable to bring them to a sense of their duty and their peril until they were near to Patricroft. At length, however, he succeeded in stopping the train just before it reached that station, a distance of 14 miles from Warrington. This again appears to be almost a miraculous circumstance, for at the Patricroft station, on the same line as that on which the mail-train was running, was another train, containing a number of passengers, who thus escaped from the consequences of a dreadful collision. The prisoners were, of course, immediately given into custody, and conveyed to the New Bailey prison, while, other assistance being obtained, the train was taken back again to the Warrington junction. The regulation is, in consequence of the sharp curve at this junction, that the trains shall not run at more than five miles per hour. Hatfield appeared very penitent, and wept bitterly at the danger to life and property of which he had been the cause. Clegg said that he had been out all the previous night with a train, and had not taken his clothes off; that before he started from Liverpool he had taken three glasses of spirits and water, but that he went into the office before the train started, and did not feel any effects from what he had drunk until after the train started, when he supposed it was the keen air, coupled with his having been up all the previous night, which caused him to fall asleep. The magistrates had power to commit the prisoners summarily for two months' hard labour, or to inflict a fine of £10, or to send the prisoners for trial at the sessions, at which they would be liable to a sentence of two years' imprisonment. After some consultation, the bench, appearing to be of opinion that some negligence had been exhibited at the office in Liverpool, or the men would not have been allowed to have left there in such a state of intoxication, decided upon the first alternative, and sentenced both prisoners to two months' hard labour.—Manchester Examiner, Dec. 30th, 1847.

[The above deplorable accident has obtained the special notice of the Committee of the National Temperance Society. The Society is prepared to assist in supplying that or any other Railway Company with servants acting upon temperance principles.—Ed. N. T. C.]

WORSHIP STREET.—A well-dressed man named Richard Mellish, stated to fill a public situation, was charged with committing the following violent and unprovoked assault upon Mr. Samuel Andrews, a brewer and publican at Hackney.

The complainant, whose face was strapped up with adhesive plaster, stated that the prisoner stopped drinking at his house on Saturday evening until a late hour, when, showing no inclination to leave, he was requested to do so, and at last left very reluctantly; a few minutes only had elapsed however, when he again returned to the house, and conducted himself with such offensive indecency, that the witness was compelled to remonstrate with him upon his behaviour; upon which the prisoner, who had refused any apology for his misconduct, struck him such a terrible blow in the face, that his upper lip was cut through against the teeth and completely divided, and his shirt saturated with blood. With a great deal of difficulty the prisoner was at last secured and conveyed to the station, upon reaching which Mr. Garrod, the divisional surgeon, was sent for, who found the wound of such a serious nature, that he was obliged to sew it together, and expressed his opinion that it must have been inflicted with some sharp instrument. No such instrument, however, was found in the possession of the accused, and the prisoner, when called upon for his defence said, that though he must admit the first part of the charge, he had been drinking so freely that he had no distinct recollection of what he was doing at the time, and, if permitted, could produce a number of highly respectable persons who would bear testimony to the strict propriety of his conduct upon all other occasions.

Mr. HAMMILL, however, considered such evidence wholly inapplicable as an answer to the present case, and having severely animadverted upon the prisoner's disgraceful behaviour, sentenced him to pay the highest amount of penalty he could inflict, namely, £5., and in default to be imprisoned for two months in the House of Correction.

The prisoner could not immediately pay the money, and on the arrival of the van he was carried away in it.—Jan. 4th, 1848.

MIDDLESEX SESSIONS.—Margaret Rawley, a respectable-looking woman, was indicted for stealing a piece of beef from a butcher's shop on the 1st of January.

The prisoner was seen to approach the board upon which the beef had been exposed for sale, and to throw her apron over it, and then to carry it away.

Upon the prisoner being asked what she had to advance in reply to the case which had been made out against her,

Two young women stood forward and stated that the prisoner was their mother, and that this act had been committed by her when under the influence of liquor. One of the daughters then went on to say, that the prisoner, with some other women, had received a considerable sum of money as Christmas-boxes, and had been drinking during the whole of the week, and that it must have been in consequence of her not being sober that she had taken the meat.

One of the magistrates on the bench said, that it was through this vice of drinking that at least three parts of the occupants of the prisons of the metropolis were led into the commission of crime. Three-fourths of the persons who were in the prisons owed their deviation from the path of honesty to their having indulged in the abominable vice of drinking.

The jury returned a verdict of Guilty.

The learned JUDGE, in passing sentence, said, it was a lamentable scene the Court had just witnessed. He alluded to the fact of two daughters having come forward to ask the Court to excuse their mother from punishment for the commission of a theft, upon the ground that she had taken the meat when in a state of drunkenness. It was painful to see such a want of all moral propriety, as that children should attempt to justify robbery in a mother upon the plea of her intoxication. As his brother magistrate had stated, more than three-fourths of the persons who were in the metropolitan prisons might be said to have found their way there as the victims of intemperance. The sentence upon the prisoner at the bar was, that she be imprisoned in the House of Correction, Westminster, for three months, and be kept to hard labour.—Jan. 5th, 1848.

LAMBETH.—Serjeant Hoskins, 1 L. reported to the sitting magistrate, Mr. NORTON, that on the preceding evening, between the hours of 6 and 7 o'clock, two little boys, named Edward Hornblower and John Tarrent, were found lying on the pavement in the Lower Marsh in a state of helpless intoxication. They were carried to the Tower-street station, and were found in such a state that it was deemed necessary to send for Mr. Wagstaff, the divisional surgeon. That gentleman promptly attended, and instantly applied the stomach-pump to both the lads, and ejected a quantity of spirits from the stomach. He then directed their immediate removal to the Lambeth workhouse, which was done; and though closely attended all night by a medical gentleman, they still remained in so dangerous a state as to render it unsafe to remove them. Indeed there were some doubts whether they would recover.

The father of one of the boys here said he had been to the workhouse to see the lads, and he had very considerable doubts whether they would recover. The poor man, who seemed much affected, said, that from what could be learned from the little fellows, who were but 12 years of age each, it appeared that a person in the garb of a gentleman had prevailed upon them to drink a whole bottle of gin.

Mr. NORTON observed, that the act was one of a most inhuman description, and desired that the little fellows should not be removed from the workhouse until they were thoroughly recovered.—Jan. 6th, 1848.

ABERDEEN, JANUARY 8TH.—For some time past the conduct of the navvies engaged on the Aberdeen Railway, in the neighbourhood of Stonehaven, has been a source of much anxiety to the peaceable inhabitants of that village, and on Wednesday last there was a serious riot, attended with loss of life.

It appears that the navvies were paid their wages by the contractor of the works, and at midnight began to offer insults to some of the villagers, who were then engaged in celebrating Christmas in the old style. Towards morning, a good many houses were forcibly entered, and soon after it became evident that a premeditated attack was about to be made. The constabulary force was able to hold in check the earlier disturbances, but the Highlandmen, being armed with bludgeons, and perfectly ferocious, every attempt to resist their barbarous onslaught was futile, and the police had to abandon the ground. Houses were now broken into, bakers' and butchers' shops ransacked, spirit cellars in some cases emptied, and one young man was so severely bruised by the blows of a ruffian that he died on Wednesday night; others were more or less bruised, and some of them now lie in a very hopeless condition.

As soon as Mr. Gordon, the sheriff-clerk, was made aware of the riot, he dispatched an express to Aberdeen, which arrived about the same time as an express from Captain Barclay, of Ury, near Stonehaven, for a detachment of the military stationed here, and the Lord Lieutenant of Kincardineshire having stated the necessity of the case personally to the commandant of the dépôt, two companies were immediately dispatched and arrived in time to restore quiet, and apprehend the ringleaders of the riot.

(Continued on page 225.)

A LOVELY TOWN.—In Lewisburg, Pennsylvania, a town lying on the west branch of the Susquehanna, containing 3000 inhabitants there is not a single grog-shop or tavern, where alcoholic liquor is sold.

National Temperance Society.

OFFICE, 11, TOKENHOUSE YARD.

VICE-PRESIDENTS.

The EARL of ARUNDEL and SURREY, M.P.

- | | |
|-----------------------------------|---------------------------|
| R. D. Alexander, Esq. | Rev. Theobald Mathew. |
| J. D. Bassett, Esq. | W. J. Morgan, A.M., M.D. |
| Thomas Beaumont, Esq. | Richard Peek, Esq. |
| C. Bowly, Esq. | Rev. P. Penson, M.A. |
| Samuel Bowly, Esq. | Rev. W. Reid. |
| J. S. Buckingham, Esq. | Rev. W. W. Robinson, M.A. |
| Robert Charleton, Esq. | Rev. J. Sherman. |
| Rev. R. Clowes, M.A. | Rev. C. Stovel. |
| Joseph Eaton, Esq. | Rev. T. Spencer, A.M. |
| J. Forbes, M.D., F.R.S. & C. & C. | Joseph Sturge, Esq. |
| S. C. Hall, Esq., B.L., F.S.A. | Rev. W. H. Turner, M.A. |
| Lawrence Heyworth, Esq. | Edward Thomas, Esq. |
| William Janson, Jun., Esq. | Robert Warner, Esq. |
| Ven. Archdeacon Jeffreys. | Edward Webb, Esq. |
| G. S. Kenrick, Esq. | Rev. J. Wilson. |
| Dr. Lee. | |

TREASURER.

G. W. Alexander, Esq., 40, Lombard Street.

CHAIRMAN OF THE COMMITTEE.

William Cash, Esq., Peckham Rye.

EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE.

- | | |
|-------------------|--------------------|
| G. W. Alexander. | Charles Gilpin. |
| George W. Atwood. | Richard Hicks. |
| Richard Barrett. | C. H. Lovell, M.D. |
| Jabez Burns, D.D. | John Meredith. |
| William Cabell. | W. W. Robinson. |
| William Cash. | T. B. Scutt. |
| John Cassell. | |

SUPERINTENDENT OF MISSION.

John Meredith.

SECRETARY.

(Pro Tem.)
W. Claridge.

COLLECTING AGENTS.

- | | |
|-----------------------|-------------------------|
| Mr. Thomas Whittaker. | Mr. Thomas Hudson. |
| Mr. Jabez Inwards. | Mr. William Culverwell. |

NATIONAL TEMPERANCE SOCIETY.

DR. CARR'S LECTURES.

Three highly interesting and important lectures, on the scientific truths of Temperance, were delivered by the above gentleman, at the Hall of Commerce, on the evenings of the 12th, 13th, and 14th of January. The attendance each night was large and respectable, and the arguments and statements of the talented lecturer were listened to with deep attention, and will doubtless render considerable service to the Temperance cause. We understand it is the intention of Dr. Carr to repeat his course of lectures in different parts of London and the neighbourhood. John Meredith, Esq., presided each evening with his usual ability. At the close of the lectures, much interest was induced by the questions proposed by Mr. T. A. Smith, and Mr. T. Hudson. Votes of thanks were severally proposed and seconded by R. L. Pinching, Esq., surgeon, Mr.

Hudson, Mr. Claridge, and Mr. Culverwell, to Dr. Carr, for his services; to the Chairman, and to E. Moxhay, Esq., for the gratuitous use of the Hall.

TOWN AND COUNTRY AGENCY.

Our agents, Messrs. Whittaker, Hudson, Inwards, and Culverwell, have been actively engaged during the past month in holding highly influential and respectable meetings, both in town and country, and in obtaining subscriptions. We cannot particularize for want of space. During the ensuing month, they intend taking the tour of Dorset and Hants. We respectfully invite all our friends in those localities to co-operate with them, that their mission may be successful.

SUBSCRIPTIONS.

£ s. d.		£ s. d.
Received at Office.
Acton, R. R., Esq.	0 10 6	Selby Society	1 0 0
Albans, St., Society	1 0 0	Cave Society	0 10 0
Smith, Mr., Kent-rd	1 1 0	Howden Society	0 10 0
Davies, Rev. E.	0 5 0	Poole.
Parminter, Mrs.	2 0 0	Binns, W., Esq.	1 0 0
Marsh, J., Esq.	0 10 0	Brown, J., Esq.	0 5 0
Farringdon Street		Gregory, Miss	0 5 0
Society	d 1 0 0	Moor, Mr.	d 0 2 6
Per Mr. Inwards.
Webster, S. Aughton	0 5 0	Vernon, Mr. J.	0 5 0
Rotherham Society	1 0 0	Atkins, Mrs.	0 5 0
Y.	0 3 6	Durant, J. Esq.	0 5 0
Bridport.
Oliver, Mr. D.	0 5 0	Condor, Rev. Mr.	d 0 3 0
Stephens, Mr.	0 5 0	Haymer, Mr. J.	d 0 2 6
Longman, Mr. J.	0 5 0	Penny, R., Esq.	0 5 0
Berry, Mr.	0 5 0	Neeve, Miss	0 5 0
Huddy and Dab-		Whicher, Mrs.	0 5 0
binet	d 0 5 0	Colborne, Mr. J.	0 5 0
Bartlett, Mr. J.	0 5 0	Cecil, Rev. E.	0 5 0
Holmwood, Mrs.	0 5 0	Curtis, Mr.	0 5 0
Goundry, J., Esq.	0 5 0	Per Mr. Culverwell.
Beach, Mr.	0 10 0	Peile, Geo., Esq.	1 1 0
Colefon, W., Esq.	0 5 0	Nicholson, W.S., Esq.	1 1 0
Colefon, Miss	0 5 0	Clark, J. Sen., Esq.	1 1 0
Champ, Miss	0 5 0	Clark, J. Jun., Esq.	1 1 0
Small sums	0 7 0	Masland, W., Esq.	0 10 0
Collection, Bridpt.	0 17 6	Staines Society	d 0 10 0
Trevanian, Mrs.		Seaward, Mr.	0 5 0
Southampton	0 10 0	Denby, Mr.	0 5 0
Southampton Soc.	2 0 0	Munro, R., Esq.	1 1 0
Selby.
Procter, Miss	0 5 0	Bowditch, H., Esq.	1 0 0
Hooper, Mr.	0 2 6	Hanbury, C., Esq.	1 1 0
Richardson, Mr. J.	0 5 0	Seaward, Mrs.	0 5 0
Tennant, Mr. S.	0 5 0	Per Mr. Hudson.
Padman, Mr. J. C.	0 5 0	Bristol.
Twist, Mr. Jos.	0 5 0	Thomas, George,
Morrell, R. Esq.	0 5 0	Esq., S.F.	. 10 0 0
Massey, Miss	0 5 0	Ash, Dr.	. . . 1 0 0
Wade, T., Esq.	0 5 0	Chapman, Rev. E.	1 0 0
Lowther, Mr. G.	0 5 0	Ham, Rev. J. P.	0 10 6
Plunkett, G. A., Esq.	0 5 0	Roper, Rev. H. J.	0 10 0
Goulton, Mr.	0 5 0	James, Rev. W.	0 5 0
Johnson, Mr. R.	0 2 6	Jackson, S. P., Esq.	0 10 0
Ladies' Basket	2 0 0	Gundry, W., Esq.	0 10 0
		Capper, S., Esq.	0 10 0
		Carpenter, Miss	0 5 0
		Butler, W., Esq.	0 5 0
		Cotterill, J. F., Esq.	0 5 0

Hungerford :—Mr. J. Langford in January Chronicle, 5s.—not £5.

INTOXICATING DRINK.

(FROM THE DAILY PRESS.)

(Continued from page 223.)

THE GOLDEN-LANE MURDER.—Harriet Parker, who stands charged with the wilful murder of Robert Henry Blake and Armenia Blake, the two children of Robert H. Blake, with whom she had been two years previously cohabiting, was on Saturday finally examined before Mr. Tyrwhitt, the sitting magistrate, at the Clerkenwell police-court.

The wretched woman when brought into the court walked boldly into the dock, and having coolly surveyed the numerous assemblage in the crowded court, seated herself in the seat provided for her.

The first witness called was Robert Henry Blake, the father of the murdered children, who repeated the evidence he gave at the opening of the inquest on Saturday, the 1st instant, (a full report of which appeared in The Times of Monday last).

Mr. Tyrwhitt, at the conclusion of the evidence, asked the prisoner if she wished to ask any questions of the witness?

The prisoner firmly said—I want to ask him whether he is sure that it was lead tied up in the corner of my handkerchief, as he has stated, when I was following him about as he has described.

Blake.—I am not, but I believe that it was.

Prisoner.—It was not; it was a square piece of tile. That is all I have to ask.

Jane Jones, a genteel-looking young woman, about twenty years of age, was the next witness examined. She repeated the evidence she gave at the adjourned inquest on Monday last.

The prisoner declined putting any question to that witness.

John Hewlett was the third witness. He also repeated the evidence he had given at the inquest on Monday last.

The whole of the witnesses who had been examined in the case having signed their depositions.

Mr. TYRWHITT addressed the prisoner, and informed her that she was at liberty to make any statement she pleased, but it was at the same time his duty to tell her that whatever she might think proper to say would be taken down in writing, and in all probability used against her at her trial.

The prisoner then rose from her seat, and in a firm voice said, "I merely wish to state why I followed Blake. He came home at a quarter before five in the afternoon of the 31st of December, and said to me, 'Make haste and get the tea, and get me some water to wash me, for I'm in a hurry, and have got to meet a girl at the top of Old-street. I'm going to take her to the play.' I then said, 'If that's the case, you may go to her to make your tea, for I won't;' after which he washed himself and went out, and I followed him to the Duke of Bedford, where he said he had to be at the stump or post at fifteen minutes after five. I said, I would follow, and I would see his party; and he said, 'Then come, she will not be ashamed of looking at you; and then we went away, me and him and Hewlett, to the post, where Blake said, 'This stump knows me, and I'll kiss it for the sake of them I'm going to see;' and he did kiss it, and he looked at Hewlett and laughed, and said (pointing to me) 'What do you think of her? She is jealous.' Hewlett laughed, and made some remark, and hoped we should be comfortable. We had previously been in a liquor vault and had some gin. Well, from the stump we came down Goswell-street, where Blake said, 'Hewlett (alluding to me), I can get her monkey up at any time; I'm going to meet a little wench.' He went down Fan-street, and back to the Duke of Bedford, and I lost sight of him up to to-day." (The prisoner here raised her voice, and pointing to Blake and Jones, said)—"Him and that woman there has been the cause of all our misfortunes, and the death of the children lies at their door. Until he became acquainted with her we had plenty, but during the fortnight he knew her, me and the children had nothing to eat but bread and dripping. That is all."

Mr. TYRWHITT then committed her to Newgate for trial.

Previous to her departure she said to Waddington, the gaoler, she wished to be hanged, and hoped she would not be transported. Her firmness astonished every one in court.

NORTHERN CIRCUIT.—LIVERPOOL, December 14th.—The winter assize for the southern division of Lancashire commenced here to-day.

(Before Mr. Justice COLTMAN.)

Thomas Cawley was indicted for the manslaughter of his wife, Eliza Cawley.

It appeared that on the night on which the deceased met with her death, the prisoner, who is a working-man, came home from his work. The deceased, his wife, was very much intoxicated. The prisoner was sober, and complained of her neglect in not having prepared tea for himself and the children. High words, in consequence, took place between them, and one of the neighbours (a Mrs. Rushton) hearing the quarrel, went in to see what was the matter. The prisoner threatened to knock the deceased off her chair. She replied with some taunting language, on which the prisoner went towards her, apparently for the purpose of striking her. He made a blow at her, but Mrs. Rushton interposed, and his hand merely inflicted a slight scratch upon her forehead. He then raised his foot, for the purpose, apparently, of kicking her, but the witness having her face towards him, for the purpose of keeping him off Mrs. Cawley, did not see whether the blow reached her. The deceased, however, instantly screamed out, and fell forward on the sofa. The prisoner immediately lifted her up, and said, "Eliza, have I hurt thee? I would not hurt thee for the world." It was then found she was bleeding copiously from the lower part of her person. Mrs. Rushton desired him to go for a doctor, and he immediately left the house for the purpose. He went to the house of a Mr. Berry, and stated that his wife was very ill; that he had kicked her. On Mr. Berry reaching the house, he found the deceased exhausted from loss of blood. He tried to arrest the bleeding, but the deceased sank and died in a few minutes. There was no external laceration, but a post mortem examination showed that a confused wound had been inflicted internally, rupturing a number of small vessels, the hæmorrhage from which, had caused her death.

The witnesses, on cross examination, stated that the deceased was occasionally intoxicated. The prisoner was usually affectionate and kind to her.

Mr. ATKINSON addressed the jury for the defence, contending that it was not clearly established that the hæmorrhage in this, which the medical men admitted was a most singular case, had arisen from the violence offered by the prisoner at the bar.

Mr. Justice COLTMAN having summed up,

The Jury found the prisoner Guilty, recommending him to mercy.

His LORDSHIP sentenced the prisoner to be imprisoned three calendar months.

(Before Mr. Baron ALDERSON.)

William Bridge was indicted for cutting and wounding his brother, Richard Bridge, with intent to do him some grievous bodily harm.

Mr. Cross conducted the prosecution; the prisoner was not defended by counsel.

It appeared that the prisoner, his brother (the prosecutor), and their father, are colliers, living at Rochdale. On the 7th of December there had been a kind of village festival, called "rush-bearing," at Rochdale, and most of the parties engaged in it had wound up the evening, it would appear, by convivial meetings at public houses, in which more ale was imbibed than prudence would sanction. The prisoner, his brother, and their father were together at the house of a person of the name of Dearden. The prisoner was teasing his father and pulling his hair, on which the prosecutor interfered, and after some high words had been exchanged between them they came to blows. Mr. Dearden, the landlord, interfered, and the prisoner was put out. He remained outside the house until the prosecutor and his father left. When they got out of the house, Dearden being with them, they found the prisoner there, and he kicked over a tub belonging to Dearden, which was standing there, and behaved with so much violence that Dearden, to prevent a collision, took him back into the house until the others should have proceeded some distance on the road. The prisoner, however, on leaving the house went forward to overtake them, and, being about to attack his father, the prosecutor interfered, on which a scuffle took place between them, in the course of which the prosecutor found he was wounded in the side. The wound was in a dangerous place, but had fortunately been given in a slanting direction, and the results were not serious.

The prisoner in the dock seemed exceedingly penitent, and he received an excellent character for kindness of demeanour and quietness in his usual habits when not excited with drink.

When taken into custody he said "I know I've done it. I was not my own person."

The prisoner was found guilty of an assault, and seriously admonished by his Lordship as to the evil consequences arising from habits of intoxication, and sentenced to be imprisoned three calendar months.

William Shewell was indicted for cutting and wounding Jeremiah Pooley, with intent to do him grievous bodily harm.

Mr. Monk conducted the prosecution; the prisoner was defended by Mr. Pollock.

The prisoner, it appeared, when this occurrence took place, was at a public-house at Much Woolton, near the borough of Liverpool. He was much intoxicated, and was finally put out the house. At the door the landlord pushed him, and he fell. On getting up the prosecutor saw something in his hand, and cried out, "He's got a knife." Immediately afterwards he was assailed by the prisoner, and cut in several parts of his body. None of the wounds, however, were dangerous.

HIS LORDSHIP, in summing up, left it to the jury to say with what intent the prisoner had committed the act. Generally, a person must be held to intend that which is the natural consequence of his act, and if his intent was to do grievous bodily harm, the fact of his being intoxicated would not render him less guilty. It might, however, be a question for the jury whether the prisoner might not have been so intoxicated as not to have been able to form any intent of the kind alleged in the indictment, in which case they might be justified in finding him guilty of a common assault.

Verdict, guilty, of an assault.

HIS LORDSHIP, in passing sentence, again commented on the serious consequences arising from intoxication, and sentenced him to be imprisoned six calendar months, recommending that he should be kept in separate confinement. He had no power to make that a term of the sentence, but he was willing that the prisoner should be spared so far as possible the contamination of a gaol.

Home Intelligence.

SAFFRON WALDON.

Twelve months ago, four or five persons at Langley, in Essex, pledged one another to entire abstinence from all intoxicating drinks for six months, one of them being the Baptist minister of the place, who signed to aid in the reformation of another, who was a notorious drunkard, but who, now, thanks to the temperance cause, is a reformed, respectable and worthy man. This act was done in so quiet a way that scarcely any one knew of it but the parties themselves. As weeks passed on, their convictions were gradually strengthened in the correctness of the principle which they had at first sanctioned only by example. The Testotal Times and Chronicle were taken by this little faithful band, and they eagerly read other works on the subject. The six months at length expired; but unwilling to relinquish the good work they had so quietly but resolutely begun, they gradually grew bolder and bolder, till ultimately they determined to become public advocates of the sacred cause. For this purpose they resolved to establish a society in the place, and to invite over from Saffron Waldon one or two friends on an appointed evening, to address a meeting to be convened in the chapel, and thus to set the machinery in motion. Mr. Martin, a Baptist minister, and Mr. J. W. Bitten, the secretary of the Waldon Temperance Society, accordingly went over on Thursday last and addressed a large audience of very attentive hearers in the Baptist chapel, the minister of the place presiding. At the close of the meeting, the esteemed minister (Rev. C. Player) was the first to renew the pledge; he was followed by a dozen others. Thus it is hoped the foundation of a useful society is laid, under whose auspices many an erring brother by the blessing of our Heavenly Father may have great reason to rejoice.

FITZROY TETOTAL ASSOCIATION.

The Annual Christmas Soirée was held on December 27th, in the Society's Hall, Little Portland Street, Marylebone. Two hundred and fifty persons sat down to tea; which bore an animated appearance.

With cheerful face, in bright array,
On that glad festal day,
To Fitzroy Hall,
Did happy numbers throng,
T' enjoy the feast and song;
And gladness pass'd along:
From each to all.

The chair was occupied by the Secretary, who briefly stated the order of the arrangements, and congratulated the company on their numerous assemblage. Messrs. Hodgson, J. Davies, Roberts and Bottle spoke to the following topics.—"Tetotalism and Peace."—"The speedy abrogation of the drinking customs."—"The Young the Hope of the Temperance Reformation."—"The Coming Year,"—may it be to all an active and a happy one. The intervals between were employed in the delivery of recitations, poetry, &c.

J. DRAPER, Hon. Sec.

90, New Street, Birmingham.

January 15th, 1848.

Letter from the Rev. W. WIGHT to the Editor of The National Temperance Chronicle.

DEAR SIR,—We have just had a large meeting for the Model Parish; 3,500 appear to have been present. B. Rotch, Esq., and the Rev. J. Angel James made admirable speeches. They think the project likely to prove an excellent advertisement, and promoter of the Temperance Cause.

BOROUGH OF GREENWICH TEMPERANCE ASSOCIATION.

(FROM FIRST REPORT.)

The Committee report that regular monthly meetings have been held in the Literary Institution, all of which have been numerous and respectably attended; marked attention has been paid to, and great interest manifested in the various addresses which have been delivered.

Your Committee confidently appeal to the character of these meetings as a proof of the growing interest attached to this cause, and believing, that in order to induce co-operation on the part of the public, individuals must be soberly reasoned with and convinced, not coerced or denounced, they have been solicitous to engage the services of those only whose talents, eloquence, and earnestness, could not fail with all right-minded persons to secure at least attention and respect, whilst at the same time they point with a righteous confidence to the blessed results of this system as an irrefragable proof that it is the cause of truth and virtue, and must therefore sooner or later prevail.

In addition to these regular monthly meetings, the Committee have held in the spacious Lecture Hall two special Public Meetings, and on one occasion also they were enabled to secure the services of Henry Vincent, Esq., who delivered a special lecture, characterized by his usual display of oratorical excellence. His powerful appeal in behalf of this cause will not have been forgotten by those who were present on the occasion.

The Committee report that during the year nearly one hundred individuals have become members, (some of whom were in their previous life and conversation a disgrace to their nature and a reproach to a christian people,) and that they are cognisant of but three who have been unfaithful to their pledge.

The Committee cannot close this report without adverting to the cheering signs of the times in reference to this great question, and the many indications that the period is approaching when this movement as an auxiliary to the gospel will be placed among the first in position, as it unquestionably is among the first in importance; they allude to the altered tone observable in the public press, and a willingness evinced to give a place to its claims; they must not omit to notice the stimulus just afforded by the publication of "THE BOTTLE," from the pencil of GEORGE CRUIKSHANK, and which conveys, particularly in the first of the series, a moral which all would do well to ponder on.

The Committee, in conclusion, tender their sincere thanks to those gentlemen who have so readily afforded them gratuitous aid in the public advocacy of this cause, as well as to those friends who have kindly contributed to their funds, conscious, however, that great exertions are needed, and determined as they are, with God's blessing, "not to be weary in well doing," but to "work while it is called to-day," they earnestly appeal to the friends of sobriety and religion to enable them to carry out more effectually the objects for which the society has been instituted, and they trust to receive that support by pecuniary contributions and personal example which the importance of the cause justifies them in soliciting.

"Glory, honour, and peace to every man that worketh good."

(Signed on behalf of the Committee.)

ISAAC ENGLISH, Chairman.

Greenwich, November, 1847.

The Committee of the National Temperance Society beg to acknowledge the receipt of a communication from the Health of Towns Association, and to remark that whilst recognizing the great importance of the sanitary movement, they cannot but believe that the drinking usages of the country are the prime cause, and not the effect of the existing filth and misery which we mutually deplore.

The Committee feel the importance of calling the attention of temperance societies to the subject, and earnestly recommend the adoption of the annexed form of petition. Petitions thus filled up may be forwarded for presentation either to the National Temperance Society's offices, 11, Tokenhouse Yard, Bank, or to the office of the Health of Towns Association, No. 10, Walbrook, City.

Every teetotaler should throw his influence at once into this department of important effort.

To the Right Honourable the Lords Spiritual and Temporal in Parliament assembled. The Petition of the undersigned members of Temperance Society.

HUMBLY SHEWETH,

That your petitioners have had great opportunities, in prosecution of their labours in promoting the temperance cause, of ascertaining the actual physical and moral condition of the people.

That they are convinced that the vitiated atmosphere of over-crowded dwellings and workshops, aggravated by the pestilential exhalations arising from want of drainage and sewerage, and the consequent presence of filth, operates most powerfully against the formation or preservation of temperate habits.

That your petitioners have heard with great satisfaction that it is the intention of Her Majesty's Government to introduce a remedial measure at an early period, after the recess.

Your petitioners therefore entreat your right honourable House to pass an efficient and comprehensive Health of Towns Bill.

And your petitioners will ever pray.

BRAINTREE.

(To the Editors of the Temperance Chronicle and Recorder.)

GENTLEMEN,—The friends of the Temperance cause in this place spent a very agreeable evening together on the 27th ultimo. At five o'clock, about 120 persons sat down to tea in our Secretary's school-room, which was lent for the occasion. After tea, our venerable president, the Rev. T. Craig, being present, delivered a very feeling and earnest address, principally aiming to encourage and fortify the minds of the young. Appropriate addresses were delivered by the Revs. Messrs. Rees and Jones, Mr. Baron Smith, of Halsted, and other friends. About 30 signatures were added, during the evening to the pledge-book.

It is a pleasing fact connected with the Temperance movement, that its indirect influence is powerful, and often felt, when it is not acknowledged; thus at a dinner-party given to the children of one of the Sunday schools in this town, it was determined to allow no beer or other intoxicating drink; thus may the cause go on, till the evil is driven not only from all christian communities, but from all civilized society, and man content himself with such beverage as our first parent enjoyed in Eden in his brightest and happiest days.

I am, Gentlemen, your most obedient,
E. F. QUANT, Secretary.

TEMPERANCE TRIP.

DEAR SIR,—During the last month I visited the following places, all of which are either towns or populous districts, viz., Ruthin, Llandegle, and Llanamnon, in Denbighshire; Flint, Coed-y-flint, Buckley, Leeswood, Brymbo, Pennel Hope, Mold, Kilcain, Rhosesmon, Dyserth, Tarn, and Newmarket, in Flintshire.

The meetings were in general well attended, and the lectures listened to with great eagerness, and seemed to produce powerful effects, and many came forward to sign the pledge, in several places. I also distributed a great many English tracts, kindly sent me by that benevolent gentleman, Mr. Alexander of Ipswich.

Should I be allowed to make a few observations after my late tour, I would beg leave to remark,—

1. That wherever we meet a decided christian character, we meet a friend to the cause of temperance, if not a pledged abstainer, and the most flourishing churches are those which admit temperance meetings into their chapels, and are zealous and faithful with the cause.

We are much grieved to find a large Wesleyan Chapel, near this place, shut against us, although the body of the chapel is constantly used for tea-parties.

2. Those who opposed the cause of temperance twelve or fourteen years ago, have since been sorely lashed by their own children and domestics, through the instrumentality of drink; they now see marks of their former sins on the rod, as Adonibezek of old—(Judges i. 6, 7.)—he was paid in his own coin. They are now brought over, at least, to speak highly of temperance, after paying dearly for their learning!

3. On the other hand, those who have espoused the cause, at its beginning, have been abundantly rewarded in their families. Who were then only children, are now quite grown up, like lovely olive branches—making no use of bad drinks, no tobacco, they look so clear, handsome, and intelligent; and above all, have steadiness of character.

4. We find that the cause of temperance now suffers chiefly from the indifference and the inactivity of its own friends!

No outward opposition can do much harm to such a self-evident good cause.

We can only hope and earnestly pray that the intended great meeting of ministers in Manchester, next April, may be the means of doing much good—to set the matter aright before the public mind.

Ever yours truly,
EVAN DAVIES.

TEMPERANCE MEETING.—A lecture was delivered in the Primitive Methodist Chapel, Market-hill, West Cowes, by Mr. John Williamson, to a highly respectable audience. The chair was taken by the Rev. R. Hartley from Southampton, who, in his usual happy style, addressed the meeting at some length, urging the teetotalers to win those that differed from them by kindness and love; that too often their conduct was calculated to drive intelligent men from their ranks, rather than advance the cause which they had at heart. Mr. Williamson in a very able manner advocated the cause of temperance, following in the path of the chairman, that kindness was the only way to strengthen their cause, and concluded a powerful and soul-stirring address amidst the cheers of all present.—From a Correspondent.

On Tuesday, the 28th ult., the first quarterly meeting of the delegates of the Isle of Wight Temperance Association was held in the Primitive Methodist Chapel, Market-hill, West Cowes. The chair was taken by Mr. Wheeler from Ryde. Some excellent speeches were delivered by the Revs. F. Martin and Calloway, and Mr. Pearce Herbert and others. It was stated that there are two thousand pledged members in the Island.—From a Correspondent.

(To the Editor of the National Temperance Chronicle.)

Sir,—I beg leave to forward you an account of a tea meeting which took place in the British School Room in this town, on the evening of the 11th instant, and which I trust by publicity may stimulate other societies to do likewise.

A few reformed drunkards, assisted by several friends of temperance, distributed ninety-six tickets to the most notorious drunkards in the town. About 200 persons sat down to tea, after which a public meeting was held. Several interesting speeches were delivered, among which an excellent one by Mr. Denton, which seemed to take effect.

Thirty-two persons took the pledge, and many declared their intention to abstain without signing.

It is worthy of notice that all the cases which have been tried by the magistrates in this town for the last two years have been, with but one exception, the result of intemperance.

I beg to remain, yours very respectfully,

WM. WINSFORD.

Ashford, 12th January, 1848.

TENTH ANNIVERSARY OF THE CHATHAM AND BROMPTON TEMPERANCE SOCIETY.

The above-mentioned Society celebrated their tenth anniversary with a tea-festival and public meeting, in the Lecture-room of the Mechanics' Institution at this place, on Friday the 17th Dec., 1847. A highly respectable company, consisting of about 200 persons, partook of the beverage which cheers, but not inebriates. The arrangements for the tea was conducted with great order, and the utmost cheerfulness and harmony prevailed.

The public meeting commenced at half-past six o'clock, over which Benjamin Rotch, Esq., B.L., magistrate for the county of Middlesex, kindly presided. The Secretary read the report, which was of a very encouraging nature. The adoption of the report was moved by the Rev. Richard Hoskin, seconded by the Rev. R. Kinsman, and supported by Messrs. G. Shirley and F. Wheeler of Rochester.

The worthy magistrate then commenced his address, which made a deep impression on the large and respectable assembly.

A vote of thanks to the chairman having been moved and seconded, and the worthy magistrate having replied, which elicited the warm applause of the audience, the meeting broke up about ten o'clock. This may be safely pronounced one of the best meetings we ever had, and I feel no hesitation in saying, that an impetus has been given to the Temperance cause in this locality, which will be felt for some time to come.

Yours very truly,

ROBERT DRAKE, Secretary.

Meville Hospital, Chatham, 22nd Dec., 1847.

Abstract from the Seventh Annual Report of the Directors of the Temperance Provident Institution, and General Life Assurance Society, to the Meeting of Members, held on the 7th January, 1848.

The Directors have again the pleasure of presenting their yearly report of the progress of the Institution. Although the past year has been one of almost unparalleled distress, yet the number of proposals received during the year, ending 31st December, is 325, of which 273 have been accepted, and the policies issued. The total number of policies issued during the seven years, is 2627, the annual premiums on which amount to £10,551. 3s. 6d. The net income from premiums and interest, after deducting for all policies cancelled and in arrear, is £8552. 8s. 10d.

The amount of premiums and interest received during the year ending 20th November, is £9026. 11s. 6d., being an increase of £1795. 6s. 7d. over the expected rate.

The claims on account of death during the financial year have been ten, amounting to £840.; being very far, both in number and amount, below the expected rate.

The total amount of claims during the seven years is £2492.; which is more than covered by the premiums on lapsed policies.

The amount paid during the year for the purchase of policies, and in returns of premiums, pursuant to the rules, is £739. 6s. 8d., and the total amount during the seven years is £2618. 10s. 8d. These liberal returns prevent the capital from accumulating so rapidly as would otherwise be the case; but the liabilities are diminished in the same proportion; while many needy members have been accommodated.

The New Departments have all been commenced, and the Directors have every reason to congratulate the Institution on its increased means of prosperity.

The Glasgow agency, under the active management of Mr. McKenna, bids fair to form an important branch of the Institution. A considerable body of members, mostly engaged in commerce, has already been formed in that city.

ROBERT WARNER, Chairman.

Foreign Intelligence.

BOSTON, UNITED STATES.

THE TEMPERANCE MEETING AT FANEUIL HALL on Thursday evening, was overflowing, spirited, and perfectly orderly. Hundreds, if not thousands, of people went away unable to get into the Hall. The speakers were Rev. Dr. Burns, of the National Temperance Society of England, Rev. E. T. Taylor, and Mr. Gough, of this city. Dr. B. in some eloquent and impressive remarks gave an account of temperance matters in England, and passed a handsome eulogium on our city and country.

Mr. Taylor spoke in his usual peculiar style; remarked on the awful suffering which he had witnessed in Ireland, gave an account of Father Mathew's humility and usefulness, and repeated the fact that more grain was consumed in the distilleries of Ireland than would support all the people of that suffering country.

Our citizens are evidently becoming aroused against the encroachments of Rumocracy. Opposition only nerves them to renewed zeal and effort. It is always thus in a cause of justice and right. It will be remembered that the preceding week, it was necessary to call in a large body of police to put a stop to the riotous proceeding of the rum mob. A little energy and resolution are all that is wanting to sustain the temperance movement in Boston as effectually as it is done in the country towns and villages.

LETTER FROM AMERICA.

Lynn, Massachusetts, October 1st, 1847.

Dear Sir,—First let me say, that even in making my passage home, I had a fine opportunity to see the beneficent workings of Washingtonianism. Our ship,—like all the ships, which sail from the United States, was a Washingtonian ship. If you could have seen how bravely the hardy sailors performed their duty: with what steady foot they mounted the dizzy heights of the ship, or ran out upon the extended yards; and with what cunning hand they set loose, or gathered in the flowing canvass, you would have seen a fact, a "great fact," of our enterprise, worth noting. The brilliant success which of late years has crowned the commercial enterprise of America, is to a great extent owing to the improved character of our seamen, as effected by the operation of the temperance movement. Instead of intoxicating liquors, a superior quality of food has been substituted; so that American ships are noted the world over for being "well found," while before they were more likely to be well foudered.

A few days ago, I attended a Temperance Convention in Norfolk county, where I gave a brief account of my teetotal experience in Great Britain. When I told the people how unpopular our movement was with you, they seemed astonished! And how it happened that the church should be so hostile to it, was quite a mystery. We assembled together in one of the best churches in the town, and at ten o'clock in the morning,—just think of it—every pew was occupied, and by noon some of us had to trespass upon the pulpit. The audience was mostly composed of farmers and their men, (you would say their servants in England), together with their families, there was not a slovenly ill-clad person among them; and yet ten years ago, not a few of the healthiest, happiest, looking people there were in the gutter. I tell you, friend Kenrick, it would have made your heart leap for joy, to look up at that joyous crowd. Their up-lifted faces, beaming with the sunlight of cheerful and contented spirits, seemed to illuminate the room, and fill it with an atmosphere of beauty. The village itself, too (Walpole, Massachusetts), would surprise your soul with the same feeling. You might pace every street, and thread every lane in it, and not meet with half-a-dozen houses in all the place, which did not give evidence of prosperity and peace. If you wanted a glass of grog you would be at a loss to find it; but if you wanted a bountiful board, or a comfortable bed, you would find it beneath almost every roof. The same is true of this good old town of Lynn. Two English friends who were visiting me yesterday, expressed their utter astonishment that, among a population of 10,000, they could not find any poor folks. Nearly every man owns his own house; lives under his own vine and fig-tree, and three out of four of our people are working shoemakers. This is easily explained by the fact, that there is not a dozen houses in the town where you could get a glass of intoxicating liquors.—In fact, the custom of family drinking is abolished among us: and the same is true of nearly every country town in New England. There is still private drinking, of course, but having purged and purified the domestic altar, we have faith that the rest of the work is fast hastening to a blessed consummation.

Mr. Gough is extending his labour into the dominions of Victoria. Who knows but she will give him a pension. H. CLAPP, Jun.

—From the Temperance Gazette.

EFFECTS OF INTEMPERANCE.

BY DR. BEECHER.

The sufferings of animal nature, occasioned by intemperance, are not to be compared with the moral agonies which convulse the soul. It is an immortal being who sins and suffers; and as his earthly house dissolves, he is approaching the Judgment-seat in anticipation of a miserable eternity. He feels his captivity, and, in anguish of spirit, clanks his chain, and cries for help. Conscience thunders, remorse goads, and, as the gulf opens before him, he recoils and trembles, and weeps, and prays, and resolves, and promises, and reforms, and "seeks it yet again!" again resolves, and weeps, and prays, and "seeks it yet again!" Wretched man! he has placed himself in the hands of a giant, who never pities, and never relaxes his iron grasp. He may struggle, but he is in chains. He may cry for release, but it comes not; and lost! lost! may be inscribed on the door-posts of his dwelling.

In the mean time these paroxysms of his dying nature decline, and a fearful apathy, the harbinger of spiritual death, comes on. His resolution fails, and his mental energy, and his vigorous enterprize; and nervous irritation and depression ensue. The social affections lose their fulness and tenderness, and conscience loses its power, and the heart its sensibility, until all that was once lovely and of good report, retires and leaves the wretch, abandoned to the appetites of a ruined animal.

In this deplorable condition, reputation expires, business falters, and becomes perplexed, and temptations to drink multiply, as inclination to do so increases, and the power of resistance declines. And now the vortex roars, and the struggling victim buffets the fiery wave, with feeble stroke, and warning supplication, until despair flashes upon his soul, and with an outcry, that pierces the heavens, he ceases to strive, and disappears.

Poetry.

BACCHANALIANS' PURSUITS.

To mock the flight of time is their employ;
To lull pale conscience with a poisonous joy;
To still the sentinel within the breast,
Whose solemn watchword interrupts its rest.
To mar the noblest powers to man assign'd,
And make a Bedlam of the human mind;
To banish reason from her temperate zone,
And bid reflection abdicate her throne;
To feed the fever of a frenzied brain,
And spurn the remedy with proud disdain;
To suffer bondage, worse than slaves endure,
And walk in chains, themselves have made secure;
To stem the current of domestic peace,
And slay the comforts which they might increase;
To change the peaceful home to that of strife,
And turn to gall the honeycomb of life;
To chill each kindly feeling of the heart,
And snap the cords of sympathy apart;

To stop the ear to each persuasive plea,
And close the eye to all the good they see;
To bar the avenue to every joy,
And with their own consent, their souls destroy:
Thus loose themselves from every tender tie,
Unfit to live, as unprepared to die.
These court disease with fond, enamour'd lips;
These drink forgetfulness with frequent sips;
These quaff oblivion with intense desire,
And quench their spirits with eternal fire.
Thus down the tide of time they heedless roll,
And drown the immortal in a mortal bowl.
But Dives 'woke from his oblivious dream,
Surprise and horror all around him seem.
For lo! in Hell he lifted up his eyes,
And for the cooling draught in anguish cries.
No deleterious drink he now desires,
For his parch'd tongue is scorch'd with endless fires.
Poor man! his cheer and banquetting is o'er,
And he shall quaff the deadly draught no more:
Water, one drop he asks, but asks in vain,
To ease his thirst, and to allay his pain.
No mercy here abus'd can hell procure:
The portion chosen here is there secure.
Water, one drop of water, still he cried;
But what he here despis'd, is there denied.
Alas! the change, the torment and despair—
No sleep, no 'numbing cordial, has he there;
But dire remorse to shun, he vainly tries,
That gnawing worm, which never never dies.
For his immortal mind to vigour grown,
In full maturity resumes the throne.
And wakeful mem'ry brings the past to view,
While long-forgotten actions live anew.
And conscience, with her catalogue of woe,
Whose voice he would not heed while here below,
Now dares to speak and witness to the truth,
For she has known him from his earliest youth;
Was his companion wheresoe'er he went,
Saw all he did, and how his life was spent.
And what an awful tale has she to tell:
But we recoil with pain on such to dwell.
His life was spent in drinking day by day,
Reckless he cast his precious soul away.
Beyond the reach of every mercy gone,
Without a single hope to rest upon.
No gospel now, no Saviour has he there;
But dying groans, remorse, and black despair.
His doom is fix'd: the fiat now is pass'd,
For lo! he is to outer darkness cast.
O drunkards, drunkards! can you read this fact
And not relinquish such a sinful act.
It is no fable we set forth to you,
For what shall be hereafter Jesus knew:
And he relates what we in verse have penn'd,
That you may shun the road to such an end.

CELATA.

A DRUNKEN MOURNER.—On the 8th inst., a woman died of the Typhus fever at Rotherham, in Yorkshire. On the day of interment, the officiating minister had his attention arrested by the strange conduct of the chief mourner (her husband) who reeled to and fro in a strange manner, and had to be supported by a friend on each side. It was supposed to result from weakness; but guess the surprise of the minister when he found the man in a state of intoxication! Previous to his wife's death, he had been a total abstainer. Since that event, he had resorted to his old practice, and drank without interruption. Not content with this, shortly after the funeral, he took poison, and died in a few hours.—From a Correspondent.

IPSWICH JUVENILE TEMPERANCE BOOKS.

	PAGES		PAGES
1. The History of Teetotalism	20	18. What Little Boys can do for Teetotalism ...	12
2. Scriptural Teetotalism	20	19. Little Mary	16
3. Teetotalism of Ancient History	20	20. Lucy Grey and her Pet Pigeon	8
4. Teetotalism of Modern History	20	21. What Little Girls can do for Teetotalism.....	12
5. The cost of Intemperance	20	22. Poor Little Willie	12
6. Self-denial	20	23. The Sixpenny Glass of Wine	12
7. Early Habits	20	24. The Town Meeting ; License or no License...	12
8. The Force of Example	20	25. The Unexplored Island.....	12
9. A Letter to Sunday School Children	20	26. Is I not happy ?	12
10. H. Hawkins, the Drunkard's Daughter	20	27. The Apprentice Lad	20
11. Christian Courtesy and Benevolence	20	28. The Power of Custom	20
12. The Young Chemist's Inquiry	20	29. Biographical Gleanings—Examples	20
13. Little Henry and the Teetotal Festival	20	30. Ditto ditto. —Warnings	20
14. The Young Reasoner's Objections to Teetotalism	20	31. The Guide to Glendalough	12
15. The Fear of Ridicule.....	20	32. Bridget Larkin	12
16. The Teetotalism of Travellers	20	ASSORTED PACKETS.—No. 1, 1 to 16—No. 2, 17 to 32,
17. Temptation Resisted	12	all sold in Sixpenny Packets.

IPSWICH TEMPERANCE TRACTS.

Those Tracts marked with an * have PICTURES and are on better paper, 150 pages, in a sixpenny packet. The others have 168 pages. Seven new Tracts, Nos. 81 to 88, published in 1848.

	PAGES		PAGE
1 The Doctor Scrutinized, by R. D. Alexander, F.L.S., 122 thousand	8	49 Sunday School Teachers, 22 thousand	12
2 Striking Facts, 84 thousand	2	50 Sunday School Children, 40 thousand	12
3 Maker and Vender, 44 thousand	2	*51 Money better than Beer, 37 thousand	4
4 Our Creed, 52 thousand	2	*52 Little Mary ; or a Daughter's Love	8
5 Adulterated Beer, 34 thousand	4	53 Philosophy of Temperance by R. T. Trall, M.D. 20
6 Adulterated Wine, 40 thousand	4	54 Love to Man, or an Appeal to the Pious.....	20
7 The Maltster, 37 thousand	4	*55 The Young Woman's Tract.....	12
8 Go Feel what I have Felt, 53 thousand	2	56 The Young Man's Tract	16
9 Facts are Stubborn Things, 53 thousand	2	57 Dr. Campbell's Testimony, 18 thousand	8
*10 The Spirit Dealer, 35 thousand	2	58 Why Sign the Pledge? 40 thousand	2
11 Christian Teetotalism, 70 thousand	2	59 The Poor Man's House Repaired	4
12 The Trade, 33 thousand	4	60 The Mother's Tract	8
13 Alcohol, 33 thousand	4	61 The High Price of Food	4
14 The Town of Ipswich, 33 thousand	4	62 Ladies' Tract Societies	8
*15 Song of the Water Drinker, 37 thousand	2	63 The Praise of Water, 25 thousand	2
16 Stimulation not Strength, 30 thousand	8	64 Important Calculation, 30 thousand	2
17 Farmer Woodman's Speech, 41 thousand	4	*65 The Farm Servant, 25 thousand	2
*18 The Beer Barrel Examined, 33 thousand	8	66 Teetotalism Declining, 15 thousand	8
19 Teetotal Recipes, 38 thousand	4	*67 The Reformed Drunkard, 20 thousand	8
*20 Speech of J. J. Gurney, 30 thousand	4	68 The Recruit of the British Legion.....	8
21 Pity the Poor Drunkard 49 thousand	2	69 No. 1 of Temperance Anecdotes	12
22 The Fool's Pence, 25 thousand	8	70 No. 2 ditto	12
23 Why am I a Teetotaler? 26 thousand	2	71 No. 3 ditto	12
*24 Dost thou smoke, Bill? 34 thousand	4	72 No. 4 ditto	12
25 William the Laudanum Drinker, 30 thousand	4	73 Luke Husler, or "I did not like to say No.".....	8
26 The Ox Discourse	4	74 The Drunkard's Wife	8
27 Letter to the Clergy, by a Brother Clergyman, 21 thousand	20	75 The Unexplored Island	4
28 Common Sense, 20 thousand	20	76 Ancient Wines ; by R. D. Alexander.....	8
29 Ralph the Soldier	4	77 Influence of Example, 15 thousand	2
30 Testimony of Eminent Physicians, 30 thousand	4	*78 The Victim of Excitement	20
31 The Working Man, 35 thousand	20	*79 My Medical Adviser does not approve of Teetotalism.	4
32 Is I not happy? by Hugh Stowell, 30 thousand	4	*80 The Restoration	8
33 David the Shoemaker, 49 thousand	4	81 The Use of intoxicating Drinks explained, by Archdeacon Jeffreys.....	12
34 The Drunken Couple, 48 thousand	2	82 Drink and be Happy	4
35 Confessions of a drunkard, 29 thousand	2	83 The Five Nips	4
36 Master Tailor, 20 thousand	4	84 The Honest Spirit Dealer's Advertisement	2
37 The Fatal Gift, 36 thousand	2	85 Seven Years' Experience of a reclaimed Drunkard	2
38 Poor Sandy.....	4	*86 The Education of the Drunkard, with five large woodcuts	12
39 Use & abuse, by Archdeacon Jeffreys, 34 thousand	2	*87 A Word with Serious People, by John Bright, M.P.	4
40 The Schoolmaster	4	ASSORTED PACKETS—No. 1, containing 1 to 30.—No. 2, 31 to 53.—No. 3, 54 to 72.—No. 4, 73, and upwards.
41 Water is best, by J. J. Gurney, 37 thousand	8	Fifty Packets of Juvenile Temperance Books or Tracts delivered in London for a Guinea, sent by P. O. Order, to Richard Dykes Alexander, Ipswich.
42 Cobbett's Advice	4	London: Simpkin and Marshall,
43 Take a Public House.....	4
*44 A Sailor's Yarn	4
45 Moderate Drinking Calmly Considered	12
46 The Pledge.....	4
*47 John Jarvis, or the Pledge Signed	12
*48 The Fifteen Friends.. ..	4

LONDON TEMPERANCE TRACTS,

UNDER THE SANCTION OF THE

National Temperance Society.

The above Tracts comprise a variety of 150 different sorts, and embrace every point of the principle of Total Abstinence. Upwards of

THREE MILLION

have already been circulated. 2 pp. 8d.; 4 pp. 1s. 4d., 8 pp. 2s. 8d. per 100., or in packets, assorted, 6d. each.

For the convenience of LOAN CIRCULATION, they are assorted into 60 sets, containing 16 pp. in each; and stitched into a strong wrapper, with a suitable address upon each, price 8s. per 100. Liberal allowance for large quantities. Lists may be obtained of the Publishers gratis.

Houlston & Stoneman, 65, Paternoster Row.

On the 1st of January was Published, price 1d., Post-free,

THE TEMPERANCE GAZETTE,

A MONTHLY JOURNAL OF MORAL AND SOCIAL PROGRESS.

No. 1.—CONTENTS:

'Teetotalism and the Press, by the Editor; Knowledge, by Dr. Bowring, M.P.; Temperance and Navigation, by J. Bateman, LL.D.; Randy Houses; Education; The Reformed Village, by R. Wakelin; Intemperance in America, by H. Clapp; Bianconi, Irish Cars, and Teetotal Drivers; The World as it is, by Viator; On the Diffusion of Temperance Information, by Peter Burne; Progress of Temperance; Father Mathew in Armagh and Waterford, &c. &c.

POETRY.—The Mariner's Hymn, by Mrs. S. A. Wakelin; The Press, by Dr. Bowring; The Bucket v. Bacchus; Varieties, &c.

No. 2 is just published, and contains a great number of highly important and interesting articles by celebrated writers; also Important Statistics of the Parish of Tipton, collected exclusively for this paper; the Reformed Village; The Contrast; Poetry; Progress, &c. Also an important article on the Reformation of Man, by H. Clapp, Esq.; and another, entitled, Strong Drink not Strengthening, by W. Gordon, M.D., F.L.S.

The Temperance Gazette is the largest and cheapest publication of its kind in Europe, and possesses a very extensive circulation throughout the United Kingdom. It contains twenty-four demy octavo pages, is closely printed on good paper, and in clear type, and will be delivered Free at the houses of Subscribers, for 1s. per Annum.

To ADVERTISERS.—TERMS:—Five lines, 2s. 6d., and 2d. for every additional line. Four insertions charged only as Three, and Twelve only as Eight.—Circulation, 10,000.

All Orders and Advertisements must by sent to RICHARD WAKELIN, West Bromwich.

TEMPERANCE PROVIDENT INSTITUTION,

AND

GENERAL LIFE ASSURANCE SOCIETY,

39, MOORGATE STREET, LONDON.

Enrolled under Act of Parliament.

Directors.

ROBERT WARNER, Esq., Chairman.
Rev. W. R. BAKER.	J. T. MITCHELL, Esq.
RICH. BARRETT, Jun. Esq.	J. T. TYLER, Esq.
C. H. LOVELL, Esq., M.D.	EDWARD WEBB, Esq.

Country Directors.

R. DYKES ALEXANDER, Esq.	JOHN ELIOTT, Esq.
SAMUEL BOWLY, Esq.	EDWARD VIVIAN, Esq.
ROBERT CHARLETON, Esq.	RICHARD WALKDEN, Esq.
H. F. COTTEWELL, Esq.	JOHN WASON, Esq.
Solicitor.	Secretary.
CHARLES GATLIFF, Esq.	THEODORE COMPTON.

Bankers.

Messrs. BARCLAY, BEVAN, & Co.

ADVANTAGES OF THIS INSTITUTION.

THE WHOLE PROFITS are divided among the assured. LOWER PREMIUMS than in most Mutual Offices; thus securing an immediate Bonus of £100 to £300 on every £1000 assured.

Every assurer is a Member, and entitled to vote at the Annual Meeting.

The Directors are chosen by the Members.

Members can secure their benefits to their families, or any other persons, FREE OF DUTY, by simply registering the names in the Books of the Society.

Persons abstaining from alcoholic beverages, are assured in a distinct section, free from any possible losses through intemperance.

EXAMPLES OF BENEFITS.

ANNUAL PAYMENTS.

	£	s.	d.
For £100 to be paid on a Child just born attaining the age of 14.....	5	2	6
„ £100. Endowment on coming of Age.....	2	19	0
„ £100. on attaining 50 years of age (age at entrance, 21).....	1	13	4
„ £60. a year for life, commencing at age 60 (age at entrance, 32).....	9	10	0
„ £100. to fall due at age 60, or at death, if the Member die before 60 (age at entrance, 24).....	2	10	3
„ £100. at death, whenever it may occur, (age at entrance, 35).....	2	12	9
„ £100. at death of either Husband or Wife (ages 30 and 24).....	3	5	10

Full Prospectuses and directions will be sent free to any address: apply to THEODORE COMPTON, Sec.

•• The NATIONAL TEMPERANCE CHRONICLE and TEMPERANCE RECORDER is published on the first day of each month, at HOULSTON & STONEMAN, the Depot of the National Temperance Society, 65, Paternoster-row, and will be sent post-free for one year, on receipt of 2s. postage labels. Annual Subscriptions received at the Society's office, 11, Tokenhouse Yard, London, and subscriptions and donations for the general purposes of the Society, by the Treasurer, G. W. ALEXANDER, 40, Lombard Street; by any Member of the Committee, and at the office as above.

London: Printed by RICHARD BARRETT of 3, Regent-terrace, City-road, in the Parish of St. Luke, in the County of Middlesex, Printer; at his Printing Office, No. 13, Mark-lane, in the Parish of Allhallows Staining, in the City of London; and published by JOHN STONEMAN, of 24, Brooksby Street, in the Parish of Islington, in the County of Middlesex, at HOULSTON and STONEMAN'S, No. 65, Paternoster-row, in the Parish of St. Michael-le-Querne, in the City of London, Publishers.—Tuesday, February 1st, 1848.

THE
NATIONAL TEMPERANCE CHRONICLE
 AND
TEMPERANCE RECORDER.

It is good neither to eat flesh, nor to drink wine, nor anything whereby thy brother stumbleth, or is offended, or is made weak.—ROM. XIV. 21

No. 27, JOINT SERIES.]

MARCH, 1848.

[PRICE 1d., STAMPED 2d.]

CONTENTS.

	PAGE	PAGE
Our Cause is Spreading and Deepening—Physiology for the People—Beautiful Extract—Spiritous Liquors—Robert Burns—To his Excellency Earl Clarendon, Lord Lieutenant of Ireland—Relief of the Unemployed.....	233-239
EDITORIAL REMARKS—Conference of Teetotal Ministers—Annual Meeting—Subscriptions	240, 241
HOME INTELLIGENCE.—J. Inwards's Journal—T. Hudson's Journal—Hertford, Watton and Tewin—A. W. Heri-
tage's Journal—Poole Temperance Festival—Borough of Greenwich Temperance Association—Schools—Brockham—Lecture Room for Mr. Buckingham—Drink and Muddled Fury—Brief Notices of Temperance Publications—The Way to Obtain Money		241-245
FOREIGN INTELLIGENCE.—The Pledge; Re-Annexation—To Spirit Selling and Spirit Drinking Christians—Triennial Convention of Free-Will Baptists		245, 246

OUR CAUSE IS SPREADING AND DEEPENING.

It is impossible to contemplate the position of the total abstinence question now, as compared with it a few years ago, without being convinced that its influence is spreading, and its principles taking deeper root, in the minds of our countrymen. It is decidedly gaining ground among religious people, and there never were so many ministers, deacons, and class-leaders united with us as at this time. It is spreading also among medical men in general, and the noble certificate signed by so many hundreds of this highly influential class cannot fail to do good service in our important cause. It is spreading among the higher and literary walks of life. Persons of mental distinction, and of opulent means are enrolling their names among its disciples.

Those who were once much opposed to it, now are more friendly; the newspaper press will admit long paragraphs in favour of the principle, and in giving accounts of meetings held. It is worthy of note, that two of the leading provincial journals of the day, the Leeds Mercury and The Stamford Mercury, are professedly with us on this question. We are happy to find, too, that religious magazines are not now in general, against, but speak kindly both of and for us.

Recently, a congregational temperance society has been formed in connexion with the Barbican Chapel, in the heart of the City; and a few days ago, a highly influential Independent minister, in Coventry, presided over a meeting in his own town, many persons previously concluding that he was not friendly towards us. We have been delighted to hear, too, that the Rev. J. A. James, of Birmingham, has ceased to take wine even medicinally, and has again spoken out with energy and decision on the value of our principle. The following extract from his speech will be read with much satisfaction:—"The Rev. J. A. James, who was loudly cheered, remarked that it was some years since he had advocated the cause in public, and from that circumstance many had considered him an apostate, or at least a deserter. It was not so. It was, perhaps, of more importance to state what his reasons were not, than what they were. He could assure them that he had lost none of that full and deep conviction that he had entertained since he knew anything of their principles, that drunkenness was the monster crime and monster misery of this country; that he had lost nothing of his conviction of its great evil, wide extent, and alarming increase. As Dr. Marsh said, it was a legion of evils in itself, and while he was afflicted at its great prevalence, he was equally so to see the apathy with which the sober portion of the community viewed it. Mr. James then went on to advert to the great increase of what were called gin-shops, but which he designated as poison-shops, and alluded to the remark of Mr. Cadbury, that he did not blame the proprietors of those places. He (Mr. James) differed entirely in opinion with him; and expressed a hope that the time would come when, through the spread of enlightened opinion, every reasonable man would consider whether he could keep in a trade which he (Mr. James) considered demoralizing. He had been a teetotaler for ten years, but a year or two ago, he found a disease coming upon him, and his medical adviser recommended wine. He did not like to break through his teetotalism, and refused; but on a second consultation they advised him to do so as the only means by which his life might be saved, and he consented to take one glass of wine a day for a year. The experiment expired last June, when feeling that a glass a day did not do him any good, he returned to his total abstinence again, and he found he was none the worse, but rather the better for it." Large and influential meetings have recently been held in Dorset and Hants; and in many places those who stood entirely aloof are now labouring on our side, and throwing their patronage into the teetotal scale. In every direction, the clouds and obscurations are passing away, the night is departing and the morning cometh. Yes, surely a better day is dawning on our land—a day when the drinking customs shall become obsolete, and when men who have any respect to conscience, to the word of God, or the lowest principles of humanity, will not make nor traffic in strong drink. Moreover, the good work is going on gloriously among children. The worthy and self-denying and indefatigable Mrs. Carlile is doing much in this department. We are glad to find, too, that Mr. J. Inwards addressed the sabbath-school children at Southampton, and we hope that all the temperance agents will do all they can for the rising generation, and if possible devote some portion of the Lord's-day to this essential sphere of labour. Let the friends of total abstinence give to the Author of all good praise for the past, be increasingly active, and devote all their energies to this great work, and rest assured that in this, as in every other labour of benevolence, they shall reap if they faint not. We have now the experience of many years, and an increasing host of friends, therefore, with the blessing of the Most High, what shall hinder still greater and more abundant success?

PHYSIOLOGY FOR THE PEOPLE.

DEPENDENCE OF LIFE UPON LIQUID.

[From an article in Hovitt's Journal, by Dr. W. B. CARPENTER.]

(Continued from page 220.)

In regard to the uses of alcohol in sustaining the nervous power, we have perhaps scarcely a right to speak with the same confidence on physiological grounds, since the nervous tissue is principally composed of a fatty substance that consists of oxygen, hydrogen, and carbon, alone; and may, therefore, possibly derive nourishment from alcohol. But, as we have already remarked, alcohol is a product of incipient decomposition or decay; and it is, therefore, highly improbable that it serves as the material for the most active and important part of the whole animal mechanism. We know, too, that the nervous tissue may be fully and adequately nourished, and its waste made good, upon other substances which more nearly agree with it in composition; so that alcohol cannot be requisite for this purpose, and cannot be substituted with advantage for solid food. But alcohol, in moderate quantities, generally exerts a peculiar stimulating influence upon the nervous system, which increases its activity for a time, producing a more rapid and brilliant flow of thought, or a greater power of calling forth the muscular energy. But this condition cannot be long maintained. It is altogether forced and unnatural; and it is invariably followed by a depression or temporary diminution in the power of mental and bodily exertion, which is the more prolonged and severe in proportion to the previous excitement. That such must be the case it is easy to comprehend, when we bear in mind that every exercise of nervous power, like that of muscular force, involves the death and decay of a certain amount of the tissue by which it is put forth. Every one is familiar with the feeling of bodily and of mental fatigue; the former results from the state of the muscular system, the latter from that of the nervous; and each indicates the necessity of rest, during which renovation may take place. If, then, the degree of nervous activity be increased for a time under the influence of a stimulus, or its duration be prolonged by such assistance, the amount of nervous tissue that will undergo destruction will be augmented accordingly; and until this has been completely restored, the system cannot recover its wonted powers.

The action of alcoholic or other stimulants may be compared to the influence of the spur upon the horse. The racer is excited by it to put forth his utmost speed, and the jaded roadster is goaded to a temporary improvement of his pace. But the spur gives no strength. It merely excites the animal to put forth all that it can possibly exert. And the greater the exertion made under its excitement, the greater is the subsequent fatigue, and the longer the period of repose needed for the renovation of the worn and wasted machinery, and the consequent recovery of its pristine vigour. Such extraordinary efforts cannot be frequently repeated without deranging the whole order and harmony of the nutritive operations, the perfection of which can only be maintained by the avoidance of excess in every kind of exertion. That in producing such effects alcohol acts, like the spur, as a stimulus, and not like solid food as the material for the support of the strength, appears from the well-known fact, that, where habitually employed, the quantity taken must be increased from time to time in order to produce the same effects. It is this which constitutes the peculiar distinction between these two agents. Of the food which nourishes the body, restores that which has decayed, and thus sustains its powers, the same amount serves at one time as at another, the circumstances being the same. We require more food when we have made more exertion; but we do not require more because we are accustomed to take it daily. Of any stimulus, on the other hand, on which we are dependent for the power of exertion, we require a larger quantity the more frequently we have recourse to it. The country labourer who begins with his half-pint of beer at dinner and supper, finds after a time that it has no longer its wonted effect, and is tempted to increase it; and the London artisan, who has his gin or porter brought to him two or three times a day whilst at his work, seldom continues long on the allowance with which he commenced, but gradually increases it until a large proportion of his earnings are thus wasted. So the more wealthy wine-drinker, who makes a practice of drinking three or four glasses after dinner, seldom stops short at this quantity, (unless restrained by motives of prudence or economy,) but increases it glass by glass, until his allowance is to be reckoned not by glasses but by bottles. The state of depression which is produced by this excess leads to the increase of the craving; and fearful is the number of those who commenced with the idea that a small quantity of some alcoholic liquor would keep up their strength, and who fully intended to restrict themselves to it, (ignorant as they were that they must increase it, if they would look for the same effects from its continued use,) but who have been led on, step by step, to confirmed and almost unredeemable drunkenness.

There is one more physiological inquiry to which it is necessary to advert, in regard to the effects of alcohol upon the animal body;—namely, whether it is not useful as a heat-producing material, enabling us the better to resist the influence of severe cold. At first sight we might imagine that such would be likely to be the case, for since alcohol is so readily combustible out of the body, it might be supposed to be easily burned off within it. Experiments upon the respiratory process, after taking alcohol, however, give a very different result; for it is certain that when this fluid is received into the blood, the combustion process goes on less actively instead of more energetically; the amount of carbonic acid exhaled being decidedly diminished. The fact appears to be, that so long as the alcohol is present, and is itself undergoing combustion by union with the oxygen of the air, it impedes the changes which ought to be taking place in other substances; just as the decomposition of animal bodies is in great degree prevented by immersing them in spirits. After the alcohol has been all burned off, the quantity of carbonic acid exhaled undergoes a large increase, rising for a time above the average—a proof that matter had accumulated in the blood, which ought to have been got rid of by the process of respiration. We know that the most extreme cold is sustained by the Esquimaux and other inhabitants of the frigid zone, without the assistance of alcohol; the large quantity of oily matter in their food being a much more effectual heat-producing material. And the testimony of many Europeans who have tried the abstinence system under similar circumstances, shows the decided inferiority of alcohol to other articles of combustion-food in every respect save the temporary feeling of warmth which it gives to the mouth, throat, and stomach; and this feeling is very deceptive, for it does not last long, nor does it extend to the limbs. It is only when the body has been drained of its whole store of combustible material by some exhausting disease, and when the stomach cannot digest solid food of any kind, that alcohol can be really preferable to other substances as fuel for maintaining the heat of the body, on account of the readiness with which it is taken into the circulation through the blood-vessels distributed on the walls of the stomach.

We find, then, that the ordinary notions—that the habitual use of alcohol sustains the muscular strength,—that it keeps up the nervous energy—and that it helps to maintain the heat of the body—are all of them unsupported by physiological science. There are two other grounds on which it is sometimes justified, to which it is requisite that reference should be made. It has been imagined that when exertion is called for in a high temperature, the aid of alcohol is especially necessary to support the system under its excessive loss by perspiration. Now it is a complete fallacy to suppose that copious perspiration in itself really weakens the system. It is nothing more than the exhalation of an increased quantity of watery fluid; and this drain is to be made good, in the animal as in the plant, by the absorption of an additional supply into the system. There cannot be a greater absurdity than to imagine that, because water is drawn off from the blood through the pores of the skin, alcohol must be taken into the stomach to replace it. The fact seems to be, that the peculiar fatigue resulting from muscular exertion in a high temperature is set down as a consequence of the excessive perspiration; and thus the temporary increase of power which is derived from the use of alcoholic stimulus is supposed to result from the repair of this loss. But the fact is, that perspiration, however abundant, has in itself no weakening effect; as is proved by the fact that if persons exposed to a very high temperature make no bodily exertion, they feel no loss except such as is restored by copious draughts of water. This system, indeed, has frequently a remarkably invigorating effect. All travellers who have tried the Russian baths speak of the feelings of renovation which the copious perspiration, and the subsequent plunge into cold water, produce in the wearied frame. And those who have given a fair trial to the Hydropathic treatment, in appropriate cases, are unanimous in the same testimony. I have myself known cases in which delicate females remained for half an hour or more in a room heated by a stove to a temperature of from 140 to 170 degrees, until their wrappings were saturated by copious perspiration, the material for which was supplied by the water which they drank from time to time; the cold plunge which immediately succeeded having an invigorating influence which was often quite extraordinary, and the whole treatment having quite the opposite of an exhausting effect. It is only when muscular exertion is called for in a high temperature, that exhaustion follows; and this is not a result of the loss of fluid by perspiration, but of other causes. We feel the same exhaustion when we are called upon to make exertion on a damp day, in which the fluid exhaled from the skin is not carried off from the surface, but accumulates upon it in drops, though there may be no great increase in its amount; and precisely the same feeling has arisen from the foolish attempt to wear waterproof garments made after the fashion of ordinary clothes, so as not merely to keep out the rain, but to keep in the perspiration. Let it be remembered that the exhalation of fluid from the skin is in every respect a salutary process: that it is the great means by which the temperature of the body is kept down to its proper standard; that the small quantity of solid matter which the perspiration contains is not increased by the increase in its fluid portion, so that, however copious it may be, it cannot draw from the body any of its solid constituents; and that all which is lost by perspiration may be repaired by water, and that alcohol cannot restore it. With regard to the copious perspirations which are often seen in disease, it will be enough to say that they are frequently of most salutary character, assisting to remove from the blood some noxious matter which is the cause of the malady; and that where they are connected with a very exhausted state of the system, they are by no means to be regarded as the cause of the exhaustion, but rather as the sign of it.

The other notion to which we must refer is this,—that the habitual use of a small quantity of alcohol gives important aid in the digestion of the food. Here, again, the temporary benefit, which is unquestionably derived in many instances from the practice, is apt to blind us to its remoter consequences. The human digestive apparatus is so constituted, that, in the state of health, it no more requires the artificial aid of stimulants to do its work, than does that of the lower animals, to which such aids are unknown. The quantity which the stomach can digest, varies according to the demand for it in the system. When more is taken into the stomach than the system requires, it remains undigested for a time; and this gives a feeling of uneasiness and oppression, which a glass or two of wine or beer will often remove. But how does it effect this? By stimulating the stomach to increased exertion in the digestion of that of which the system has no need. And what is the consequence? This habitual overtasking of the stomach,—this system of giving it more work to do than it is made for performing, and then spurring it on by stimulants until it has accomplished its task,—is sure to be followed (though the evil day may be long deferred) by a failure of its powers; and so far from being capable of any extra labour, it loses its power of digesting that amount of food which the body really requires. If, then, the stimulus of alcohol be required to force the stomach to undue exertion of its digestive power, the obvious method of restoring a natural state of things is to abandon the superfluity of food, and to take only that which the system requires, and which the stomach is able to prepare for it.

But there is another state in which the same excuse is made, but for which the remedy is different. There are many persons who find themselves unable to digest what they really require, without an alcoholic stimulant; and to whom it appears to be a necessary of life. But what is the real fact in almost all such cases? There either is or has been some gross error in the general management of the health, which weakens the natural powers of the stomach; and it is to the correction of this error, rather than to the spurring of stimulants, that we must look for their restoration. One man leads too sedentary a life, and scarcely knows the invigorating influence of air and exercise. Another is habitually over-fatigued by an amount of bodily labour which his frame is not adapted to bear; and his state of exhaustion prevents the due performance of the digestive function. Another leads a life of continual nervous excitement; and it is not surprising that if his brain is overworked, his stomach should not be able to do its duty. Another keeps late hours; and depriving nature of her necessary repose, is angry with her for not supplying him with the power of digesting a hearty breakfast, the best preparation for the labours of the day. And another, inhabiting close and heated rooms, pervaded (it may be) with the effluvia of some neighbouring cesspool, finds himself unable to eat until he has awakened his torpid stomach by a dram. Now in all these cases, the habitual use of alcohol is positively injurious, in two ways. It has all the bad effects of a stimulus upon the stomach itself; weakening its power of future exertion, by tasking it beyond its present strength. And the temporary benefit derived from it draws away the attention from the real source of the evil, which thus continues to act unchecked, and perhaps with increasing power. For it is certainly one of the effects of the habitual use of alcohol, in large quantities at least, that it deadens all the perceptions, and thus renders a man careless of what he would otherwise feel most obnoxious. The only cases in which, medically speaking, the use of alcohol can be justified on account of the aid which it affords to the digestive process, are those in which some extraordinary and temporary depressing cause is in operation, which cannot be removed, and against which it is of great importance to sustain the powers of the system. But such cases fall within the province of the physician and surgeon; our present concern is with the means of preserving health under all ordinary circumstances.

Of the results of experience on this question, a brief summary must here suffice; since our chief object has been to examine its scientific bearings. But it would be wrong to close this inquiry without pointing out how completely practice here coincides with theory. It would not be fair to take a few cases of isolated individuals who have thriven upon the abstinence system and to hold them up as examples of what that system will produce. But the great test is when large bodies of men are concerned, and where fair comparisons can be made between those of different habits under the same circumstances. Such evidence is now most abundantly afforded by the numerous ships that are traversing every part of the wide ocean, whose crews, pledged to the total abstinence principle, maintain a degree of health and vigour which cannot be surpassed; by the many workshops of every kind, in which the severest labour is endured with a constancy to which that of the drinkers of alcoholic beverages cannot be compared; by the troops executing toilsome marches in the sultry heat of the torrid zone, who find the "cup of cold water" more refreshing and sustaining than the spirituous drinks which hurry so many of their comrades to an early grave; and by numbers of men and women in every rank of life, in every variety of condition, and subjected to every kind of mental and bodily exertion, who have given the principle of habitual abstinence a fair trial, and have borne their willing testimony to its beneficial results. It is presumptuous for individuals to object to such testimony,—“the little I take does me no harm;” for, in the first place, all experience shows that the “little,” taken habitually, almost invariably becomes more, and that the evil consequences manifest themselves remotely (as in so many other of our pleasant vices) whilst the supposed beneficial effects are felt immediately. It is only from the experience of the masses that we can form a right judgment on any such question; and whilst the record of our jails and workhouses show that at least four-fifths of the crime and poverty with which our country is burthened have their origin in intemperance, it becomes every right minded man to examine for himself, whether he is justified in doing any thing that can place a stumbling-block in the way of those who would rid the world of this horrible slavery. We may not all agree that alcohol is a poison, which can never, under any circumstances, be useful to the human body; but I am confident, that the more the question is examined, the more clear it will become that its habitual use can be justified neither upon scientific grounds nor by the teachings of experience.

BEAUTIFUL EXTRACT.

The following is from Dr. Beman's sermon:—
 “The almost heavenly vision is before us, it will soon open upon us in all its beauty. The revolution has begun, and the law, and the Bible, and good men are with us. And who can doubt that between all the conflicts of passion and of interest, law and order will finally prevail? The work of purification from the giant vice of our world, is going on: and it will be rendered perfect under God, by the simple principle of total abstinence from every thing that can produce intoxication. This pledge is the bow of promise to this nation and the world. It spans the heavens in a bold and brilliant arch; and while it tells us that the raging and protracted storm has not yet gone by, it prophesies the morrow will dawn upon us, a better and a brighter day. As it was with the bow, to which the patriarch of the new world was directed by the finger of God, so it is with this; its beauty and magnificence are the result of heaven's clear light shining on pure water. It is the rainbow of another covenant. * * * That curse which has for ages scorched and withered the nations shall be repealed. That curse beneath the crushing weight of which the earth has groaned, and man died, and widows poured out their streaming tears, and hopeless orphans lifted up their piteous cries, over which every pious and philanthropic heart has bled and still bleeds—shall be chased away from the abodes of men; and be seen no more on the face of the earth. In one word, that curse which has robbed earth and peopled hell, shall be no more. A race of men shall then stand up in our place.”

The New York Tribune has the following poser. A poor fellow was yesterday brought before one of the police justices, charged with the crime of being intoxicated. The justice interrogated him:—
 “Well, what do you get drunk and come here in this condition for?”
 “See here,” was the reply, uttered with the hiccup and accentuation of drunken men, “what do you give licenses for?”

SPIRITUOUS LIQUORS.

Extracted by M. BONQUIE LEFEBVRE, from a Dutch Work, by DUYDECOOPER, and translated from the September Journal of la Société de la Morale Chrétienne, by MR. SCUTT.

(Continued from p. 212.)

It has also been ascertained, that the most laborious work can be better executed without the workmen resorting to strong drinks. Thus in the State of Massachusetts, a mad house has been built, 1,100,000 bricks were used in the building, no accident has taken place there, no workman was sick, and yet no spirituous liquor was given.

In Germany we have observed, that the mortality of men below thirty years is much greater than that among women of the same age; because to thirty years the women have not yet drunk strong drink, on the contrary, the greater part of young men have drunk freely.

The drunkenness of fathers also affects their children, and its influence threatens the generation which succeeds ours. That feeble generation, whose growth appears to be shortened, which has neither bloom nor strength, pale, struggling from its infancy with many infirmities, a sickly complexion, and from whom intelligence appears to be fled, evidently marks the race of drinkers. Medical men have in this respect made some remarkable observations. Out of ninety-seven children of drinkers, Dr. Lippiels has only selected fourteen without known diseases. Among the children of those who live with sobriety and abstain from strong drinks, the mortality is less, they enjoy generally a better health, and attain a more advanced age. That is proved by the example of the Quakers in England, and in the United States.

Therefore take this liquor to burn, and when you see ascend the blue flame which that combustion produces, ask yourself, if so quick a fire would not corrode the inside of your body. Learn in seeing your fruits preserved in brandy, but hard and condensed, how hurtful such spirit is to digestion; throw this corrosive poison upon the green grass, and three or four days afterwards you will see it dried up. Ask yourself, therefore, if that which destroys even to the root of the herb, would not also burn your inside; these are experiments which any one may repeat; and he who will not be convinced of the injury which strong drinks occasion to health, may consider himself inaccessible to truth.

In conclusion, I cannot present a complete picture of the important results derived from the abolition of strong drinks. But it has been observed that in the United States, there is an improvement in the manners of the people, and greater piety; offences are less numerous, there are not so many divorces, prosperity is in progress, churches are more frequented. Often presents are made to the poor, by wives and grateful mothers, and by tipplers returned to sobriety. In 1829, the Presbyterian Synod, which represents more than 2000 communicants, considering the salutary influence which the Temperance Society exercised over the moral and religious feeling of the people, determined to appoint the 4th day of January as a festival, in the State of New York, to thank God for the blessings he had shed upon that Society. The two houses of the legislative assembly were united, and suspended their sitting to assist at the ceremony. These thanks are offered every year, and in order to give them a national character, they have joined the fete commemorative of their deliverance from the English yoke, with that of their deliverance from the slavery of strong drinks. In the other States they have the same feeling, and have appointed 22nd February, the anniversary of the birth of Washington, the saviour of the country.

This example was followed in Germany, and among other places at Osnabruck, 23rd March, 1841. The feast was celebrated by the Catholics at the Cathedral, and by the Protestants at St. Mary's Church, and again by both of them at the Hotel de Ville. The Bishop officiated, he preached a sermon against intemperance, and a Te Deum was chanted. Every year similar ceremonies take place.

In fact, in no part of the continent has the temperance cause been so successful as at Hanover. Osnabruck is the great focus where the work of abolition is carried out. The governing power by resolutions, and the highest dignitaries of the church by exhortations, unite in order to convince the nation of the benefit of abolition. It is at Hanover, where the worthy Bottcher labours; his work, The Domestic Plague, has reached the 22nd edition. It is impossible to say, how many millions of copies have been circulated through Germany. The King of Hanover and the King of Prussia, have ordered a reprint, and distribution throughout their realms. It is in Hanover, also, that the Chaplain Seling travels from village to village; he is called the second Mathew. His canticles on temperance, are become popular songs. He does more, he frequents schools, where he preaches his principles. He has appointed among the pupils, a legion of honour, divided into companies of which each has its captains and its colours, upon which are inscribed maxims of temperance.

The result of these measures, has been a considerable diminution in the produce of the tax upon strong drinks. This produce in Hanover, reached in 1838, to 551,038 thalers, it was reduced in 1843, to 392,080 thalers, which makes a diminution of 158,958 thalers; that is to say, nearly three-tenths of the revenue, and this has given the greatest satisfaction to the king, who is the most zealous partisan for the suppression of spirituous liquors.

It was not until 1844, that the abolition was introduced into Saxony; the clergy lead the way. The happy thought suggested itself to choose Lent, and they ordered, during that period, abstinence from strong drinks. The salutary effects were discovered, and it was then that the Societies originated. They spread with such success, that in the first month 30,000 persons were enrolled. Now we reckon in Saxony 100,000 members of the Temperance Society.

In Switzerland, the usage of strong drinks has in some degree given way to the sale of the wines of the country, and the industrious employ themselves almost generally in preparing such wines under different names. There is now in the canton of Berne, 1000 shops shut up.

We quote also Norway, and among other places, the town of Laurwig. Since the 1st January last, all the retail sale of spirituous liquors has entirely ceased in that town; and in the environs, and also since that event there has not been, although the population is more than 8000 souls any quarrels or disorder in the streets. No outrage has been committed, and the number of robberies has been less than that of preceding years. The workmen have become much more assiduous at their work, and the deposits at the savings' banks, have increased considerably.

Such is an extract from an official report, addressed by the bailiff of Laurwig, to the government.

At Hamburg, there are instructors specially appointed, whose duty it is to teach temperance at schools, and above all, to recommend the principles by their example.

Let us not forget also, that in many countries of the United States of America, there are young sailors who have adopted the principle of entire abstinence from spirituous liquors, and 70,000 have signed the pledge.

In England, a respectable Middlesex magistrate has proved, that prisoners who were previously hardened offenders, have also signed the pledge not to drink strong drinks, have kept it, and from that moment their conduct was entirely changed.

The change of manners in Ireland, since the spread of temperance is very remarkable. Father Mathew has been the great promoter in England and Ireland, of Societies for the abolition of strong drinks. O'Connell is associated to them, and the accounts which we have received now from that country, where during the first twenty-five years of this century, crimes had made the most frightful progress, are very satisfactory. At Cork for example, the falling off of murders has been in the following proportion: in 1839, 286; in 1840, 159; in 1841, 120. Now prisons which were filled, hardly contain any inmates. Courts of justice have been referred to before whom not a single cause has been set down for trial during the session.

In Russia, the government feared from political considerations, to allow the adoption of abolition. But at last it has felt the necessity of giving way to public opinion, and is making concessions. An imperial decree has issued, which contains severe restraints against the manufacture and sale of spirituous liquors. That decree limits the time during which distilleries can work, and the quantities they can deliver out, it has also greatly reduced the number of sellers, determining that they shall not exist, but in the proportion of one for 500 inhabitants.

Finally, it is delightful to see the Emperor of Russia take our cause seriously to heart, the Kings of Prussia, Hanover, and Sweden, sustain the societies for abolition, and the Queen of England extend to them her protection. We have noticed that frequently efforts are impotent, if the ruling power does not materially assist them. In fact, it is necessary to subject strong drinks to higher duties, limit the number of sellers, and grant but very seldom, and on the most vigorous conditions, the permission to build distilleries. Government ought to forbid the use of strong drinks to workmen in public works, prohibit their introduction at auctions and sales, and entirely suppress them when furnishing provisions for the troops by land and sea. The sale ought also to be forbidden to individuals who are notorious drunkards. In some countries their names are entered upon a list drawn up by the police, and posted up in taverns; and there also workmen who become drunk are suspended from their duties. The penal code ought to contain resolutions against this vice.

It is especially necessary to take these measures in the army. What dangers do strong drinks offer to soldiers, who carry arms for the maintenance of the laws and of order! How many offences are committed by soldiers in drunkenness, and how many young men there are, who, having contracted this fatal habit in the service, cannot shake it off for the rest of their life, and are made miserable!

There are some German States, where they proclaim, among the orders of the day, the strict repression of drunkenness, and it is ordered, that no soldier shall be allowed to enter the regiment until he have a satisfactory certificate of good conduct.

In fact, it has been proved that, in the regiments where strong drinks have been forbidden, discipline is so improved, that it has been ascertained that there are less punishments in one week, than there were previously in one day.

Let us unite, then our efforts, and the work commenced with the aid of the Most High will be blessed by him.

ROBERT BURNS.

The unfortunate Burns at one time complained that those with whom he associated were not satisfied with his conversation, luxurious as it must have been, unless he gave them also a slice of his constitution. He must be condemned as unwisely lavish, who cuts up his vital principle for the entertainment of his friends; on the other hand, a person may be thought by some too grudgingly parsimonious of his fund of health, who would not lay out a little of it upon extraordinary occasions, in solemnizing, according to the usual form, the rites of hospitality, in heightening the warmth of sympathy, or in promoting the vivacity of convivial intercourse. But that man's heart, it must be acknowledged, is of little value, which will not beat full and strong upon an empty stomach. An after dinner kind of friendship, the expression of which acquires new ardour at every fresh filling of the glass, must be expected to evaporate with the fumes of the liquor which inspired it. The tide of liberal sentiment retires, in such cases, as soon as the animal spirits begin to ebb. The heat produced by alcohol ought not to be mistaken for the glow of virtue. He whose pitch of generosity or goodness is regulated by the state of his circulation, is entitled to little confidence or respect, in any of the important connections or social intercourses of life. The steadiness of a sober and substantial benevolence, is to be compared, only by way of contrast, to the precarious vicissitudes of that person's temper, with whom kindness is not a healthy habit, but a feverish paroxysm; and who, although constitutionally, or in the ordinary course of his life, sensual or selfish, may be occasionally wrought up by factitious means, to the elevation of a jovial and fugitive philanthropy.

TO HIS EXCELLENCY EARL CLARENDON, LORD LIEUTENANT OF IRELAND.

MY LORD,—I will not waste time in apologizing for this intrusion on your Excellency's time, because I feel assured that my motive will be, to your enlightened and benevolent mind, my sufficient excuse.

I believe you are anxious to ameliorate the present forlorn condition of the people of Ireland. I think I have it in my power to suggest a few ideas which may enable your Excellency to carry forward your benevolent designs.

In the remarks you made at the Lord Mayor's dinner on the 12th instant, the following astounding fact is given to the country:—"In order to supply the deficiencies occasioned by the visitations of Providence, we imported corn at the cost of the importer alone, without taking into account the consumer at all, and the amount was equal to thirty-three millions sterling."

Say not, my Lord, that we had to resort to this immense importation of food because of any visitation from the Almighty depriving us of a sufficient quantity of corn for the supply of all our wants. For, although our potato crop was destroyed, the bounties of Providence were yet abundant and overflowing.

In a word, my Lord, we consumed more grain in our breweries and distilleries, during the last two years of famine, in the production of articles which thirteen hundred physicians in the United Kingdom have recently declared to be injurious to the "health, the happiness, and the morality" of the people, than would have sustained all who were in want, in health and vigour, and if this waste of food had not been committed, the enormous absorption of capital referred to by your Excellency would not have been required.

This waste, my Lord, is still going on.

I pray your Excellency to aid the teetotalers of these lands in their efforts to put a stop to this drain now, and for ever. You can aid us effectually. It is fashion which makes the drinking customs of society respectable. Make these pernicious customs unfashionable by your example and precept, and you will, my Lord, do a great service to the cause of morality and virtue; you will also help to place plenty within the reach of the poor man, by discouraging the destruction of food in the land: this destruction amounts annually to about sixty millions of bushels. A fearful waste this, my Lord, for us to contemplate, while the people are famishing with hunger.

Next to your own personal example, which I entreat your Excellency to give us, I would respectfully suggest the propriety of calling on government to decline raising any revenue from intoxicating drinks, on the ground that it would be as lawful in the sight of God, and as beneficial to the people of these kingdoms, to have our institutions sustained by taxes derived from all the crimes which exist amongst us, as from a tax raised from those drinks which are, in the estimation of the judges and magistrates, and physicians of the land, the great promoters of the crimes, and the miseries and the sorrows which afflict our people.

I appeal to your Excellency, and I ask you, Is it right? Is it wise? Is it expedient for our rulers to sustain our institutions by the produce of taxation which is cast into the Exchequer by the vices of the people?

If government were to relinquish all revenue from intoxicating drinks, on the ground that these drinks flooded the land with poverty and woe, the manufacture and use of such destroyers of human happiness would become disreputable, and their use unfashionable; peace and plenty would flow in upon us in a perennial stream, and the business of legislation would be freed from more than half its cares.

I entreat your Excellency to take these suggestions into your consideration, and I beg of you to pardon me for thus obtruding them on your notice.

I subscribe myself, my Lord,

Most respectfully yours,

JAMES HAUGHTON.

35, Eccles Street, Dublin, 14th January, 1848.

RELIEF OF THE UNEMPLOYED.

(To the Editor of the Kilmarnock Herald.)

SIR,—Owing to the lateness of the hour at which my lecture, and the observations that followed it, were concluded on Friday, I had not time to make a recommendation which I now venture to do through your columns.

I heard with great regret of the large number of weavers, cotton-printers, and others out of employ in Kilmarnock, and of the difficulty of raising funds for their relief. I venture to propose a plan for this purpose, which will greatly benefit them, and neither do injury to, or lessen the means of others.

From my observation of the habits and manners of Kilmarnock, I think it probable that it does not consume less of whiskey or ardent spirits than the average rate of Scotland, which is two gallons per head per annum, for man, woman, and child; though in Ireland it is only one gallon, and in England, two-thirds of a gallon per head of the whole population. The reason of this great difference is, that in England and Ireland, none but the lower orders drink ardent spirits, even when diluted with water, while in Scotland, nearly all the upper and middle classes consume it freely, in warm toddy twice a day, after dinner and supper, to say nothing of other uses made of it.

What I venture to propose therefore is, that the upper and middle classes of Kilmarnock should simply leave off drinking this whiskey, so long as a large body of their poorer neighbours are wanting food, clothing, and fuel; and calculating the money they will save by this, which in most families would be at the least twenty shillings a month, let them devote this sum so saved to assist the unemployed, on condition, of course, that the unemployed themselves also give up the use of whiskey or ardent spirits; for it would be certainly monstrous, that while subsisting on the charity of others, they should waste any part of the money given them in so useless and even pernicious a drink.

Let the ministers of religion and the leading manufacturers of Kilmarnock begin by setting the example; for to them the workmen naturally look as their best friends and protectors; and I cannot suppose they would decline doing so: for as by this means they could help their poorer neighbours without impoverishing themselves, I cannot suppose it possible that they would refuse, since self-denial for the good of others is one of the clearest Christian virtues; and if a man or woman had not sufficient bowels of compassion for their suffering fellow-creatures, to give up the small gratification of drinking hot whiskey and water for a short period in order to save them from starving, truly might we say with the apostle, "how dwelleth the love of God in them?"

To prove that I am not asking others to do what I am unwilling to do myself, I may mention that when in Dundee, I gave a guinea (being the supposed amount of my saving from not drinking either wine, beer, or spirits during my stay there) to support the Ragged Schools, and induced some others to do the same. At Paisley I gave the same amount, for the same reason, towards the fund for the unemployed; and before I left Kilmarnock, I gave to the Secretary of the Philosophical Institution, per Mr. Crooks, a guinea also, (being about the estimated amount of my saving from not drinking wine, beer, or spirits, while delivering my lectures there) to help the unemployed of Kilmarnock.

If all the families of the town, therefore, whom Providence has blessed with the means of subsistence, would only do the same, a hundred pounds per week might easily be raised for the unemployed, without making any family the poorer or the less happy; they would be saving many from want by a contribution which they would not feel the loss of; and their charity would be approved in heaven.—I am, Sir, your obedient servant,

J. S. BUCKINGHAM.

Carlisle, February 7th, 1848.

National Temperance Society.

OFFICE, 11, TOKENHOUSE YARD.

VICE-PRESIDENTS.

The EARL of ARUNDEL and SURREY, M.P.

R. D. Alexander, Esq.
 J. D. Bassett, Esq.
 Thomas Beaumont, Esq.
 C. Bowly, Esq.
 Samuel Bowly, Esq.
 J. S. Buckingham, Esq.
 Robert Charleton, Esq.
 Rev. R. Clowes, M.A.
 Joseph Eaton, Esq.
 J. Forbes, M.D., F.R.S. & C. & C.
 S. C. Hall, Esq., B.L., F.S.A.
 Lawrence Heyworth, Esq.
 William Janson, Jun., Esq.
 Ven. Archdeacon Jeffreys.
 G. S. Kenrick, Esq.
 John Lee, LL.D.

Rev. Theobald Mathew.
 W. J. Morgan, A.M., M.D.
 Richard Peek, Esq.
 Rev. P. Penson, M.A.
 Rev. W. Reid.
 Rev. W. W. Robinson, M.A.
 Rev. J. Sherman.
 Rev. C. Stovel.
 Rev. T. Spencer, A.M.
 Joseph Sturge, Esq.
 Rev. W. H. Turner, M.A.
 Edward Thomas, Esq.
 Robert Warner, Esq.
 Edward Webb, Esq.
 Rev. J. Wilson.

TREASURER.

G. W. Alexander, Esq., 40, Lombard Street.

CHAIRMAN OF THE COMMITTEE.

William Cash, Esq., Peckham Rye.

EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE.

G. W. Alexander.
 George W. Atwood.
 Richard Barrett.
 Jabez Burus, D.D.
 William Cabell.
 William Cash.
 John Cassell.

Charles Gilpin.
 Richard Hicks.
 C. H. Lovell, M.D.
 John Meredith.
 W. W. Robiusion.
 T. B. Scutt.

SUPERINTENDENT OF MISSION.

John Meredith.

SECRETARY.

(Pro Tem.)
 W. Claridge.

COLLECTING AGENTS.

Mr. Thomas Whittaker.
 Mr. Jabez Inwards.

Mr. Thomas Hudson.
 Mr. William Culverwell.

CONFERENCE OF TEETOTAL MINISTERS.

—PRELIMINARY ARRANGEMENTS.

As the time for the meeting of this Conference approaches, the subject becomes exciting; and who will be there—what will be done? are queries which have been pertinently put by many who, a short time ago, were sceptics to the feasibility of such a conference. It is now quite certain, if no untoward circumstance intervenes, that there will be a large assembly of ministers on the occasion, from whose deliberations, great good may be expected. The preparations for this Conference have shown that supineness and apathy are not characteristic of Ministers of the Gospel. They have discernment, benevolence, and active desires to do the greatest amount of good; but their way is not clear to them, and we may expect, as a result of this assembly, that the crooked paths of many will be made straight, and teetotalism will enter into many churches, from which it has hitherto been excluded.

The preliminary arrangements for the Conference are progressing rapidly, and the committees engaged in the multifarious business, have much cause of gratification.

The steam-ship companies have kindly consented to convey Ministers from Glasgow to Liverpool and back for one fare:—to return at their own convenience. It is hoped that some of the railway companies will grant the same privilege. They are being corresponded with; and every thing possible is being done, to make the means of transit economic and comfortable.

The arrangements already decided upon are as follows:—

On Sunday, April 9th, Sermons to be preached, by Teetotal Ministers, in as many places of worship as can be made available. The committee are confident that a goodly number can be obtained: and that Teetotalism, as a Gospel truth, will be preached to some of the most influential congregations in the city.

On Monday evening, Temperance meetings will be held in various parts of the city and surrounding districts. This will be a favourable opportunity of addressing professing christians, and especially Sabbath-school teachers, upon the importance of the movement, and upon their great responsibility in training up youth in the way they should go.

On Tuesday, the 11th, the committee for arranging the business of Conference, will meet at two o'clock, P.M., when various resolutions, and subjects of papers to be read, will be submitted to them. The duties of this committee are of a very onerous character; and, in order that they may perform their duties efficiently, it is desirable that resolutions intended to be proposed, subjects of papers to be read, or of propositions to be discussed, should be in the hands of the Secretaries not later than Saturday the 8th of April. Several eminent ministers, in connexion with the movement, are preparing documents, which, from the acknowledged talent of the writers, there is reason to believe will prove valuable additions to our Standard Temperance Literature.

On Wednesday, the 12th, the Conference will assemble at nine o'clock in the morning, for the transaction of business. The place of meeting is yet undecided; but it will be announced sufficiently early to prevent inconvenience. To the meetings of Conference, it is proposed that teetotalers shall be admitted by ticket, to witness, but not to take part in the proceedings. The important character of the Conference will, no doubt, cause numbers to avail themselves of this privilege.

A great demonstration will be held in the Free-Trade Hall:—a building which has become connected with the history of our country and its commerce; and is now used to promote almost every object connected with moral progress, and the best interests of mankind. As the building is popular, and will comfortably accommodate several thousands, a great gathering may be anticipated.

A soirée will be given in the Corn Exchange, on Friday 14th, the audience to be addressed by various ministers. In connexion with the public meetings, several eminent personages have been proposed to preside. They have been written to, and their replies are anxiously waited for. These are the arrangements so far as completed. Others are in progress, which, when perfected, will make this Conference one of the most interesting and important ever held.

It is evident this business will be attended with great expense, and the sympathy and co-operation of all societies and persons friendly to the great Temperance Movement, is earnestly but respectfully solicited.

SECRETARIES:

FREDERICK HOPWOOD, York;
 THOMAS MONKHOUSE, York;
 ROBERT JONES, Manchester;
 WILLIAM HOWARTH, Manchester;
 WILLIAM GRIMSHAW, Manchester.

ANNUAL MEETING.

In view of the Annual Meeting in May, the attention of the secretaries of the various societies, in the metropolis and throughout the kingdom, is particularly requested to the following queries, in reference to the details of success; and to which the Committee solicit the favour of early replies:—

Members classified.	{	Clergymen and other ministers
		Medical men
		Ditto who have signed the medical- certificate
		Other professions
		Sunday-school teachers
		Masters and mistresses of day-schools
		Youths
		Reclaimed drunkards
		Other statistics can be added
		Agents from the society
{	Number of visits

General results of operations

WILLIAM CLARIDGE, Sec. pro tem.

11, Token House Yard, London.

SUBSCRIPTIONS.

Received at Office.	£	s.	d.	Stroud.	£	s.	d.
Ashley, Right Hon.				Bevington, Misses	0	10	0
Lord, per Mr.				Bucknell, Mr. B.	0	5	0
Hodgson, mis-				Hawkins, Mrs. Eliz.	0	5	0
sionary	2	0	0	Herbert, Mr. P.,
Beater, Mr. A.	1	1	0	Dudbridge	0	5	0
Eaton, J., Esq,				Nicholas, Rev. Tho.	0	5	0
(Special Fund) 50	0	0	0	Nurse, Mr. Fred.	0	5	0
Ditto	10	10	0	Parsons, T., Esq.	0	5	0
Everett, Mrs. Ann	1	1	0	Paine, John, Esq.	0	5	0
Frith, Mrs.	0	10	0	Rodway, Mr. Opie	0	5	0
Manser, W., Esq.	1	1	0
Shirley, Mr., per				Framilode.
Mr. Balfour d.	0	6	0	Longney, Mr. Thos.	0	5	0
Squire, Mrs. Louisa	1	1	0	Nurse, Mr. James	0	10	0
Taylor, W. H., Esq.	1	1	0
Per Mr. Whitaker.				Saul.
Broad, Mr. Isaac	0	5	0	Nurse, Mr. George	0	5	0
Brown, Mr. Thos.	0	5	0	Prevett, Mr. Wm.	0	5	0
Farmer, Mr. John	0	5	0	Stockwell, Mr. Hen.	0	5	0
Finchley Society d	1	0	0	Per Mr. Inwards, Fording-
Jones, Mr. Thomas	0	5	0	bridge.
Nias, Mr. William	0	5	0	Collection	0	14	0
Tilk, S. W., Esq.	1	1	0	Neave, Josiah, Esq.d	1	0	0
Treasure, G., Esq.	0	10	0	Thompson, S., Esq.	0	10	0
Tunbridge Wells				Romsey.
Society	0	10	0	Farmer, Rev. T.	0	5	0
Per Messrs. Hudson and				Puckle, F., Esq.	0	5	0
Whittaker, Epsom.				Romsey Society	1	0	0
A Friend	1	0	0	Summers, Mr. Chas.	0	10	0
Burn, Mr. Robert	0	5	0
Jones, Mr. Charles	0	5	0	Southampton.
Keeling, Mr.	0	5	0	Clarke, J. T., Esq.	0	5	0
Cheltenham.				M'Garey, Mr. P.	0	5	0
Camps, H., Esq. d	3	0	0	Andover.
Ditto	2	0	0	Andover Society d.	2	0	0
Downing, Mr. Jas.	0	5	0	Elton, Mr. E.	0	5	0
Edwards, Mr.	0	5	0	Tasker, R., Esq.	1	0	0
Jenkins, Mr. W.	0	5	0	Per Mr. Culverwell.
Marling, S. S., Esq.				Alexander, R. D.,
Ebley	1	1	0	Esq.	5	5	0
Millage, Mr. John	0	5	0	Barrett, R., Jun.,
Neaves, Mr. Geo.	0	5	0	Esq.	1	1	0
Russell, Mr. Jas.	0	5	0	Bevington, T., Esq.	1	1	0
Willett, Mr. Sam.	0	5	0	Bowly, S., Esq.	5	0	0
				Kenrick, G. S., Esq.	5	0	0
				Morland, J., Esq.	2	2	0
				Pryor, Mrs. Eliz.	1	0	0

	£	s.	d.		£	s.	d.
Richards, W., Esq.	1	1	0	Langvish, Miss	0	5	0
Webb, J. M.,				Pickett, Mr. G.	0	5	0
Esq.	0	10	0	Per Mr. Hudson.
Per Mr. Inwards, Alton.				Jackson, T. S., Esq.
Ball, Miss C.	0	5	0	Hertford	1	1	0
Bell, Miss	0	10	0	Langton, Rev. S.,
Collection	0	17	0	Southboro'	0	10	0
Corah, T., Esq.,				Watton Society	0	10	0
Leicester	1	0	0

Home Intelligence.

To the Committee of the National Temperance Society.

GENTLEMEN,—During the last five weeks I have been labouring in the counties of Dorset and Hants. The first place I visited was Poole; here I found some warm-hearted friends. Three meetings were announced to take place in the Town Hall, and I am happy to say that spacious building was well filled the first night, and crowded at the two subsequent meetings. Several signatures were obtained, and the thanks of the meeting was given to the National Temperance Society. From thence I went to Bridport, and had the pleasure of finding the Independent and Baptist ministers staunch friends to the cause. In this place I held four meetings, one in the Literary Institution, two in the Town Hall, and one in the Independent chapel. There are many warm teetotal hearts in Bridport.

I travelled from Bridport to Southampton, and received a hearty welcome from my esteemed friend Mr. Joseph Clark. The first meeting was held in the Primitive Methodist Chapel, and was crowded in every part. The second meeting was held in the Polytechnic Institution; a great many went away unable to get admission. The third meeting was held in Mr. Crabb's Independent chapel; nearly eight hundred children were present, with their teachers and many of their friends. On the next evening, a very large meeting was held in the Assembly Room, and I have heard with pleasure that much good was done. The next meeting I held was at Ringwood, in the Wesleyan chapel, and I am happy to say that the Independent minister in this place is a warm-hearted teetotaler. In the Town Hall of Blandford I had the pleasure of addressing two crowded meetings. From thence I went to Fordingbridge. Here they have a very nice place to meet in, free of expense. I held three meetings here, two in the Lecture Hall, and one for juveniles in the Independent chapel. At Romsey we had three good meetings in the Town Hall. Returned to Southampton, where I had the pleasure of meeting a goodly number of the members of the society, after which another excellent meeting was held; and on the following Sabbath I spoke to about five hundred children in the British Schools. After attending another very full meeting in the Primitive Methodist chapel, I said farewell to my friends in that town; I know they are grateful to the National Society. From thence I went to Andover, where two meetings were held in the Town Hall. I am now at Alton. Last evening we held a good meeting here in the Town Hall, and intend holding another this evening. I am happy to say that my friend Mr. Heritage has done all he could do to make the meetings effective. All his arrangements have been perfectly satisfactory. Throughout the two counties I have been kindly received.

JABEZ INWARDS.

To the Committee of the National Temperance Chronicle.

