Uni celebrates special anniversary

The University of Central Lancashire is gearing up for a special week of events marking its 175th anniversary.

The University is proud to trace its roots back to 1828, when 24 local people met at the Preston Corn Exchange and following the trend in other northern industrial towns, agreed to establish an Institution for the Diffusion of Knowledge. Thanks to a bequest from the estate of well-known Prestonian Edmund Robert Harris, the institution was able to expand and develop and as the Harris Institute (1882 to 1956), provided a solid education for many people in Preston and the surrounding areas.

Further changes in name and status followed: Harris College, Preston Polytechnic and Lancashire Polytechnic, until the institution received University status, along with other former Polytechnics, in 1992.

Now staff, students, friends, partners and special guests from home and overseas are joining in the celebrations taking place throughout the whole of 2003, but focusing in particular on the last week of September. The highlight of the week will be an international conference, 'The Diffusion of Knowledge – Past, Present and Future', but the programme also includes a spectacular gala concert at the Preston Guild Hall with the Royal Liverpool Philharmonic Orchestra and soloist Amanda Roocroft, a University Honorary Fellow.

"The celebrations will reflect the University's development as a major regional, national and international institution" said University Vice-Chancellor Dr Malcolm McVicar. "From its humble origins in 1828, the University has grown to become the sixth largest university in the UK, with over 32,000 students. We look forward to celebrating the Anniversary with friends and partners from across the world".
