

School nurse is top of the class

A school nurse from Tarvin was presented with a special award for academic achievement at the University of Central Lancashire.

Selina Harbach, 39, recently graduated from the Community Specialist Practitioner course, specialising as a school nurse. Her tutors were so impressed with her dedication and commitment that she was also nominated for The Jennifer Humphries Bursary Award, presented in honour of a former lecturer at the University and given to students who show a special passion for school nursing.

“Most of the female members of my family are nurses,” says mum of two Selina. “But I also wanted to do something positive in the community, which is why I decided to move into school nursing. Eventually I’d like to move into the teaching and training side of the profession.”

Selina was presented with her prize at a special award ceremony for students in the University’s Faculty of Health, held in Preston.

8 March 2004
nr029pc

Photo attached: Selina Harbach (Right) with UCLan nursing lecturer Jean Taylor